But it is hardly SNCC's purpose, much less its intention, just to feed ideas to social engineers and politicians. As much as Carmichael wants to believe it is possible to work with white organizations, he is hard put to find the right ones. He wants "a coalition in which blacks will not be absorbed or betrayed," he once wrote. But that does not include "coalition" with any government agency. The war on poverty, for instance, may give some black people some of the things they need, but to Carmichael it keeps them under white manipulation, and does nothing for the underlying cause of poverty: powerlessness.

Trapped by White Radicals

Even white radical "coalitions," such as might be possible in a Southern political campaign, or a Northern fight for control of housing policy, are suspect. SNCC has always felt threatened, and in a sense trapped by white radicals. Many white middle-class students were first brought into radical roles by SNCC, but it was never clear that the white and black movements were continuous.

Carmichael wants SNCC to be intensely political, in the way that SDS has not been. But he also criticizes the white New Left for thinking, in his phrase, that "what's good for the US is good for black people." His main concern is to give Negroes the chance to make their own decisions and control their own lives. The point isn't that white radicals might make better decisions for Negroes than white conservatives would. The important thing, Carmichael declares, is "self-determination."

What galls SNCC people most is the way white radicals seem to have treated SNCC as a kind of psychotherapy, as a way to work out problems of alienation and boredom and personal inadequacy. A season of organizing in Mississippi, despite (or because of) the dangers and discomforts, was often more therapeutic for the white organizer than the blacks being organized. To SNCC, that was a form of "unconscious racism," manipulation, and white supremacy. What is happening now is that many of those whites feel hopelessly rejected by their Negro friends, like patients whose analyst suddenly leaves town. The feeling leads to mawkish outpourings of self-pity, like a white SNCC veteran's recent article in the Village Voice: ". . . I'm mad. It's the kind of anger one might feel in, say, a love relationship, when after entering honestly you find that your loved one's been balling with someone else, and what's worse, enjoying it."

The connection between young white and black activists was never only one way. In fact, SNCC may be more heavily "white" in its ideology than some members care to believe. Carmichael, Cox, Cobb, and many others were first activated at Howard by a young white socialist, Tom Kahn, who is now executive secretary of the League for Industrial Democracy.

The problem remains for SNCC people to control their anger about white insensitivity. Faced with a barely vulnerable "system" and the hostility of whites, the temptation for many Negroes is to swallow all humanist feeling in black anger. Contrary to his popular image, Carmichael and his colleagues in SNCC are trying to do just the opposite. It is a difficult, and a dangerous game. Carmichael, too, has his hang-ups about whites, and he has problems of communicating the urgency of political strategy to his angry followers. He told people at the December conference that he would like to abandon his public role, and return to less visible organizing when his term as chairman expires in May. In its few years of life, SNCC's value has been a unique ability to swing with "what's happening" with black people. That means leading, understanding, and simply moving with the hard edge of the Negro movement. Other organizations have fallen behind, and other leaders have fallen on their faces. SNCC people will have to keep their wits, and their heads, to make a go of it now.

File

AN INFORMATION EXCHANGE ON COMMUNITY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

sponsored by

The Cambridge Institute

October 3, 4 and 5, 1969

at the Marriott Motor Hotel

Route 128 and Massachusetts Turnpike

Boston, Massachusetts

PROGRAM

Friday, October 3

4:00 P.M. - 6:00 P.M. — Registration and Check-in Informal Cocktails

6:30 P.M. - 8:00 P.M. — Dinner

8:00 P.M. — Welcome to Exchange
James Morey, Cambridge Institute, Center for Community Economic Development

Welcome to Boston
Mel King Director, New Urban League of Greater Boston

8:15 P.M. - 10:00 P.M. — Panel Discussion:

Topic: Community-Based Economic Development in Operation
Moderator: Stewart Perry, Cambridge Institute, Center for Community Economic Development

Panel Participants:

De Forest Brown, Jr.
Executive Director,
Hough Area Development Corporation
Cleveland, Ohio

Alex Mercure
State Program Director
Home Education Livelihood Program
Alberquerque, New Mexico

Franklin Thomas
Executive Director
Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Corp.
Brooklyn, New York

Charles Sherrod
President, New Communities, Inc.
Albany, Georgia

De Leon McEwen, Jr.
President
Rochester Fighton Corporaton
Rochester, New York

Saturday, October 4, Continued

12:30 P.M. - 2:00 P.M.	Lunch
2:00 P.M. - 4:30 P.M.	Workshops
5:00 P.M.	Cocktail Parties and Discussion
6:30 P.M. - 8:00 P.M.	Dinner
8:00 P.M. - 10:00 P.M.	Open Meeting

Forms of Cooperation among Projects

Coordinator: Robert Browne

Director, Black Economic Research Center

Vice Chairman, Black Economic Development Conference

*Shapiro Forum, Olin-Sang Building, Brandeis University

8:00 P.M. - 10 P.M. Open Meeting

General Subject: Foreign Experiences with Community-Based Development

*Golding Auditorium, Brandeis University

Moderator: Peter Edelman, R. F. Kennedy Foundation

Panel Participants

Edward Boorstein, Economist, Monthly Review	(Cuba)
Shimon Gottschalk, Florence Heller School, Brandeis Univ.	(Israel)
Gerry Hunnius, Praxis Corporation	(Yugoslavia)
Matt Edel, Professor of Economics, M.I.T.	(Latin America)

*Transportation will be provided to and from Brandeis

Saturday, October 4

9:00 A.M. - 10:30 A.M. Panel Discussion:

Topic: Can Community-Based Programs Grow in a Private Enterprise System?

Moderator: Geoffrey Faux, Chief, Economic Development Branch
Office of Economic Opportunity
Policy and Evaluation Division

Panel Participants

Andrew Bennett
Economic Development Administration
Dept. of Commerce

John McClaughry
McClaughry Associates, Inc.
Washington, D.C.

Eugene Foley
Dreyfus Fund
New York City

David Keller
Director, Urban Loan Program
American National Bank and Trust Co.
Chicago, Illinois

10:30 A M. - 12:30 P.M. Workshops:

Rural Workshop A
Moderator: Alex Mercure, State Program Director, H.E.L.P.

Rural Workshop B
Moderator: Robert Swann, Consultant, New Communities, Inc.

Urban Workshop A
Moderator: Willard R. Johnson, Director, Circle, Inc., Boston

Urban Workshop B
Moderator: Bernard Gifford
Chairman of the Board, Fighton Industries

Sunday, October 5

9:00 A.M. - 11:00 A.M.	Informal Meetings Session #1 (Trading of Experiences)

A number of small groups of experienced practitioners in various fields have been assigned to discuss particular topics of concern to development project managers. A final determination of both topics and participants will be made on the basis of interest expressed through the lists included in the welcoming brochures. A finalized list of these sessions, with the respective suites being used, will be distributed on Saturday.

11:00 A.M. - 11:15 A.M.	Coffee Break
11:15 A.M. - 1:00 P.M.	Informal Meetings Session #2
1:30 P.M. - 2:30 P.M.	Lunch
2:30 P.M. - 4:00 P.M.	Panel:

General Subject: The Future of Community-Based Economic Development.
Moderator: Robert Browne

Panel Participants

Geoffrey Faux
Chief, Economic Development Branch
Policy and Evaluation Division
Office of Economic Opportunities

Gar Alperovitz
Co-Director, Cambridge Institute
Cambridge

Irving Levine
Director, American Jewish Committee
New York City

Mel King, Director
New Urban League of Greater Boston

Herman Gallegos
Director, Southwest Council of La Raza

4:00 P.M.	Adjourn

FINANCIAL SPONSORS

Carnegie Corporation
Sam Wyly Foundation
Taconic Foundation
Bullitt Foundation
New World Foundation
United Presbyterian Churches
National Council of Churches
American Jewish Committee
National Institute of Public Affairs
Praxis Corporation
Center for the Study of Public Policy
Center for Community Economic Development

HOST SPONSOR

The Cambridge Institute attempts to bring together activists and researchers to work on strategies for social change. Its interests range from the military-industrial complex to the influences of urbanization on family life. Its study of community economic development extends from rural Southern and Southwestern settings to urban inner-city and suburban areas. The Institute is a non-profit, tax-exempt corporation which does not accept government funds.

Probably Dirksen himself had no idea of the power of the explosive he touched off. That explosive is the profound loathing of the Constitution that has always imbued the mentality of low-grade Americans. Their hatred may be without excuse, but it is not without reason, for the Constitution is not adapted to them. The Convention that wrote the Constitution seems to have included a handful of lunk-heads, but in the main it was composed of exceptionally intelligent, exceptionally well-informed, and exceptionally bold men who designed a governmental structure adapted to a bold and intelligent nation. Aware that they were undertaking what had been tried repeatedly, but never successfully, they had what it took to plunge ahead.

But they were dealing with the America of 1787, and it is not necessarily true that an organic law admirably adapted to that country at that time is as well suited to this country at this time. The Preamble they wrote states six reasons for the existence of the United States and every one of them was based on hope, not experience – union, justice, tranquility, defense, welfare and liberty were not, but were to be achieved. To adopt the metaphor of Warren G. Harding, they drew to a pair of deuces and filled – hair-raising poker indeed.

They had been through a desperate war, it is true, but only one, and its outcome had made them, for the moment, relatively safe from foreign aggression, and therefore free to experiment with political theory. Contrast that with the situation of the American of 1970. Beginning in 1917, he now lives in the 53rd successive year that might be characterized by the famous French phrase, Terror is the Order of the Day. He has long been inured to a foreign policy into which he is not drawn by his hopes, but propelled by his fears, and his domestic policy has been colored by that lurid glow. Even the brilliant Roosevelt-Truman episode was tolerated by the "silent majority" – silent because it can think of nothing to say – less because it was seen as an advance toward triumph than because it seemed to be the only possible flight from ruin.

No doubt the hardier spirits among us have been forged and tempered by the ordeal, but not those of inferior quality. Fifty-three years of fright have reduced their minds and hearts to a jelly-like mass whose only spontaneous action is to quiver. How can a governmental structure designed for a bold and confident people be anything but a sad misfit when it is imposed on a people not drawn by their hopes, but driven by their fears? The proposed Dirksen Amendment was consciously aimed at the Bill of Rights and perhaps at the Fourteenth Amendment, but it opens the way to reconstruction of the whole framework of the republic.

Possibly a resolutely cheerful philosopher might convince himself that a thorough-going reconstruction of the Constitution might be not a bad thing, seeing that the parallel advance of time and technology has rendered some of its provisions anomalous. That is true, as the 25 amendments attest, and nothing short of radical surgery could excide the most preposterous of them, the indestructibility of the states and the repudiation of excellence by single-class citizenship. Population is already crowding to the water's edge – the Lakes, the Gulf and the oceans – and it seems likely that much of the area between the mountains will presently have as year-round inhabitants only the relatively small number of technicians required to operate its mechanized agriculture. Thus division of the continental United States into 48 pseudo-sovereignties no longer makes sense. Again, while equality of all men in the eyes of the law is the mudsill of democracy, their equality in any other eyes is simply not a fact. No man can excel in intellect or character if no other man is his inferior. Privilege is abominable, but prerogative is another matter and, in theory at least, the difference should be embedded in the structure of the government.

But that either of these genuine reforms would be adopted by a new constitutional convention is beyond the bounds of credibility. Deformation, not reformation, is far the more probable outcome simply because a nation as badly scared as this one is at present cannot do anything sensible and its most serious attempts at political philosophy are almost certain to eventuate in political lunacy.

Gerald W. Johnson

N.R. 3-7-70

The Nixon Watch SR@ Edw Fed Sen

Sham or Surrender?

It was 7 p.m. on February 23 and time for Harry Dent to get back to his work at the White House, after 90 minutes of the kind of easy talk he loves, when I said to him in parting: "If what you have been telling me is correct, a lot of people in the South are going to wake up one day soon and realize that this Administration has double-crossed them." Harry laughed and said that he didn't think so. What he had been telling me was correct, nobody was being double-crossed, and – with soft and friendly emphasis: "You tell your Atlanta friend that I think he's wrong."

The Atlanta friend is Paul Anthony, executive director of the Southern Regional Council. He and Harry Dent are very different white men: Anthony working with the Council for racial integration in every phase of the region's life because he thinks it is right; and Dent, sometime assistant to Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and now the President's Special Counsel and political coordinator, working (he really does) to reconcile the South to a necessary minimum of integration because he thinks it is inevitable and in the Republican interest. I had talked to Anthony by telephone from Washington that afternoon and (without naming him) had quoted the gist of what he said to Dent. "There is just the most widespread feeling down here," Paul Anthony said, "from black militants right across the board to segregationist whites, that the white South is winning this thing and that the Nixon Administration has turned its back on desegregation." White "liberals" – politicians, businessmen, editors, community leaders of every sort – were running for cover. "Nigra" and "nigger" were suddenly back in style among upper-class whites who had been training themselves for years to say "Neegro" and "black" (bless that word, so easy to pronounce). There was outspoken satisfaction, among segregationists and professed integrationists alike, that so many blacks were coming to their senses and seeing that integration, especially in the public schools, wasn't all that it had been cracked up to be and beginning to fight to keep their black schools black. "And they're saying these things to me," Paul Anthony said, speaking of some of his white acquaintances, and "assuming that of course I agree with them." This, to him, was conclusive evidence that the positions taken by the Nixon Administration and in Congress in the past few weeks had profoundly changed the Southern scene.

Not so, said Harry Dent. If all that was happening, if that feeling about the Nixon Administration existed in the South, it was based on a big misunderstanding. The President's policy on the racial integration of public schools had not changed at all, and there were not going to be "any big changes" in that regard in the South or anywhere else. Everybody down there, in his own South Carolina and the rest of the South, understood by now that the law and the court orders had to be enforced and were going to be enforced. Maybe with "a little more understanding" of the difficulties, more sympathy, "better communication" – but enforced all the same. That was what Vice President Agnew's Cabinet committee on integration was all about. It was true that he, Harry Dent, had suggested a while ago that the President create some kind of committee or commission to study the effects of required integration as it had been applied so far in the South, and recommend ways to make the process easier for all concerned. But it was news to him that his old patron, Senator Thurmond, had suggested the same thing to the White House at about the same time; the Senator must have done it through Bryce Harlow, the President's chief communicator with Congress. The only man he knew of around the White House who had made a similar suggestion was Leonard Garment (this with a kindly smile, saying without saying that I knew as well as he did that Len Garment is regarded by people like me as one of the few approximately kindred souls on the White House staff). The idea for the Cabinet committee – the President officially dubbed it "an informal Cabinet-level working group" – had emerged, so far as Harry knew, from the office of John Ehrlichman, the Assistant for Domestic Affairs.

How was the Agnew group going "to review in detail," as the President had put it, "the efforts of the Executive Branch" to further compliance with integration laws and court orders without getting into the hair of the people who were supposed to be enforcing them at the Departments of Justice and Health, Education and Welfare? And what could the Cabinet group really do in and for a county like Darlington, in Harry's South Carolina, where the school authorities had been ordered by the courts to integrate now and where the whites had boycotted the schools, except try somehow to take the heat off? Well now, said Harry, those were good questions and he didn't know the answers and he doubted that anybody else at the White House did – yet. But there would be answers, and they wouldn't be the kind of answers that my Atlanta friend and, according to him, a lot of other people in the South were expecting.

I asked Harry, in his capacity, as one of Mr. Nixon's certified political experts, whether I was right or wrong in my impression that the establishment of the Agnew group and everything else that had happened in this area recently, including the President's qualified but at the same time "full support" of the Stennis amendment calling for uniform application of integration laws in the South and everywhere else, was in fact a political response to a political problem. Dent knew what I had in mind: the Supreme Court's recent demand that school segregation by law and deliberate official action be ended now, once and for all, and the outraged Southern reaction that in turn had revived George C. Wallace's hottest issue and lent fearsome force to his threat that Nixon would not carry a single Southern state in 1972 unless he began to "do right" by the South. Why, yes – Harry answered – of course there was a political problem and of course it had to be dealt with and was being dealt with. But that didn't mean that the law and the court orders were not going to be enforced. What it really meant was that this Administration was determined to enforce them in such a way as to get the problem over with, get it solved and out of the way, not only before 1972 but by the fall of this year, before the congressional and state elections. If I didn't believe it, ask John Mitchell. That was what the Attorney General had been saying at the White House, in the discussions preceding the formation of the Agnew group and the various statements on the Stennis and other integration amendments: get that problem solved, get it out of our way, and the only way to do that was to enforce the law in a way that the South would understand and accept. It could be done and it was going to be done. "You'll see," Harry said.

What I and everybody else actually saw, among other things not quite according to Harry's script, was the summary firing of Leon Panetta, HEW's chief integration enforcer, and the selection of one of his determined foes in that department, General Counsel Robert C. Mardian, to be the staff director of the Agnew Cabinet group. In obedience to the President's directive, he is the man who is to "review in detail" the enforcement practices and policies of Justice and HEW. In doing so Mardian is bound to oversee Panetta's successor in a fashion and to an extent that HEW Secretary Finch never allowed him to do. Mardian makes splendid speeches, all about the duty of school authorities to enforce integration and break up deliberate segregation. He told Louisiana school board members in January that integrated education is "as American as apple pie." Panetta, Commissioner of Education James E. Allen, and some others who had to work with him at HEW didn't care for Mardian's pie. Mardian recommended last March, in a secret memorandum that ceased to be secret, that the department relax its strict school guidelines without announcing it and so avoid a fuss. He has been heard to say in department meetings, too often for the comfort of officials dedicated to real enforcement, "Now don't get me wrong, I'm not for segregation" and, "Now don't get me wrong, I'm for Negroes and equal rights." His HEW associates, those who agreed with him and those who disagreed, didn't get him wrong and one may doubt that the White House people who chose him for the Agnew staff job got him wrong, either. He is there to do the job that Paul Anthony in Atlanta and Southerners everywhere now know is going to be done.

John Osborne

CAMBRIDGEinstitute

an occasional bulletin no. 1
October 1969

THE CAMBRIDGE INSTITUTE draws together intellectuals and activists, mainly from the Boston area, for research and action projects. These projects cover a variety of areas but they all seek to develop programmatic ideas about social change and to translate such ideas into reality. The Institute is particularly involved in efforts to develop new forms of community control over local economic and political institutions.

The Institute has only been in operation since February 1969, but it has already planned and launched a variety of projects, either directly under its own aegis or indirectly through one of two associated enterprises: The Center for the Study of Public Policy and the Center for Community Economic Development. These projects include the following:

A systematic investigation and analysis of community-based economic development projects across the country, and a three-day information exchange on the "state of the art" of the various models of community-based development; four task forces on community control as related to (1) workers control, (2) community ownership, (3) regional coordination, and (4) national planning; a New Towns project in Vermont involving an interdisciplinary team of students, planners and Institute staff; the Urban Family Study based on interviews with 100 white working-class families in the Greater Boston area; higher education curriculum reform in the social sciences; an anti-military industrial complex project combining research and action aimed at inhibiting military production and learning how to reallocate resources so as to accomplish conversion; an investigation of communal child-rearing arrangements designed to alter the present position of women and/or children in society.

In addition, the Institute itself is one of the main projects. Ultimate control over it is vested in a largely self-perpetuating board of trustees, but for most purposes the Institute is governed by its Fellows. The Fellows include the entire staff of the Cambridge Institute, both "professional" and "nonprofessional." The Fellows determine the intellectual agenda of the Institute, nominate the co-directors, and take responsibility for the day-to-day management of its intellectual and financial affairs. The Fellows are committed to the development of a more egalitarian salary scale than prevails in other organizations of this type. They have also established a new division of labor between professionals and nonprofessionals which ensures that nobody spends his entire work week in subordinate roles. By experimenting along these lines the Institute hopes to test the limits of innovation within America's competitive market economy.

Thus the Institute can be defined experimentally in two senses—both as an experiment with strategies to achieve a new society and as an experiment in new mixes of thought and action. It is neither, therefore, a counter-university nor only a think-tank. Its activist objectives are defined in relationship to social change, not in the abstract.

If it aims to change the world, if its primary focus is thought, it holds that it can honor its role only if its intellectual work leads to action.

It is a place, finally, meant to sustain those who work there over the long haul, for it is clear that the tasks that have been set out are by definition enormous.

National Perspectives

GAR ALPEROVITZ

On the Future of Democratization

By now, most of us understand that one of the more significant features of our times is the growing demand that people be given a chance to participate in the major decisions—and by logical extension, the basic institutions—that shape their lives. One sees this development among a broad variety of groups in American society—the so-called new class, the under class, the blacks, even working and middle-class white communities.

It is not a phenomenon isolated to college campuses and urban ghettos. Nor is it to be understood as a simple phenomenon, grasped immediately on one level of experience. At times it might appear contradictory. On the one hand social observers have spoken of "participation" and "doing one's own thing;" on the other hand (usually in opposition to the young or militant who seek these goals), of "responsibility" and "facing up to one's decisions." These views are in reality separate facets of the same phenomenon, a development which revolves around a concept that is in the process of becoming a political reality. The central question of each is: "How can decision-making be shared— truly, responsibly, and democratically?"

There is no simple answer to that question obviously. There may not in fact be any answer possible in the short run. The problems inherent in shared decision-making will prevent real participation in our major institutions in the immediate future. In the long run, however, I think a way may possibly be found to overcome these problems. And for those interested in "the future of democratization"—the next 30 to 50 years in American history—it may be worth considering the longer run issues, beginning with the question: "From where we are starting now, is there anything happening which may suggest new directions for bridging the gap between present and future?"

Where are we now? Just who is and who is not permitted to "do their own thing"? And who is and who is not "responsible" to anyone besides themselves? The place to begin is at the point where the real power resides.

A.A. Berle, a noted writer on corporations in America, and professor of law at New York University, commented a few years ago on the fact that roughly 500 of the largest domestic business corporations control about two-thirds of the non-farm economy. (More recently and more explicitly, Fortune Magazine's issue on the leading 500 corporations reported that these top 500 claimed 64 percent of total U.S. industrial sales. Their proportion of profits in this field was 74.4 percent.) To grasp the reality that 10 percent of the country's corporate entities control roughly two-thirds of the non-farm economy you might reflect on what it means, on average, for ten companies to control two-thirds of the wealth in each state.

Berle observed:

> This is, I think the highest concentration of economic power in recorded history. Since the United States carries on not quite half of the manufacturing production of the entire world today, these 500 groupings, each with its own little dominating pyramid within, represent a concentration of power over economics which makes the medieval system look like a Sunday school party. In sheer economic power, this has gone far beyond anything we have yet seen.

I think Professor Berle's comment is rough, but a broadly fair representation of reality. Clearly, to any careful observer the power of a very small number of very, very large corporate units is incredibly great. Recognition of this raises questions, even from the least radical perspective: who controls these corporations? Who is responsible for what they do? To whom are they responsible? Should they be permitted simply to "do their own thing," for that is largely the claim they make, even as many of their leading spokesmen denounce the young when they assert the same privilege.

At the Threshold of a Political Concept

Given the countless conflicts against the central institution of the Redevelopment Agency, against City Hall, against the Welfare Board, against the School Board, we are slowly approaching the threshold of community control as a matter of principle.

In any given community, the process is agonizingly slow. Those fighting the Redevelopment Agency or the School Board, for instance, are often so involved in the specifics of the heated, immediate struggle, that they have no time to think about the longer trend. Moreover, frustrations and setbacks make it hard for many to realize that their efforts throughout the nation are already laying the base for a much higher order of political evolution. Nevertheless, slowly throughout the nation the idea of community control is being elevated to something quite different from a specific demand; it is slowly reaching the level of a general political concept, particularly in the black community.

As more ordinary citizens grasp the principle, there is no reason that it cannot be broadened, deepened, and, above all, generalized. It can be extended to the idea of community control of economic development; then to the concept of community ownership of businesses, then to the principle of cooperative community property.

As the conflicts which teach the concept go forward, there is reason to hope that the institution of the Community Corporation may take on a new importance. The idea of a democratically controlled corporation, as the writer Milton Kotler has shown, is of critical importance. The corporation is little more than a legal line drawn around a neighborhood to establish a geographically defined corporation which may undertake a variety of social services. Its crucial feature is the principle of one man, one vote, which as in community unions and cooperatives, establishes a democratic body; indeed, it is a form of cooperative. In its present form (most frequently as a dispenser of poverty money), it has many drawbacks, for it is often merely an administrative agency of the status quo. But, of course, so long as any institution, including the Community Corporation, is dependent upon outside funds and outside decisions, it is rarely more than a community-controlled institution in name alone.

Were it independent, however—were it anchored democratically in the community and sustained by an independent source of funds—it could be a very dif-

Cell Const

TITUTION, Wed., Mar. 18, 1970

SRC (file)

Mrs. Tilly Dies; Civil Rights Leader

Mrs. Dorothy Rogers Tilly, who gained worldwide recognition as a crusader for civil rights and human justice, died here Monday.

Funeral services will be held at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday in the chapel of Patterson's Funeral Home at Spring Hill. Burial will be at Westview Cemetery.

Mrs. Tilly is survived by a son, Eben F. Tilly of Atlanta and a brother, Emory A. Rogers, of Glenside, Pa.

Born in Hampton, Ga., in a Methodist parsonage, Dorothy Tilly was the prototype of a Southern lady. She was a mild-mannered, diminutive woman with a fondness for roses in her hats. But her active interest in human justice and civil rights led one national magazine to describe her as a "woman beyond her times."

Mrs. Tilly was the only Southern woman to serve on President Harry Truman's Civil Rights Commission and co-authored the committee's famous report, "To Secure These Rights."

One of the triumphs of her career was the Georgia Training School for Delinquent Girls, a school established in the mid-1930s by Negro women's organizations but twice denied supporting state funds until Mrs. Tilly gathered the signatures of 28,000 Georgia women and persuaded legislators to override the objections of Gov. Eugene Talmade and appropriate funds.

Her interest in equal opportunity and treatment for Negroes was sparked by her husband, the late Milton Eben Tilly, a chemical manufacturer who believed strongly in human rights.

"Duri[illegible] the [illegible]

4-27-70

SRC (Spec)

'CRAVEN RETREAT'

THE VIEW FROM MADDOX COUNTRY

REESE CLEGHORN

Mr. Cleghorn edits South Today, a monthly digest published by the Southern Regional Council. He is the author, with Pat Watters, of Climbing Jacob's Ladder, which Harcourt, Brace & World published last month in paperback.

Atlanta

Some years ago, when I was sitting in a restaurant in Oxford, Miss., a plastic place where William Faulkner usually jerked out the juke box plug before dining, it occurred to me that at least some of the problems of mankind might be solved by a very simple plan. It was during one of the neap tides of integration crisis at the University of Mississippi, and the restaurant was filled with students. The pleasantries and non sequiturs of their conversations drifted over the booths; there was an appealing kind of soft inexactitude about it all, whether the subject was dormitory life or a misspent weekend. I had recently returned to the South after a period in New York, during which I had encountered City College students, head-on. What, I remember thinking, would happen if one could bundle up half the students of Ole Miss and deliver them to City College, to be replaced by a like number of City College students? It was, I thought at the time, a plan of such great potential benefit to all that it should be brought to the attention of the highest authorities in the land: perhaps even the chief federal marshal. The soft under-craniums of Oxford obviously needed the abrasiveness and intellectual effrontery, and of course the liberalism, of those Northern cousins; and clearly City College students could profit from any softening influence whatever.

Now I realize that, far ahead of my time, I was thinking about the biggest bussing scheme of them all, something neither Abraham Ribicoff nor George Wallace would tolerate for a moment. Besides, I am no longer at all sure that the plan has merit. Southern liberals have traditionally been "kept in their place" with apparent evidence that their models and superiors, the folks to be emulated and the ones whose respect ought to be earned, were of another breed: the men of the North. I now doubt my Ole Miss-City College plan because I am no longer sure that tough Eastern under-craniums produce anything better than soft Southern under-craniums. Maybe, in the spirit of the times, I am becoming a Southern ethnic.

As I look at school integration seven years later, I am aware that it is more than ever a subject whose appearance varies, depending upon where you sit. To be exact and not altogether frivolous: I sit in an old house on Peachtree Way in Atlanta. We are just around the corner from a handsome little white building of Corinthian grace, which was the national headquarters of the Ku Klux Klan in its glory days; now it is a Catholic rectory. I am a WASP; this is a kind of Catholic ghetto. Atlanta is a Southern city; it has a Jewish Mayor and a black Vice Mayor. Not many blocks from us is a new $5 million, neo-ante-bellum governor's mansion which would have done justice to Kwame Nkrumah in his palmiest days. It is inhabited by a man who, according to official Georgia protocol, is His Excellency—Gov. Lester G. Maddox. In my yard, an albino squirrel is at play; one white squirrel among the gray.

That is where I sit, not in the "rational" confines of a university or a court of law but surrounded by a Southern sea of workaday incredibilities, and they are visible. Most of the nation's people live amid absurdities and incredibilities and irrationalities at least as great, but they are not as visible. And so I am less startled than some people to see Senator Ribicoff and Senator Stennis arm in arm; Governor Maddox and Roy Innis pulling at the oars together; "militants" like Julius Hobson concurring with George Wallace, and Prof. Alexander Bickel of Yale advancing propositions very much like those advanced by the Great Constitutional Lawyers who used to be hired by Southern states to fight for the preservation of white supremacy. (They did not purport to be arguing against equality or against Negroes, but simply for "equal treatment for the South," for consideration of the wishes of the [white] people, for a realistic, nonemotional acceptance of the fact that integration would not work.)

My view is from "Maddox country." Some of the more obstreperous and enduring political segregationists on my particular turf are immensely enjoying the thought that the Nixon Administration, despite recent protestations, is engaged in "craven retreat" (Leon Panetta's accurate words) and "benign neglect" (Daniel P. Moynihan's words) in dealing with racial problems, now that the 1970 Congressional elections draw near. They may enjoy the spectacle even more in 1972, when George Wallace probably will sweep those Deep South Presidential votes which the "Southern strategy" is intended to capture. It does not occur to them that the Nixon Administration is simply trying "to be fair to the South" because it is now pretty well integrated. This does not occur to them because it is absurd and they are realists, if anything. They sit where I sit, in "Maddox country," and they know what is going on in the South. They know and enjoy political scheming of the most craven variety. They know the Administration's descriptions (and most Southern Senators' descriptions) of the civil rights retreat are mere self-serving piffle. They do not believe the explanations fool even Connecticut Senators: the white supremacist spirit of the South is rising again, isn't it, and Senator Ribicoff would like to be elected Vice President or appointed to the Supreme Court, wouldn't he? So their reasoning goes. My Senator, Herman E. Talmadge, has just praised Senator Ribicoff as a courageous man.

That is the view from Maddox country. Our Governor's more savvy admirers are not deceived about what is going on politically and, really, neither is a single Southern liberal that I know, black or white. On home ground they, the same old crowd of white supremacists, and we, the same old crowd of hypocritical, bleeding-heart liberals, are familiar with the politics of the absurd (a state palace for Lester Maddox to live in) and the politics of the craven (a federal government trading the welfare of children for Republican Congressional candidates and electoral votes down South). It is not nearly as difficult to believe what the Nixon Administration is doing, when you view it from Maddox country, as it seems to be when seen from more civilized and less traumatized observation points. It is old stuff. Low profile or not, it is routine political venality.

The admirable efforts of Leon Panetta, while he was still with HEW, and others to enforce the civil rights laws (aren't those the real "strict contructionists"?) have been rebuffed. Now a Cabinet-level committee has been established to negotiate with the white supremacists of the South, with Vice President Agnew as chairman and a 1964 "Southern strategy" Goldwaterite, Robert Mardian, as staff director. The Supreme Court is being changed. It is now clear that Senator Ribicoff's move in assisting Senator Stennis' efforts to weaken the pressure for school desegregation in the South has had a falling-domino aftermath. Professor Bickel's now celebrated New Republic article urging compromise with Southern white supremacists and black separatists—and that was the true thrust of it, whatever he now says—has established an intellectual fabric—squishy soft in its reasoning and erroneous in its facts about South and North, but respectable in its origins—which will be used for bad ends by many lesser men. From Maddox country it is also clear what a federal policy of "benign neglect" would mean: a repetition of the Compromise of 1877, so that "local control" in the form of the Maddoxes and Wallaces could survive. What we would get, in reality, would be benign neglect of the Constitution, as we had for a century after enactment of the Fourteenth Amendment. President Nixon's recent policy statement on school desegregation stressed that local boards frequently can handle these matters better than the federal government. The statement was, with a few exceptions, a declaration of nonleadership rather than of leadership at the federal level; and there is every evidence that the action will not match the words even on the matter of eliminating the deeply rooted results of almost a century of de jure segregation in the South. It was exactly this matter of trying to eliminate de jure segregation in the South that brought about the removal of Panetta, the surrender of Finch and the rise of Mardian.

There is even a new respectability for old arguments that Negroes are intellectually inferior: Dr. Arthur Jensen's conclusions on race and IQ might have received little notice five years ago, and none at all if they had come from the University of Mississippi; but they came by way of Berkeley and Harvard, and thus their susceptibility to misuse is greater—as is being demonstrated by the white Citizens Councils (which, incidentally, have recovered from a decade of decline and are growing in strength).

Within the South, these national trends already are damaging the forces for progressive change. Gov. Linwood Holton of Virginia, Gov. Robert Scott of North Carolina, Gov. Robert McNair of South Carolina, Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas, had all strongly urged their publics to accomplish school desegregation in reasonable and orderly fashion; and until the national trend of recent weeks their positions were not fanning the old flames of resistance. Holton and Rockefeller (both Republicans elected with heavy black support, not by the segregationist "Southern strategy") move on as before, but Scott and McNair have had to hedge a bit to protect themselves politically. Perhaps more significantly, Gov. John McKeithen of Louisiana took for a time a more or less moderate position on race; now he is trying to outdo Wallace as an advocate of the neo-segregationist position. Wallace is claiming credit for moving the Administration, and Gov. Albert Brewer is forced once again to be a yes man to Wallace's position, even while running against him for another term. In Georgia, Maddox's style often offends the increasingly middle-class electorate, but his position on school desegregation has been strengthened; opponents no longer can argue that his posturing is ridiculous because the battle is over.

As if to assert that the nation may yet be converted to a Southern point of view—not the growing Southern viewpoint that integration is right and fair but the old view that was thought to be dying – Governor McKeithen recently put full-page ads in The New York Times, Newsweek and other publications. His pitch cynically lifted the thoughts, and even the words, of some Northern liberals and used them to justify the South's worst inclinations. "Full Partnership," the ad's headline proclaimed, by which it meant that Louisiana wanted full partnership in the Union. Louisiana has attempted to obey the law, the ad said, and now all it asks is that it "be treated the same as any other state in the nation." Governor McKeithen, whose photograph accompanied the copy, even italicized these words: "We believe in civil rights." But if the Governor of Louisiana now believes in civil rights, he does not believe in federal efforts to secure them, and he cannot truthfully cite any substantial Louisiana state efforts to secure them in places where they are denied by strong white supremacist elements.

"But Now, Maybe if You Black Children Would Just Sit in the Back of the Bus."

Not long ago one would have supposed, and probably Governor McKeithen would have supposed, that the nation would scorn such sophistry. But it is exactly the kind of sophistry that is emanating now from some of the country's most prominent newspaper columnists, intellectuals and liberal politicians. I suspect that the Governor's ads, paid for by "voluntary donations from thousands of Louisianans and their neighbors" (just which highway contractors and/or which oil companies operating in Louisiana?) have had some impact. The worst part of the South has always benefited from an unwillingness on the part of civilized men to believe that anyone in America could be as politically craven as politicians frequently are in the South on matters of race. Simply to grant that a man like John Stennis is sincere when he says integration should come to the whole country is outrageous. But Stennis is being believed, so why not believe McKeithen, Wallace or Maddox when they say they believe in civil rights? It was a blessing that Maddox went to Washington, carrying ax handles and causing a scene, just as more dignified Southern spokesmen there were beginning to win their case on the Hill. Governor Maddox's mere presence with his ax handles showed people what it was all about.

Craven politics: The newspapers of Jackson, Miss., and Columbia, S.C., which now have unusually good White House contacts, were the first to report the forthcoming dismissal of Leon Panetta as HEW's chief civil rights enforcement officer. When Jack Nelson of the Los Angeles Times called the Republican chairmen of South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana for comment on Panetta's dismissal, all four laughed. All said they had expected it.

For months the White House staff had been sending memoranda bearing Southern segregationist complaints to the offices of HEW Secretary Robert Finch and Panetta. Now we have confirmation that Paul Jones, who was Georgia's Republican chairman at the time, had even sent a message that if HEW would restore federal school funds for one recalcitrant Georgia school system, he was sure large party contributions from several donors could be obtained in return. The White House sent the message to Finch's office. The message was clear.

In February, a Georgia "freedom-of-choice" group (how ironic that term seems when it describes, as it usually does, those who would not have tolerated freedom of choice in the days of impregnable segregation) visited the White House to speak for its "neighborhood school concept." Harry Dent told them, according to an Atlanta Constitution report on February 20, that President Nixon intends to use the Agnew Cabinet-level committee to take command of the Administration's desegregation policies. "And Dent indicated that the President's policies would not make the Georgians unhappy." The group left the White House "reassured," a spokesman said.

So the battle cries of the segregationists are growing stronger, and with good reason. Roy Harris, an old-line Georgia white supremacist and Citizens Councils leader, currently revels in the developments he can report in his weekly political newspaper, the Augusta Courier. In a recent issue he noted that Senator Ribicoff had exposed Northern hypocrisy; said white supremacists may win now because of Northern fears of bussing ("a new word on the tongues of nearly everybody"); quoted Vermont Royster of The Wall Street Journal, who had written that "the attempt to integrate this country's schools is a tragic failure"; happily reported words from black "militants" Dan Watts and Julius Hobson that seemed to echo his own segregationist viewpoint; and quoted Professor Bickel's article at length. Addressing himself to his segregationist readers, Harris added: "Now, we shouldn't reach the conclusion that the fight is won. The battle isn't over. . . All this means is that we are making some progress and that if we are willing to stand up and fight with sledge hammers instead of powder puffs we are obliged to win. . . . All of us who have been in the thick of the fight from 1954 until now have believed it would take from two to three generations to win this fight. We knew we couldn't win it by ourselves. We have known all along that we had to have the help of the white people outside of the South."

There is no doubt that Harris and others of his viewpoint will verbally "fight with sledge hammers," and some, of course, will physically do it with ax handles, as they did recently in Lamar, S.C. Harris has been consistent. He always did say the fight would take a long time, but that it would be won when real integration began to come outside the South. And it is true that the Southern resistance has frequently outsmarted the federal effort which never truly has been very strong and consistent, precisely because the enforcers always thought the battle was about over, and the resistance always knew it was not.

What is happening now within the South is that Nixon's "Southern strategy" has rekindled all the dying fires. But it is not true, as Harris and Bickel both argue, that integration currently is impossible on a national scale and that, this being the case, it should not be pressed hard in the South. Bickel asked whether it is right to require a small, rural and relatively poor segment of the nation's population (the rural and small-town South, that is) to "submit" to a kind of schooling "that is disagreeable to them (for whatever reasons, more or less unworthy)." This argument revives the "invisible man." A large part of that small, rural and relatively poor area is black, does not feel that it is being forced to "submit," and usually has found nothing disagreeable about the fact that at last it has begun to make real progress toward school integration.

Yes, we are told, but the "vanguard" of black opinion in the nation is no longer interested in integration. Is Roy Innis "vanguard" and Julian Bond, who disagrees with Innis' kind of separatist position, not? Someone is putting us on. When Innis came to Atlanta recently, he conferred with Governor Maddox and reported the Governor's response to his separatist views on schools was "very heartening and encouraging." He did not consult with Bond, also a Georgia state official; Bond would not have heartened him. Vanguard?

Innumerable examples of successful school integration can be cited. One thinks of Greenville, S.C., where white students welcomed blacks with banners and decent local leadership made things work; or Jackson, Miss., where the school superintendent could report "extremely smooth" transition in a system 47 per cent black; or scores of others. The fact is that the number of places in the South where integration has been self-defeating, once it has arrived, is relatively small.

But these numerous examples are being ignored. Some are dismissed on grounds that they do not involve a high percentage of blacks or are in places where resistance was not strong. Aberdeen, Miss., is a small town with a high school that has been 50 per cent black since last September. There were no incidents when Aberdeen closed an all-black high school and fully integrated grades 10, 11 and 12. Very few whites departed. Despite the big educational lag of black high school students who had never been to a good school, education has proceeded at Aberdeen High School. Team teaching, individual instruction and a number of other devices have been used by a school administration determined to make integration work.

The brightest white students have not been penalized; they have benefited from the increase in individual attention, and apparently they are generally making faster progress than were their counterparts a year ago. The achievement levels of the black students, meanwhile, have been rising. (Remember the Coleman Report?) There have been no unusual disciplinary problems. A black student was elected president of the student body, with a majority, without a run-off against two white students. The athletic teams are fully integrated, and the school has taken pains to see that blacks and whites have shared alike in such hallowed endeavors as the selection of cheer leaders and homecoming queens and maids of honor. A lively student newspaper, far from being mousy about the biggest subject in the local high school, has done a complete job of reporting on the changes and on student and adult opinions about it all.

What is the real message of Aberdeen? It is not that the majority of the town's white people wanted school integration or that it was successfully achieved through some extraordinary assistance in funds and other aid from outside. The real message is that school administrators and officials, confronted finally with integration, and knowing they must make it work or have no public school system, have used all their considerable skills to make it effective.

What happens now to such conscientious people? Enemies of the change may scold them for moving along, questioning whether even in the face of a court order they had to make things go well. If they had stalled, or encouraged the private school, or discriminated within the building, or made life unpleasant for the new arrivals, maybe now the fight against integration could be won. Maybe Aberdeen could have gotten by with token integration. That is the local spin-off from the "Southern strategy."

Except for the spectacle of seeing one of the two national political parties openly playing race politics as Southern demagogues have played it (not the "nigger-nigger" and States'-rights Southern demagogues but their successors, who speak of belief in civil rights and disbelief in guidelines, or racial balance or federal force), the most disturbing aspect of the new national trend is the blithe adoption of Southern segregationist terminology and terms of discussion. Now we hear nationally, not just in "Maddox country," that the goal should be "quality education." That should always be the goal of education, of course; but now the term is used to oppose integration, as Southern demagogues have always used it. Now we also hear that it is "time to end the civil war," as Geoffrey and Roscoe Drummond wrote in a recent newspaper column. By this is meant that the federal government should stop leaning hard on the South (if it ever did); and this in turn means it should stop leaning hard on white supremacists in the South. We now hear frequent references to school integration as "racial balance," a term which usually is altogether misleading because it describes a goal and a result hardly ever involved in plans abolishing the dual school systems of the South. And finally, bussing is now at the center of debate, although school integration in the South has steadily reduced bussing. What has happened to the terms of the national discussion? They, too, have been captured by Southern neo-segregationists.

There is another dimension in this shifting of the terms of debate. It has to do with emphasis on "lowering our voices," to use President Nixon's term, at the moment when voices should be raised. People who raise their voices loudly against the politicizing of the school desegregation process—people who, like Panetta, rightly call it "craven retreat"—are now dismissed, even in some liberal quarters, as intemperate zealots. We are urged not to attribute the worst motives to the Nixon Administration, the nation's racial situation being so delicate. On the contrary, voices should be raised, loudly, because the racial situation is delicate and because this playing politics with children further widens the racial gap. It is no service to the country to counsel a quiet rationality that does not permit calling political opportunism exactly that and which is too refined to entertain the thought that Richard Nixon and Lester Maddox can operate with the same motivations.

All of these developments (the developments in the media and academic worlds may do more than the "Southern strategy" to reverse the nation's progress) suggest that the South is once again being cut adrift. And of course the white supremacist element—which is hardly ever called that now, although the country is quick to name black power when it appears—wants the South adrift. Then we can have "local control," "self-determination" and "neighborhood schools." Do Southern liberals have a right to expect those at the end of their life lines, those in places of power in Washington and New York and other cities ouside the South, to continue to hold on? I don't think white Southern liberals have any such right; with relatively few exceptions they have not been the real heroes or the real sufferers in the struggle. But black Southerners can claim that right. The nation still has not made good on the promissory note they hold. People in power, whether it be governmental, intellectual or communications power, ought to be garnisheed to make good. Those in places of influence who do not think so ought to be moved out of the way.

And I think they will be. In Maddox country it is clear that the struggle, as Roy Harris says, is not over. He is calling in his reinforcements. So should we. Behind those who are tired and discouraged and prone to tacitly accept the racist underpinnings of arguments made by John Stennis and Roy Innis, there are younger replacements, many of whom have been tempered in the Southern civil rights movement. They know that reconstruction sometimes must precede reconciliation, and that as long as John Stennis represents a million Mississippi blacks our concern must be mainly for them, not for him.

There seems to be good evidence that the current activism of college students, generally described as student radicalism, is progressing not mainly toward a major force of organized radicalism in America but toward a tough new reformism with perspectives that are, in the present milieu, radical. The student radicalism already has yielded perspectives of truth, but not yet a functional politics. On the other hand, liberalism is ineffectual today exactly to the extent that it lacks those radical perspectives. We have learned that, without them, liberals are capable of producing Vietnams and Chicagos, and the kind of reasoning process that now has shifted the terms of debate on the schools. Liberals who lack a radical perspective—a perspective slicing through the nation's erroneous pretensions about itself, its institutions and the world, and comprehending that civics books are usually filled with facts that add up to lies about how government works—are incapable of dealing effectively with the main processes of public life in America. Let them be replaced by an influx of the new liberals (the label "liberal" perhaps will not be used): people who are not radically destructive but creative. If that happens the earlier liberalism, which for a time became our national orthodoxy, will not be followed by a middle American copout or a drug-culture dropout but by a liberalism that has been made functional again.

Mr. Nixon's "silent majority" did, after all, give him less than half the votes in the 1968 Presidential election, and this after eight years of Democratic rule and in the midst of one of the most unpopular wars in American history. What is there to prove that the nation, though it may have been ready for a pause, will long accept a retreat that is patent political opportunism? I may be wrong, viewing the scene through all the strange prisms of Maddox country, but even in the disarray of liberalism Spiro Agnew does not look like the wave of the future. ■

'I AM CURIOUS—BLUE'

Night Thoughts of a Police Chief

JOSEPH PAUL KIMBLE

Mr. Kimble is the Chief of Police of Beverly Hills, Calif.

If one were asked to characterize this past decade, it might be fair to say that it has been a period of thrashing about. A search for stability, a longing for the "normalcy" of the pre-nuclear years, has rendered a substantial part of our population uncomfortable, unsure and extremely anxious. As a result, the arc of our social spectrum grows wider and wider. And, like a tired metronome, opinion becomes increasingly disposed to stick at one or the other extreme.

In many ways it is a relief to identify the sources of one's discontent by a simplistic "Them vs. Us" identification. As we gulp our social and political tranquilizers, as we readjust our conscience, the world momentarily resumes the sound and shape and shadows of the distant past.

We come to depend upon these periods of euphoria as an escape from the hurting present. We come to rely upon the prescriptions of the vocal extremes. After a while we cease to question the efficacy of what we ingest. It becomes easier to let others think for us; it becomes more comfortable to let others act for us. The only volition we cling to is the right to reject—to reject, or even hate, anyone or anything that might threaten our great and sovereign state of Rationalization. It is understandable, then, that certain segments of the population, when they find that the reasonableness of their great crusade is doubted, threatened, or even attacked, react with indignation. The greatest blow of all, of course, is to find a comfortable perch on the radical Right, or the radical Left, jeopardized by those subversive young people of the radical middle! The foregoing characterization is not intended to be facetious—the fact is that the anguished protestation of modern youth is largely directed against the ideology of extremism in either sector. It is also directed against the silent, ambivalent middle, that by default perpetuates the extremes.

At the risk of generalizing, I would say that the majority of American youth are protesting the addiction to

SRC (spec)

March, 1970: Two buses that had been filled with Negro youngsters on their way to a newly integrated school, after they were stoned

SRC SRC Edu-Fed

(spec)

Southern Integrationists Feel Betrayed—by the North

By PAT WATTERS

ATLANTA.

The enemy is no longer the racism of the state house. The opponent is now those who occupy the White House. . . . Most of us, white and black alike, who joined the struggle for racial justice in the 1950's and 1960's will stick it out. . . . We shall not surrender merely because there is a new President on the block, an old idea in town, a new slavery in the wings, a new generation of despair. . . . We will win not because of rationality—for what was there rational in a young Negro minister's hopeless boycott of a bus company? What was rational in students ordering a cup of coffee in a five-and-dime store? What chance was there in the streets of Birmingham? What rationality was there in those raised clubs at Selma's Edmund Pettus bridge? We will win simply because we must.—CHARLES MORGAN, a white Southerner speaking at a conference in Washington, D. C., on "New Strategies for School Integration," March 13, 1970.

Right! Right! I believe that!—A Negro woman attending the conference, whose son and daughter were recently beaten while attempting to integrate a school in the Deep South.

SOUTHERN integrationists — white ones who have risked ostracism from their society and black ones who have, many of them, risked their lives — feel betrayed by the apparent retreat in the rest of the country from the goals of interracial justice. Just when their own struggle seems paying off in terms of fuller and more meaningful integration in many areas, they see the Nixon Administration as courting infamy in history, failing the responsibility of leadership in this most vital of all national problems and following the blind-alley politics of a Southern strategy; they see whites and blacks of all classes in other sections increasingly hostile to each other; and they see with particular scorn "liberal" pundits, politicians and intellectuals folding without a fight for principle, each with his own set of instant rationalizations.

It makes a man like me, a white Southern integrationist, mad. But it doesn't really surprise me, or make me any less willing to keep fighting for integration, or very much less sure of victory—and I think I speak for most Southern integrationists, black as well as white. Northern allies are bemoaning the end of "the Second Reconstruction," and predicting a new era of racist repression in America. But Southern integrationists, living with the memory of the first repression, have never fully trusted or entirely depended on the and overturned by angry whites in Lamar, S.C. The children escaped before the mob capsized the buses, but several were cut by glass.

May 3, 1970

"We shall not surrender merely because there is an old idea in town, a new slavery in the wings, a new generation of despair" national Government as the only means of achieving a just society down here. This time there are enough of us to make it much harder for men of no principle to sell us out to the racists for political gain. This time we are not going to take it lying down.

I AM talking about a relatively small number of people and I base whatever confidence I feel on the strength of resistance they are capable of sustaining. They are people, black and white, who for a long time have given much of their lives and themselves to the struggle for integration. What they have accomplished is reflected in the climate of opinion among whites and blacks of the general population. Certainly nowhere near a majority of Southern white people could be classified as confirmed believers in integration—but far more than ever before have ceased to be rigid segregationists. Probably a majority accept in varying degrees the token desegregation that has occurred in nearly all areas of Southern life. Likewise, nowhere near a majority of black Southerners were ever involved to the hilt in the great sacrifices and suffering through which the movement's victories were achieved. But far more of them than in other parts of the country are generally considered still to believe in integration, still resistant to separatism—probably all but the most sophisticated of the urban middle class.

Southerners who attended a conference in Washington, D. C., last March of integrationists from all over the country were notable for being less frightened and less dismayed about the current crisis than their fellow countrymen. The meeting was called by the N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense Fund to develop new strategies for school integration. In one of the workshops I sat next to Miss Barbara Jordan, a brilliant Negro lawyer and politician from Texas, and listened to one Northerner's gloomy analysis of desegregation prospects in his own state. When he ended with the comment that no move for social progress was any longer "viable" in America, Miss Jordan uttered a loud protest. "I just don't believe that," she said to me. "I see so much progress every day back home in Houston."

It is not that she or any of us is fooled about the distance Houston or the rest of the South has yet to go toward the goal of a sane, just society. It is just that we have known all along how very far we had to go, and how far we have come. Such understanding of the realities of the racial struggle has seemed all along to us to have eluded many Northerners, including our allies in the struggle. They have just not realized how strong and resilient and stubbornly persistent the racist mentality, nor how tough and skilled and en-

(Continued on Page 104)

PAT WATTERS is director of information for the Southern Regional Council, a bi-racial organization of Southerners concerned with "equal opportunity for all people." He is the author of the recently published book, "The South and the Nation."

Southern integrationists feel betrayed

(Continued from Page 27)

during the opposition to it must be.

So we really have never been overly reliant on our Northern allies, never overly impressed with the depth of dedication of many of them. None of this, though, is to ignore or disparage those Northerners who have stuck with us from the beginning, and do understand the menace of racism in all the nuances. Without them, we would have been lost, and now we need them more than ever. But as Negroes in the movement say of whites they trust that he or she has "a black heart," we tend to think of those good allies of ours as fellow Southerners.

We are sorry, of course, to see the fair-weather friends start to fade away, but we do not regard it as a crucial loss. Far more hurtful to our cause and much more painful was the loss a while back of some of the most effective allies we ever had: the young Freedom Fighters who developed, after bitter experience with Southern racism, the black separatist movement.

The white Northern liberals were willing to pull back from a total commitment to integration when it became clear that the goal could not be attained in a few years; we Southern integrationists were more aware of the obstacles we were all up against and never believed that victory was imminent. After a single summer or even several years of battling the rawest kind of entrenched Southern white racism, such young people just gave up. They gave up not only on the South, but also on all of white America, saying that it is hopelessly racist.

I happen to think they gave up too soon, but can certainly understand and sympathize with how they felt. And it was not just Southern racism, that killed their faith, but Northern liberalism's acquiescence in this Southern racism as well. Most of them say that the breaking point came at the Democratic national convention in 1964, when liberals wanted them to accept a compromise with a Mississippi white delegation which they considered a part of the racist repression that denied democracy to Negro Mississippians and murdered some of those who sought it.

So far, the most prestigious intellectual rationalization of the emerging neo-racism was an article by Professor Alexander Bickel of the Yale Law School. Writing in The New Republic (Feb. 7, 1970), Bickel says, in effect, that the integration ordered by the Supreme Court in 1954 was an impossible dream, that to pursue it is only to "fuel the politics of George Wallace" and that it is not worth the cost anyway.

According to Bickel, integration has not worked in the South because the flight of whites to private schools has led to "resegregation." He argues further that it cannot be accomplished in the North because some black leaders now prefer to have their own schools (with "local control") and because it would be impossible to transport large numbers of inner-city Negroes to schools in the white suburbs. To impose on the South what cannot be accomplished in the North, concludes Bickel, would be unfair.

Of all the cogent rebuttal to the article, the only two responses that seemed to me to answer him fully without being obsequious to the "liberalism" of the author and The New Republic were from Southerners — Mrs. Marian Wright Edelman and Charles Morgan, Jr.

In lawyer's language that nevertheless breathed terrible Southern scorn, Mrs. Edelman replied in The New Republic:

"To say that we should not vigorously pursue Southern school desegregation because we cannot achieve Northern desegregation is ridiculous. That is like saying because we cannot convict every criminal we should prosecute no criminals. Legal rights have been established in the South. Millions of black children's educational futures depend on them. To abandon them is morally indefensible and tragically defeatist . . . The Bickel piece is simply another in a long line of excuses to cloud the real issues and to renege on outstanding commitments already made . . . A great disservice has been done that will not quickly pass. For again we blacks are shown how flimsy our position is . . . We do not defuse the George Wallaces by selling our principles and becoming more like them—we defuse them by clear and resounding repudiation, with a national tone and policy that makes it clear the Constitution is not a political football. . . ."

Writing in South Today, a publication of the Southern Regional Council, Mr. Morgan answered more in the emotional tones that Southern integrationists know to be the real basis for judging such an article:

"Professor Bickel's article is The Article of national retreat, a convenient, if gossamer, cover under which bona-fide racists, black and white, and the merely mistaken men of South and North might respectably gather prior to an all-out and undisguised attack on desegregation . . . Professor Bickel may not understand the use to which his thesis will be put. He does not seem to understand much about the South . . . Criticism of the Warren Court seems a necessary ingredient of demonstrable scholarship among some law professors who feel that if they are not brighter than the Court — which is, of course, the true teacher as well as maker of constitutional law — then they are either not bright enough to teach or, alternatively, to be appointed to the Court if fortuitously asked."

Mrs. Edelman, a skilled young Negro lawyer, fought racism through years of grueling and sometimes dangerous work in Mississippi; now, as director of the Washington Research Project, which seeks to improve Government programs on behalf of the poor and minorities, she is one of the most tough-minded of a number of Southerners who are working in other parts of the country for the cause. Mr. Morgan is a lawyer who in 1963 had to leave Birmingham, his boyhood home, because of business and terrorist retaliation against a speech that he made denouncing the racism of his respectable friends and holding them responsible for the bombing of a Negro church where four young girls attending Sunday school were killed. Since then, as director of the Southern regional office of American Civil Liberties Union, he has won important safeguards for the emerging democracy of the South in the courts, particularly his successful suits to eliminate discrimination in jury selection.

Such people have heard every conceivable excuse for not doing what is right and just about race in the South, or for not taking a stand, and have rejected them. They listen now to Northerners discovering their own excuses and are not impressed.

INTEGRATION, PEACEFUL: As a Negro classmate watches, white children arrive for their first day at a previously all-black junior high in Yazoo City, Miss. Right, a white girl waits to register at a grammar school in West Point, Miss., which also had no whites before a court order.

The Southern integrationist's experience with the realities of "the Second Reconstruction" prevents his too deeply despairing of its demise. What the nation attained during the decade and a half after 1954, when it once again considered itself committed to racial justice, is not to be understated or disdained. But it has been overestimated. In effect, we got court decrees and laws that reinvigorated the Bill of Rights and in a very real way gave democracy a chance in the South for the first time. But the Bill of Rights had been there all along. The great crime done by the nation to the South after the First Reconstruction was failure to enforce this most basic law — and this failure has in various degrees been continued with the new laws and decrees.

From the Supreme Court decision in Brown v. Board of Education onward, in each new judicial or legislative demand for abolition of segregation, the South could have moved in one of two ways—toward full integration, or the way, time after time, that it did go. What was achieved (and accepted) was tokenism, the barest minimum of compliance. The top to the bottom of white Southern government and society bent most of their meager resources and all their considerable will during this crucial time to exploiting every gullibility, uncertainty, hypocrisy and inability to understand racism in the rest of the country, neglecting, all the while, problems of terrible magnitude.

The South, already the least equipped of any section to deal with its problems, has been in a state of flux and turmoil as a result of feeble enforcement for 16 years. It has been distracted and handicapped from performing the most basic functions, like educating children and, most tragically, even feeding many of the poorest of them, and this has been disastrous to the white as well as the black South. As the nation is now paying for the first great betrayal of the South after Reconstruction in its problems with poor, undereducated Southern blacks and whites who have migrated to other parts of the country, so will it pay in some future time for what its more recent failure of responsibility to enforce the law has done to another generation of Southerners.

All that was needed at any step along the way was firm and fair enforcement. All that is required now is to see through the rationalizations of a President who poses as a stern "law-and-order" man and yet demurs at enforcing the laws against segregation—with the excuse that the task is too difficult and delicate.

President Nixon's deplorable statement on school segregation in March was full of ambiguity he probably is compelled to employ while trying to follow a Southern strategy in the party of Lincoln. But to Southern integrationists long accustomed to double talk by moderates back home, the President's meanin seemed all too clear. He vowed strong dedication to the constitutional and "human" terms of the 1954 school integration decision. But then he categorically denounced busing, the necessary means for achieving integration in many instances. He called for stern opposition to illegal school segregation, while pointing out that segregation caused by "housing patterns" has not been declared illegal by the Supreme Court. (If this de facto situation is condoned, it could, by skillful gerrymandering, or simple lying, make all segregation, in the South as well as the North, legal.)

He made a distinction between the "claims of integration" and "those of education," a distinction which integrationists and the Brown decision would deny exists. He preferred "good faith" compliance to "educational disruption," and in the lexicon of Southern race relations that means only one thing—segregation as usual. Finally, he seemed to confirm a negative interpretation of his ambivalent statement by proposing to spend part of a $500-million allocation in 1971 and a billion dollars in 1972 not to implement integration but to improve "racially impacted" schools (those that are all black or mostly black).

Southern integrationists are too familiar with the practical effect of all this. In the early 1950's cities and towns in our region built new Negro schools that were even better than the white ones, trying to foster the case for "separate but equal"—a concept honored previously only in the breach. Even after separate but equal was declared unlawful, the whites, still frenziedly building, could cry plaintively, "Why, the niggers already got the only air-conditioned school in town!" Now the Nixon Administration proposes its own version of the same idea which amounts, in Charles Morgan's words, to "separate but quality."

AGAIN, we Southern integrationists have not been fooled by the Administration's ambiguity about race relations. The Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Robert Finch, is one of the symbols of the Administration's respectable streak, and we have seen many Southerners of good will in the same sad plight that he is in. Such men serve the racists and the ends of racism by providing them with a respectable front. A man in such a position can do little to further the goals he believes in, and yet he fears what would happen if he should give up what little influence for sanity he might have.

That other supposedly good influence in the Administration, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, seems to us, at best, not to understand the South or racism, and, with his recommendation that racial problems be treated with "benign neglect," he placed himself among the worst of those erstwhile friends who hurt more than help us. Such friends were a major factor in the failure of enforcement that plagued us when there was supposed to be no ambiguity about Federal intentions. Even with men like them in power in the late 1950's and early '60's, when majority opinion in the nation was said to support our cause, Southern integrationists saw clearly that "all deliberate speed" was mostly deliberation and no speed; again and again, we saw the Justice Department unwilling or unable to protect the rights, and all too often the lives, of those seeking to abide by the Constitution. Only after the murder of great leaders or the kind of racist mayhem that occurred in Selma, Ala., were public opinion and the Congress stirred enough to pass the civil rights legislation that we got.

At dismal conferences after passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act representatives of Federal agencies explained the guidelines by which they would, presumably, enforce its various sections. These well-intentioned bureaucrats knew they would be dealing with the most respectable elements of Southern society — officeholders, educators, businessmen, lawyers, judges, and so on; they simply could not comprehend that these were the racists—and that they were capable of lying, cheating, stealing, destroying, betraying trust and honor, and, ultimately, abetting murder in the interest of racism.

I HOPE it is not unfair or unkind to say that what the Southern interracial cause has lost so far in the retrogression of the rest of the nation is mainly good intentions. In men like Paul Rilling, who resigned as director of the Southeastern Regional Office of Civil Rights of H.E.W., protesting the Nixon Administration's racial policies, we lose good friends, but little in terms of needed enforcement. Too often, the best such men could give beleaguered, wronged Southern integrationists (for example, black parents whose children faced daily humiliations and beatings in schools with token integration) was sympathy and expressions of mutual frustration.

But how much do we stand to lose from the men of bad intent who have embraced, and likely will embrace in increasing numbers, the Administration's approach to race relations? Southern integrationists were not surprised in 1964 when the Goldwater campaign, that homegrown rightist movement which threatened to become the mainstream of national politics, merged so smoothly with en-

My T mag

Jan 2, 1970

ICH
N!

fy, franks . . . and er sliced. All, all beef. You might of religion with

U. S. INSPECTED AND PASSED BY DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EST. 968

sen delicatessen"
New York, N.Y. 10474

HRU VU

RIC VERTICAL BLINDS
vers turn to control the light.
ll to the side like a drapery.
-Vu holds fast in a breeze.
no track on the bottom.
n made to fit your windows.
blinds are available in many tiful colors and materials.
TE OR PHONE FOR YOUR NEAREST DEALER
U VERTICAL BLIND CORP.
amaroneck, N.Y. 10543
(914) 698-0352

trenched Southern racism; the attraction was mutual—and dangerous. The grip on real power that these two camps have in the present Administration already has been felt in the weakening of what enforcement there had been and in the encouraging of new strategies of racist intimidation. (A Negro minister who said he was brutally beaten by state troopers and sheriff's men at the Brandon, Miss., jail after a civil rights demonstration last February quoted one of the troopers as telling him, "It is a different ballgame now.")

THE legal reforms won in the past decade and a half provide the weapons that Southern integrationists will use to continue to fight. The power of the vote and the courts are most important. Not insignificantly, both have already been threatened from the top of the Nixon Administration. Fortunately, neither attempt at retrenchment has met with full success.

Congress, in its tax-reform legislation, put severe restrictions on funds foundations may grant for voter registration and still enjoy their tax-exempt status. "This is a punitive measure," protested Vernon Jordan, a Negro Southerner, in futile testimony before the Senate Finance Committee. "Today we see the friend turning upon us and becoming an ally of the racists we confront daily in the South." Jordan was then director of the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council, which helped register more than a million Negroes who had been disfranchised before the 1965 Voting Rights Act. The new tax law hampers but will not stop the voter registration effort.

The Nixon Administration made an even more dangerous attack when it sought to eliminate from the Voting Rights Act a requirement that Southern states with a record of previous disfranchisement of Negroes get Justice Department approval of any change in state registration laws. Those who finally defeated this move were aware that it would have opened the way for white racists to impose again the notorious tests and procedures whose discriminatory administration before the 1965 act was the main means of depriving Negroes of the vote. In this, Congressional liberals showed more than the ordinary grasp of the realities of racism.

Perhaps the Supreme Court did, too, when, despite the efforts of the Administration to get another delay, the justices last October unanimously ordered 30 Mississippi school districts and 14 others across the South to carry out plans for integration immediately. For the most part, the districts achieved orderly compliance without too much difficulty—just as we have known all along they could. The transition has, of course, not been without trauma, including some racist terrorism and the exodus of many whites to makeshift, racist private schools. But the decision, coming after 16 years of defiance and dishonesty, moved the South into what may well be its consummate racial crisis, the final confrontation between racism and the Constitution.

For the first time, school systems, large and small, have been taking the steps that they might have taken from the beginning to achieve real integration. They seem to have done so out of fear of—if not respect for—the Supreme Court. Many white Southerners still need the excuse that they are being forced to do what they know is right about race—and their response to the Court has at least been made ambiguous by the default of the executive branch. But the Federal judiciary has had many Southern school officials under court order for more than a decade. Many Southern integrationists have thought all along that one or two exemplary exercises of the power of the Federal courts to fine or jail lawbreaking officeholders would achieve far more, and be more just, than the executive department's reliance on depriving the children of Federal school aid. It was the old segregationist Governor of Georgia, Marvin Griffin, who said, as his reason for not courting the risk, that being in jail "kind of crimps a Governor's style."

GOV. CLAUDE R. KIRK Jr. of Florida stated the same sentiment less colorfully when he declared that paying a $10,000-a-day contempt-of-court fine for continuing to block integration of Manatee County schools "would not solve the problem." His seizure in April of school officials' power in order to block an integration plan on grounds it called for too much busing was the most serious resistance to the new Supreme Court ruling. And Federal Judge Ben Krentzman's response, the threat of the fine, was perhaps the most effective handling of such lawlessness in all the history of schoolhouse-door grandstanding by Southern governors.

The case, however, heightened the conflict between the executive and judicial branches regarding school integration. Governor Kirk was confident that the Justice Department would support his appeals, aimed at the Supreme Court, for modification of the Manatee plan. "I urge parents, students and the public to be patient and work with us and the Department of Justice now that we are working together as two separate sovereigns before a court," he said, confidently.

The Justice Department

had earlier indicated enmity to busing when it entered a "friend of the court" brief in the Charlotte, N. C. school integration case. This remarkable brief went so far as to suggest that United States District Judge James B. McMillan might have committed "an abuse of discretion" in ordering a busing plan thorough enough to achieve racial balance in Charlotte. The brief, filed by Assistant Attorney General Leonard, was described by The New York Times as "in line" with the President's segregation statement. The courts had already delayed from April 1 to Sept. 1 implementation of the plan, which civil rights lawyers had expected would provide a national model. The Justice Department brief listed court rulings which, it said, caution the courts against upholding any plan for achieving a precise, system-wide racial balance that would "require a school board involuntarily to make unreasonable increments in transportation expenditures, the number of students bused, distances traveled, and the like."

Civil rights attorneys are seeking in appeals to bring all Southern school districts under the new Supreme Court ruling by next fall. The practical effect of the national retreat may well be determined by the outcome of the conflict between the executive branch and the judiciary in this matter of busing.

The Senate's rejection of both of the so-called strict constructionists from the South nominated by the President to the Supreme Court was thus a stunning rebuke to Southern-strategy politics. But the Senate seemed more to repudiate the mediocrity than the racial attitudes of the kind of Southerners the President was forced to choose among. In the context of the Southern strategy, his preference for a "conservative" had to mean an enemy of integration; it is a secondary matter that such Southern "conservatives" are, none of them, of the caliber of the Court. Law-abiding Southerners, happy as they were over the defeat of the President's first two choices, would have felt a good deal better if the Senate majorities had more plainly stated opposition to the segregationist records and predilections of both men.

Once more, liberalism showed its ignorance of the strategies of racist politics. Avoidance of the real issue allowed the President the demagogic opportunity to say the two men were rejected because they were Southerners. Southerners have been among those quick to argue with the logic of that charge, and to suggest various highly qualified Southern judges who would have no trouble getting Senate confirmation, among them United States District Judge Frank Johnson, Jr., of Montgomery and Judge John Minor Wisdom of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

NEGRO Southerners, by and large, support the Supreme Court's recent integration order. They may be even more disillusioned than Northern black people, but they value education. Many still agree with the preponderance of sociological evidence that integrated experience is a necessary ingredient of education. But beyond that, virtually all know out of their Southern experience that the white power structure will put the most money, the best equipment, where white children go to school—and they want in.

For this reason, they have, for the most part, been leery of a plan brought to them on a recent tour of the South by Roy Innis, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality. Innis is a New Yorker who believes that blacks attending integrated schools run by whites are damaged emotionally and educationally. He proposed that Southern school districts be carved up to give black communities local control—with tax money divided according to the number of pupils in separate black and white districts.

Negroes know that Mr. Innis is not the enemy, even if to some he seems to be playing into the enemy's hands. They know that whites, who still have power in the South, are not going to give them anything worth controlling. Even segregationist governors with whom Mr. Innis met in his filibuster through the South seemed cool to the CORE plan—partly no doubt because they are aware that he lacks support among Negro voters. The one community that semed interested was Mobile, Ala., where Negroes are perhaps more frustrated than anywhere in the South at the success of white resistance to integration. Southern integrationists have been bemused by rumors that the Justice Department likes the CORE plan and may have suggested Mobile to Mr. Innis as a likely place to push it.

If Southern integrationists have regarded the Innis invasion as another example of Northern innocence about Southern racism they were for the same reason neither overly discouraged by the initial success of the Stennis Amendment to the education appropriation bill, nor much encouraged when it was finally taken out of the bill. To them, the measure introduced by Senator John Stennis of Mississippi was a typical ploy, which was on one level, no more than an effort to perpetuate a hoary article of Southern racist faith: that the nation ought to get the mote of racism out of its own eye before messing with the beam in that of the South. The amendment's statement

OOD, ANGRY: A line of Georgia high-ay patrolmen block Negro demonstrators who ought to enter a gym in Sandersville where ov. Lester Maddox delivered an anti-integration eech. "Negro Southerners are far more angry than eir brothers who talk the rhetoric of revolt."

$566 B
FOR TV—ST

Designed by Robert and Mark J. Fu

All you need is a so furniture—hi-fi ca cases, exclusive de Professional results
page Furn-a-Kit cat
1309 Cromwell Av purchase it at any o

FURI

Authorized Showrooms
BRONX: 1308 Edward L.
CONN. 1779 E. State St.
2548 Albany Aver
LONG ISLAND: 315 Rte.
350 Sunri
NEW JERSEY: 885 Route
636 Route
NEW YORK CITY: 151 Eas

N
H
Soap a
of natu
feeling.
Milk ov
rinse wi
Cleansin gently c stale ma clean, cl dryness.
with new radiance
Lemon
Availabl
CL

The realities of racial struggle have eluded many Northerners

that, as a matter of public policy, school desegregation enforcement should be uniform throughout the country was not without ironic overtones for those of us not impressed with enforcement in the South. Most of all, it served to show the naïveté of Northern liberalism and the sad spectacle of Senator Abraham Ribicoff's supporting it because he deplores Northern hypocrisy.

How could he have thought he advanced the cause of integration by supporting anything having to do with John Stennis? Hypocrisy of Northern liberalism is enshrined already in two provisions of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which seem contradictory to Southern integrationists. One demands an end to de jure segregation of schools, a Southern condition, and the other forbids busing to end de facto segregation, a Northern condition. All that a Southern integrationist can say to the North about its de facto segregation is the simple truth we know about all segregation, and this most humbly: Regardless of how it comes about, de jure or de facto, it is wrong and hurts both races; it is an institutional expression of racism, and it must be ended because the cost of not ending it will be the life of the nation.

James Baldwin evoked the Negro spiritual's metaphor of "the fire next time" to sound the same warning. But those who have lived in the South (like people who have lived in South Africa, Rhodesia, or Nazi Germany) know an even more dreadful vision than the apocalypse; they have experienced the death of the spirit that comes when racism rules. In the South we have seen so much needless suffering, the blight cast on so many lives. No one escapes—whites least of all. You can see it in the faces of both black and white, in the very way they walk and hold their bodies—joyless, stunted, sexless. We have felt racism's blight at work on our friends, our very families, our own secret lives. Numbness, even more than fire, threatens America if it fails to build a just interracial society.

Negro Southerners are, I think, far more angry than their brothers in the rest of the country who talk the fashionable rhetoric of revolution. They do not indulge such talk much, are still trying to fight within normal frameworks. But if the policies and mood of the nation should finally, with consummate folly, force them outside, they would be capable of real and effective insurrectionary action—far more so than the constant talkers of it. "If I can't have my freedom," they are saying, "nobody else in the United States is going to have any either."

THE nation may, indeed, desert them—but it does so at its own peril. At the conference on new school integration strategy, Negro Southerners recited the dreadful recent versions of the dreary old story of white racist terrorism. I talked with two of the Negro high school students from Lamar, S.C., who were on school buses attacked by a white mob which state and Federal police had allowed to gather on the grounds of an integrated school—men and women armed with bricks, chains, clubs.

"My first feeling was of death," said Clarence Brunson, 18 years old. "I could see myself dying. There was no chance to fight back."

Annette Johnson, 16, said: "I was scared to death they would come in and kill us. They were on one side of the bus. The patrolmen were on the other. We were scared to go out either side."

Here, then, is the perspective for viewing the racist retreat in the rest of the country—in terms of two decent, middle-class teen-agers afraid for their lives as a result of having acted within the law, and being just as afraid of law enforcement officials as of the mob, and having a rational reason in Southern reality for both fears.

This, too, is the perspective for judging apologists for the racist retreat, from the President on down, in their tender concern for the sensibilities and conveniences of children, except when it comes to the need for integration—this symbolized in the hysteria over busing. For the sake of sanity, we integrationists cling to our ingrained sense of Southern sardonic humor: To travel country roads of the South this very day, as I have recently done, is to see in broad daylight constant and flagrant busing of children as it has been going on for a century — white pupils being transported past black schools to white schools, and vice versa. And of course the busing hysteria is only one more example of the segregationist Southerners' ability to embroil the rest of the country in secondary considerations. They will always concede the first point—what the law says. But they will obfuscate and litigate endlessly over the second—how the law might be enforced.

In the South today, some schools ordered by the courts to be fully integrated are in point of fact all-black in enrollment; parents of the white children have put them in those shabby and inadequate private schools thrown up by the racists to avoid integration. Sadly, such white children suffer. But the public school is at last a lawful one. The black children are at least enjoying whatever the school district can afford to put into education. And these schools remain open to the white children any time they want to come back on an integrated basis.

(A Mississippi school principal expressed relief that the worst segregationists among his white pupils had retreated to the private schools; without them, he said, the transition to integration would be less difficult, though some of them were already trickling back into the public school and that seemed the likely thing to happen generally. White Southerners, like black ones, have proved time and again since 1954 that education of their children is the most important thing to them, more important than living up to the ranted expectations of their racist leaders.)

The solicitude that the President and others have expressed about the rigors of busing seems based on the same misplacement of values that allowed segregated schools to exist against the law in the South. If some children are inconvenienced by having lawful schools, this is nothing compared with the harm done by unlawful ones, by the debilities to both races and all classes from the separation and isolation of children, one from the other.

This is the essence of what the South has to tell the nation about racism. You can't have priorities higher than the Bill of Rights. You can not have just a little bit of denial of freedom. It is all or nothing. The Supreme Court's order of full integration brings the South at last to this all-or-nothing reality.

Maybe the Supreme Court realized that it was now or never not merely in the South but in all America for this ultimate confrontation with racism. As it has been in the South, then, so let it be in the nation. Already Senator Walter F. Mondale, Minnesota Democrat, has emerged as a new kind of Northern spokesman for integration in the current crisis, unfooled and possessed of the same essential understanding of the issue that Southern integrationists have. "I do not know what the politics of human rights is today," Mondale said recently. "I sense that it's less popular than it's been for a number of years. But unless we sustain it, the cause of the country is lost."

Maybe most white Americans are as bad as the Southern Congressmen and the black separatists think—but I don't believe it. I don't take that dim a view of my fellow Americans, any more than I do of my fellow Southerners. I see now more and more Southerners coming to grips with the reality of racism, really overcoming the racist conditioning of their childhood; and I see many, many children in a new generation —black and white—growing up together and sharing not just a culture, as we always have in the South, but sharing in rights and dignity as well. More and more, such progress will depend on forcing the confrontation between the madness of racism and the sanity of America's idealism. In such a showdown, I believe most people will opt for sanity. The greatest irony in the current crisis of faith in America is that it will lead the nation to its own final showdown between sanity and insanity. ■

PICTURE CREDITS

1—DENIS CAMERON
23—DRAWING BY ROBERT M. CUNNINGHAM
24-25—TASS FROM SOVOFOTO
26-27—ASSOCIATED PRESS
30-31—PHOTOREPORTERS
34-35—CHARLES A. GERRETSEN FROM BLACK STAR; THE NEW YORK TIMES (BARTON SILVERMAN); SOVFOTO
40—THE NEW YORK TIMES (JACK MANNING)
46—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
55—ASSOCIATED PRESS
56-60—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
62—JOHN PHILLIPS FROM LIFE
70-75—KEN REGAN FROM CAMERA 5
83-85-86-92-95—DRAWINGS BY SUSAN PERL
88—THE NEW YORK TIMES STUDIO (BILL ALLER)
98-99—TASS FROM SOVFOTO
100—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
104-105—THE NEW YORK TIMES (GARY SETTLE)
106-107—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL
108—KEN REGAN FROM CAMERA 5
110—TIM KANTOR

Southern Regional Council's Report on IRS Book Probe

Following is an advance copy of a report by Reese Cleghorn, editor of "South Today," which will appear in the next issue of that publication of the Southern Regional Council, a research and information agency in the field of human relations.

The federal government, through the Treasury Department, has begun a systematic effort to obtain the names of people who check out library materials about explosives and, in some cases, books loosely described as "subversive" or "militant."

Investigators of the Treasury's Internal Revenue Service has been quietly visiting libraries for at least two months seeking the information. The result is believed to be the nation's first coordinated effort to gather intelligence information that makes Americans suspect because of what they read.

Numerous librarians and officials of the American Library Association, questioned during the past few days about the Treasury agents' visits, confirm that the investigations have sought the titles and the names of borrowers of books listed under the heading "explosives" in library catalogues and, in some cases, titles suggesting contents related to guerrilla warfare. Beyond that, in at least one library system an agent simply requested that the librarian provide the names of people who have checked out "militant or subversive" books. When she refused, the investigator angrily lectured her on refusing to cooperate with the government.

Resistance by Librarians

In another library, agents succeeded in obtaining the names of people who had checked out books on guerrilla warfare by Che Guevara, the Cuban revolutionist, and Francois Sully. The librarian willingly provided the names, which included those of two teen-agers who apparently were working on term papers.

The federal agents in some cases, upon meeting resistance by librarians, have suggested that they might obtain subpoenas for the information, which presumably would place the burden upon the librarians themselves to laboriously extract the desired information from microfilmed records. An in another case the

As for obtaining the names of borrowers, he further said: "You are getting into a fringe area as to whether this kind of information could be useful. If this is public information, our people are going to look for it anywhere they can find it. I don't know whether this kind of information is available to the public or not. Some libraries may not care. Others could." On whether agents would seek subpoenas if librarians objected, he said: "I doubt it. This would be going out on a fishing expedition."

Mr. Serr was asked where lists of borrowers would go, if they were gathered by agents. "They might not even go further than the investigator," he said. "We make no effort to program anything like that through IRS computers."

He said his division has been asked by the McClellan Committee "to collect certain information on explosives, the number of bombs, and so on. We have asked our people to give us certain information about what the local requirements and rules are with regard to explosives. I am sure they have been doing a certain amount of research, to find out how things are run."

Following are the particulars of a number of Treasury efforts to obtain library information:

On July 1 and on other days at about that time, investigators called at libraries throughout metropolitan Atlanta. In a few cases, they found immediate cooperation, but in most they were turned back—temporarily, at least—by the objections of librarians and the difficulties of obtaining information from highly-systematized microfilm records. How persistent they will be in pursuing the names they are seeking remains to be seen.

Access to Micro film

Carlton Rochell, director of the Atlanta Public Library, was attending the American Library Association convention in Detroit when an investigator identified as Charles D. Lowe visited the city's main library. The investigator was told that it would be impossible to immediately obtain the names of borrowers of particular books but that, if he desired, he could have access to the large numbers of microfilm reels which re-brary, Mrs. James N. Wood. Mrs. Wood then informed the Southern Regional Council, and that initial disclosure began inquiries that led to others and ultimatey to confirmation of a national pattern.

No Specific Books

Mrs. Brown later said the agent mentioned no specific books or authors. "He was concerned with the phrase 'militant and subversive material,'" she said. "That kept coming into the conversation. I have heard that in other libraries in the system specific books were checked." He had been in the library for some time, apparently checking the catalogue of books, before talking to Mrs. Brown. "He came to me to ask how to identify the 'users of militant and subversive materials,'" she said.

She also recalled that he asked her whether the library would "flag" certain "subversive" books so that agents could easily determine who had checked them out. "I said I would resist such a move as severely as I could," she says. "I said I would do so only if commanded to do so by the director of the system. . . . I explaned that I happen to be an old-fashioned librarian and that anyone coming in the door of the library I am in charge of can read what he wants and in privacy."

It was at that point, Mrs. Brown recalls, that the encounter became a personal conflict. "He said, 'I detect a feeling of hostility on your part. I don't believe we should pursue the conversation.' I said I didn't feel hostile toward him but toward what he was doing. He hit the roof. He shouted: 'Do you mean to tell me that you would allow patrons to use militant and subversive material at this library toward the purpose of overthrowing the government?' I refused to answer. I told him that was as if I asked him whether he had stopped beating his wife. He was livid when he left, and I was, too."

Names Provided

An agent who called at another branch in the DeKalb County system, Brookhaven, found it easier to obtain what he wanted. The borrower records at the Brookhaven branch are less complex than at some other libraries. It is a relatively simple matter to correlate the numbers of patrons with

First Amendment rights. He responded to a request to withhold action until it could be established whether the agents' visits were a local phenomenon or part of a national pattern.

Milwaukee Inquiry

Mrs. Judith Krug, director of the American Library Association's Office for Intellectual Freedom in Chicago, knew of only one instance of Treasury inquiries when she went to the library association's annual conference in Detroit during the first week of July. It involved the Milwaukee Public Library, and at the convention one session heard a brief report on that episode.

"Then I started hearing comments about other places," Mrs. Krug said. "I know there was one reference to such an occurence in Colorado and one in Wyoming, but this was second hand. It was very frightening to me. The Intellectual Freedom Committee discussed it only in very general terms." Just after the convention, she was told about the Atlanta incidents "and I saw it fit exactly the same pattern," she said. "The only other time I ever heard of federal agents' asking for records was in connection with President Kennedy's assassination, when records of the New Orleans Library were used in an effort to determine what Lee Harvey Oswald had been reading."

Miss Vivian Maddox, assistant city librarian in Milwaukee, relates this sequence of events which began the first week of May:

"A Treasury Department agent appeared here, asking a supervisor about books on explosives. He was sent to my office, and we had a lengthy talk. He said if we were served with a subpoena for the records we would have to do all the work, but if we would just let them do it, they would do the work. I still refused. An assistant city attorney called the next day and said the library's records are all public. I asked him: 'Are you bringing this up because of the Treasury Department request?' He said, 'Yes.'"

Written Legal Ruling

Miss Maddox said Milwaukee's head librarian, Richard E. Krug, then talked to the city attorney's office and asked for the legal ruling in writing. It arrived a day or that some of the books in which the Treasury Department was interested would, in fact, inform a reader how to make explosive devices.

The Board of Trustees of the Milwaukee Public Library met during the first week of July and considered a resolution that might prohibit release of information about borrowers in the absence of a court order or strong evidence of a serious need for the information. But the resolution was delayed, pending consultation with the city attorney's office. Thus, in Milwaukee, the matter remains unresolved, and the Treasury Department already has obtained the names of borrowers.

Librarians' Reponse

In Detroit last March, the main public library was visited by federal agents in connection with a book that had been found in a Chicago apartment where police had discovered a supply of explosives. The book, on how to handle firearms, had been stolen from the Detroit Library. Mrs. Clara Jones, director of the library, said, however, that she knows of no general inquiry by federal agents about her library's books and borrowers.

In another Georgia incident, Dr. Lawson ascertained that two Treasury agents visited the Cobbs County-Marietta Public Library, 20 miles from Atlanta. He said the acting director there, Mrs. Josephine Stratton, was asked about the book retrieval system, check-outs, and books on bombs and explosives. "They also found a book written by an ex-Communist, eight or nine years old, listed in the catalogue," Dr. Lawson said. "But it had been lost. They had preceded this visit with one to the county police department."

These various inquiries into the federal agents' efforts suggest a widely varying response on the part of the librarians. In some cases the agents found ready cooperation; in some, direct rejection; and in some, permissive responses grounded, however, in the knowledge that microfilm record-keeping systems themselves impose a formidable obstacle to obtaining the information desired.

Association's Position

The posture of the Ameri-

brary is a very personal matter. A library is a man's university, where everyone is equal. I find it very frightening when someone starts inquiring about how you are using your mind."

Serious Encroachment

She said she will present a policy statement to the library association's governing council when it meets in January, with hopes that it will reject any inquiries such as those made by the Treasury Department. "We will fight the subpoenas, too," she said. "We want people to call us if they are visited by agents, and to call us if they get subpoenas."

Dr. Raymond Wheeler, a physician in Charlotte, N.C., who is president of the Southern Regional Council, said he found the Treasury agents' listing of book borrowers to be shocking evidence of a serious new encroachment upon individual freedoms. The council, a research and information agency in the human relations field, in the past has concerned itself periodically with Southern states' intrusions upon civil liberties related to reading matter.

Dr. Wheeler said:

"It is deeply disturbing to see evidence that the federal government, which in recent years often has been the protector of our liberties in exactly this sphere, is now gathering the kind of information that only a totalitarian regime would ordinarily attempt to justify. I relate this gathering of information about reading matter to earlier reports that various government agencies are systematically compiling fragmentary information on huge numbers of law-abiding citizens, who suddenly have become 'persons of interest in computerized files in Washington.

"I agree with a recent statement by Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. that even the existence of these concentrations of suggestive but often insignificant shreds of information can have a severe intimidating effect upon the public."

might obtain subpoenas for the information, which presumably would place the burden upon the librarians themselves to laboriously extract the desired information from microfilmed records. An in another case, the agents, after a refusal from a librarian, contacted the city attorney's office, which opened the library files by advising the librarian in writing that, contrary to library tradition, all library records were public information.

Inquiries for this report have revealed that the agents' activities are not simply localized, pertaining to specific investigations, but part of a nationwide campaign to gather the names of readers of certain kinds of books.

Before the inquiries, the American Library Association, through its Office for Intellectual Freedom in Chicago, knew of one library's experience with the investigators but was unaware that the Internal Revenue Service was gathering the information elsewhere.

Enforcement Powers

It has now been confirmed that the IRS is gathering the information nationally, through its Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Division, under a very broad construal of IRS enforcement powers authorized by the Gun Control Act of 1968. That act defines destructive devices (including explosives, mines, missiles and poison gas) and provides that anyone manufacturing them must file an application with the Secretary of the Treasury and purchase a tax stamp.

Librarians are uncertain about what is done with the names of readers once the IRS has obtained them. In recent weeks, Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (Democrat) of North Carolina, chairman of the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights, has charged that the use of government computers to amass files on suspect citizens is in itself a threat to Americans' freedoms.

Request for Information

When asked whether agents have been gathering names of book borrowers, Harold Serr, director of the IRS Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Division, said: "I wouldn't swear that they haven't, because when you are looking for information you go wherever you can find it. But unless they are working on a particular person, I don't think it would be worthwhile to find information that way." Although his office has not specifically directed investigators to gather names of book borrowers, he said, "it's possible that some investigator is looking for this."

brary. The investigator was told that it would be impossible to immediately obtain the names of borrowers of particular books but that, if he desired, he could have access to the large numbers of microfilm reels which record some 150,000 book transactions each month.

When Mr. Rochell returned to his office this week, he told supervisory staff members that the library's record were private. "I said that I feel when a situation involves a member of the public and his reading matter, this is a trust between the librarian and that person," Mr. Rochell said. "We won't provide such information unless required to by subpoena."

On July 6, Mr. Rochell called Robert P. Lane, who is Georgia chief special investigator for the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Division of the IRS, to inquire about the agents. "He said they were doing this in connection with the Gun Control Act of 1968, destructive devices section," Mr. Rochell subsequently related. "He said the idea of visiting the libraries was provided as an "investigative lead' by his regional office. They were trying to find out, first, what is available in the libraries and, second, who might be reading it."

Concern Expressed

Mr. Rochell asked whether the IRS had specific books in mind." He said they really didn't, that they were looking to see what might be available." Mr. Rochell said he expressed his concern about the whole process and that Mr. Lane said he would relay this concern to the regional office.

In addition to the main office, the agents visited only one Atlanta system branch, insofar as Mr. Rochell could immediately determine. It was the Inman Park branch, which serves a lower-income area that is racially transitional and where a substantial number of "longhairs" and Cubans live.

Agents made a much more extensive visitation the same week to branches of the library system of DeKalb County, a largely middle-class "bedroom community" that includes some of Atlanta and a large part of its suburban population. At first, there was some incredulity and suspicion that the agents might be right-wing extemists with phony credentials. "I thought at first they might have been John Birchers," one librarian said.

Mrs. Tomlin E. Brown, in charge of DeKalb's Avis G. Williams branch, was so shaken by the experience that the next day she talked about it to a visitor to the li-what he wanted. The borrower records at the Brookhaven branch are less complex than at some other libraries. It is a relatively simple matter to correlate the numbers of patrons with the numbers on the check-out records for particular books.

Mrs. Matty Dodson, head librarian at the Brookhaven branch, said the agent checked the catalogue and asked about borrowers of two books: "Guerrilla Warfare," by Che Guevara, and "The Age of the Guerrilla," by Francois Sully. "One of these books had gone out only twice." Mrs. Dodson said. "The one by the man with the C-H-E name had gone out nine times since 1962. He got the names of the ones who had checked it out in 1968 and 1969." There were only two names, Mrs. Dodson said: Both of teenagers who, she thought, were working on term papers.

At the Scott Candler branch in the DeKalb system, Mrs. Barbara Moeller says, an agent whose name she wrote down simply as "Benson," with the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Division, noted that there were no catalogue listings under "explosives" but did say there were two books he was interested in. "He didn't say what they were." She said at this branch, names of borrowers were not obtained immediately because they are on reels of film and a substantial amount of time would be required to find borrowers of a particular book.

'Legitimate Agent'

Mrs. John Hale, who is in charge of DeKalb's branch libraries, said when asked about the Treasury investigators: "I think they called on all branches. Our libraries are so small they wouldn't have much on these subjects. . . . The man was a legitimate agent of the government. That we found out."

After the agents' visits to the DeKalb branches, Mrs. Brown contacted Dr. Venable Lawson, of the Emory University Library School in suburban Atlanta, who is chairman of the Intellectual Freedom Committee of the Metropolitan Atlanta Library Association. Still believing that the whole matter was so bizarre that the libraries' visitors might have been imposters rather than federal agents, Dr. Lawson checked one agent's name he had been given, "Charles D. Lowe," and learned that the local Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Division does have an agent with that name.

Dr. Lawson was prepared to ask his local committee to denounce what he considered grave intrusions upon

Written Legal Ruling

Miss Maddox said Milwaukee's head librarian, Richard E. Krug, then talked to the city attorney's office and asked for the legal ruling in writing. It arrived a day or two later, she recalled. Mr. Krug then ordered release of the information. The library has information indicating that the agent who first called was M. Michael Geraty.

It was later ascertained that the Treasury Department's interest in Milwaukee had been narrowed to 15 books, principally volumes on explosives, and 10 borrowers of them. Circulating records for the period, January, 1969, through April, 1970, were checked. In Milwaukee, Miss Maddox said, no general interest in "subversive" or "militant" books was expressed. She said the agent, however, not only threatened a subpoena but also suggested the librarians should cooperate because of national unrest and disturbances. Miss Maddox believes ing systems themselves impose a formidable obstacle to obtaining the information desired.

Association's Position

The posture of the American Library Association is clear, however. In its "Library Bill of Rights," the association holds that information about what people read is held in trust and should not be divulged. "How would it be," said one librarian, "if we readily released, for instance, names of people who have checked out books on sexual deviations? That would create suspicion about people that would have no basis at all."

Mrs. Krug of the American Library Association expressed the view of many librarians when she said: "I'm very upset. the Library Bill of Rights says it is the responsibility of library service to provide materials on all sides of all questions and issues and to make them available to everyone. We also feel that the use of a li-

NY Times
6/1/70

JAMES DABBS, 74, LIBERAL IN SOUTH

SRC

Ex-Head of Regional Council Gained Fame as Author

James McBride Dabbs, a product of plantation aristocracy who became one of the leading Southern exponents of integration, died Saturday at Rip Raps, his family's ancestral plantation near Mayesville, S.C. His age was 74.

"He got along with all the people down there," said an old friend yesterday, "the white people as well as the black people. Over the mantelpiece in the plantation house he had two Confederate muskets and over them a citation of the Detroit chapter of the N.A.A.C.P."

His friends recalled that he was as proud of this citation, the first he received from a major black organization, he was of his Southern heritage —a grandfather raised cotton and tobacco on 10,000 acres at Mayesville, 50 miles east of Columbia, S. C. By the time of Mr. Dabbs's, death however, the plantation had been reduced to 175 acres and the sprawling manor house.

For nearly a decade, until 1964, Mr. Dabbs was president of the Southern Regional Council, one of the most influential liberal bodies in the South. He served as a member of the executive board until his death.

Famed for His Books

Mr. Dabbs gained national renown for his writings, particularly his last major work, "Who Speaks for the South?" a comprehensive examination of the evolution and mystique of the Southern identity.

His answer was that the Southerner speaks for himself in his love of America and love of the world. The Southerner's character, Mr. Dabbs wrote, "is as distinctive as the balmy air blowing inland across the sea-islands of South Carolina."

The other works of Mr. Dabbs also unite his theology (he was an elder of the Presbyterian church) and his quest for the reality of his own heritage. His work the first he received from a major black organization, he was of his Southern heritage —a grandfather raised cotton and tobacco on 10,000 acres at Mayesville, 50 miles east of Columbia, S. C. By the time of Mr. Dabbs's, death however, the plantation had been reduced to 175 acres and the sprawling manor house.

For nearly a decade, until 1964, Mr. Dabbs was president of the Southern Regional Council, one of the most influential liberal bodies in the South. He served as a member of the executive board until his death.

Famed for His Books

Mr. Dabbs gained national renown for his writings, particularly his last major work, "Who Speaks for the South?" a comprehensive examination of the evolution and mystique of the Southern identity.

His answer was that the Southerner speaks for himself in his love of America and love of the world. The Southerner's character, Mr. Dabbs wrote, "is as distinctive as the balmy air blowing inland across the sea-islands of South Carolina."

The other works of Mr. Dabbs also unite his theology (he was an elder of the Presbyterian church) and his quest for the reality of his own heritage. His works were "The Southern Heritage," published in 1958; his first book, with Carl Julien, "The Pee Dee Panorama," on life in the cotton-field uplands of South Carolina; "The Road Home;" and his final work, "Civil Rights in Recent Southern Fiction."

For a large part of his life Mr. Dabbs was a professor of English at Coker College in Sumter, S.C. But he traveled and spoke extensively throughout the country on civil-rights issues and the need for harmony among the races.

It was his connection with universities and his concern with the problems of youth that led to his membership in the National Student Association and even the Students for a Democratic Society in which, friends said, he was an honorary member until his death.

Held Many Offices

He was also a ruling elder of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, a member of the executive committee of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen, and a member of the Delta Ministry of Mississippi.

But his first loves were his 175-acre cotton and tobacco plantation, his family and his concern for the need for the traditional way of life of the South to conform to 20th century realities.

"Segregation is not the Southern way of life," he said in an interview 10 years ago. "That's a myth. It's the very opposite of our historical tradition. Today the South is moving into a new world and it's afraid it may lose something of value. But the thing of value is not segregation."

In 1964 Mr. Dabbs spoke out against Gov. George C. Wallace's candidacy for the Presidency of the United States. "Do Southerners really believe this?" he asked in a television interview. "No, not really . . . but they like to see the old play re-acted." He expressed the view that the South was viewing the Wallace candidacy with "dissatisfaction and disgust."

Shortly before his death, he liked to feel that "the ice was breaking throughout the South," with the old way of life giving way to a new.

He is survived by his wife, Edith Wells Mitchell Dabbs; two sons, James McBride Dabbs Jr. of Atlanta, and Army Lieut. Richard Dabbs of San Antonio, Tex., three daughters, Miss Dorothy Dabbs of Atlanta; Mrs. Robert Haas of Valhalla, N. Y.; Mrs. Richter H. More Jr. of Jonesboro, Tenn.; six grandchildren; two sisters, Miss Sophie Dabbs and Mrs. Walter W. Thompson, both of Mayesville; and a brother, McBride Dabbs, also of Mayesville.

MRS. MAX RIEGELMAN

Constitution 6-11-48

RALPH McGILL

Robeson's Georgia Appearance

There isn't any question but what the Communists have tremendous influence with direction of the Wallace third party campaign.

The Daily Worker, Communist paper, says the Communist Party is chiefly responsible for the creation of the party and its direction.

The Socialist candidate, Norman Thomas, has so testified out of his personal knowledge of the Communists in the Wallace party.

Therefore, it is significant that the Macon group backing Wallace has announced plans to bring Paul Robeson, Negro singer and long-time fellow traveler and Communist-applauder, to Macon for a concert in the interest of raising money for the campaign.

Robeson is a trouble-maker and a trouble-hunter.

Person He also is a great artist, one of our best. America was good to him, in a measure greater than that accorded the average person, of whatever race.

Robeson admittedly, by his own words, devotes his time and abilities to fellow-traveling Communist interests in order to create trouble. That's why he is, we believe, coming to Macon.

Let's look at his background and his life and see if he is a mistreated man.

Background His father was a slave, and therefore had a right to bitterness and a hostile attitude toward America. But his father knew that it was not his fault he had been a slave and that no shame was thereby attached to him. He knew, too, that he had been freed by a country which had fought a bloody war to end slavery. He became a minister and preached the gospel, living a useful, respected, honored life.

Robeson was born in New Jersey in 1898. He entered Rutgers University at the age of 17 and had an unusually fine record. He was a star athlete and made the all-American football team his last two years. He was an honor student. He went to Columbia and studied law. But when he got out he practiced only a while and quit, saying he was discriminated against and had no chance.

Lie There are many stories to give the lie to that. Two come immediately to mind. One of the outstanding lawyers in Philadelphia, and a man of wealth and position, is Raymond Pace Alexander. Another is William Henry Hastie, now Governor of the Virgin Islands, and a national figure in legal circles. In Atlanta, Austin Walden, working under circumstances much more restrictive than these, has made a genuine success as an attorney. There are many other such examples, including others in Southern cities.

They, too, without doubt have known bitterness, frustration, anger and humiliation. But they have continued to be good Americans and have devoted much of their energies, as have others, toward making the future easier for others of their race. This was what Robeson's father did for him.

Success Robeson went to the stage. He was a success. In the play "Emperor Jones" he had a chance to sing. His voice and his ability gave him opportunity to become one of the nation's great artists and, from the time of "Showboat," to be acclaimed as one of the greatest of our baritones. And the movies took him. He became wealthy. His University gave him an honorary master's degree in 1932. No door Robeson wanted opened was closed to him.

He went to Russia.

In 1936 he said, in an interview with the Communist Daily Worker:

"Home" "I've lived in Europe and America and I've almost circled the globe, but for myself, my wife and my son, the Soviet Union is our future home. For a while, however, I wouldn't feel right to go there and live. By singing its praises wherever I go, I think I can be of the most value to it."

He put his son in school in Russia. He became a propagandist for Russia. No agent of the Communist Party has been more active in its behalf than he. Yet this country continued to honor his talent. He starred in Othello. But either on order or by choice, he drew away from the stage and the movies. More and more he became a trouble-maker, following the Communist technique of hitting the front pages with "discrimination" stories. More and more he was "barred" from auditoriums by methods which shouted their prearrangement. No Communist has served the Communist Party in this country as well as he.

Macon Macon, or any other community which may be involved, will make a great error if it does not open its doors to Robeson. By all means let him appear. If that is done the Communists may try to find other ways for him to make trouble. Let the community so tested patiently avoid that, too.

Atlanta showed the way—when Sen. Taylor, Wallace's V. P., acting out the fellow-traveler line, came to Atlanta following the Communist success in Birmingham, which stupidly arrested him. He ate in a Negro restaurant. Atlanta thoughtfully assigned a Negro policeman to see to it that no one bothered him and Taylor, looking hopefully over his shoulder for trouble, got none and no headlines developed from Atlanta.

Robeson is a bad American and, by his own words, an enemy of this country.

But let us not fall into the Communist trap.

Let him sing and let those who go to hear him sit where they will.

7-70

Books in Review

SRC (spec)

Regional History

THE SOUTH AND THE NATION. By PAT WATTERS. Pantheon. 390 pp. $7.95.

Reviewed by DAVID DONALD

THOUGH SOUTHERN historical scholarship has gained in depth and precision during the past generation, no recent interpretation of the region has equaled W. J. Cash's The Mind of the South. The best Southern historians have been engaged in writing learned, but basically uninterpretive, studies like George Tindall's The Emergence of the New South, or in composing thoughtful, but necessarily brief and inconclusive, essays like C. Vann Woodward's The Burden of Southern History and David M. Potter's The South and the Sectional Conflict. For the full sweep of Southern history we still have to turn back to Cash's classic, even though it is now nearly thirty years out of date.

The South and the Nation, by Pat Watters, ought to have been a book that would supplement, if it did not replace, The Mind of the South. Resembling Cash in so many ways, Watters has the qualifications to write another major interpretation of the South. A native Southerner, he knows the people of his region and speaks their language. He has the true Southerner's amazing repertory of anecdotes, which he tells more skillfully than even Cash did. As reporter for the Atlanta Journal and, since 1963, information director for the Southern Regional Council, he has had unparalleled opportunities to observe every racial crisis in the South during the past decade and to interview the principal participants in most of them. A liberal, Watters writes of his section with a deep love for its virtues and with a sense of personal outrage over its barbarities.

Yet The South and the Nation is not a success. For many of its failings Watters is clearly to blame. He deliberately avoided "painstaking scholarly research in the cumulated findings of other people" in order to present his personal evaluation of the South, based upon "feeling and intuition more than on solid fact or certain knowledge." Cash did the same, and he wrote so well that he convinced readers that his feeling and his intuition were truth. Watters, on the other hand, is a poor, sometimes a slovenly, writer. His book is chaotic in structure and repetitious in argument.

Then, too, Watters writes from a very limited perspective—that of the liberal white Southerner living in Atlanta. Rarely does his range of vision extend beyond the state of Georgia. Cash, too, knew only a small part of the South, but he made us believe that what was true for the Carolina Piedmont held for the section as a whole. Watters, on the other hand, would have written a better book had he limited himself to the one state which he knows so well. His best pages are those evoking the sights and smells of the northwestern Georgia hill country, and his funniest, most devastating stories are those pricking the cultural pretensions of Atlanta.

Race as well as geography limits Watters's range. Like most other Southern whites, he has difficulty in writing about Negroes. By virtually ignoring the blacks, Cash could avoid analysis of how Negroes thought and felt, but a 1970 account of the South cannot present black men as passive participants in an all-white drama. Frankly admitting limited knowledge, Watters tries to describe the black community: "We will enter these beguiling, treacherous places as I force myself to act as a reporter, full of the knowledge that I am as ignorant of them as the freshly arrived Northern reporter is ignorant of the city South that I know so well." The intent is admirable, but the performance is flat. Sensitive to the nuances of white behavior, Watters views all blacks as alike—and as admirable. Even his language is stereotyped when he speaks of Negroes. Black leaders of the civil-rights movement, he says, showed the world "the best of the Southern heritage, its beauty of belief and great braveness," and he praises "the great and beautiful strengths of Negro culture."

BUT THE larger difficulties with The South and the Nation stem not so much from the author as from the subject. We no longer have a fixed vantage point from which to observe the South. Had Watters's study been written in the late 1950's, it could have had a simple theme: the South was becoming urbanized and industrialized; it was ending the segregation of schools and public facilities; it was conceding to black men the right to vote—in short, it was happily approaching the national norm. The spokesmen of change and progress were men like Martin Luther King, Jr., the young leaders of SNCC, and the few Southern white liberals who supported racial justice. Struggling against the tide of history were the bad men of the South, like "Bull" Connor of Birmingham, or Sheriff Jim Clark of Selma.

Looking back from 1970, it is clear that the pattern of events during the last two decades was far more complex and ironical. Watters shows how urbanization, far from bringing happiness and prosperity, has transformed Southerners into a "grim and grey people," living in a cultural wasteland. The end of de jure segregation of schools has promoted seg-

---

DAVID DONALD, who is currently with the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences in Stanford, reviewed the Arno Press series, The American Negro: His History and Literature, in our April issue.

New Paperbacks from Schocken

Just Published

The Great Wall of China
Stories and Reflections
FRANZ KAFKA
Translated by Willa and Edwin Muir paper $2.25/hardcover $5.00

Benya Krik, the Gangster
And Other Stories
ISAAC BABEL
Edited by Avrahm Yarmolinsky
paper $1.75/hardcover $4.50

Medical History of Contraception
NORMAN E. HIMES
Foreword by Robert L. Dickinson, M.D.
New Preface by Christopher Tietze, M.D., The Population Council paper $3.45

Society Without the Father
A Contribution to Social Psychology
ALEXANDER MITSCHERLICH
paper $2.95

The History of the Incas
ALFRED MÉTRAUX
With 79 illustrations
paper $2.45

Imagination and the Growth of Science
A. M. TAYLOR
paper $1.75

Art and the Industrial Revolution
F. D. KLINGENDER
Edited and Revised by Arthur Elton
With 125 illustrations
paper $5.95

from your bookseller or SCHOCKEN BOOKS
67 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y.10016

regated housing patterns and the consequent de facto school segregation already prevalent throughout the rest of the country. Registration of Negro voters and the election of a handful of black officials resulted in the reduction of the political power of Southern Negroes. We cannot even have the satisfaction of discovering behind these developments the malign influence of "villains whose overthrow will assure the end of evils." Instead, the responsibility was diffused among "the planters, the power structures of small cities and large, those possessive old men whose ugliness in a crisis reflected the anger and dismay and panic they felt at seeing their prized possession tampered with, the cotton mill owners, the faltering labor leaders, the ineffective liberals, the corrupt Negro leaders, the emasculated educational elite, the very policeman whose presence makes us shudder and say, 'I hate cops.'"

What has happened, in short, is that the South has become more and more like the rest of the nation. At the same time, the country as a whole is becoming increasingly Southern—most conspicuously in the now universally acknowledged racism of American society. The strength of Watters's book lies in his realization that he is describing a section that is about to disappear, but it is hard to write a good book about "the South and the Nation" when there is so little that remains distinctive.

Lore & Learning

THE BRITISH FOLKLORISTS: A HISTORY. By RICHARD M. DORSON. University of Chicago Press. 518 pp. $17.95.

PEASANT CUSTOMS AND SAVAGE MYTHS, 2 volumes. Edited by RICHARD M. DORSON. University of Chicago Press. 751 pp. $22.00.

Reviewed by ROBERT ACKERMAN

THERE ARE many anthropologists at work today but few folklorists. With the exception of the efforts of a few American academicians, folklore seems to have run its course so far as intellectual or cultural pretensions are concerned, and the pursuit is now back in the hands of the amateur enthusiasts, where it all began in England three centuries ago. Precisely because the study of folklore has flourished and declined (it was yet another casualty of the First World War), it is now possible to render a retrospective judgment on its activities and accomplishments. Richard Dorson, professor of history and folklore and director of the Folklore Institute at Indiana University, and one of the few scholars with the requisite overall knowledge of the field, has set himself this task. His effort, the first comprehensive history of British folklore ever written, is crammed with information that will be useful to anyone interested in 19th-century intellectual history, particularly the origins of anthropology in England; in the final analysis, however, it falls short of the mark.

Like Hercules, folklore has always found its strength in its contact with the earth, that is, with the "lore" that its workers have turned up; perhaps because of this naturally empirical cast, it has always depended upon other disciplines for its key metaphors (e.g., evolution, "survivals") and general theoretical formulations. One would think, then, that any account of folklore's rise and fall would necessarily touch on many interesting questions in modern intellectual and social history, for folklore has been deeply involved in the formulation of many key ideas, such as the "folk" (obviously), the primitive, social evolution, and the origins and nature of myth and religion. Unfortunately, Professor Dorson, perhaps out of professional piety, has elected to write a collective biography—note the title—of his specialty and not a critical history. This is not to say that he abstains from passing judgment on the men and work he discusses, but the biographical method he employs—although doubtless easing the task of ordering the masses of material—has acted to swamp many of the most interesting questions in a welter of rela-

ROBERT ACKERMAN reviewed Joseph Campbell's Flight of the Wild Gander in our issue of December 1969.

Bruce W. Eggler: The Old, the New and the Never-Never South

SRC

The New South Creed: A Study in Southern Mythology by Paul M. Gaston

(Knopf; $7.95)

The New Republic 4/26/70

Among the many myths with which the South has been burdened, by both its critics and its apologists, since the Civil War, none has been more persistent, or more harmful, than the "New South" myth that was promulgated after the war by many Southern journalists, businessmen, and politicians. These men wished to persuade skeptical Northerners that the South had indeed changed and should no longer be subjected to Yankee interference in its affairs, especially its racial policies. For the Old South—where cotton was king, Negroes were slaves, and the Union was threatened—was "dead," and (in the words of South Carolina's Edwin DeLeon as early as 1870) "for that vanished form of society there can be no resurrection." Already, DeLeon said, there had emerged a progressive, growing "New South, whose wants and wishes, ends and aims, plans and purposes, are as different from those of 1860, as though a century . . . divided the two."

As expressed by its leading spokesmen, like Atlanta Constitution editor Henry W. Grady, the New South program was to encompass social, economic, and intellectual regeneration. The old staple-crop agriculture was to be replaced by scientific, diversified small farms; outside capital and immigrants were to be used to develop the region's "unmatched" resources; outmoded agrarian values would give way to more "modern" ideals of hard work and business success. With poverty thus virtually eliminated, a prosperous South would quickly convince the North that it was no longer the home of rebels, and wished only to bury sectional animosities and cooperate (on an equal footing) in the business life of the nation.

A South resuming its rightful leading place in national affairs would, of course, not tolerate any further outside interference in full sectional autonomy on racial policies, but it would undertake to grant its blacks all the (tightly restricted) rights and freedoms they "earned" (e.g., the most prominent and "responsible" would be allowed to vote), and to provide equal, though separate, public facilities for both races. Conservative whites would be placated with numerous obeisances toward the glories of antebellum days (the result of which was to be the full flowering of the ultra-romantic, idealized myth of the Old South).

In short, no one – Northern white, Southern white, Southern black – had any just cause to fear or doubt the advent of the New South, or, in one enthusiast's words, "the coming El Dorado of American adventure." Concluded another New South leader, "Man never before conceived of such possibilities as the future holds out to us." Unfortunately, all too many readers, then and since, have taken the New South men at something near their word. This audience (including many historians) has tended to accept uncritically Grady's and the others' claims about their own high ideals and worthy aims. Even though industrialization and other forms of "progress" in the South in fact proceeded slowly, it has been frequently assumed that their advocates in the 1870s and 1880s were just visionaries before their time.

It is the greatest merit of Paul Gaston's penetrating study that such a simple, happy view of the New South movement will never be possible again. For Gaston convincingly shows that there are as many mythical elements in the popular images of the New South as in those of the preceding Reconstruction period. The plans and hopes for industrial development were so riddled with contradictions and false premises, Gaston asserts, that their fulfillment was almost impossible. New South promoters eagerly seized upon each new mill or factory as evidence of great progress, and Grady exclaimed in 1889 that "the day of the mighty harvest is here!" but actual economic gains were slight, and the South made little headway compared to the rest of the nation.

Just as economic opulence remained a merely fictional accomplishment, so, of course, did the South's "solving" of the Negro's plight. Grady might pledge that the Negro problem could be left to the South "with the fullest confidence that the honor of the Republic will be maintained [and] the rights of humanity guarded," but he also demanded that "the supremacy of the white race of the South must be maintained forever . . . because the white race is the superior race." Far from being the "last and surpassing miracle of human government," the racial program of the New South was, in Gaston's words, a hodgepodge of "dreams of equal treatment of allegedly unequal races in separate societies devoted to mutual progress." That program, not too surprisingly, led directly to the disfranchisement, total segregation, and further impoverishment of Southern blacks, and to the zenith of anti-black terrorism and lynchings. Meanwhile, Northern whites – influenced by the growing xenophobia and Social-Darwinist racism of the time, disillusioned with what they had been told of Reconstruction's results, soothed by the accommodating words of Negro spokesmen like Booker T. Washington, and convinced by years of reports and promises about the "New South" – largely did nothing.

The dream of the New South had been of an industrial Utopia; the reality was all too often company towns, low wages, child labor, and urban poverty. The dream had been of modern, scientific agriculture; the reality often remained depleted soil, low prices, and rural poverty. The dream had been of a powerful, respected, economically independent South; the reality was continuing dependence on Northern capital and subservience to Northern monopolies. The dream had been of combining needed progress with the admitted virtues of some Old South values and mores; the reality was often materialism and Babbittry. The dream had been of racial harmony and cooperation under white rule; the reality was rancor, hatred, and naked oppression.

In view of its dismal achievements, it seems astonishing that the favorable reputation of the New South crusade has endured for so long. Yet in the 1890s the myth that all was right, or rapidly becoming right, helped suppress agrarian revolts in the South; in the 1930s it fueled anguished outcries at the official finding that the South was still "the nation's No. 1 economic problem." Many in the South had convinced themselves that the old dreams of progress, prosperity, sectional reconciliation, and racial harmony were accomplished facts. The myth was so firmly established as to blind the region to how far it still had to go to attain its goals.

Although the myth of a New South had sometimes been consciously manipulated by its promoters, it was far more than a mere tool of exploitation. Like all true myths, it answered deep-felt psychic needs in the South – the need to build pride in past and present, the need to develop a sense of shared goals, the need to escape the South's "un-American" heritage of poverty and defeat and failure, the need to assuage nagging guilt over the condition of the Negro. Those same psychic needs exist today, and the myth of the New South lives on, in almost the same words as a century ago, in the speeches of public figures and the writings of regional apologists.

There have been several "New Souths" since Henry Grady's day, but the line of descent is direct. Probably not a single month has passed since Appomattox that some orator or writer has not proclaimed at least the imminence, if not the full-bodied existence, of a New South – a South turning its back on the past, casting off old prejudices and injustices, moving resolutely to march in step with the rest of the nation, if only the rest of the nation would give it the time and peace it needs. Today we hear the same cry from "moderate" governors like John McKeithen of Louisiana, a con-artist supreme who quotes Martin Luther King to justify segregation, or from a Southward-looking President like Richard Nixon, whose insistence on not discriminating against "the South" will perpetuate discrimination against Southern blacks.

Since such "forward-looking" and conciliatory words still sound more attractive than the open racism and defiant "Never!" of a George Wallace, the temptation is still strong to believe them, and the myth they reflect. But those familiar with the South know that despite many elements of newness, many encouraging signs of change, there is an awful lot of Old in even the newest New South. Paul Gaston, tracing the New South movement with greater thoroughness than any previous historian, not only tells us why the original New South dreams are still not fulfilled; he also prepares us to recognize and to understand the mythical and the misleading elements in even the most contemporary proclamations of a New South.

New box -

"Virginia Dare File"

Material
Law Enforce to Rel
1954 – 1961
Folder Intergroup Org SCEF
1954 – 1961

Materials - Law Enforcement to Religion 1954 - 1961

Books for Equal Education to First Natl. Bank 1966

Special Files 1971
SRC

indiscriminate killing of other human beings and that this mass killing is given public sanction.

But the Viet Nam war is not what I would hope we will come to discuss although I feel, unlike others of the staff that it does play an important role in the events of the days, a role that we can not play ostrich to and not suffer from the consequesnces, which I think are perhpas similar to the consequences we think thaat the average white middle-class southerner must suffer from his inaction regarding the problems of racism and poverty he is confronted with hopefully, each day.

No, what I want to discuss is the role of the SRC now that there is no movement to interpret, that there is no poverty program to speak of to criticise, and there is no action coming form the people to pressure for change. Can we continue to be a reporting agency in this situation? Or do we need to raise issues as well as comment on issue raised by others, especially when no one else is at the present time raising any? Rather than tell our middle-class readers how bad it is in the ghetto or miississiippi has the time come when we need, yes we, the respected SRC, to get down into the ghetto and into Mississippi and show that it is now unrespectiable to do so? Is there reason to think that it is a waste of 400,000 a year for our human relation's council to try and soften feeling and try to ready the middle-class whites and Negroes of the South for change, when there is not even helf of that being spent on trying to bring about the changes that the HRC's are equipped to interpret? If we believe, like we must believe if we are in touch with reality that there must be some broad and substantial social, Political and economic changes in our society ~~and economic institutions~~ if we are ever to solve or begin to solve the racial problems of the South or the nation, then what are we doing to bring about these changes? And should we be inviting men who represent these institutions of the society to join our board of directors or should we be confronting them with the need to make these basic changes.

INTRODUCTION

This study represents eleven solid weeks in the field interviewing a total of 164 people of which 142 were International Directors, Representatives, Local Union officers and rank and file members of 11 southern states. In every state opinions were sought from at least one individual from the ranks of attorneys, clergy newsmen and social action groups whose integrity and interest in the Labor Movement are unquestionable.

In order to present the picture as simply as possible, a full report on each state will be found in the following pages, together with a final summary. It should be duly noted that in accordance with an agreement between the Southern Regional Council and the Jewish Labor Committee any references to Textile and Garment Unions will be only of a general nature.

ALABAMA

With a total population of a little over three million people, approximately 36% of whom are negro, it is estimated that about 300,000 are employed in industry or trades. Of this figure there are about 120,000 who are members of legitimate trade unions, the largest number being in Birmingham, with substantial memberships in Mobile, Montgomery, Gadsden, Florence-Sheffield, Anniston and Tuscaloosa. An accurate breakdown on white-negro membership is unavailable, but it seems safe to hazard the opinion that negro membership will comprise about 40% of the total. This is about 4% higher than the population percentage. Should the present trend of farm migration to urban areas continue, the potential trade union membership among negroes will rise correspondingly.

Alabama is considered one of the hard core black belt states traditionally segregated, with legislative and political power concentrated in the central and southern counties. A sharp contrast is noted in North Alabama where there is little interest in White Citizens Councils and where there has been no racial disturbance within the labor movement.

Historically the Building Trades and Craft Unions, with the Railroad Brotherhoods dominated the Labor Movement until 1933 when an organizing campaign by the United Mine Workers was rapidly and eminently successful. The Steel Industry which, with Railroad and Utility Companies, dominated the economic life withstood an organizing effort for several years before the Steelworkers Union won exclusive bargaining rights at TCI in late 1942. These two Unions, Coal and Steel, together with Rubber, CWA, Packinghouse, Wood and Textile, comprise the bulk of Industrial Unions.

Although the Supreme Court Decision on the public school issue in May 1954 did provoke considerable discussion, it was usually temperate and one is hard put to isolate any event or incident which could be said to have aroused the turmoil and disturbance of the past ten months.

Responsible individuals, both in and out of Labor, are of the opinion that the Till Case in Mississippi provided the spark for rapid organization and expansion of White Citizens Councils. Furthermore, with a substantial WCC membership amid the working people, in February 1956 the Negro Boycott of Montgomery buses, the Lucy Case at the University of Alabama, and President Meany's Civil Rights statements lit the fuse for the explosions that followed. In rapid fire order incidents occurred in Montgomery, Birmingham, Anniston, Talladega and Tuscaloosa.

It will be remembered that in late February and early March many resolutions and messages were sent to President Meany condemning him for his statement of AFL-CIO policy, and other resolutions and messages were filed with the International officers of the Complaintants' Union. A considerable number of these originated in the Birmingham district, the inspiration of which is easily traced.

A UAW local union representing approximately 4200 workers was in factional difficulties arising from an assessment by the International Union dating back to the spring of 1955. A substantial number of its members resigned so that by January 1956 they barely had a majority paying dues. Somehow this became known to a White Citizens Council advocate, Elmer Brock of Montgomery, Alabama, a member of the Painters Union. He incorporated a new union and put on a membership drive among the disgruntled workers finally obtaining the necessary 30% interest to file a petition with NLRB. It was subsequently held that the present contract held by UAW is a legal bar until April 1957.

In the meantime Brock also attempted to raid a steel plant whose bargaining rights for approximately 200 people were held by the Ornamental Iron Workers. A rapid campaign and speedy election by NLRB showed the Iron Workers a winner by two to one. This stunning defeat had the proper reaction in the UAW local and its membership began to climb slowly back to normal. It is now felt that a NLRB hearing will never be held.

It should be properly noted at this time that Elmer Brock was expelled by the Painters International Union in August 1956.

In the same WCC movement in Montgomery was one Jack Brock, a brother to Elmer, a former president of the Alabama State Federation and a member of the Typographical Union. As the WCC grew in Montgomery Jack Brock used the Alabama Labor News, slyly purporting to be an official labor journal, as a WCC propaganda rag and negro hate sheet. With the now famous Montgomery Bus Boycott by negroes to shoot at, Jack Brock and his cronies were able to stir up considerable trouble amid the movement in that area, notably the Bus Drivers Union, CWA, ITU, Oil, and the Central Labor Union. It must be stated here that forceful and intelligent action on the part of the responsible leaders of the Union have cleared away the trouble for the present in CWA. The situation in Oil is better, as is CLU.

The success of the ten months old boycott has kept the bus drivers bitter, owing to layoffs, and charges were filed against Jack Brock by his International Union. It is understood that final expulsion is imminent.

The public rioting at the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa was well supported by trade union members although there is no evidence of the segregation issue arising officially in any local union. Equally disturbing is the strong and bitter emotionalism prevailing in Anniston which prompted the individuals who attacked Nat King Cole during his performance at the Birmingham Civic Auditorium.

It is reported that the Steelworkers Union has conducted its own survey on this subject but since no findings have been made public it may be well to point out an incident here which is typical of the community, particularly the huge TCI Steelworks and its 25,000 workers.

One of the steel locals having a membership of 800 workers circulated a petition through the mill, signed by more than 50% of the members, condemning the Civil Rights policy. The matter was not brought before the local union and not a single local union officer supported the effort. An investigation showed that an individual member started the movement at the instigation of a Birmingham attorney representing the interests of WCC advocates.

Many factors have prevailed to indicate a tranquil era but the strong spirit of segregation is merely dormant. The Southern Federation of Labor, Southern Aircraft Workers, Incorporated, and the Southern Crafts, Incorporated still exist and will definitely grow and expand should any group provide them with intelligent leadership and funds.

It is pleasant to report that conditions in Mobile are excellent, under the circumstances. The Labor Movement there seems to be enjoying better than average leadership and there is no evidence of recent racial problems.

ARKANSAS

This state has been traditionally considered an agricultural state but industry has been moving into it somewhat rapidly during and since World War II. It is still predominantly an agricultural state with a population of approximately two million, 35% urban and 65% rural. The negro population which is about 25% is concentrated in the central and southern sections. There seems to be about 35,000 trade union members most of whom are affiliated with the newly merged AFL-CIO Council.

This division of the population again points up the usual pattern. In the larger urban areas of Little Rock and Fort Smith located in north central and northwestern Arkansas relations are somewhat peaceful and even progressive.

No evidence was found of any racial strife in these two cities, nor were any advocates or members of WCC found, although a few are known to be there. The leaders of the newly merged AFL-CIO State Council seem to be doing a very good job on political action and education. It should be noted that these people have their hands full fighting the Anti-Union forces of industry and, should an opportunity present itself, management can be expected to inject the racial subject in an effort to divide the working forces.

It is quite a different story in the southern part of the state, especially in Pine Bluff and El Dorado, where trade unionists are strongly pro-segregation. Some of this can be explained by the traditional customs of the area and by the record of poor schooling obtained by the average worker. Being in the more highly productive agricultural section with many large cotton and rice plantations is also significant. Economic fear seems to have some bearing on the thinking of the people in this area also. As one rank and file member of a building trade union put it, "A lot of us people remember back to World War I and the drive in the early twenties to run the unions out of town. A lot of contractors are townspeople used 'nigger' help and paid them very cheap wages. We had a hard time keeping our unions and 'niggers' are still thought of as scab workers."

Another member, a Local Union officer, seems somewhat fearful of organized negro groups, saying in effect that through NAACP and other groups the Negroes are practically a bunch of Commies that are out to capture control of the country. This man also expects the negroes to retaliate immediately for past abuses which they have suffered, thus having a sort of fear complex that drives him into the militant pro-segregationists' group. There seems to be a substantial number of union members in this section who are active members of WCC.

Another source of trouble rises through the location in the state of runaway and sweat shop employers who are not averse to using any means, including racial strife, to maintain the cheapest possible wage costs.

FLORIDA

This land of sunshine, tourists and playgrounds is also becoming somewhat of an industrial state with a present population of approximately three million, 28% Negro and highly urbanized. The increasing needs and desires of tourists and pensioners are bringing in the suppliers and manufacturers. Another radical upsurge has been provided by the development of the frozen foods industry, particularly the citrus industry. With thousands of plants, mostly small and widely varied already in the state, it is entirely possible that Florida may become a key industrial state of the South.

One of the most rigid of the "Right-To-Work" states, its labor movement began as did all others in the region with the advent of the Railway Brotherhoods and Building Trades, followed by the Printing and Communications Unions. It was not until World War II that there was any semblance of industrial Unions which arose in the shipyards and Airline terminal shops, other than the seafaring and longshoremen trades.

In the past few years the major can companies have erected several plants in the vicinity of Tampa for the ever-growing food packing industry and the Steelworkers Union has most of them organized.

In the Tampa and Miami areas no evidence could be found of any unusual interest in the matter of racial segregation, which is due mainly to the large groups of Spanish-Americans. Those in Tampa are in the main of Cuban descent and also in Miami with an increasing supply of Puerto Ricans present in the labor supply. The Cubanos in Tampa were formerly found almost exclusively in the cigar industry which at one time was highly organized. So far as can be determined, the AFL-CIO Civil Rights policy has not been injected into the lengthy hotel strike in the Miami area.

The only incident found here was a rather peculiar attempt to seat a negro delegate in the Dade County Central Labor Union by the Hebrew Butcher Workers, contrary to the usual established procedure. Charges were filed against that Local and its Business Agent for unbecoming conduct but there seems to be little concern or interest in the matter by the general area membership.

It should be recalled at this point that the Communist Party obtained a substantial foothold in the labor movement during the mid-forties, mostly in CIO Unions, being driven out by 1948 after a great deal of effort. During that period when the Ku Klux Klan made a brief spurt for prominence it received substantial support in central and northern Florida, using the CIO as a whipping post for Anti-Communist and racial tirades. Although the K. K. K. had all but expired by 1950, the Communistic negro-lover CIO theme was successfully used to defeat Senator Claude Pepper in the Congressional primaries of that year. This area of prejudice was found in Lakeland, Orlando and northward. Today the situation remains about the same. Most of the Anti-Negro sentiment comes from this area where the negro population is the largest and where industry is limited mainly to food packing (including meat), lumber and small plants in the needle trades. With only a small percentage of them organized, the working people have a low figure of vote registration and industrial management enjoys the benefits of demagogic politicians and Anti-Union legislation, both local and statewide. The recent boycott of Tallahassee buses by Negroes has further inflamed the white segment in this half of the state and the general support and membership of WCC remains strong.

In Jacksonville where the largest number of Negroes can be found in an integrated local there has been no trouble as yet. The Shipyard Workers Amalgamated Local, with several employers under contract, shows that keen interest and participation by Negro members has created no particular problems. All their difficulties are economical rather than social.

The Pensacola labor movement is mainly a segregated one with both races apparently satisfied with their present and past status in this respect.

It is quite evident that the strongest support for WCC and pro-segregationists lies in that poorly organized area of central and northern Florida.

GEORGIA

The largest state east of the Mississippi River, Georgia is well endowed with industries and natural resources. From the mountains in the northeast to the swampland of the southwest, three and one-half million people grind out their daily needs. For some it is no chore at all. Many families with holdings in Coca-Cola, Banks, Cotton Mills and the Lumber Industry enjoy only the best things in life. Newnan, Georgia for instance was reported only a few years ago to have more millionaire residents per capita than any city in the United States.

For the vast majority, however, including one and one-quarter million Negroes, realities and necessities rear their ugly heads. The infamous County Unit political system seems to be the ideal system for the coalition of economic power in the hands of industry and the social prejudice exhorted by politicians.

Although still considered an agricultural state, Georgia is becoming highly industrialized. Hardly any town of 2500 or more inhabitants can be found without at least one cotton mill, fertilizer plant, shirt factory or wood milling plant and comparatively few are organized. The Labor Movement is found mainly in Atlanta, Augusta, Macon, Savannah, Brunswick, Albany and Baindridge with a huge aircraft plant at Marietta and a General Electric plant at Rome.

The population figures again follow the usual pattern with the majority of the Negroes residing in the central and southern sections. In the Atlanta metropolitan area one finds a complete picture of trade unionism with every major organization represented to some degree. One of the oldest industrial unions in the South is located there and it remains solidly pro-segregationist. Every white supremist movement of the past generation has been firmly supported by these people in spite of the fact that they have furnished labor with many leaders, including Regional Directors. A present member of this Union proclaims himself the leader of the Ku Klux Klan. Responsible leaders among the Building Trades, when questioned, firmly stated that they had no racial problems. "We just ain't gonna have no niggers messing around our Union", was the way one man put it. While another was willing to admit Negro members, he was equally firm in denying him a voice or office. It is reported that many members in Atlanta are interested in the Southern Federation movement and that several attended their last meeting in Birmingham, Alabama

Another union, attempting to enforce its Civil Rights policy, has been attacked severely, the mildest criticism being pointed to its impractical application and direction. Other industrial integrated unions have not had any incident or controversy brought to official notice but, nevertheless, admit to rather strained relations on the job with communication of the races becoming less and less frequent.

The cities of Augusta, Macon, Brunswick, Bainbridge and Savannah are mainly represented by Building Trades and Crafts Unions with Savannah having the largest membership by far in industrial unions.

Augusta is a hot bed of WCC. The local White Citizens Council there has a regular mailing list of trade union members which it uses frequently. The WCC also uses the Georgia Power Company Auditorium for public mass meetings. The Plasterers Union is the only craft accepting Negroes. All other Negro union members are found in the Laborers and Hod Carriers.

Savannah is quite unique and the opposite to the rest of the state. One of the oldest locals in the state is a Negro Bricklayers Union which is properly respected. Although practically all local unions are segregated, the on-the-job relations are integrated and so accepted without fuss. The relations between the races at the Central Labor Union are excellent.

When questioned, one Negro local union officer stated the opinion that both races were better off with separate locals because of the social aspects and also because it provided each race the responsibility of conducting its own affairs while lending some degree of dignity to their respective officials. The Negro members take considerable pride in this. A prominent attorney, well-versed in labor practices, could not recall any situation in Savannah where racism was controversial. There have been problems but not in the sense of Klanism or White Supremists.

There is considerable speculation now prevalent throughout the state as to whether pro-segregationist forces can and will capture the State Federation and how they will operate it or, failing this, whether or not they will disaffiliate and join the Southern Federation.

Whatever happens, Georgia is expected to be a source of trouble for some time to come.

LOUISIANA

This land of cypress swamps, shrimps, sugar cane and sazerac lends a prodigious setting for the mouth of"Ole Man River". The nearly three million people, 37% Negro and about 550,000 in the working force, maintain a pronounced tradition of several cultures.

Northern and central Louisiana have the typical agricultural background as have its neighboring states while, until the last decade or so, industry was limited to an occasional sawmill.

Western Louisiana has enriched itself with the location and recovery of oil and natural gas, uplifting an agricultural region not quite so productive as elsewhere.

Southern Louisiana is made up of swamps, sugar cane and New Orleans. Settled by Old World Spaniards French and Acadians, and clinging heavily to their Catholic Faith, they fish and trap in the swamps, refine sugar from the huge canefield plantations and progress in the ever-growing seaport of New Orleans. Being a transfer point, seagoing vessels and Mississippi River barges, the Crescent City enjoyed an advantage that has slowly pushed it up to a city of over 600,000. With the coming of World War II and the increasing need for ships and shipping, New Orleans became a focal point and a prime target for the Communist Party which proved rather troublesome until the last few years.

Seeking new industry to take up the employment gap of wartime plants and services, a number of varied industries were located in the New Orleans area, one of the largest being an Aluminum plant of Kaiser Aluminum Company which also operates a plant in Baton Rouge.

The location and expansion of industry was somewhat of a boon for the Building Trades which are fairly well organized. The Communistic tactics of the past two decades contributed somewhat to even firmer segregation in most of these Unions, except of course those which are lily-white either by Constitution or tradition. Negro members can be found in the bricklayers, plasterers, machinists and carpenters as well as those crafts that hold industrial union type agreements. It is reported that some railroads operating here have Negro trainmen as well as firemen and they are now accepted in their respective Unions.

Aside from the Canefield Strike two years ago, a viscious and degrading example of a tyranny exercised over a helpless Negro group, the present conditions in the Sugar Refining Industry seem the most serious. With a heavy Negro membership they have recently emerged from a prolonged strike in two of the largest Companies where white scabs were used in the place of Negro strikers. After the strike settlement, recall of the strikers was very slow and serious tensions developed as a white man was fired to make room for a Negro striker. The announced Company policy of getting rid of all its Negro workers further aggravates a bad situation. From the interviews held in the group, one can only conclude that outside forces have aided a weird administration of its responsibilities by the Packinghouse Union and has created a deplorable situation.

Owing to the heavy Catholic population, it is not startling to learn that several priests have made themselves available to the Labor Movement, providing considerable aid in their growth and always expounding the Human Relations principles of their Faith. This may explain in part why there is a noticeable lack of interest and support for WCC in this area.

In Baton Rouge, Capitol of the state and home of Louisiana State University, one may still get a glowing resume of Huey Long's career along with his shave, shoeshine or short beer. While the central bodies of the Labor Movement function quietly and efficiently without incident, the big noise here is Standard Oil. Wtih an Independent Union this Company has the most progressive employment policies of any industrial operation in the South. With considerable integration already in effect it is reported that integration will become plant-wide when, as and if Negro workers qualify themselves - a policy accepted without question by the workers.

Since the Oil Industry has an excellent wage scale, it would seem that economic justice will cure some of the social ills, at least.

Moving northward and westward to Monroe, Alexandria and Shreveport, one enters the state's stronghold of White Citizens Councils and pro-segregationists.

Trade Unions in Monroe are reported to be firmly pro-segregationist, as are those in Alexandria. Although nothing was heard about racial problems within the Union, it is stated that Union members belong to and support the WCC.

In Shreveport, where industry is more diversified, the picture is some different in that there are several substantial Local Unions with integrated memberships. Although no evidence of internal dispute on the subject was found, one local union officer remarked, "We're trying not to pay any attention to this ruckus and hope it dies down. There's been so much fuss in the papers, mostly by people who don't know what they're talking about, that the present relations ain't what they used to be. Seems like each race has one eye cocked on the other'n and that could make trouble."

Lake Charles in Southwestern Louisiana appears to reflect somewhat the same attitudes found in Shreveport. No trouble as yet but a mounting wariness which, unless diverted, could slowly develop into a seriously tense situation.

MISSISSIPPI

This state with a population of a little over two million - Negroes numbering nearly half - is the most rural in the South with an urban population of less than 30% according to the 1950 Census. Needless to say, it has the smallest non-agricultural working force and the smallest trade union membership.

Its Labor Movement has also suffered the most in the past two years of mounting racial tensions. Although industry continues to move into the state trade union organizing is stopped cold, fighting hard to hold what it has against the raids of reactionary and oppressive management plus the emotional appeals of the WCC.

The recent Anti-Negro sentiment has had little effect along the Gulf Coast, which seems to be true in most of the towns located on the Gulf Coast and Atlantic Seabord. But, leave the Coast, and there's hell to pay. Provided with a very poor public school system for both white and negro, it seems that most of the people were whipped into a state of perpetual fear by the events of the Till Case and the mushrooming White Citizens Councils immediately thereafter.

During the past few years state labor leaders had gradually built up a practical legislative program to which the majority of legislators paid serious heed. At least labor was being heard with dignity and respect. This has now completely disappeared. Several legislators candidly told labor that they could no longer be seen talking together, even socially. These progressive, civic-minded legislators have been bluntly warned to stay away from labor or suffer the consequences, political, economical or even physical.

Any effort by labor at the present to qualify and register its membership - especially Negro workers - is dangerous, according to one rank and file member of an integrated local in Southern Mississippi who was warned by WCC advocates with threats of physical violance if not heeded. With a public record of several economic reprisals and murders, it is not difficult to understand the fear that exists today. CWA perhaps is more exposed to intimidation than any other Union in the state. With only a handful of members working together in small isolated towns, the community pressure is simply too much to withstand. It is to the credit of this International Union and its leadership that they have not suffered a loss of membership in these trying times.

Further proof of this embattled situation is the almost complete ostracism of labor by the public.

Eighteen months ago state labor leaders received and accepted numerous invitations to speak to church, school and civic groups to outline the educational, political and civic policies of trade unions. Not a single invitation has been extended by these groups in the past few months.

It cannot be denied that this racial furor has cost the labor movement at least ten years of progress in the State of Mississippi.

NORTH CAROLINA

This state with a total population of over four million - 27% Negro - and a working force of nearly a half-million, presents a startling and perhaps tragic contrast. Standing twelfth in the Nation for total wage-earners, it lies near the bottom in regard to wages earned. Undoubtedly the fact that only a little over 50,000 people, or approximately 12% of the working force, belong to trade unions is the main cause for this deplorable situation.

For many years North Carolina was considered the most liberal and progressive state in the South. But a conservative trend has steadily dropped down to the point where some people now consider it reactionary.

Starting with the Frank Graham senatorial race in 1950 when racism was maliciously used, race relations have gradually worsened until today the rigid segregated school issue proposed by the state government has been overwhelmingly adopted - this, in spite of the respect accorded a number of outstanding intelligent citizens and several progressive newspapers.

With about 40% of the total working force employed in the Textile Industry that still remains unorganized for all practical purposes, there are many thousands of people employed in furniture and wood products all over the state who are also unorganized.

The best organized industries are the Building Trades, Transportation, Communications and the Tobacco Workers with small interests in Chemicals, Garments, Textiles, Steel and varied products.

While the Labor Movement generally has an integrated membership, there are spots of segregation, notably in Transportation, Building Trades and Textiles.

The Textile Industry has traditionally maintained a segregated employment policy except for menial occupations and its operations are scattered throughout the state. Having only Company or Industry policies to guide them for the most part, this huge block of the working people are firm segregationists.

The Building Trades, long established and seemingly proud of their traditional autonomy, resent any interference with their local policies.

A rank and file craftsman in Raleigh put it this way, "That George Meany oughta keep his damn mouth shut. He don't know nothin' about the South and, besides, I ain't gonna let a plumber tell me what I gotta do." These sentiments were practically seconded by his fellow members in Winston-Salem and Charlotte.

The unhappy history in the Reynolds Tobacco Company of Winston-Salem is consistently revived to substantiate a segregationist viewpoint. The present organizing campaign at Reynolds is being closely watched by trade unionists all over the state and many are hopeful that it will be lost. "We don't want them Commie 'niggers' using the Union to take over the Labor Movement in North Carolina. They run the white people out of the Union there before and they'll try to do it to us if they get the chance", commented a bus driver in Charlotte.

Racism was injected in an internal political situation in Durham a few months ago. Long noted for its liberal and progressive policies, the Durham Labor Movement succumbed to emotional pressures and several leaflets of white supremists character were widely distributed and the victim, an outstanding liberal leader was easily defeated. The race issue was also used to defeat all of labor's friends in general elections. When it is noted that labor has the major vote in that area, such tactics and results become significant.

An official of a fair sized integrated industrial union in the southern part of the state charges that NAACP is interfering with the Union affairs and inciting Negro members to make unusual demands on the local union. As a consequence, the white members are resentful and relations may become strained.

The recent merger failure of the AFL and CIO state bodies may well leave the rank and file membership looking to state politicians and White Citizens Councils for guidance on Race Relations and, if so, serious conditions may develop.

SOUTH CAROLINA

With a population of a little over two million - 40% Negro - South Carolina has a working force of approximately 350,000 people, 10% of whom are members of a trade union, thus being one of the worst states in the South.

Standing at or near the bottom on schooling and percapita income, the worker has a tough row to hoe.

Prominent public and political citizens with national standing are staunch advocates of States Rights and White Citizens Council movements and, in such a climate, Industry enjoys a favorable position for the exploitation of workers.

Comparatively small groups of trade unionists in Greenville, Spartanburg and Columbia struggle to better their lot. But frustrations are found where union members insist on preserving the social customs and traditions of segregation. In some areas - notably Columbia where new and progressive leadership is evident - efforts are being made to center the union member's attention on his economic plight. It is hoped that development of educational and public relations programs will accomplish this or, at least, lessen the effect which WCC advocates now have.

CWA seems to be the most progressive International Union in the state and has shown the best results from its educational policies. However, there are few negroes found in this industry and the full value of the Union's Civil Rights Policy is lost except for such influence it may exerwise in the state CIO Council.

It might be well to point out here that both the state CIO Council and the South Carolina Federation of Labor hold integrated conventions and that it becomes something of a paradox to find rigid segregation at some local union levels.

In the old seaport of Charleston segregation is maintained in almost an Ante-Bellum manner. Aside from two or three plants, all unions are segregated even though the plant or craft is integrated. A typical example is the RWDSU where the membership is about 60% Negro with two functioning locals, white and negro. The executive boards of each local meet goether periodically and the relations are cordial. Each local enjoys the dignity of having its own officers and considerable emphasis is laid on the social and fraternal functions which could not be had in an integrated local. As one Negro member states, "The White Folks has to take the lead and we does the following."

The Textile Industry practically dictates the economic life of this state and, as elsewhere, is highly unorganized. An old veteran in Columbia put it thusly, "There ain't no use trying to do much down here until Textile is busted open. When we get 100,000 members in this state we can begin to figger on going somewheres."

Until then, it will be difficult to combat the influence of White Citizens Councils and obtain a fair degree of dignity and understanding for all the people.

TENNESSEE

From the mountains in the east, across the rolling blue grass area to the Mississippi River Delta, a narrow strip of land known as Tennessee contains three corresponding cultures for its nearly three and one-half million inhabitants.

Approximately 400,000 people are employed in industry and services and almost 100,000 of them are trade unionists. The overwhelming majority of its 650,000 Negro citizens are found in the central and western sections.

Bristol, Tennessee-Virginia is an old line railroad and craft town where labor strength has been limited and where they have lived mostly to themselves.

Nearby Johnson City and Kingsport have substantial industrial plants organized and, with a sparsely settled Negro community, there has been no word of racial strife.

Running down to the Knoxville area, the pattern as to industry and trades remains about the same with the Negro a little more evident. It will be recalled that the Ku Klux Klan showed considerable strength here during its brief flurry in the late forties. That such an emotional climate exists there, was made only too plain during the recent racial disturbances at nearby Clinton. Knowing that the huge Atomic Plant there is completely organized, it seems safe to assume that National AFL-CIO has had a full and complete report on that situation from its regional office in Knoxville. Some three weeks previous to that incident no evidence of racial strife was found although a White Citizens Council was known to be active.

Chattanooga presents a somewhat different picture in that industrial plants and industrial unions have existed there for a longer period than any other town in the state. Labor harmony at the leadership level has existed for quite some time but the movement has been plagues with chronic victims of the fanatical and cultist variety. Witness one Mr. Canada, presently espousing the WCC in press and public with great zeal and fervor, yet having consistently been slapped down by his local union and CLU. The nearest thing to victory which Canada and his cronies can claim is an incident in CLU last spring when that body adopted a resolution supporting public school integration and it was rescinded at the next regular meeting. Although nearly every union there is plagues with similar "problem children", most of the unions can point to a history of comparatively peaceful co-existence.

Nashville, the state Capitol, lies in the rich blue grass area in the central part of the state and has a long history of Railroad, Crafts, and Building Trades Unionism.

Interest in industrial trade unions seems to ebb and flow and one is hard put to find a suitable reason for it. One of the best reasons advanced points out that most of the industrial activity in Nashville is small privately-owned operations with no big plant or industry to act as a bellwether. Consequently, it has been difficult for an International Union to organize and endure for any length of time in a low wage area such as this. So far as can be determined, some trade union members belong to WCC and many members express segregationist sympathies.

Memphis, located on the Mississippi River in the extreme southwestern corner, is a different "kettle of fish" entirely. Here, one finds the largest membership of WCC among trade unionists and also the most militant. The Negro population is also greater here. Practically every International Union located here has faced serious racial incidents during the past few months and many have noted increased Anti-Union policies among the smaller and locally-owned operations.

The more prominent incidents have occurred in the two large UAW plants and the large Firestone Rubber plant. International Representatives were defied on Civil Rights policy and considerable talk of disaffiliation was reported. It is known that these people turn out for all WCC rallies and mass meetings and it is charged that Memphis sent a substantial delegation to the Southern Federation of Labor meeting in Birmingham, Alabama.

The Firestone plant probably presents the more dangerous situation because of the number of women in its membership. With a mingling of the sexes, Anti-Negro and White Supremist arguments reach the wildest and most fantastic levels. Intermarriage, free love and rape become common fears repeated over and over again.

A significant point of the Memphis problem is the contrasting views of the leadership. One representative of an International Union insists that a sound practical educational program conducted by the International Union will soon clear up the atmosphere, while others charge the International Unions and the National AFL-CIO with being the cause of the trouble and that local leadership can best solve the problem.

Whatever the answer, Memphis seems in dire and hasty need of it.

TEXAS

In this huge sprawling land where most of its eight million people consider Texas a country in its own right, fantastic growth and expansion has occurred during the past decade.

The eastern half of the state has drawn the bulk of this expansion and there also one finds practically all of its one million Negro residents. Out of its approximately 800,000 workers, Organized Labor claims a membership of over 300,000 in Building Trades and Crafts, Oil and Chemical, Aircraft, Steel and Metals, Transportation, Communications and Service Trades - not necessarily in that precise order.

There is much evidence of racial strife and segregationist sentiment and practices but it must be said that the Labor Movement here can be judged in the overall picture as the most capable and progressive in the entire southern region.

From the viewpoint of one of the most liberal observers in the state, Negro organizations have been both beneficial and detrimental. They aided substantially in initiating the opening of full job opportunities in the Oil Refinery Industry but their efforts in other areas have been considered harmful with excessive demands at an untimely period.

By attempting to follow the same pattern in a different area and industry the result was somewhat of a failure and ill-feelings created which precipitated a wildcat strike. It took the supreme efforts of state leaders together with the International Union representative to quell the uprising. Mansfield, Texas - site of the recent public school incident - is a community where many Aircraft Workers live and it can be assumed that some of these workers participated in that demonstration. This happened in spite of the fact that shortly prior to this at the Consolidated Aircraft plant in Fort Worth the IAM and the Company co-operated fully to halt the dissemination of WCC literature and suspended the workers who persisted with WCC propaganda.

At nearby Dallas, numerous incidents have occurred including personal altercations between White and Negro workers, yet responsible labor leaders and observers feel that race relations within labor will not get out of hand. They point to the political success enjoyed by COPE during the recent state elections in spite of Anti CIO-NAACP propaganda.

Another spokesman states that conditions in Eastern Texas in the Longview area are better than he has ever seen them.

The Houston area has expanded so rapidly that it is rather difficult to catch up with what is going on. Here, where Negroes are more populous, there have been many incidents of racial strife but mainly on an individual basis. There is a sharper interest in and support for WCC than in northern Texas and many local unions are controlled by pro-segregation forces.

Perhaps a brief synopsis of the Carpenters Council here can illustrate the changing tempo of the area. About two years ago the internal affairs of this Union were in such turmoil that the International Union was forced to place it under International administration, sending in one of their most capable and intelligent officials as Administrator. He found membership dwindling and members idle. Using the facilities and personnel of the University of Texas for training stewards and by diligent organizing, conditions in one year's time were such that all demands for Carpenters could not be met and for the first time Negro members were accepted and put to work. There was little grumbling on the part of White members. It cannot be said that all Union members are so minded but it is felt that economic problems and Union security will be placed above individual emotions.

In reference to the upgrading of Negroes in the Oil Refineries, it must be made clear that the International Union put a lot of effort and money into that situation and there is no doubt that the existing conditions would not prevail without that strong backing.

By geography and temperament, Beaumont, Port Arthur and Orange are closer to the so-called "Solid South". Individual emotions and philosophy are somewhat akin to that found in western Louisiana. Since the Oil Industry is also prominent in this area, it is expected that the racial pattern established in the Houston-Baytown area will be followed but not without more reluctance and resentment.

Qualified observers feel that, should there ever be any serious incidents in Texas, they will most likely occur in this East Texas area.

In passing, it should be noted that some people consider the Latin-Americans to be nearly as serious a problem as the Negro.

VIRGINIA

Those people who have in recent years referred to the Old Dominion state as a border state have very likely been shocked back to reality by the recent events over the public school issue. These events clearly show that its three and one-half million residents continue to observe the age-old patterns - i.e. Where the Negro population is heavy the problems are many and attitudes tend to be sharp. In these areas of low Negro population, public customs are slowly changing.

From the few individual Negroes interviewed out of a total population of some 800,000 come the usual opinions, varying from frustration to a grim determination for equality.

The Virginia Labor Movement draws its 100,000 members from a working force of about 400,000 and the AFL and CIO State Councils have been successfully merged with headquarters in the Capitol City of Richmond.

Richmond has a fairly good trade union membership and it is faced with all the complexities of the changing times. Many of the old established unions cling rigidly to their segregated habits but show no objection to participating in integrated conferences and conventions. Incidentally, it has been announced that at the next AFL-CIO State Convention there will be an integrated banquet - and integrated hotel accommodations are a faint possibility.

In the Tobacco and Aluminum plants here, you find segregated locals which is firmly approved by the majority of each race. It is reported, however, that some of the Negro members are now considering a request for a full and completely integrated local. If it comes about, it will be opposed by the present officeholders who enjoy the dignity their positions accord them. Organizing policies of late have been on an integrated basis and this trend is expected to continue without objection or incident.

In the Tidewater area of Newport News - Norfolk - Portsmouth a segregated policy is more strictly observed. Only those local unions with a 10-15% minority of either race are integrated and all others are segregated. Past and present CLU policies show a strong pro-segregation inclination. An opinion that outside agencies, such as the Virginia Committee on Human Relations, would be of benefit to the Tidewater Labor Movement was expressed by several CLU delegates. From Negro Representatives, Local Union Officers and members it was learned that they expect more benefits and privileges as a result of the AFL-CIO Merger, both from state and national levels. Most Negro members will continue to exercise patience although a few expressed militant demands for immediate action.

Traveling west to the Lynchburg-Roanoke area, one finds the racial policies and restrictions less confining. A lower Negro population is again advanced as a basic reason for present practices. Another reason given for bettered conditions is that industrial unions are more prevalent.

In spite of this, one would hesitate to predice smooth sailing in the near future in the face of possible troubles over the school issue.

Further West and through the northern area widely scattered and isolated plants have been organized on an integrated industrial basis. No particular incidents or problems were reported from or concerning them.

SUMMARY

During the course of this survey there were several startling coincidences observed which seem worthy of comment.

First, and perhaps most important, was the deadly serious demand for remaining anonymous. Aside from a few of the outstanding leaders and observers who are friendly to Labor, the people interviewed seemed to be "looking over their shoulders", and flatly stated they would deny being interviewed if identified. This was not confined to any one group, Union, area or race, but was general throughout the region.

Second, there was an overwhelming desire for educational programs. Although differing widely concerning the type of program - whether the respective International Unions or National AFL-CIO should conduct them and when, where and how - there is nonetheless solid agreement on the basic need and also the fact that, whatever means is used, top level agreement between the International Unions and National AFL-CIO is necessary in order to provide a co-ordinated program in the field. This would tend to eliminate conflicting ideas and interpretations reaching the public.

Third, and quite surprising, were the many comments by rank and file members in the Building Trades and Crafts complaining of too much local union atonomy and power. It is their opinion that in this day and time of big business and big Unions the International officers have more responsibilities toward the rank and file and should exercise more and proper authority. A deplorable lack of proper communication between local unions is cited as one reason for the above opinion. Another is that one local union may have a desirable educational program while the local union officers of a nearby local will refuse to permit one.

In conclusion, it must be said that a sense of uneasiness hangs over most of the region. Although many expressed confidence that their union could successfully handle any racial problem, and pro-segregationists stated positively that they could maintain their position, persistent questioning brought forth admissions of concern. Everyone seems to be awaiting action by the High Command.

LABOR STUDY

- Morton T. Elder

MISSISSIPPI — Fair, not so cold Sunday. Fresh to locally strong northerly winds on the coast becoming gentle to moderate variable Sunday.

The Delta Democra

60th Year | United Press (UP) | Greenville, Mississippi | Sunday, Ja

Southern Politics

'56 Legislature Meets Tuesday; Aims To Curb S

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 31 (UP) The 1956 Mississippi Legislature convenes here Tuesday with its sights set on holding the line on spending and going the limit to preserve segregation.

The 189-member body — 114 of them new at lawmaking—is expected to remain in session for at least four months to wrestle with an ambitious administration program and weighty school and segregation problems.

Hot Speaker's Race

When the session opens at noon, attention will be turned to the House chamber and the heated race for speaker. In the Senate Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin goes in for his second, four-year-term as presiding officer and Sen. Earl Evans is virtually assured of being elected president pro-tem.

But veteran House Speaker Walter Sillers, forceful and conservative Delta lawmaker, is opposed by a rising young attorney who contends the people want a change in their politicians or they would not have elected his friend J. P. Coleman as governor last summer.

Both Confident

William Winter, 32, of Grenada, and Sillers, 67, of Rosedale, both claim confidence of victory. Sill 's said he had enough votes from the 149-member House to win in a walk-away but Winter said he must be counting some Winter votes.

The new session will hear a report from outgoing Gov. Hugh White who is expected to stress economy and continuance of the sweeping school equalization program which was born during his administration and virtually dominated it.

Slow Start

The session is expected to be slow getting started. It will have two weeks to do nothing in the way of enacting major legislation before the new administration takes over. Coleman will be inaugurated on Jan. 17. Traditionally, the Legislature waits to hear the governor's inaugural address before tackling important bills.

Coleman has announced he will push legislation to tighten state control of utility rates, authorize public recall of law enforcement authorities, repeal the "black market" liquor tax, keep old age pensions at the highest level the state can afford and make legislative and other governmental meetings

LEA

Ready for i tion are a ser by Coleman a tion Advisory ing maintain Included are mon-law m compulsory s and set up a thority for m regation.

Coleman is mittee in M to implement amendment
lature to abol

ocrat-Times

SUNDAY EDITION

Sunday, January 1, 1956 Price 10c No. 105

Curb Spending, Keep Segregation

It will have othing in the or legislation administration will be in-
7. Traditional-waits to hear gural address
tant bills.
nced he will tighten state tes, authorize enforcement
the "black keep old age
hest level the d make legis-governmental meetings open to the public.

LEAC Program

Ready for immediate consideration are a series of bills proposed by Coleman and the Legal Education Advisory Committee for helping maintain segregated schools. Included are bills to abolish common-law marriages, repeal the compulsory school attendance law and set up a permanent state authority for maintaining racial segregation.

Coleman is backed by the committee in blocking any attempts to implement a new constitutional amendment permitting the Legislature to abolish public schools and set up a private system in order to keep them segregated. Coleman said should that become necessary, and he doesn't believe it will, he will call a special session.

Nullicifation

A fight may come up on a new issue in Mississippi politics, the "nullification or interposition" proposal whereby the states would declare the Supreme Court de-segregation decision null and void. Some legislators have said they would sponsor legislation along that line but Coleman has opposed open defiance of the federal government. There has been so much confusion over the old states' rights doctrine that opinion has yet to be solidified among the lawmakers.

The new administration and most legislators are committed to holding the line on spending, even though the balanced budget calls for appropriations of 19 million dollars over current expenditures.

The biggest jump is in education which will require almost 10 million in new money, chiefly because of the upgrading of teacher salaries and transportation.

Attempts will be made to amend the new school equalization program, passed over strong opposition. Some legislators hope to cut off mounting cost.

Thompson — five feet,

Politics, Southern

Miss. Solons Face Hot Issues; Legislature Convenes Jan. 3

Governor-Elect Takes Office Jan. 17; Plans Clamp-Down on Gambling

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 31—A 60 per cent new Mississippi legislature Tuesday will usher in the four-year administration of Gov. James Plemon Coleman, first candidate in 32 years to win the office in his first race. It usually takes three campaigns to emerge victor.

The lawmakers will be in session two weeks before the 41-year-old Mr. Coleman sheds his official role as attorney general to assume the No. 1 office on Jan. 17. Simultaneous inauguration of a new administration is impossible, as the new governor is not officially elected until done so by the House of Representatives.

Of the 189 members of the House and Senate, 112 are new for an all-time turnover.

Same Chief in Senate

The presiding officer of the Senate remains unchanged with the reelection of Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel. A new president problem, the No. 3 ranking state official, will be elected by the Senate with Sen. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton slated for that office after relinquishing the chairmanship of the finance committee to Sen. William Burgin of Columbus.

Speaker Walter Sillers of the House is a candidate for reelection for his fourth term. The Bolivar Countian, member of the House since 1916, is opposed by Rep. William Winter of Grenada County, who begins his third term Tuesday.

Gov.-elect Coleman is "hands-off" of the contest in which Mr. Sillers claims sufficient pledges from the 140 members to assure his reelection. He claims "at least 90" votes.

Mr. Winter has accused the ultra - conservative Mr. Sillers with being a "Republican," and not once in the past 12 years having supported the presidential naminee of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Sillers has answered the accusation, asserting he is a Jeffersonian States' Rights Democrat, and bases his "political faith" on the policies outlined in 1952 by the Democratic Party of Mississippi. Those principles, were ratified by the House and Senate in 1952 and [illegible]ced in the laws of Mississippi. [illegible]ey are based on "states' rights [illegible] opposed to Federal Government encroachment in the internal affairs of a state."

Mr. Winter has promised to back the national party leaders in 1956.

Under a law passed in 1947, a Mississippi Democrat can vote a national Republican ticket without losing his status as a simon-pure Democrat on the state level.

MISSISSIPPI

In contrast to the legislative personnel, the scheduled issues are tattered from numerous legislative conflicts. And at final adjournment, expected around April 15, some of them will still be unsolved.

There is no time-limit on Mississippi legislative sessions.

The No. 1 item in the new governor's program calls for steps to seek enforcement of the state's prohibition and anti-gambling laws, with emphasis on the latter. There is no state-level enforcement agency, and none is favored by Mr. Cole an. However, he said if it becomes necessary for him to act, he will declare martial law in a county, move in with the National Guard, and take over the sheriff's office until "the outlaws have been driven out."

A crime detention laboratory to work with sheriffs in solving the many unsolved crimes in Mississippi also is favored by the new governor.

Another "must" on his program calls for strengthening of the powers and personnel of the present three-member Public Service Commission elected by districts. Gov.-elect Coleman wants its regulatory authority expanded to include natural gas and electric power companies, now without state-level regulation and subject only to municipal ordinances.

'Tightly' Balanced Budget

A controversy is developing on that issue. The present commission, which regulates telephone, telegraph, railroad and bus companies, has for years been inadequately staffed. A plan is to assess the utilities for its operation and employ rate experts.

Mr. Coleman "hopes" no new or increased taxes will be necessary. He has approved a "tightly" balanced budget at 183 million dollars for the new biennium commencing July 1. However, it takes into account a carry-over surplus of 10 million dollars, and unlike the past, leaves no "cushion" for emergencies.

Facing the lawmakers on that score are plans of state departments to get them to raise the amounts recommended by the Budget and Accounting Commission, along with efforts of the 265 incorporated municipalities to have earmarked to them the three million dollars paid in fire insurance premium taxes. The insurance taxes already have been figured in the "tightly" balanced budget for state purposes.

Another $1,600,000 in the anticipated revenues also is threatened. The strong County Supervisors Assn. is on record against a budget commission recommendation to "peg" general fund disbursements for the state aid rural road program at five million dollars annually. That program is now getting $5,800,000 a year from the general fund.

Success of those two efforts would leave the budget out of balance $4,600,000. On top of that, public schools want two million more than the 78 million dollars programmed for them, while the colleges want an additional two million to the 12 million down for them.

There is one thing certain—the new Legislature will have to reenact a 14-per-cent "emergency" surtax on big business, enacted earlier this year to help finance a new Negro-white public school equalization program with automatic repeal June 30.

Labor vs. Management

Also scheduled for a fight is an effort to repeal the 1954 right-to-work law.

Labor wants the workmen's compensation benefits raised from $25 a week to $30, and the death benefit upped from $8,600 to $12,000.

Management is organized to resist any change in the right-to-work law, as well as for creation of a State Department of Labor.

A perennial effort to gain a new apportionment of the Legislature is in the making. However, little chance of that effort being successful is given it.

Legalization of liquor is definitely "out." Gov.-elect Coleman has said he will veto any such proposal.

MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATIVE TEST

N.Y.T. 1/3/56

Segregation, Finances, Law Enforcement Top Issues for New Administration

By Politics

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 2—The new Legislature will swing into action tomorrow as a new state administration faces major problems.

Segregation, law enforcement, finances and regulation of public utilities loom as top matters for consideration by the 189 legislators, 60 per cent of whom are newcomers.

Despite the abundance of controversy, J. P. Coleman, who takes office as Governor Jan. 17, expects to push through his program with ease.

Mr. Coleman, an unpredictable political figure, shattered precedent last summer by winning the governorship on his first try. He has made it clear that he intends to be in command on Legislature matters.

Mississippi has been noted for legislative independence, and political observers are interested in seeing how closely the Legislature goes along with the 41-year-old Governor-elect, a former "country plow boy."

Mr. Coleman has kept a "hands off" policy in the fight for the powerful post of House Speaker, which will be decided on opening day. Walter Sillers of Rosedale, the Speaker for twelve of his forty years' legislative service, is opposed by 32-year-old William Winter of Grenada County. Mr. Winter has had eight years in the House. Both have assured the Governor of their cooperation.

Lieut. Gov. Carroll Garten, who was re-elected overwhelmingly, will preside over the forty-nine-member Senate. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, former chairman of the Finance Committee is unopposed as president pro tempore of the Senate, the state's third highest political office.

Hugh White, the outgoing Governor, will address a joint session of the Legislature Wednesday. He is expected to summarize the accomplishments of the last four years, which have been marked by vast industrial expansion.

Mr. Coleman has advised legislative leaders to hold off on the segregation problem until he assumes office. His program is expected to run into problems growing out of the desegregation ruling of the United States Supreme Court. This segregation-conscious state has a population of 2,000,000, half of which is Negro.

Mr. Coleman will outline his course of action on segregation in a message Jan. 17.

The State's proposad budget of $183,000,000 for the next two years is $20,000,000 more than the expected income from taxes. The Legislature will grapple with a request for new revenue by the Budget Commission.

Mr. Coleman has stated his determination to force the removal of any public official who fails to abide by his duties in local law enforcement.

INDEX
AFFAIRS OF STATE .....Page 9, Sec. I
AMUSEMENTS .....Page 15, Sec. 1
CLASSIFIED ADS .....Pages 5-7, Sec. II
COMICS .....Pages 2-3, Sec. II
EDITORIAL .....Page 12, Sec. I
FINANCIAL .....Page 4, Sec. II
MISS. NOTEBOOK .....Page 9, Sec. I
RADIO LOG .....Page 15, Sec. I
SOCIETY .....Pages 13-14, Sec. I
SPORTS .....Pages 1-2 & 8, Sec. II
TV LOGS .....Page 15, Sec. I

The Clarion-Ledger

Mississippi's Leading Newspaper For More Than A Century

Established 1837 | 5c PER COPY | Jackson, Mississippi, Thursday Morning, January 5, 1956 | VOL. CXVII NO. 258

Attacks Upon State By Outside Cliques Deplored by White

Supreme Court Usurpation Might Go Into Personal Rights, Retiring Governor Tells Solons

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Gov. Hugh L. White, in a final message to the Mississippi legislature at noon Wednesday, urged "earnest and full cooperation to the new administration, headed by a young and able governor."

The chief executive's voice broke as he recounted the accomplishments of his administration now ending and as he recalled the contributions made to his administration over the years by the legislature.

"The people of Mississippi, members of the legislature, and public officials have been good to me over a long period of years," White recalled. "My labors are almost ended, and I hope that in some way they have contributed to our growth and well-being."

Mississippi's 74-year-old twice-governor had just been introduced by his young lieutenant governor colleague of the last four years, Carroll Gartin, as "a man who is perhaps making his last official appearance."

The talk was made before the joint assembly of the legislature presided over by the lieutenant governor.

Gov.-Elect J. P. Coleman, just returned from the Cotton Bowl game in Dallas, Tex., was not present, having gone to Ackerman to take his family home.

The joint session unanimously elected Mrs. Julia Starnes as the librarian and Mrs. Ellian Minyard as legislative postmistress, positions both have held for several terms.

Shortly after the joint assembly was dissolved, both houses adjourned until Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Salaries for the first period and mileage were paid.

Lt. Gov. Gartin announced that he will at that time announce his committee appointments.

Speaker Sillers will announce his committee appointments within the next two or tthree weeks, pending study of applications from members.

Both houses of the legislature approved legislative operational funds amounting to $455,000 for the session, $105,000 for the House contingent fund and $90,000 for the Senate contingent fund, or a total of $650,000.

Gov. White in his farewell address to the legislature, deplored attacks made upon our state by outside interests in the last several years and the infringements on state's rights by the U. S. Supreme Court.

"If the U. S. Supreme Court can usurp unto the federal government the right to direct and control a state's public school system as it has attempted to do in the school segregation cases, then it cau usurp unto the federal government

(Continued On Page 6)

Stennis Suggests 'Voiding'

It's A Word Less Offensive Than 'Nullification' He Says

Senator John C. Stennis said in a telephone interview from Washington Wednesday that Mississippi should seek allies in the fight to maintain segregation.

"It would be a mistake for one state to act alone," the senator said to Lamar Falkner of the Jackson Daily News.

And in seeking to unite with other states for the fight, Mississippi should discard words like "nullification," Stennis maintained.

He pointed out that to many Americans the word, "nullification," carries a connotation of lawlessness. And he stressed that Mississippi and the other states with similar problems should design the language in which they phrase their fight against integration in a manner calculated to win friends rather than to repel.

Stennis urged that all states who desire to safeguard the control of the state over its internal affairs, chief among them segregation, coordinate legislative moves toward amending the U. S. Constitution.

Returning to the nullification question, Stennis said, "We are dealing with a grave matter that can not be solved by one state alone."

The nullification proposal, which calls for the Mississippi legislature to void the U. S. Supreme Court ruling concerning segregation in the public school, was made some weeks ago here in a statement authored jointly by Stennis' fellow-Senator James O. Eastland, Congressman John Bell Williams, and Lincoln County Circuit Judge Tom P. Brady.

If the states jointly sought amendment of the Constitution the move would be a constitutional process, Stennis continued; as to how far the language of such a resolution should go is a matter of opinion, he said, adding it should certainly cover the voiding of the Supreme Court decision.

"But," Stennis said, "the word, 'nullification,' is not necessary and for my part I would advise against the use of that particular word. In some parts of the nation, that particular word carries a meaning of lawlessness and the use of force-the very opposite of what is intended by the people of Mississippi."

Touching on other matters of importance to the outcome of the segregation question, Stennis lauded the work of the Citizens' Councils, although he professed not to be a member of one because his home county, Kemper, as yet has not organized; expressed his belief that the Justice Department, currently investigating the work of the councils, will not find any basis for charges of illegal or subversive activity; added that if any council attempts to set itself up as a court, he opposes it; blamed the NAACP for instigating the Justice Department investigation; predicted a civil rights fight at the Democratic national convention this summer; and revealed that he himself hasn't picked a candidate for president since his choice, Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, decided not to run.

And concerning his stand on the nullification issue as opposed to that of Eastland and others, Stennis said he saw "no split in basic issues."

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN .....Editor 1921-1948 R. H. HENRY..... Editor 1871-1921
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR..... Manager T. M. HEDERMAN, JR..... Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities, which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

Politics, Southern

Challenges Face Coleman

Today at noon as James Plemon Coleman is sworn in as Governor of Mississippi, he comes immediately to face challenges and problems of a magnitude greater than those present in many years.

Governor Coleman will be inaugurated in the simplest, least pretentious ceremonies in the memory of most Mississippians, since there will be no formal parade and there will be no military uniforms displayed by his record-breaking number of colonels.

There will be color and pageantry aplenty, of course, and these are due Mr. Coleman, whose remarkable victory at the polls last summer set a number of political records for the Magnolia State.

But the restraint shown in the inaugural plans is in keeping with the man and his problems and challenges as he takes over the reins of our state government.

The segregation problem is, in many minds, the No. 1 challenge to the new governor. We do not underestimate this situation, but we feel that the degree of unanimity prevalent on this question would tend to reduce it to the No. 2 spot.

This could leave the top challenge to be that of the schools and their financing. Mississippians are inclined to underrate this problem, we fear.

Our state ranks 48th in the nation in support of schools but we are not at the bottom of the list by any means in our proportionate tax-support for schools. And yet the present rate of tax support is not enough, because, for one thing, we have "borrowed" from the future to maintain support at the current level.

Our common schools cry for more financial support — and the institutions of higher learning are not silent in this regard. Faculty losses to neighboring states are harassing our colleges as well as elementary and secondary schools. And our new medical school in Jackson must have adequate support if it is to fulfill its purpose.

Greater support funds or curtailment of service also are the alternatives facing some of the state departments which serve our people.

Money, money, money is asked, — but taxes are the only sources of revenue, and our state levies are, proportionate to income, already high.

Out of these major problems spring many additional ones of almost equal importance, none of them simple and none of them without elements of controversy and contest. It is well that the new governor is a man of strength and with the ability to pick up burdens and then lay them down. He will have plenty of practice in the days ahead.

Fortunately for Gov. Coleman, our people have given him strength in the men who will assist in carrying on the state government, beginning with Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, and running down the list of elective officers. The appointments already made or reported ready to be made by Gov. Coleman, are of high order.

The legislature has made a start at cooperating with the new executive by rushing his "recall" bill through the lower house and will doubtless complete the job in the senate. This measure will place a greater weight of responsibility on local voters for law enforcement, and may tend to take that problem off the governor's hands to some degree.

Mr. Coleman has indicated he will deal with the segregation problem at some length in his inaugural address. On this and all other subjects Mississippians will listen with the closest attention. We trust he and the lawmakers will come up with the solutions of most benefit for the greatest of our people.

Rep. Smith's Bill Has The Support Of State Majority

Rep. Frank Smith of Mississippi is on the right track in his demand for curbing flagrant abuses of present tax laws and regulations by organizations engaged in political pressure and propaganda. The delta Congressman has introduced a bill in Congress which would go far toward drying up many unsavory groups arrayed against the South.

The Smith bill would require the Secretary of the Treasury to make public the names of contributors to tax-exempt organizations. It would also require such groups to submit independent audits, furnish lists of all administrative officers and expenses, and addresses of persons and organizations to which grants of money are made.

Rep. Smith is particularly anxious to curb racketeering in racial issues. Some tax-exempt groups specialize more in promoting racial tensions than racial harmony. Under terms of his proposal, the Secretary of the Treasury would use his authority to cancel the tax-exempt status of all organizations which have abused privileges under present law.

We know of no more fertile field for Congressional inquiry than those groups which Rep. Smith has in mind. Much of the friction and ill will now existing between the races in this country may be laid directly at their door. It is urgent that the able delta Congressman's measure receive fullest consideration. By no stretch of the imagination can hate-peddling be construed as a tax-exempt activity.

Party of the United States of America —What It Is, How It Works — A Handbook for Americans."

This timely and informative brochure is a powerful argument against the fallacy that the Communist Party of America is merely a political group with no designs against the safety of our Republic. This fallacy, unfortunately, persists in some minds today, despite the increasing seriousness of the Red menace.

The Eastland Committee's publication describes exactly how the Communist conspiracy works, how the subversive machine directs Red policy and tactics, how discipline is enforced and how Communism draws many unwitting dupes into its trap to serve sinister ends. This official booklet is utterly lacking in hysterical or bombastic tone but on the contrary is a calm, forceful and reasoned expose, completely documented in every detail.

Washington sources indicate that the Eastland Committee's "Handbook for Americans" has about exhausted its first printing, due to widespread public demand and favorable comment by the patriotic press. Mississippians can well take pride in our energetic and dedicated senior senator whose name is assuming and increasingly ominous ring to those seeking to undermine the nation security. The booklet issued by his committee as a public service is "must" reading for all who are determined to preserve our traditional freedoms from Communism.

Pol. - Miss
56

Here Is Full Text Of Gov. Coleman's Inaugural Address Tuesday

51st Governor Pledges State Will Keep Races Separate For Four Years

The following is the complete text of Gov. J. P. Coleman's address at his inauguration at noon Tuesday:

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the joint assembly, my friends and fellow Mississippians:

The solemn oath of office which I have just taken in your presence as the duly elected Chief Executive of more than two million people was sworn without mental reservation. This being my ninth time to have taken an official oath, I consider it appropriate to tell you that my Mother's Bible was open at the third and fourth verses of the 24th Psalm, which reads as follows:

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his Holy place?

"He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully."

Humbly grateful to my dear friends, the people of Mississippi, that they should have trusted me for these next four years with the grea responsibilities of the governorship, I give them my solemn pledge that this Admisistration will be kept absolutely free of those things which both defame and degrade

Seeks Cooperation

I congratulate you, the Members of the Legislature, upon your selection to serve in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. From the meetings held with you immediately after our election, as well as your performance since the assumption of your duties, I have, without exception, gained an abiding faith in your patriotism, in the purity of your motives, and in the sincerity of your desire to be of unselfish service to our State in these perilous times I know the people expect it of us that we shall at all times cooperate with each other and work together in harmony for the common good. I know you do not expect to disappoint them in this hope. That much good shall come of our work together is my fondest hope and my most earnest prayer

It is a fact proven by political history that governors and legislators sometimes go out of office personally and politically less popular than when they went in. Possibly this fate may await us. In any event, I want to say here and now that I shall at no time, under any circumstances, play politics with the high duties conferred upon me by the will of the people of Mississippi. Regardless of all consequences, and regardless of what may hereafter be said, it is my sincere desire that the governor and most unanimous action on the Recall Bill, I want to congratulate the people of Mississippi for having elected a Legislature which already has proven its ability to go immediately to work and act promptly upon matters which are of the greatest importance. I am deeply gratified, and I believe the people are also, that this Legislature and its chosen leadership have manifested their firm intention not only to be a working Legislature but to put into effect those things which the people approved at the polls last August. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the attitude which you have taken and for the action already accomplished.

Executive Clemency

One of the great responsibilities vested in the governor is that of granting or withholding suspensions of sentence and pardons to those convicted of crime. Because of the sixteen years of my life which have been devoted to the enforcement of the law and the protection of the public, I feel very deeply the importance of this subject. Our people are overwhelmingly law abiding, yet great pressures are brought to bear in behalf of pardons and suspensions for those who have not obeyed the law. It will only be in the rarest cases that executive clemency will be extended. Certainly, to prevent miscarriages of justice, I shall exercise the power of supension and pardon. In all other cases, I hope the people kindly will not press me for something which my conscience will not permit me to do.

I shall deliver a special message at a later date on the matter of paroles, but in the meantime I want to urge this Legislature to give serious consideration to the establishment of a system of adult probation. This was one of the planks in my gubernatorial platform, and legislation for this purpose has already been introduced. It was my sad duty a number of times while I was serving as Circuit Judge to be compelled to send men to the penitentiary whom I believed could have been thoroughly reformed and rehabilitated without being sent to the penitentiary. Again, I urge the Legislature to give this subject its most serious consideration.

Public Utilities

In October 1954, I became the first of the candidates for governor to advocate effective state regula- doubled. The farmer today is like the man standing with one foot in a bucket of ice and the other foot in a tub of hot coals — the average temperature may be fine but there can be no doubt of his painful situation.

Since Mississippi is predominantly an agricultural state, the situation which I have described is not only a stern warning with reference to our entire economy but puts us on notice that we must practice the greatest economy and conservatism in the expenditures of the state government.

Improve Economy

We must devote every ounce of our skill and energy toward improving the economic position of the farmers of our state.

We must likewise leave no stone unturned in our efforts to improve the industrial position of Mississippi. Great work has been done by our BAWI Board. Economically speaking, I tremble to think of where Mississippi might have been at this time, had it not been for this splendid program and the wonderful work it has caused to be done. Despite the most excellent work of the BAWI Board, according to the figures of our State Employment Service, Mississippi in the last two yeaars has suffered a decrease of 1,000 in the number of non-farm workers in our state.

So, despite the splendid efforts of the past, Mississippi is faced with terrific decline in farm income and some decline in the number of non-farm workers employed in our state.

What can the Governor and the Legislature do to improve this situation? I strongly recommend the following:

First, that both the House and the Senate, as speedily as possible, set up special committees of their membership to deal with the economic welfare of our state, and thorough consideration to the economic conditions confronting both agriculture and industry in Mississippi.

Second, that the Agricultural and Industrial Board, for better concentration upon the problems at hand, be divided into two separate agencies, one an agricultural board, the other an industrial commission.

Employ Experts

Third, that when this reorganization shall have been effected the Governor and these agencies be granted sufficient funds and be authorized to employ the best experts available, whether or not they are now residents of Mississippi.

Fourth, that the Agricultural Board and the Industrial Commission be directed to make an all-out drive toward improving agriculture and attracting every possible worthwhile industry to our bord- port, maintain and improve our school program.

Like support will enthusiastically and devotedly be given our junior and senior colleges.

Insurance

Heretofore, the State of Mississippi has had no major problems insofar as insurance was concerned. Even now our problems are only with a segment of the insurance industry and my remarks and recommendations are not to be construed as an indictment against the insurance industry as a whole. On the contrary, I would like to compliment our fine Mississippi companies in the great work they are doing. Mississippi agents are among the finest in the nation. The vast majority of foreign companies as well as their representatives operating in Mississippi are above criticism, and their business operations are indeed conducted upon a high plane.

There are other insurance companies, however, which have cast a blight on the entire industry and have wrought chaos in their own state as well as other states in which they do business. Minimum requirements have enabled speculators to organize so-called insurance companies with little or no assets, and inadequate supervisory authority has allowed them to run rampant to the detriment of the insurance-buying public. While we have had only one insurance company failure in Mississippi, I can say with pride that not one single policy-holder has suffered by reason of the failure of a company domiciled in this State. Even now, however, the insurance department of a neighboring state has been forced to call an immediate examination of all home companies which, by reason of their low organizational requirements, number in the hundreds. Even now speculators from other states are considering Mississippi as their next hunting ground, depending upon the low organizational requirements of this state to enable them to organizie so-called Mississippi companies with their money and under their management. I am recommending to the Legislature that they carefully consider the enactment of laws that will raise the requirements of the organization of all types of insurance companies in Mississippi to a degree that will guarantee both sufficient capital and surplus so necessary for the successful operation of any business.

The greatest problem with which we are confronted is the deluge of mailed advertising from mail-order insurance companies not licensed in Mississippi. Multiplied thousands of dollars go out each month to these fly-by-night companies over which neither the State Insurance Department nor the state courts has jurisdiction. It would be futile to recommend state legislation to curb their activities since only the National Congress has control over citizen of our state bound up in what I am now about to say, but we are entitled to the sympathetic understanding of our friends in the remainder of the country. I am moved, therefore, by a deep realization of the gravity of this message.

My own personal and official attitude toward this question is well known to all Mississippians. In the gubernatorial campaign of 1955, I said in my official platform:

"There will be no necessity to abolish public schools, nor will there be any mixing of the races in any of the state operated educational institutions. I already have a record on this subject. This is no task for the amateur or the hothead."

This position was given the overwhelming support of the people of Mississippi at the ballot boxes last August.

I further told the people that if elected governor, with the cooperation of a good Legislature, we would maintain the separation of the races WITHOUT AT THE SAME TIME KEEPING OUR STATE, ITS ECONOMY, ITS CUSTOMS, AND ITS PRACTICES, IN A DAILY UPROAR OF CONFUSION AND UNCERTAINTY. I say to this audience and to those who are listening by radio and television that I have not the slightest fear that four years hence when my successor stands on this same spot to assume his official oath, the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exacty the same manner and form as we know it today.

Time For Calmness

I want to say to the Members of the joint assembly that our services here will not be judged by those minor skirmishes which can contribute nothing to the permanent preservation of our rights. If the rules of racial separation are intact when we leave office, our place in history will be secure. If we should fail, there is nothing which will excuse that failure in the eyes of the people of Mississippi. Let us then exercise all possible soundness of judgment, sincerity of purpose, and calmness of mind, to the end that we shall not fail.

You may be called upon to consider the adoption of Resolutions dealing with this problem. In the immediate future, I shall deliver a special message to the Legislature on this subject; it cannot be adequately handled here. In the meantime, I am keeping in almost daily contact with the Governors of the other Southern States in the hope that whatever resolutions you may adopt will harmonize with those of our sister states. Unity must be preserved at all costs, and I urge the assistance and cooperation of all persons and groups to the end that we may present a united front in this all important one searches the entire history of all Nations, peoples, governments, and minority populations there will be found examples of extinctions, enslavements, torture, and exile, but there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another. With all due respect to the mighty power of the United Sates Government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done.

What have integrated schools in other sections been worth to the negro? Have you ever thought about the fact that a negro can attend a mixed school in most of those states, but few of those states will hire him as a teacher? The State of Connecticut does not have twenty-five negro eachers. The City of Albany, the capital of New York, the home of Harlem, employs only three negro teachers. The city of Newark employs 2200 school teachers, but only 70 of them are negroes, and none is a principal.

Sympathy For Negroes

I am pledged to the maintenance of the separation of the races at all costs, but I want to say this further word to the negroes of Mississippi. As Governor, I shall always give sympathetic consideration to any of your problems which deserve the assistance of the state government. If you accept this opportunity, it will mean better days for all of us. If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours.

Now for a word to our white citizens, When I formally opened my campaign at Ackerman on May 10th of last year, I said that "those who propose to mix the races in our public schools had might as well try to dip the Atlantic dry with a teaspoon".

I am just as confident of the correctness of this statement now as I was then. We must keep cool heads and calm judgment in the face of all the provocation which is being hurled upon us from almost every direction. The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment, and to render us incapable of defending ourselves. How devoutly it is to be hoped that a people who have had the strength, the courage, and the vision to surmount the terrifying trials of the past will not now allow themselves to fall victims to these tactics of today. The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous —so we have nothing to fear unless it be "fear itself".

Unspecific Ruling

To the few who have unjustifiably substituted fear for confidence, please let me remind them that even the United States Supreme Court did not undertake to say how or when its decision of May 17, 1954, could or would be en-

Cotton Gets Next to Flannel

Patrick H. Cotton of Memphis, one of Gov.-elect J. P. Coleman's out-of-state colonels, gets fitted in the handsome three-button charcoal gray flannel business suit and the gray and white tie that will be seen in great numbers around Jackson Tuesday for the inauguration. Cotton, general traffic manager of Gordon's Transports Inc., is one of 1,200 colonels on Coleman's staff.

Colonel, Suh, It Fits Fine

George Gouras (right), owner of the Mayflower Restaurant of Jackson, one of the 1,200 colonels of Gov.-elect J. P. Coleman's staff gets fitted in hat and tuxedo by Sandy Walters of 2302 St. Charles St., salesman at Lewis Wilson's Clothing Store where the uniforms were bought. (Staff photo by Phil Stroupe.)

Amended Recall Bill Gets 42 To 4 Senate Approval

By HAROLD FOREMAN

J. P. Coleman takes the oath of office as Mississippi's 51st Governor Tuesday with one of the strongest planks in his platform having been given a vote of approval by both branches of the state legislature.

both houses indicated certain final approval within the not too distant future. If the House refuses to agree to the Senate amendments, a joint committee will be appointed to iron out the differences.

The important Senate amendment changing the makeup of the council was offered by Sen.

and work together in harmony for the common good. I know you do not expect to disappoint them in this hope. That much good shall come of our work together is my fondest hope and my most earnest prayer

It is a fact proven by political history that governors and legislators sometimes go out of office personally and politically less popular than when they went in. Possibly this fate may await us. In any event, I want to say here and now that I shall at no time, under any circumstances, play politics with the high duties conferred upon me by the will of the people of Mississippi. Regardless of all consequences, and regardless of what may hereafter be said, it is my sincere desire that the governor and the legislature during this four year period may lay aside all selfishness, all possible ulterior motives, and accompish much for the general welfare of our State.

Demosthenes described the cause of Greece's downfall in these undying words: "What has ruined Greece? Envy when a man received a bribe; laughter when he confessed it; Mercy to the convicted, and hatred to those who denounced the crime; all the usual accompaniments of corruption."

Time of Crisis

So I say to you, the Members of this joint assembly, that probably more than at any other time since 1876, the people need you; they realize they need you. Justice and good government need you. In this, I know you will not fail. Let us remember that the man who tries to do something and fails is infinitely better than he who tries to do nothing and succeeds.

Under our Constitution, the Governor is the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the State; he may require information in writing from the officers of the executive departments on any subject related to the duties of the respective offices; he shall, from time to time, give the Legislature information of the state of the government, and he shall recommend for consideration such measures as may be deemed proper and expedient.

Law Enforcement

In addition to the foregoing duties and powers of the governor, Section 123 of the Constitution provides:

"The governor shall see that the laws are faithfully executed."

It is interesting to note that this constitutional requirement of the governor was included in our first constitutional requirement of the Constitution of 1817. It was repeated in the constitution of 1832 and even the Carpetbaggers and Scalawags did not dare omit it from the Constitution of 1869. It has continuously been port of the supreme law of our State from its birth to the present hour. I do not interpret this to mean that the governor should attempt to take over in matters of purely local concern; at the same time it is clearly the solemn oath of the governor to see to it that crime and criminals shall not oppress the God fearing, Christian people of Mississippi. My views and my past record on this subject are too well known to require emphasis here. Suffice it to say, those views and this record will unswervingly be adhered to in the next four years to come. Criminals and their sympathizers may as well take notice, and this notice will hold good until the day I shall go out of office.

I shall at the first appropriate opportunity deliver a special message to the Legislature on the necessity of strengthening and improving all phases of our law enforcement machinery.

In view of the prompt and al- [illegible] want to urge this Legislature to give serious consideration to the establishment of a system of adult probation. This was one of the planks in my gubernatorial platform, and legislation for this purpose has already been introduced. It was my sad duty a number of times while I was serving as Circuit Judge to be compelled to send men to the penitentiary whom I believed could have been thoroughly reformed and rehabilitated without being sent to the penitentiary. Again, I urge the Legislature to give this subject its most serious consideration.

Public Utilities

In October 1954, I became the first of the candidates for governor to advocate effective state regulation of all public utilities, including electric power companies, natural gas companies and telephone companies. All of the candidates for governor took a similar position, and I think there is no question that the overwhelming majority of both houses of this legislature keenly feel the pressing need for action in this field.

Mississippi is the only state in the union which, to date, has made no effort from the state level to regulalate electric power companies and natural gas companies. For lack of the necessary accountants, rate experts, and valuation engineers, our eefforts at telephone rate regulation have been almost worthless. Under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court the legislature has no way to prevent these utilities from appealing rate making decisions to the courts. The only remedy for the situation, and one which is readily available to us, is to have a regulatory body so well staffed and so well trained that the rates, when fixed, will stand the test of reasonableness in the courts. If this legislature should adjourn without taking these necessary steps in behalf of the people of Mississippi, and leaving the consumer in that same attitude he has been forced to occupy in all past years, it would, in my judgement, be one of the greatest failures of your service here. From meetings and discussions already had with you on this important subject, I have no doubt that you will deal successfully with this problem.

Agriculture And Industry

One of the great goals of this administration must be to lead the people of our state upward to higher levels of income. This will require a most critical examination by this legislature of agricultural and industrial conditions in our state. Being myself a farmer, and being one whose people have never followed any other occupation, I am greatly distressed over the condition of our agricultural economy at this present time. Everybody in Mississippi knows that during the last few years our people have been leaving the farm by the thousands. They have not left because they did not love the land nor because they did not prefer to farm, but because it became absolutely impossible for them to make a respectable living for themselves and their families. The continuous increase in the cost of everything the farmer must buy and the continuous decline in the prices of what the farmer has to sell are rapidly approaching the disaster point. Our cotton acreage in Mississippi is now below what it was in the year 1879. We are met face to face with a most serious threat to the economy of our state. Farm prices are now the lowest since the pre-war year of 1941. Yet, production costs are 30 percent above what they were in 1947. Since 1947, farm mortgage debt has Industrial Board, for better concentration upon the problems at hand, be divided into two separate agencies, one an agricultural board, the other an industrial commission.

Employ Experts

Third, that when this reorganization shall have been effected the Governor and these agencies be granted sufficient funds and be authorized to employ the best experts available, whether or not they are now residents of Mississippi.

Fourth, that the Agricultural Board and the Industrial Commission be directed to make an all-out drive toward improving agriculture and attracting every possible worthwhile industry to our borders.

Fifth, that the Governor, the Legislature, and all responsible officials of our state conduct our government on such a high plane of service, economy, and stability as to leave no doubt in the minds of the capitalists and industrialists of the nation that Mississippi is an outstanding, safe place in which to locate and operate, and where they will receive fair and equitable treatment under fair and just laws.

Sixth, that the education of our younger people be so encouraged and improved as to make us more capable of progress in all fields of economic employment.

We have made indescribable progress in this short quarter of a century. The challenge now is to take advantage of the infinitely greater opportunities of the next quarter of a century to come.

Education

In the recent campaign for governor I made it very plain to the people of Mississippi that I thoroughly endorsed the public school program recently established in our State. As one who had to work and obtain his formal education in depression days, and thus knowing the true value of education, I hope I assume the governorship with the unlimited faith and confidence of the educators, the parents, and the school children of Mississippi. The progress which we are making in the education of our children should be a source of unfailing pride to all progressive Mississippians. It is likewise a complete answer to agitators who would criticize or detract from our efforts to rid ourselves of illiteracy and its consequences. Because of the interest, the sacrifice, and the support of the people of this State, I believe we can point to a record of educational progress second to none. That record of progress has been made; it cannot be challenged.

I would particularly like to direct the attention of our own Negro citizens and those outside Mississippi to the following figures:

The average salary of our white teachers has increased from $710 in 1940 to $2,447 in 1954. The average salary of Negros teachers has increased from $224 in 1940 to $1,814 in 1954, an increase of 800 percent within fourteen short years. We now have over 3,000 licensed white teachers and nearly 7,000 licensed Negro school teachers in Mississippi. This year we are paying thirteen millions of dollars in salaries to the Negro school teachers and nineteen millions of dollars in salaries to the white school teachers. Moreover, where Mississippi provided transportation for no Negro children in 1939, this year we have transported Negro students in all-steel buses at a cost of almost two million dollars. All children have been furnished free text books.

Insofar as lies within the power of the Governor, I am happy here and now to pledge the full resources of this Administration to supthe Legislature that they carefully consider the enactment of laws that will raise the requirements of the organization of all types of insurance companies in Mississippi to a degree that will guarantee both sufficient capital and surplus so necessary for the successful operation of any business.

The greatest problem with which we are confronted is the deluge of mailed advertising from mail-order insurance companies not licensed in Mississippi. Multiplied thousands of dollars go out each month to these fly-by-night companies over which neither the State Insurance Department nor the state courts has jurisdiction. It would be futile to recommend state legislation to curb their activities since only the National Congress has control over their mail order operations. My sole only recommendation in this instance is not to the legislature, but to the people against buying such insurance. I shall likewise recommend to our friends in the National Congress that they do everything in their power to enact Federal legislation that will give us relief from so-called fly-by-night insurance companies over which we in Mississippi have no jurisdiction.

A review and renovation of our insurance code is practically mandatory.

MY PROGRAM

The program upon which the people elected me Governor was thoroughly discussed in the campaign and is well known to the members of the joint assembly. The limitations of time prevent a full discussion of every point here. I shall have printed copies of that program placed on the desks of the individual members of the Legislature, and I know you will read them.

I must take advantage of this opportunity, however, to remind you that I advocated, and I still advocate, repeal of the black market tax, a constitutional amendment forever guaranteeing our homestead exemption program, assistance to the aged to the full extent of our financial ability, strict economy in government, the promotion of rural electrification, fair legislation toward labor and management, and a constitutional amendment limiting special sessions of the Legislature to thirty days.

I must especially urge upon you the necessity for a permanent program of financial aid to our municipalities, and I know this most important problem will have your full sympathetic attention.

For reasons well known to all informed Mississippians, I most earnestly urge the necessity of repealing our absent voter laws except as to members of our Armed Forces and employees of common carriers engaged upon a scheduled run.

Segregation

My friends, I come now to a discussion of that governmental question which continuously for months has been uppermost in the minds of the people of Mississippi, and which no doubt is destined greatly to vex and harass us in the years immediately ahead. I refer to maintaining the continued separation of the white and negro races in accordance with those customs which the experience of ninety years has taught us all, while and colored alike, to be for the welfare of all concerned.

As I launch into this discussion, I address a message not ony to you, my fellow laborers in the Legislature, but I am also speaking directly to the white and negro people in Mississippi. I am likewise speaking to our fellow citizens in the other forty-seven states of our Nation. Not only is the future well-being of every white and negro sible soundness of judgment, sincerity of purpose, and calmness of mind, to the end that we shall not fail.

You may be called upon to consider the adoption of Resolutions dealing with this problem. In the immediate future, I shall deliver a special message to the Legislature on this subject; it cannot be adequately handled here. In the meantime, I am keeping in almost daily contact with the Governors of the other Southern States in the hope that whatever resolutions you may adopt will harmonize with those of our sister states. Unity must be preserved at all costs, and I urge the assistance and cooperation of all persons and groups to the end that we may present a united front in this all important

In his message to the South Carolina legislature, delivered on last Thursday, Governor Timmerman said:

"I think it advisable that we give consideration to joining, if possible, our sister states at an appropriate time in a lawful and formal protest against the effort to destroy our form of government. but I would caution against premature action."

We have plenty of time, you will be kept fully informed of all developments, so I respectfully request that all action of this kind be with-held until you shall have heard my special message.

With the indulgence of those present, I should like now to address a word to the remainder of the Nation. I want to tell you that during the next four years the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a State of law and not of violence. I want to remind you that for over ninety years the white and the negro people of Mississippi have lived side by side in peace and harmony. I would like you, our friends outside Mississippi, to know that the great overwhelming majority of the white people of Mississippi are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of any murder, violence, or any other wrongdoing toward anyone. History shows that the first white man ever to be legally hanged in Mississippi was executed for the murder of a negro slave. I repeat that while we, the people of Mississippi, are unalterably determined as a matter of right and justice that the necessary rules of society shall be maintained, we do not any more approve of violence and lawlessness than you do.

Problem Acute Here

We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other State in the Union. It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation you would look upon it as we do.

Despite all the propaganda which has been fired at us, the country can be assured that the white people of Mississippi are not a race of negro killers. Official statistics for the State of Mississippi for 1954 show that in that year, the last for which we have figures available, eight white people were killed by negroes and only six negroes were killed by whites, while 182 negroes were killed by members of their own race. In other words, there were thirty times as many negroes killed by members of their own race as by members of the white race.

Now, for a word to those loyal negro citizens of Mississippi who love their State and who are unwilling to be made the victims of propaganda from professional agitators.

I must remind you that when most every direction. The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment, and to render us incapable of defending ourselves. How devoutly it is to be hoped that a people who have had the strength, the courage, and the vision to surmount the terrifying trials of the past will not now allow themselves to fall victims to these tactics of today. The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous —so we have nothing to fear unless it be "fear itself".

Unspecific Ruling

To the few who have unjustifiably substituted fear for confidence, please let me remind them that even the United States Supreme Court did not undertake to say how or when its decision of May 17, 1954, could or would be enforced.

Let me remind them that in all the southern states, including South Carolina and Virginia, there is not a single negro child going to school with white children as the result of the compulsion of any court order. A few negro children are going to school with white children in the south, but only in those miserably few districts where local authorities volunatarily allowed it to be placed into effect — no court order was involved. Even in the very cases which were heard in the United States Supreme Court itself, no mixing in the public schools in those districts has yet been accomplished, nor is there any actual prospect of it.

Our pupil assignment law, which has been on the statute books since 1954, and which has not yet been challenged, is, in my opinion, within itself, a complete remedy at the present time We shall not be found without that resourcefulness necessary to any future remedies which may be required I know and you know that while there is no magic remedy for the Supreme Court decision there are multiplied means and methods, all perfectly legal, by which we can and will defeat integration of the races in our state

The time has come for us to invoke the great principle enunciated by Thomas Jefferson when he said:

"Never let us do wrong, because our opponents did so. Let us, rather, by doing right, show them what they ought to have done, and establish as a rule the dictates of reason and conscience, rather than of angry passions."

As for myself, I face this problem, like all other problems, in the assurance given us in Chapter 1, Verse 7 of II Timothy:

"For God has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of sound mind."

No Need For Fear

We the people of Mississippi are of sound mind, there is no occasion for the excitement of fear, and we are confident of our power.

Since May 17, 1954, the plans, approach, and legal action maintained by our State Government have been completely successful. We have not begun to exhaust the resources at our command, so let us, with supreme confidence, take a leaf from the book of that great man, Elbert Hubbard, who said:

"Go as far as you can see, and when you get there you'll see farther."

As for myself, I face the future, not with fear but with confidence, not in panic, but in calmness born of the strength of our position and the weight of our power I hope the people without surrendering any part of their alertness, will join me in this feeling.

May God, in his inexhaustible wisdom and mercy, guide us as we move forward together toward a better day in our beloved Mississippi.

George Gouras (right), owner of the Mayflower Restaurant of Jackson, one of the 1,200 colonels of Gov.-elect J. P. Coleman's staff gets fitted in hat and tuxedo by Sandy Walters of 2302 St. Charles St., salesman at Lewis Wilson's Clothing Store where the uniforms were bought. (Staff photo by Phil Stroupe.)

Amended Recall Bill Gets 42 To 4 Senate Approval

By HAROLD FOREMAN

J. P. Coleman takes the oath of office as Mississippi's 51st Governor Tuesday with one of the strongest planks in his platform having been given a vote of approval by both branches of the state legislature.

In the first major test of strength of the Coleman administration, the Senate late Monday afternoon approved the administration sponsored recall bill by a vote of 42 to 4.

The measure permits the recall of elected county officials, such as sheriffs, who "wilfully fail, neglect or refuse to perform their duties as required by law."

In urging passage of bill, Coleman made no secret of the fact that it was aimed primarily at stamping out the sale of liquor in legally dry Mississippi, and also to wipe out gambling.

To recall a county official, a petition bearing the signatures of 30 per cent of the county's qualified voters would first have to be secured. In the case of supervisors, justices of the peace and constables the petition would have to bear the signatures of 51 per cent of the county's qualified voters.

The petition along with a statement of charges as to why the elected official should be removed from office would be presented to the Governor, with the accused official and the voters being advised of the charges and filing of the petition.

Council To Decide Charges

The Governor would then appoint a three-member council to decide the merits of the charges and decide whether an election should be held to determine whether the accused official should be ousted or retained.

The Senate accepted 25 amendments to the bill, most of a minor or clarifying nature, but one calls for a radical departure in the selection of the council from the method specified by the House when it passed the bill last Wednesday by a vote of 113-23.

Under the House terms of the bill, the three member council to rule on the merits of a recall petition would consist of the Governor, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and an associate supreme court justice with the Governor serving as ex officio chairman. In the event the accused official should be from the same district as the chief justice, a second associate justice would replace him on the council.

The House bill further specified that the findings of the council "shall be final and not subject to review."

Senate Allows Appeal

The Senate amended the bill to provide that the council should be composed of three chancery court judges appointed by the Governor, none of whom shall be from the same district as the accused official, and also struck out the provision denying the right of appeal.

In amending the bill, sponsors were thwarted in their hopes to have the measure ready for Coleman's signature when he takes office at noon Tuesday.

But despite the many amendments, the overwhelming vote in both houses indicated certain final approval within the not too distant future. If the House refuses to agree to the Senate amendments, a joint committee will be appointed to iron out the differences.

The important Senate amendment changing the makeup of the council was offered by Sen. Wilbur [illegible] of Macon. But despite approval of the amendment, when the bill came up for final passage Lucas did not vote, but merely answered present.

Four Opposed

The four Senators voting against the bill were: Robert Everitt of Ruleville, who represents Sunflower, Humphreys and Washington counties; W. F. Martin of Bentonia who represents Yazoo county; Standard Morse, Jr., of Gulfport who represents Harrison and Stone counties; and W. F. Rosenblatt, Jr., of Fort Adams who represents Amite and Wilkinson counties.

Sen. Ellis Bodron of Vicksburg, the blind legislator who represents Hinds and Warren counties, paired his vote with William G. Burgin, Jr., of Columbus who represents Lowndes county, with Bodron voting nay and Burgin aye.

Among the other amendments accepted by the Senate was one offered by Sen. Kelly Hammond of Columbia to prevent the removing of a name from a petition after it is once signed.

Other Senate amendments would:

Provide that no recall election is valid unless a majority of the qualified voters in the county participate.

Provide that persons who are not qualified voters and who sign petitions shal lbe guilty of a misdemeanor instead of a felony.

Prevent officials who resign or who are ousted by election after petitions are circulated shal lnot be appointed deputies by their successors.

One amendment was decided by Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin casting the deciding vote.

This was on an amendment by Morse specifying that anyone circulating or signing a libelous petition could be held criminally liable if unable to prove that he acted in good faith. When the Senate voted it was split 24-24. Gartin then voted against the amendment and it was defeated.

One Senator, who asked not to be identified, said "several of us voted for the bill because we know that when it's tested before the supreme court it will be found unconstitutional."

One Recall Attempt Only

One section of the bill, approved provides that no county official could be recalled before he serves at least one year of his elected term, and that if the recall election fails no further attempt at recall could be made during the official's four-year term of office.

Sen. Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg steered the bill through the upper chamber which resolved itself into a committee of the whole.

The bill provides that to recall supervisors, justices of the peace and constables, the petition must bear the signature of 51 per cent of the qualified voters. An effort by Sen. D. F. Dambert, Jr., of Belmont to lower this requirement to 30 per cent, the same as required to recall sheriffs and county clerks, failed.

Politics & Southern

Coleman, At Inaugural, Pledges To Keep Segregation

24th Psalm Used By New Official

The following is the complete text of Gov. J. P. Coleman's address at his inauguration at noon Tuesday:

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the joint assembly, my friends and fellow Mississippians:

The solemn oath of office which I have just taken in your presence as the duly elected Chief Executive of more than two million people was sworn without mental reservation. This being my ninth time to have taken an official oath, I consider it appropriate to tell you that my Mother's Bible was open at the third and fourth verses of the 24th Psalm, which reads as follows:

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his Holy place?

"He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully."

Humbly grateful to my dear friends, the people of Mississippi, that they should have trusted me for these next four years with the grea responsibilities of the governorship, I give them my solemn pledge that this Admisistration will be kept absolutely free of those things which both defame and degrade

Seeks Cooperation

I congratulate you, the Members of the Legislature, upon your selection to serve in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. From the meetings held with you immediately after our election, as well as your performance since the assumption of your duties, I have, without exception, gained an abiding faith in your patriotism, in the purity of your motives, and in the sincerity of your desire to be of unselfish service to our State in these perilous times I know the people expect it of us that we shall at all times cooperate with each other and work together in harmony for the common good. I know you do not expect to disappoint them in this hope. That much good shall come of our work together is my fondest hope and my most earnest prayer

It is a fact proven by political history that governors and legislators sometimes go out of office personally and politically less popular than when they went in. Possibly this fate may await us. In any event, I want to say here and now that I shall at no time, under any circumstances, play politics with the high duties conferred upon me by the will of the people of Mississippi. Regardless of all consequences I shall do my duty as I see it.

Since the overwhelming and almost unanimous action on the Recall Bill, I want to congratulate the people of Mississippi for having elected a Legislature which already has proven its ability to go immediately to work and act promptly upon matters which are of the greatest importance. I am deeply gratified, and I believe the people are also, that this Legislature and its chosen leadership have manifested their firm intention not only to be a working Legislature but to put into effect those things which the people approved at the polls last August. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the attitude which you have taken and for the action already accomplished.

Executive Clemency

One of the great responsibilities vested in the governor is that of granting or withholding suspensions of sentence and pardons to those convicted of crime. Because of the sixteen years of my life which have been devoted to the enforcement of the law and the protection of the public, I feel very deeply the importance of this subject. Our people are overwhelmingly law abiding, yet great pressures are brought to bear in behalf of pardons and suspensions for those who have not obeyed the law. It will only be in the rarest cases that executive clemency will be extended. Certainly, to prevent miscarriages of justice, I shall exercise the power of supension and pardon. In all other cases, I hope the people kindly will not press me for for something which my conscience will not permit me to do.

I shall deliver a special message at a later date on the matter of paroles, but in the meantime I want to urge this Legislature to give serious consideration to the establishment of a system of adult probation. This was one of the planks in my gubernatorial platform, and legislation for this purpose has already been introduced. It was my sad duty a number of times while I was serving as Circuit Judge to be compelled to send men to the penitentiary whom I believed could have been thoroughly reformed and rehabilitated without being sent to the penitentiary. Again, I urge the Legislature to give this subject its most serious consideration.

Public Utilities

doubled. The farmer today is like the man standing with one foot in a bucket of ice and the other foot in a tub of hot coals — the average temperature may be fine but there can be no doubt of his painful situation.

Since Mississippi is predominantly an agricultural state, the situation which I have described is not only a stern warning with reference to our entire economy but puts us on notice that we must practice the greatest economy and conservatism in the expenditures of the state government.

Improve Economy

We must devote every ounce of our skill and energy toward improving the economic position of the farmers of our state.

We must likewise leave no stone unturned in our efforts to improve the industrial position of Mississippi. Great work has been done by our BAWI Board. Economically speaking, I tremble to think of where Mississippi might have been at this time, had it not been for this splendid program and the wonderful work it has caused to be done. Despite the most excellent work of the BAWI Board, according to the figures of our State Employment Service, Mississippi in the last two yeaars has suffered a decrease of 1,000 in the number of non-farm workers in our state.

So, despite the splendid efforts of the past, Mississippi is faced with terrific decline in farm income and some decline in the number of non-farm workers employed in our state.

What can the Governor and the Legislature do to improve this situation? I strongly recommend the following:

First, that both the House and the Senate, as speedily as possible, set up special committees of their membership to deal with the economic welfare of our state, and thorough consideration to the economic conditions confronting both agriculture and industry in Mississippi.

Second, that the Agricultural and Industrial Board, for better concentration upon the problems at hand, be divided into two separate agencies, one an agricultural board, the other an industrial commission.

Employ Experts

Third, that when this reorganization shall have been effected the Governor and these agencies be granted sufficient funds and be authorized to employ the best experts available, whether or not they are now residents of Mississippi.

Fourth, that the Agricultural Board and the Industrial Commission be directed to make an all-out port, maintain and improve our school program.

Like support will enthusiastically and devotedly be given our junior and senior colleges.

Insurance

Heretofore, the State of Mississippi has had no major problems insofar as insurance was concerned. Even now our problems are only with a segment of the insurance industry and my remarks and recommendations are not to be construed as an indictment against the insurance industry as a whole. On the contrary, I would like to compliment our fine Mississippi companies in the great work they are doing. Mississippi agents are among the finest in the nation. The vast majority of foreign companies as well as their representatives operating in Mississippi are above criticism, and their business operations are indeed conducted upon a high plane.

There are other insurance companies, however, which have cast a blight on the entire industry and have wrought chaos in their own state as well as other states in which they do business. Minimum requirements have enabled speculators to organize so-called insurance companies with little or no assets, and inadequate supervisory authority has allowed them to run rampant to the detriment of the insurance-buying public. While we have had only one insurance company failure in Mississippi, I can say with pride that not one single policy-holder has suffered by reason of the failure of a company domiciled in this State. Even now, however, the insurance department of a neighboring state has been forced to call an immediate examination of all home companies which, by reason of their low organizational requirements, number in the hundreds. Even now speculators from other states are considering Mississippi as their next hunting ground, depending upon the low organizational requirements of this state to enable them to organizie so-called Mississippi companies with their money and under their management. I am recommending to the Legislature that they carefully consider the enactment of laws that will raise the requirements of the organization of all types of insurance companies in Mississippi to a degree that will guarantee both sufficient capital and surplus so necessary for the successful operation of any business.

The greatest problem with which we are confronted is the deluge of mailed advertising from mail-order insurance companies not licensed in Mississippi. Multiplied thousands of dollars go out each month to these fly-by-night companies over which neither the State Insurance Department nor the state courts citizen of our state bound up in what I am now about to say, but we are entitled to the sympathetic understanding of our friends in the remainder of the country. I am moved, therefore, by a deep realization of the gravity of this message.

My own personal and official attitude toward this question is well known to all Mississippians. In the gubernatorial campaign of 1955, I said in my official platform:

"There will be no necessity to abolish public schools, nor will there be any mixing of the races in any of the state operated educational institutions. I already have a record on this subject. This is no task for the amateur or the hothead."

This position was given the overwhelming support of the people of Mississippi at the ballot boxes last August.

I further told the people that if elected governor, with the cooperation of a good Legislature, we would maintain the separation of the races WITHOUT AT THE SAME TIME KEEPING OUR STATE, ITS ECONOMY, ITS CUSTOMS, AND ITS PRACTICES, IN A DAILY UPROAR OF CONFUSION AND UNCERTAINTY. I say to this audience and to those who are listening by radio and television that I have not the slightest fear that four years hence when my successor stands on this same spot to assume his official oath, the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exacty the same manner and form as we know it today.

Time For Calmness

I want to say to the Members of the joint assembly that our services here will not be judged by those minor skirmishes which can contribute nothing to the permanent preservation of our rights. If the rules of racial separation are intact when we leave office, our place in history will be secure. If we should fail, there is nothing which will excuse that failure in the eyes of the people of Mississippi. Let us then exercise all possible soundness of judgment, sincerity of purpose, and calmness of mind, to the end that we shall not fail.

You may be called upon to consider the adoption of Resolutions dealing with this problem. In the immediate future, I shall deliver a special message to the Legislature on this subject; it cannot be adequately handled here. In the meantime, I am keeping in almost daily contact with the Governors of the other Southern States in the hope that whatever resolutions you may adopt will harmonize with those of our sister states. Unity must be preserved at all costs, and I urge the assistance and one searches the entire history of all Nations, peoples, governments, and minority populations there will be found examples of extinctions, enslavements, torture, and exile, but there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another. With all due respect to the mighty power of the United Sates Government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done.

What have integrated schools in other sections been worth to the negro? Have you ever thought about the fact that a negro can attend a mixed school in most of those states, but few of those states will hire him as a teacher? The State of Connecticut does not have twenty-five negro eachers. The City of Albany, the capital of New York, the home of Harlem, employs only three negro teachers. The city of Newark employs 2200 school teachers, but only 70 of them are negroes, and none is a principal.

Sympathy For Negroes

I am pledged to the maintenance of the separation of the races at all costs, but I want to say this further word to the negroes of Mississippi. As Governor, I shall always give sympathetic consideration to any of your problems which deserve the assistance of the state government. If you accept this opportunity, it will mean better days for all of us. If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours.

Now for a word to our white citizens, When I formally opened my campaign at Ackerman on May 10th of last year, I said that "those who propose to mix the races in our public schools had might as well try to dip the Atlantic dry with a teaspoon".

I am just as confident of the correctness of this statement now as I was then. We must keep cool heads and calm judgment in the face of all the provocation which is being hurled upon us from almost every direction. The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment, and to render us incapable of defending ourselves. How devoutly it is to be hoped that a people who have had the strength, the courage, and the vision to surmount the terrifying trials of the past will not now allow themselves to fall victims to these tactics of today. The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous —so we have nothing to fear unless it be "fear itself".

Unspecific Ruling

To the few who have unjustifiably substituted fear for confidence, ing faith in your patriotism, in the purity of your motives, and in the sincerity of your desire to be of unselfish service to our State in these perilous times I know the people expect it of us that we shall at all times cooperate with each other and work together in harmony for the common good. I know you do not expect to disappoint them in this hope. That much good shall come of our work together is my fondest hope and my most earnest prayer

It is a fact proven by political history that governors and legislators sometimes go out of office personally and politically less popular than when they went in. Possibly this fate may await us. In any event, I want to say here and now that I shall at no time, under any circumstances, play politics with the high duties conferred upon me by the will of the people of Mississippi. Regardless of all consequences, and regardless of what may hereafter be said, it is my sincere desire that the governor and the legislature during this four year period may lay aside all selfishness, all possible ulterior motives, and accompish much for the general welfare of our State.

Demosthenes described the cause of Greece's downfall in these undying words: "What has ruined Greece? Envy when a man received a bribe; laughter when he confessed it; Mercy to the convicted, and hatred to those who denounced the crime; all the usual accompaniments of corruption."

Time of Crisis

So I say to you, the Members of this joint assembly, that probably more than at any other time since 1876, the people need you; they realize they need you. Justice and good government need you. In this, I know you will not fail. Let us remember that the man who tries to do something and fails is infinitely better than he who tries to do nothing and succeeds.

Under our Constitution, the Governor is the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the State; he may require information in writing from the officers of the executive departments on any subject related to the duties of the respective offices; he shall, from time to time, give the Legislature information of the state of the government, and he shall recommend for consideration such measures as may be deemed proper and expedient.

Law Enforcement

In addition to the foregoing duties and powers of the governor, Section 123 of the Constitution provides:

"The governor shall see that the laws are faithfully executed."

It is interesting to note that this constitutional requirement of the governor was included in our first constitutional requirement of the Constitution of 1817. It was repeated in the constitution of 1832 and even the Carpetbaggers and Scalawags did not dare omit it from the Constitution of 1869. It has continuously been port of the supreme law of our State from its birth to the present hour. I do not interpret this to mean that the governor should attempt to take over in matters of purely local concern; at the same time it is clearly the solemn oath of the governor to see to it that crime and criminals shall not oppress the God fearing, Christian people of Mississippi. My views and my past record on this subject are too well known to require emphasis here. Suffice it to say, those views and this record will unswervingly be adhered to in the next four years to come. Criminals and their sympathizers may as well take notice, and this notice will hold good until the day I shall go out of office.

I shall at the first appropriate opportunity deliver a special message to the Legislature on the necessity of strengthening and improving all phases of our law enforcement machinery.

In view of the prompt and al-

don. In all other cases, I hope the people kindly will not press me for for something which my conscience will not permit me to do.

I shall deliver a special message at a later date on the matter of paroles, but in the meantime I want to urge this Legislature to give serious consideration to the establishment of a system of adult probation. This was one of the planks in my gubernatorial platform, and legislation for this purpose has already been introduced. It was my sad duty a number of times while I was serving as Circuit Judge to be compelled to send men to the penitentiary whom I believed could have been thoroughly reformed and rehabilitated without being sent to the penitentiary. Again, I urge the Legislature to give this subject its most serious consideration.

Public Utilities

In October 1954, I became the first of the candidates for governor to advocate effective state regulation of all public utilities, including electric power companies, natural gas companies and telephone companies. All of the candidates for governor took a similar position, and I think there is no question that the overwhelming majority of both houses of this legislature keenly feel the pressing need for action in this field.

Mississippi is the only state in the union which, to date, has made no effort from the state level to regulalate electric power companies and natural gas companies. For lack of the necessary accountants, rate experts, and valuation engineers, our eefforts at telephone rate regulation have been almost worthless. Under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court the legislature has no way to prevent these utilities from appealing rate making decisions to the courts. The only remedy for the situation, and one which is readily available to us, is to have a regulatory body so well staffed and so well trained that the rates, when fixed, will stand the test of reasonableness in the courts. If this legislature should adjourn without taking these necessary steps in behalf of the people of Mississippi, and leaving the consumer in that same attitude he has been forced to occupy in all past years, it would, in my judgement, be one of the greatest failures of your service here. From meetings and discussions already had with you on this important subject, I have no doubt that you will deal successfully with this problem.

Agriculture And Industry

One of the great goals of this administration must be to lead the people of our state upward to higher levels of income. This will require a most critical examination by this legislature of agricultural and industrial conditions in our state. Being myself a farmer, and being one whose people have never followed any other occupation, I am greatly distressed over the condition of our agricultural economy at this present time. Everybody in Mississippi knows that during the last few years our people have been leaving the farm by the thousands. They have not left because they did not love the land nor because they did not prefer to farm, but because it became absolutely impossible for them to make a respectable living for themselves and their families. The continuous increase in the cost of everything the farmer must buy and the continuous decline in the prices of what the farmer has to sell are rapidly approaching the disaster point. Our cotton acreage in Mississippi is now below what it was in the year 1879. We are met face to face with a most serious threat to the economy of our state. Farm prices are now the lowest since the pre-war year of 1941. Yet, production costs are 30 percent above what they were in 1947. Since 1947, farm mortgage debt has membership to deal with the economic welfare of our state, and thorough consideration to the economic conditions confronting both agriculture and industry in Mississippi.

Second, that the Agricultural and Industrial Board, for better concentration upon the problems at hand, be divided into two separate agencies, one an agricultural board, the other an industrial commission.

Employ Experts

Third, that when this reorganization shall have been effected the Governor and these agencies be granted sufficient funds and be authorized to employ the best experts available, whether or not they are now residents of Mississippi.

Fourth, that the Agricultural Board and the Industrial Commission be directed to make an all-out drive toward improving agriculture and attracting every possible worthwhile industry to our borders.

Fifth, that the Governor, the Legislature, and all responsible officials of our state conduct our government on such a high plane of service, economy, and stability as to leave no doubt in the minds of the capitalists and industrialists of the nation that Mississippi is an outstanding, safe place in which to locate and operate, and where they will receive fair and equitable treatment under fair and just laws.

Sixth, that the education of our younger people be so encouraged and improved as to make us more capable of progress in all fields of economic employment.

We have made indescribable progress in this short quarter of a century. The challenge now is to take advantage of the infinitely greater opportunities of the next quarter of a century to come.

Education

In the recent campaign for governor I made it very plain to the people of Mississippi that I thoroughly endorsed the public school program recently established in our State. As one who had to work and obtain his formal education in depression days, and thus knowing the true value of education, I hope I assume the governorship with the unlimited faith and confidence of the educators, the parents, and the school children of Mississippi. The progress which we are making in the education of our children should be a source of unfailing pride to all progressive Mississippians. It is likewise a complete answer to agitators who would criticize or detract from our efforts to rid ourselves of illiteracy and its consequences. Because of the interest, the sacrifice, and the support of the people of this State, I believe we can point to a record of educational progress second to none. That record of progress has been made; it cannot be challenged.

I would particularly like to direct the attention of our own Negro citizens and those outside Mississippi to the following figures:

The average salary of our white teachers has increased from $710 in 1940 to $2,447 in 1954. The average salary of Negros teachers has increased from $224 in 1940 to $1,814 in 1954, an increase of 800 percent within fourteen short years. We now have over 8,000 licensed white teachers and nearly 7,000 licensed Negro school teachers in Mississippi. This year we are paying thirteen millions of dollars in salaries to the Negro school teachers and nineteen millions of dollars in salaries to the white school teachers. Moreover, where Mississippi provided transportation for no Negro children in 1939, this year we have transported Negro students in all-steel buses at a cost of almost two million dollars. All children have been furnished free text books.

Insofar as lies within the power of the Governor, I am happy here and now to pledge the full resources of this Administration to supsippi as their next hunting ground, depending upon the low organizational requirements of this state to enable them to organizie so-called Mississippi companies with their money and under their management. I am recommending to the Legislature that they carefully consider the enactment of laws that will raise the requirements of the organization of all types of insurance companies in Mississippi to a degree that will guarantee both sufficient capital and surplus so necessary for the successful operation of any business.

The greatest problem with which we are confronted is the deluge of mailed advertising from mail-order insurance companies not licensed in Mississippi. Multiplied thousands of dollars go out each month to these fly-by-night companies over which neither the State Insurance Department nor the state courts has jurisdiction. It would be futile to recommend state legislation to curb their activities since only the National Congress has control over their mail order operations. My only recommendation in this instance is not to the legislature, but to the people against buying such insurance. I shall likewise recommend to our friends in the National Congress that they do everything in their power to enact Federal legislation that will give us relief from so-called fly-by-night insurance companies over which we in Mississippi have no jurisdiction.

A review and renovation of our insurance code is practically mandatory.

MY PROGRAM

The program upon which the people elected me Governor was thoroughly discussed in the campaign and is well known to the members of the joint assembly. The limitations of time prevent a full discussion of every point here. I shall have printed copies of that program placed on the desks of the individual members of the Legislature, and I know you will read them.

I must take advantage of this opportunity, however, to remind you that I advocated, and I still advocate, repeal of the black market tax, a constitutional amendment forever guaranteeing our homestead exemption program, assistance to the aged to the full extent of our financial ability, strict economy in government, the promotion of rural electrification, fair legislation toward labor and management, and a constitutional amendment limiting special sessions of the Legislature to thirty days.

I must especially urge upon you the necessity for a permanent program of financial aid to our municipalities, and I know this most important problem will have your full sympathetic attention.

For reasons well known to all informed Mississippians, I most earnestly urge the necessity of repealing our absent voter laws except as to members of our Armed Forces and employees of common carriers engaged upon a scheduled run.

Segregation

My friends, I come now to a discussion of that governmental question which continuously for months has been uppermost in the minds of the people of Mississippi, and which no doubt is destined greatly to vex and harass us in the years immediately ahead. I refer to maintaining the continued separation of the white and negro races in accordance with those customs which the experience of ninety years has taught us all, while and colored alike, to be for the welfare of all concerned.

As I launch into this discussion, I address a message not ony to you, my fellow laborers in the Legislature, but I am also speaking directly to the white and negro people in Mississippi. I am likewise speaking to our fellow citizens in the other forty-seven states of our Nation. Not only is the future well-being of every white and negro the rules of racial separation are intact when we leave office, our place in history will be secure. If we should fail, there is nothing which will excuse that failure in the eyes of the people of Mississippi. Let us then exercise all possible soundness of judgment, sincerity of purpose, and calmness of mind, to the end that we shall not fail.

You may be called upon to consider the adoption of Resolutions dealing with this problem. In the immediate future, I shall deliver a special message to the Legislature on this subject; it cannot be adequately handled here. In the meantime, I am keeping in almost daily contact with the Governors of the other Southern States in the hope that whatever resolutions you may adopt will harmonize with those of our sister states. Unity must be preserved at all costs, and I urge the assistance and cooperation of all persons and groups to the end that we may present a united front in this all important cause.

In his message to the South Carolina legislature, delivered on last Thursday, Governor Timmerman said:

"I think it advisable that we give consideration to joining, if possible, our sister states at an appropriate time in a lawful and formal protest against the effort to destroy our form of government; but I would caution against premature action."

We have plenty of time, you will be kept fully informed of all developments, so I respectfully request that all action of this kind be with-held until you shall have heard my special message.

With the indulgence of those present, I should like now to address a word to the remainder of the Nation. I want to tell you that during the next four years the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a State of law and not of violence. I want to remind you that for over ninety years the white and the negro people of Mississippi have lived side by side in peace and harmony. I would like you, our friends outside Mississippi, to know that the great overwhelming majority of the white people of Mississippi are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of any murder, violence, or any other wrongdoing toward anyone. History shows that the first white man ever to be legally hanged in Mississippi was executed for the murder of a negro slave. I repeat that while we, the people of Mississippi, are unalterably determined as a matter of right and justice that the necessary rules of society shall be maintained, we do not any more approve of violence and lawlessness than you do.

Problem Acute Here

We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other State in the Union. It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation you would look upon it as we do.

Despite all the propaganda which has been fired at us, the country can be assured that the white people of Mississippi are not a race of negro killers. Official statistics for the State of Mississippi for 1954 show that in that year, the last for which we have figures available, eight white people were killed by negroes and only six negroes were killed by whites, while 182 negroes were killed by members of their own race. In other words, there were thirty times as many negroes killed by members of their own race as by members of the white race.

Now, for a word to those loyal negro citizens of Mississippi who love their State and who are unwilling to be made the victims of propaganda from professional agitators.

I must remind you that when handle dry wit a teaspoon.

I am just as confident of the correctness of this statement now as I was then. We must keep cool heads and calm judgment in the face of all the provocation which is being hurled upon us from almost every direction. The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment, and to render us incapable of defending ourselves. How devoutly it is to be hoped that a people who have had the strength, the courage, and the vision to surmount the terrifying trials of the past will not now allow themselves to fall victims to these tactics of today. The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous —so we have nothing to fear unless it be "fear itself".

Unspecific Ruling

To the few who have unjustifiably substituted fear for confidence, please let me remind them that even the United States Supreme Court did not undertake to say how or when its decision of May 17, 1954, could or would be enforced.

Let me remind them that in all the southern states, including South Carolina and Virginia, there is not a single negro child going to school with white children as the result of the compulsion of any court order. A few negro children are going to school with white children in the south, but only in those miserably few districts where local authorities volunatarily allowed it to be placed into effect — no court order was involved. Even in the very cases which were heard in the United States Supreme Court itself, no mixing in the public schools in those districts has yet been accomplished, nor is there any actual prospect of it.

Our pupil assignment law, which has been on the statute books since 1954, and which has not yet been challenged, is, in my opinion, within itself, a complete remedy at the present time We shall not be found without that resourcefulness necessary to any future remedies which may be required I know and you know that while there is no magic remedy for the Supreme Court decision there are multiplied means and methods, all perfectly legal, by which we can and will defeat integration of the races in our state

The time has come for us to invoke the great principle enunciated by Thomas Jefferson when he said:

"Never let us do wrong, because our opponents did so. Let us, rather, by doing right, show them what they ought to have done, and establish as a rule the dictates of reason and conscience, rather than of angry passions."

As for myself, I face this problem, like all other problems, in the assurance given us in Chapter 1, Verse 7 of II Timothy:

"For God has not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of sound mind."

No Need For Fear

We the people of Mississippi are of sound mind, there is no occasion for the excitement of fear, and we are confident of our power.

Since May 17, 1954, the plans, approach, and legal action maintained by our State Government have been completely successful. We have not begun to exhaust the resources at our command, so let us, with supreme confidence, take a leaf from the book of that great man, Elbert Hubbard, who said:

"Go as far as you can see, and when you get there you'll see farther."

As for myself, I face the future, not with fear but with confidence, not in panic, but in calmness born of the strength of our position and the weight of our power I hope the people without surrendering any part of their alertness, will join me in this feeling.

May God, in his inexhaustible wisdom and mercy, guide us as we move forward together toward a better day in our beloved Mississippi.

Sec. Politics
Chatt. Times
1/18/56

GOVERNOR STATES MISSISSIPPI FIRM

Says State Won't Integrate, Urges Rest of Nation Not to Judge Hastily

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17 (AP) —Gov. J. P. Coleman told his state and the nation today that Mississippi will keep segregation without violence and despite the federal government.

In all history ". . . there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another," he said in his inaugural address.

"With all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are not willing to have it done," the 42-year-old governor declared.

He urged the rest of the nation to consider Mississippi's position before passing judgment. ". . . we are entitled to the sympathetic understanding of our friends in the remainder of the country.

". . . The white people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers.

"We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the nation."

Negroes form 45 per cent of Mississippi's population.

The tall, husky governor succeeded Gov. Hugh White.

Coleman, one of the youngest governors in Mississippi history, reviewed some of his campaign planks and called for stricter regulation of public utilities; better law enforcement; aid to farmers, and fewer pardons and paroles.

He also asked support for repeal of the black market tax on illegal liquor; a constitutional amendment limiting special legislative sessions to 30 days; promotion of rural electrification, and a constitutional amendment guaranteeing homestead exemptions, now provided by statutes.

INDIVIDUAL JOURNAL GRINDING IN YOUR CAR

Miss. Chief Vows No Mix, No Row

See Times Letter

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17 (UP)—Gov. James Plemon Coleman promised today to give Mississippi four years of sound government and segregation without a "daily uproar of confusion and uncertainty."

The 42-year-old former farm boy from Choctaw County held a steady hand to a cold clear sky after his inauguration as Mississippi's 51st governor and said:

"I have not the slightest fear that four years hence when my successor stands on this same spot to assume his official oath, the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today."

Coleman said Mississippi is now prepared to maintain separation of the races on all levels "without keeping our state, its economy, its customs, and its practices in a daily uproar of confusion and uncertainty."

He pledged the "full weight" of the state government would be used to keep Mississippi a "state of law and not of violence."

At Courier
1/18/56

Politics, Southern

Clarion Ledger 1/16/56

gation

New Executive s Given Oath

He's One of State's Youngest Governors

By CHARLES M. HILLS

James Plemon Coleman, 42, self-educated farm boy, lawyer and immediate past attorney general, Tuesday at noon took the oath as the 51st governor of Mississippi.

Chief Justice Harvey McGehee, of the State Supreme Court, administered the oath before a joint session of the state legislature.

Approximately 1,200 colonels appointed to his staff by the new governor, attended the event.

At the request of Gov. Coleman himself, the outgoing Gov. Hugh L. White and Coleman's close personal friend and circuit judge over the new governor when he was a district attorney, Judge John F. Allen, Kosciusko, stood beside him as Coleman took the oath.

COLEMAN'S SPEECH ON PAGE 6

In relinquishing the office of governor, White presented Gov. Coleman to an audience of some 2,000 people assembled on the New Capitol grounds.

As the oath was taken by the incoming governor, the Mississippi National Guard fired a 21-gun salute heard to the outskirts of the city.

Prior to the inauguration, bands from Mississippi State College and the University of Mississippi gave concerts for the large audience. As the inauguration ceremonies neared, both bands struck up the grand old tune Dixie, as the audience stood and cheered.

Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, as presiding officer over the joint assembly of the legislature, introduced a number of distinguished guests, including Robert Ellington, Nashville, Tenn., commissioner of agriculture in that neighbor state, who was here representing Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee. Mrs. Ellington accompanied him.

(Continued on Page Three)

(Continued from Page One)

Another prominent guest was Earle Cocke, Atlanta, Ga., past national commander of The American Legion and now a vice president of Delta Airlines.

The elective state officials, who received the oath on Monday, sat in a body at the inaugural.

In the afternoon, Gov. and Mrs. Coleman held open house at the Mansion here, with hundreds of Mississippians passing through the more than a century-old edifice that has housed a majority of the governors of this state.

Speaker of the House of Representatives Walter Sillers and Mrs. Sillers were prominent in the list of honored guests for both the inaugural and the reception.

There was no parade on the downtown streets of Jackson and

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee. Mrs. Ellington accompanied him.

Another prominent guest was Earle Cocke, Atlanta, Ga., past national commander of The American Legion and now a vice president of Delta Airlines.

The elective state officials, who received the oath on Monday, sat in a body at the inaugural.

In the afternoon, Gov. and Mrs. Coleman held open house at the Mansion here, with hundreds of Mississippians passing through the more than a century-old edifice that has housed a majority of the governors of this state.

Speaker of the House of Representatives Walter Sillers and Mrs. Sillers were prominent in the list of honored guests for both the inaugural and the reception.

There was no parade on the downtown streets of Jackson, departure from the traditional exercise having been made at the express request of the new governor as a measure of economy.

Gov. Coleman's 45 minute speech was described by many legislators as a masterpiece. Some disagreed with parts, but they were apparently in the minority.

He spoke at some length on the segregation issue, declaring that "I am pledged to the maintenance of the separation of the races at all costs."

The new governor counseled "strength, courage and vision to surmount the terrifying trials" of attempts to desegregate in the state and said that the pupil assignment law now on Mississippi's statute books, is in itself "a complete remedy at the present time."

Coleman urged that no bills be introduced in haste on the segregation issue and stated that he will in the "immediate" future have a special message for the legislature on the subject of maintaining segregation will be delivered.

"We have plenty of time and you will be kept fully informed on all developments, so I respectfully request that all action of this kind be withheld until you have heard my special message," Coleman told the legislature.

"I say to this audience... that I have not the slightest fear that four years hence... the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will be in full force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today," he declared.

He repeated his campaign assertion that there will be no necessity for abolishing the public school system to prevent mixing of the races in classrooms.

Coleman called for repeal of the absentee voter laws except for a member of the armed forces, as a move to clean up elections.

He asked further guarantee of homestead exemptions, repeal of the black market tax, assistance to the aged, strict economy in government, promotion of rural electrification, labor management legislation and a constitutional amendment limiting special sessions of the legislature to 30 days.

A permanent program for financial aid to municipalites was also strongly advocated by the new governor.

Regulation of fly-by-night insurance companies and refusal of the citizenry to deal with mail order insurance concerns was asked by the governor.

Higher educational standards were asked in order that our youth might maintain the progress of this state.

Improvement of the economic standards of the farmers was suggested as a major need.

Regulation of the public utilities and placing all under control of the State Public Service Commission was asked of the legislature.

Only rare cases of executive clemency will be granted, the incoming governor promised. Honest law enforcement is high on his agenda, he said. A probation law was asked as an urgent need.

John Herbers Reports

Politics, Southern

New 'Segregation' Bill Sacri

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 21 (UP) —If Mississippi is going to put up a maximum defense against racial integration then her citizens must be willing to risk sacrificing certain personal freedoms they now enjoy.

That is the thought behind the criminal libel bill introduced in the House this week as one of the Legal Education Advisory Committee's segregation measures. That idea was discussed on the floor when the bill was being considered by the committee and apparently had unanimous approval of the membership.

The bill provides a fine of $1,000 and-or one year prison term for persons convicted of intentionally communicating "defamatory matter" to a third person. Defamatory matter is defined as "anything which tends to expose a person to hatred, contempt or ridicule, to degrade or disgrace him in society, or to injure him in his business or occupation."

Same Penalty

The same penalty applies to persons convicted of using insults or obscenities "calculated to lead to breach of the peace," or written communic

To defend himself charges a person mus he said or wrote is t communicated with g

So far, there has be comment outside the on the bill. It is just "segregation" m e a s pushed through legis

MISSISSIPPI— Sunday, cloudy with occasional rain and warmer. Gentle to moderate east and southeast winds. Light rains, possible snow in the north portions.

The Delta Dem

60th Year United Press (UP) Greenville, Mississippi

MISS. COUNCIL ON HUMAN REL.
1104 LYNCH ST.
JACKSON 3, MISS. 8-16-56

acrifices Personal Freedoms

f the peace," by any oral en communicaions.
fend himself against the a person must prove what or wrote is true and was icated with good motives.
, there has been very little t outside the State House ill. It is just one of many ation" measures being through legislative channels.

The bill was drafted after state officials were swamped with obscene telephone calls from persons objecting to the state's stand for segregation and after a number of insulting circulars on the same subject were distributed in the state. Mississippi apparently had no law to convict persons guilty of such practices, and this bill was intended to fill the gap.

Poses Question

Gov. J. P. Coleman was asked this week if the measure couldn't also be used against persons or publications criticizing the government in "fair comment." Coleman said he didn't think the bill ever "would" be used in that way.

Some commitee members had said that was a chance that would have to be taken to further assure separation of the races.

As a "segregation bill" it was doubtful that it would run into serious opposition. Legislators are not apt to risk being branded as against segregation, whatever the merits of a particular piece of legislation.

emocrat-Times

SUNDAY EDITION

Sunday, January 22, 1956 Sherman Marches Ag..... Price 10c No. 123

So: Peter 11/23/56
Chat. Times

EASTLAND DRAWS MORE ATTENTION

Mississippian Emerging as Controversial Senator for Rights Stand

WASHINGTON — (NANA)— U.S. Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss) is fast emerging as one of the nation's most controversial politicians.

The Mississippian currently is under heavy fire from Negro organizations and civil liberties groups for his outspoken advocacy of the absolute segregation of races.

Many leading newspapers are severely critical of Sen. Eastland's conduct of the investigation of alleged Communist infiltration of newspapers, magazines, TV and radio and other purveyors of news, by the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, which he heads.

He incurred the wrath of AFL-CIO leaders by urging Southerners to fight all attempts by the new "one big union" to organize workers below the Mason-Dixon line.

Some accuse Eastland of using the Internal Security subcommittee as a "front" for the "revival of McCarthyism."

In answer to his foes, Eastland pledges himself to carry out the following quote from his speech to the founding convention of the Federation for Constitutional Government (FCG) in Memphis Dec. 28:

". . . to fight the court (supreme), to fight the CIO, to fight the NAACP, and to fight all the conscienceless pressure groups who are attempting our destruction."

To Push Defiance

The newly formed FCG's avowed purpose is to initiate and push defiance of the U.S. Supreme Court's ban on racial segregation in public schools.

It is "strictly a coordinating, information development organization," according to FCG chairman John U. Barr, a New Orleans industrialist.

Barr also says that the FCG will "try to influence . . . and help" such groups as the white citizens' councils, claiming 65,000 members all over the South; the States Rights Council of Georgia, and the Committee for Individual Rights of Virginia. All are vigorously fighting the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

Eastland says that the FCG "will carry on its banner the slogan of free enterprise, and we will fight those organizations who attempt with much success to socialize industry and the great medical profession of this country. This will give us recruits and add to our support in the North and the West."

Overtures Made

It is known that FCG leaders already have made overtures to enlist the support of such northern ultra-right-wing outfits as Mervin K. Hart's Economic Council and Edward A. Rumpley's Committee for Constitutional Government.

Barr denies that the FCG will engage in politics. But Eastland, one of the driving forces in its formation, says the FCG "will at-ator, Eastland has sponsored no important legislation. He has, however, been a loquacious opponent of prolabor laws and public health legislation. He has participated in several Senate filibusters against a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission and other civil rights legislation. In addition to his chairmanship of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, he now is a member of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee.

A majority of the Washington press corps rate the Mississippi Democrat quite low among Senate intellects. The newsmen feel that Eastland allows the Internal Security subcommittee counsel, Sourwine, to dictate subcommittee policy, strategy and tactics.

Several reporters who have covered Eastland's activities for years also believe that the senator and Sourwine maintain close liaison with Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and many of the Wisconsin Republican's more rabid supporters.

will try to influence . . . and help" such groups as the white citizens' councils, claiming 65,000 members all over the South; the States Rights Council of Georgia, and the Committee for Individual Rights of Virginia. All are vigorously fighting the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

Eastland says that the FCG "will carry on its banner the slogan of free enterprise, and we will fight those organizations who attempt with much success to socialize industry and the great medical profession of this country. This will give us recruits and add to our support in the North and the West."

Overtures Made

It is known that FCG leaders already have made overtures to enlist the support of such northern ultra-right-wing outfits as Mervin K. Hart's Economic Council and Edward A. Rumpley's Committee for Constitutional Government.

Barr denies that the FCG will engage in politics. But Eastland, one of the driving forces in its formation, says the FCG "will attempt to pledge candidates in advance as they (anti-segregationists) attempt to pledge them."

The senator's answer to his press critics is far less forthright. They charge that the Internal Security subcommittee's inquiry into alleged penetration by Reds of news media, as it is being handled by the Mississippi Democrat and the subcommittee's chief counsel, Julien G. Sourwine of Nevada, is intended to harass and embarrass newspapers that have editorially opposed all that Eastland and his supporters advocate—in particular, the widely respected and influential New York Times.

In substantiation of their accusation, The Times and other papers pointed out that 14 of the 18 witnesses called before the Eastland subcommittee last week were past or present Times employes.

At the close of the three-day hearings, Sens. Eastland and William E. Jenner (R-Ind), former chairman of the subcommittee, replied in part:

"At all times when our pursuit of the trail of Communist activity has taken us into this field (press), the subcommittee has been fully cognizant of its duty to avoid any step which could fairly be interpreted as an effort to exercise congressional pressure on the American press. At the same time we have been seriously aware of our responsibility not to flinch from uncovering the activities of subversive elements just because those efforts involved attempted penetration of media for the dissemination of information and the formation of opinion.

" . . . The committee proposes to explore with thoroughness and conscience leads which have been furnished in these hearings."

How He Looks

At 51 years of age, Eastland is burly, round-faced and has lost enough of his brown hair to appear high-domed. He speaks in a querulous drawl and seems to be constantly champing a large unlit cigar. He is a careless dresser.

His home is in Doddsville, Scott County, Mississippi, where along with politicking and "practicin' a mite of law," he also operates a large cotton plantation. Scott County is in central Mississippi, and its population is predominantly Negro. But Negroes do not vote in Scott County, says the senator.

Eastland was appointed to the Senate in 1943 to succeed the late Pat Harrison. He was elected in 1944 and has been re-elected twice, his current term expiring in 1961. He served in the Mississippi House of Representatives from 1928 to 1932.

In his 12 years as a U.S. sen-delayed in several Senate filibusters against a federal Fair Employment Practices Commission and other civil rights legislation. In addition to his chairmanship of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, he now is a member of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee.

A majority of the Washington press corps rate the Mississippi Democrat quite low among Senate intellects. The newsmen feel that Eastland allows the Internal Security subcommittee counsel, Sourwine, to dictate subcommittee policy, strategy and tactics.

Several reporters who have covered Eastland's activities for years also believe that the senator and Sourwine maintain close liaison with Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and many of the Wisconsin Republican's more rabid supporters.

At Constr 1/20/5 Southern Politics

Mississippi Bill To Block U.S. Vote Probe Advances

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 19 (AP)—Mississippi's House judiciary committee today approved three segregation bills — one especially aimed at federal officials who might want to investigate Mississippi voting.

The bills—placed on the House calendar for possible vote next week—would:

(1) Make it a felony to libel, slander or defame "any state, county, city, community, their inhabitants, their institutions or their government."

(2) Forbid anyone from encouraging a person to file a lawsuit. It refers to all lawsuits but is especially directed against integration suits.

(3) Make unlawful for any person to deprive citizens of Mississippi of rights guaranteed by the state constitution; set the penalty at a maximum of $3,000 fine and five years in prison; permit the injured person to sue for damages, and permit state or county official to sue for damages against any person who tries to prevent an officer from taking office, carrying out his duty or trying to force an officer to leave his office.

Politics, Southern
Clarion Ledger 1/26/56

House Adopts Bill To Outlaw NAACP Activity In State

BY CHARLES M. HILLS

The lower house of the Mississippi legislature Wednesday afternoon adopted by a vote of 121 to 2 an act making it unlawful for any person representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to spread its propaganda in this state.

Rep. Karl Weisenburg, Pascagoula, co-author of the act, steered it to overwhelming adoption by the House after an impassioned speech decrying the inroads of Communism in the nation and a denunciation of the NAACP as a subversive force.

The act carries a fine of $1,000 or six months in jail if violated.

Weisenburg called to the attention of the lawmakers that he and Daniel D. Guice, both coast county representatives, authored the bill, thus citing that while Pascagoula has 5 whites to one Negro, that section is just as vigorously opposed to de-segregation as any other part of the state with high Negro populations.

He told the House membership that—

"Our country is now engaged in a cold war with the forces of communism. This legislature has commended our Senior Senator for his courageous fight against the subversives in our midst who are trying to destroy our democracy.

"Equally as dangerous as the disciples of communism are individuals and organizations in this country who specialize in promoting discord between geographical areas of our country and between the races.

"The worst of this lot is the NAACP, an organization supposed to be for the advancement of the colored race. This organization has done more to promote the cause of communism in this country than all of the agents of Moscow combined.

NAACP Bill . .

(Continued From Page One)

"It has exploited unfortunate human tragedies for its own selfish ends, and has been guilty of every type of factual distortion against Mississippi and its people.

"To preserve democracy our federal government has enacted legislation against communist infiltration. On a state level, the legislature should enact like legislation to curb the unlawful activities in this state."

The only two members voting against passage of the bill were Reps. Barron Drewry, of Alcorn and Milton Grisham, of Prentiss, both far North Mississippi counties. John B. French, Panola, announced that he was present but not voting.

Terms of the bill, short and to the point, are as follows:

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons within the territorial limits of the State of Mississippi or the jurisdiction thereof to incite a riot, or breach of the peace, or public disturbance, or disorderly assembly, by the State of Missisippi, and nonconformance with the established traditions, customs, and usages of the State

"To preserve democracy our federal government has enacted legislation against communist infiltration. On a state level, the legislature should enact like legislation to curb the unlawful activities in this state."

The only two members voting against passage of the bill were Reps. Barron Drewry, of Alcorn and Milton Grisham, of Prentiss, both far North Mississippi counties. John B. French, Panola, announced that he was present but not voting.

Terms of the bill, short and to the point, are as follows:

SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons within the territorial limits of the State of Mississippi or the jurisdiction thereof to incite a riot, or breach of the peace, or public disturbance, or disorderly assembly, by the State of Missisippi, and nonconformance with the established traditions, customs, and usages of the State of Mississippi.

SECTION 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of misdeameanor and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) or by imprisonment not to exceed six (6) months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SECTION 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its pasage.

The lower house failed to suspend the rules to consider re-enactment of the 14 percent surtax or tax on taxes, which Rep. Hilton Waits said will yield the state $7,-133,560 biennially, and set the bill for special order Thursday when the House meets at 2.

In other actions of the day, the lower chamber by topheavy votes, often unanimous, adopted several non-controversial items, such as prescribing tax of $25 for operating pool halls outside of municipalities; and a provision under which the secretary of the budget commission will no longer countersign warrants of Veterans Farm and Home Loan revolving fund.

Another act permits institutions to repay emergency repair expenditures from bond issues if expenditures have been made for the purpose the issue was granted.

An increase to $300 of the salary of the Harrison county court reporter was also allowed.

Still other acts, adopted in rapid order included provisions as follows:

Provide punishment for false impersonation of officers or employees of state or any subdivision.

Provide a limitation where due date of an indebtedness does not appear of record.

Make certain provisions regarding counsel appointed for defense in capital cases.

Provide for devotion of title to property under certain conditions.

Amend private sale law to eliminate necessity of report where terms are made certain by decree.

Make unlawful advocating disobedience of state laws.

Change time of holding chancery court in seventh district.

1-27-56

Politics, So.

Clarion Ledger 1/27/56

SECTION ONE

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

POLITICS AS USUAL

Few Mississipians are surprised that Tennessee's Governor Frank Clement has bluntly refused to act toward blocking racial integration in public schools of his state.

Governor Clement has just told a pro-segregation group that "I cannot please you people because I don't think the course of action you favor is in the best interest of Tennessee."

FRANK IS RUNNING

What Governor Clement really meant was that pro - segregation action is not in the best political interest of Governor Clement. In some way, Frank has gotten the idea he is presidential timber, ridiculous as it may seem.

Since he hungers for the Democratic nomination, Governor Clement can't afford to offend arrogant minority pressure groups. Thus Tennessee is doing even less to maintain segregation than Arkansas — if such a degree of inaction can be imagined. Both states are risking racial mongrelization.

ADLAI TO BLAST US?

It has become a favorite pasttime to lambast and ridicule "Eisencrats," but those who do this had better go slow. Their jeers and taunts may boomerang. Drew Pearson, Washington correspondent, has just made this startling prediction:

"Adlai Stevenson, risking a break with the South, will campaign against the state of Mississippi. He'll attack Mississippi's abuse of human rights, such as the kidnap-murder of Emmett Till."

STRANGE BEDFELLOWS

Most Mississippians who fell for Ike's baloney freely admit their tragic mistake, yet it is doubtful that the racial situation would be any better under Adlai — with Harry calling the signals. It is also well to remember that six of the nine Supreme Court judges outlawing school segregation are Democrats, appointed by Roosevelt and Truman because of radical views.

Having gone to bed with Eisenhower et al may have been a degrading experience but hardly worse than bedding down with such loyal Democrats as Rep. Edith Green of Oregon, Negro Congressmen Adam Clayton Powell and Charlie Diggs, Eleanor Roosevelt, Alger Hiss, Hubert Humphrey, Senator Lehman, John L. Lewis and CIO-AFL labor czars. Yea verily, politics doth maketh strange bedfellows — whether you vote Democrat or Republican.

★ ★ ★ ★

Legislators Push Segregation Bills In Rare Session

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON (UP) —Representatives, apparently bent on pushing a package of segregation bills through as quickly as possible, scheduled a rare Friday session to take up a measure to keep the color line intact in intrastate transportation.

The House was to consider a bill requiring segregated waiting rooms, facilities and accomodations for Negro and white passengers traveling on buses and trains within the state, a move to block the Interstate Commerce Commission's order to abolish travel segregation.

Two other segregation measures, repeal of the state's compulsory school attendance law and requiring teachers and school administrators to list the organizations to which they belong to or contribute funds, gained easy approval in the lower house Thursday.

The Senate began the usual long weekend recess Thursday but the House agreed to a morning meeting today.

Surtax Extension

House approval was given to a two-year extension of the 14 per cent surtax, a levy on a series of existing taxes including income, privilege and oil and gas severances. The vote was 112-10.

Gov. J. P. Coleman called the levy, producer of about 7 million dollars every two years, a "necessity" to the financing of the school equalization program.

Attempts to add $240,000 more in revenue by eliminating exemptions to oil producers on income tax paid were beaten down.

The bill to repeal the compulsory school attendance bill passed 107-5 after proponents said the state would be in an embarrassing position if the federal government should succeed in forcing racial integration in state schools.

Want Good Law

"We don't want a law that will require them to go to a school we might not want them to go to," said Rep. Russell Fox, Caliborne County. Rep. Joe Wroten, Washington, opposed the bill, arguing it told children "who need to be educated" that they can skip school.

See—Legislators Push—Page 3

Legislators Push - -

(Continued from Page 1)

Rep. Ney Gore, commenting on the bill to require teachers to list their affiliations, said it would give school boards the opportunity to review the information and to say "what teachers will be hired." It passed unanimously.

Other legislative news:

Budget: Coleman will address a joint assembly Monday afternoon, urging that state spending during the next bienium reraim within the proposed 183 million dollar budget. He told his Thursday news conference he did not intend to be the "first governor in 24 years to preside over an unbalanced budget."

Homestead exemption: Senate action was completed on the proposal to forever guarantee the tax exemption plan by making it part of the constitution and it was sent to the House.

Elections: A bill designed to trim the lapse between primaries in state elections to two weeks, compared to the present three, was snt to the Senate Elections Committee for review.

At Constitution 1/31/61

4 Anti-Mix Bills Win Mississippi House; Interference With Rights Is Forbidden

Politics

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 30 (AP)—The Mississippi House of Representatives today passed four more bills aimed at preventing integration.

There was little debate and almost no opposition.

Representatives voted more than 100-1 in favor of the four bills. The bills and their votes were:

1. Forbid persons to interfere with Mississippians' rights under color of authority of any other state or the federal government (124-0).

2. Prohibit stirring up integration lawsuits (122-1).

3. Permit persons to choose customers or clients (124-0).

4. Prohibit disturbances in any public place (119-0).

All four bills now go to the Senate where little opposition is expected.

Most discussions on the four bills came on technical points, that is, whether the wording was strong enough or exactly proper. No one questioned the intent of the bills.

Persons, including FBI agents, who interfere with Mississippians' rights would be subject to a maximum penalty of $3,000 fine and five years in prison.

Attorneys convicted of stirring up integration lawsuits would be barred from practice in Mississippi.

Persons who create disturbances in public places or who refuse to leave after the proprietor so requests would be subject to a maximum penalty of $500 fine and six months in jail.

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., WEDNESDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 8, 1956

Coleman Interview

State Needs Man On Supreme Court

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Representation on the U. S. Supreme Court bench is a real need for Mississippi and the South at this time, and, if a Democratic administration takes over, direct attempts will be made toward this end, Gov. J. P. Coleman said Tuesday.

The chief executive also asserted that insofar as he is concerned, the most acceptable candidate for his state is Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois.

He chided his home state for continually standing up as "aginners" saying that "we have been against everything for so long that it has brought down upon us many of the penalties and troubles that we have and now continue to face."

Coleman flouted talk of a third party, stating that "we have been in a state of uproar since 1948, and we need now to calmly approach our dealings with the next national administration.

On the home front, he expressed great satisfaction with what he termed the quiet and normal status of Mississippi ever since the present legislature convened.

And, on the subject of segregation, he declared that integration will never be put upon Mississippi "except by brute force," and, that "we are now in better shape to defend against de - segregation than ever before.

The Mississippi chief executive fair-treatment of the colored people of this state and elsewhere in the South is "an absolute necessity."

Insofar as attitudes outside this state and the South are concerned, Coleman believes that "the only change is to the good."

He said that suits to enter Mississippi schools are also less likely to be instituted now than at any time in the past, showing that the Negroes of this state are becoming aware that outside influences are not all bent on their welfare, but rather to raise up racial distrust, which they do not want.

Coleman said that if a Democrat is elected president, he has in mind some very good recommendations for the high tribunal's future personnel.

"You would have to resign from the Senate wouldn't you?" a newsman twitted.

"Well, I can't say about that," Coleman laughed.

He said that Stevenson in his opinion is, despite his statement of Monday on de - segregation, "shows an attitude toward the South far friendlier than any other prospective candidate."

Coleman observed in and aside that no candidate can avoid a civil rights plank and hope to get elected president of the United States now, whether he intends to enforce the plank or not.

"I don't think a third party could accomplish much," he said. "We had better stop being against everything and get in the national picture. We have been showing deterioration in our relations with the government since we fought Wilson back in the 'teens. We fought Roosevelt, we organized a third party, we fought Truman, in fact, we have a continuous record as aginners that isn't doing us any good," he cited to newsmen.

But, Coleman thinks the U. S. Supreme Court "is more important to us than the President. We can't get our case heard or settled. We need a man on the U. S. Supreme Court, something we haven't had since 1880."

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Wednesday, February 8, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

The 'Agin'er' State

So Politics

GOVERNOR J. P. Coleman hit a good critical note in his press conference Tuesday when he said Mississippi has been an "agin'er" too long.

Referring to politics, the Governor said that the state should stay in the Democratic party mold rather than branch out into a third party, which would "put us in the same unhappy position we now are in.

"Mississippi has been an "agin'er" for so long that it has brought on many of these difficulties facing us," he said. "Mississipi has been against everything and everybody without accomplishing anything. We can never get our case heard by cussing everybody."

In the past few years, he said, the state "always has been in an uproar," principally over politics and segregation.

He said he was attempting in his administration to return some sense or normalcy to the state.

Governor Coleman's well-aimed remarks were negative in fact but they should be positive in effect. To the hope that he can help bring Mississippi around to accentuate the plus instead of the minus, we add a fervent "amen."

CURBS BACKED IN MISSISSIPPI

2/10/56 Chatt Times

House Passes Five Bills to Keep Segregation—3 Sent to Governor

Pa

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 9 (AP)—The first five of a block of House bills to keep segregation in Mississippi moved through the state Senate today on a resounding majority vote.

Two bills will return to the House for agreement on minor changes and the other three will go to Gov. J. P. Coleman for his promised signature.

The bills were introduced as means of keeping the Negro out of white society, but the word "segregation" never was mentioned.

Instead, Judiciary Committee Chairman Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg said of each measure: "You know what this bill does."

No Questions on Debate

The senators apparently did. No questions were posed; no debate was entertained, and there was little discussion.

The five bills would:

1. Require prospective teachers to list organizations to which they belonged for the preceding five years.

2. Confer the right of choice of customers or clients.

3. Prohibit disturbance of the peace in a public place.

4. Prohibit interference with Mississippi law under color or federal authority.

5. Prohibit stirring up integration lawsuits.

The House session on two tax-raising bills was in marked contrast to the almost serene Senate session.

See Page Twelve, Column One

Rep. Hilton Waits of Washington County, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, stubbornly fought an unruly House for passage of two bills increasing insurance premium taxes to raise a little more than one million dollars every two years.

Most of the argument came on a bill covering a broad field but aimed directly at levying a tax on Blue Cross hospitalization insurance premiums.

The other bill covered other types of insurance plans.

But Blue Cross is a domestic company and representatives trooped to the microphone to defend the company.

Argument centered around payment of the tax. All representatives said the consumers would pay the bulk of the tax raise.

But Rep. Joel Blass of Stone County said: "If we tax food, we should tax insurance. We must be willing to pay the price" of government in Mississippi.

Rep. Edgar Stephens of Union County told the House, "No matter what the source of the money, we must have more to run the state."

The state budget commission has recommended a budget of 183 million dollars for the next two years.

In 70 per cent of all fatal automobile accidents, one or both drivers violated one or more safety laws.

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN .....Editor 1921-1948
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR..... Manager
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities, which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

He Offers South New Hope

Mississippians along with other Southerners are agreeably surprised and faintly encouraged by Adlai Stevenson's moderate attitude toward the racial problem. His recent statements on this subject may not be all the South could ask but nevertheless Mr. Stevenson's attitude offers some degree of promise.

It is a pleasant contrast from the markedly vindicative attitude manifested by former President Truman, who keeps insisting that the Democratic party does not need the South to win the 1956 election. Mr. Stevenson, on the other hand, apparently does not share this conclusion. He continues to extend the olive branch and make concilatory gestures, despite highly vocal protests from leftwing elements of the party. He now says he would not cut off federal funds from segregated schools nor use federal troops to enforce integration.

Mr. Stevenson's recent address in Los Angeles has been especially encouraging to Southerners. Refusing to stoop to demagogic tactics so popular nowadays, he declared that "racial progress depends on the spirit of men, not troops or bayonets." In response to direct questions by California Negro leaders, as to whether he would employ federal might to force integration, Mr. Stevenson opined that such a violent course would be a "tragic mistake."

"It would be a revival of Civil War," he declared, indicating a keen knowledge of Southern determination to resist forced race mixing. "We must go about these things gradually. Troops and bayonets will not change things for the better. The spirit of men will do it. I have every hope that the North and South can live together. That's the kind of America I believe in. I'll do everything possible to bring about unity but I don't believe in a Balkanized America."

Granting that other attitudes expressed by the former Illinois governor are not entirely to the South's liking—notably his opposition to the Right to Work laws—he has gone much further than any prospective presidential candidate toward making friends with Southern whites. This seems especially significant at a time when other political aspirants risk offending the South with painfully obvious efforts to curry favor with NAACP and kindred pressure groups.

The November election is a long way off. Much can and probably will happen between now and the presidential primary. Yet it is becoming increasingly clear to many Southerners and conservatives of other sections that Mr. Stevenson has more than casual knowledge and understanding of the Southern viewpoint. For this reason he will be a good man to observe closely between now and the National Democratic Convention this summer.

Mississippi Solon Tells Many New Money Sources

So. Politics

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 11—Mississippi's search for added revenue for the ever-expanding governmental services is anything but a "needle in the haystack" venture.

That was revealed to the current legislative session this week by Rep. Hilton Waits of Washington County, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee which is responsible for providing tax funds to meet authorized expenditures.

Chairman Waits informed the legislators that exemptions allowed under the state's three per cent sales tax amount to the staggering figure of $13,280,000 for a two-year period, and that concessions made to preferred groups total $4,640,000.

Totaled, the exemptions and concessions during the two-year period for which each Legislature must provide funds amount to $17,920,000.

All except $4,390,000 of the sales tax exemptions of $13,280,000 goes to the farmer groups. Of the $4,640,000 biennial concessions, three million dollars are for the automobile dealers who pay a two per cent sales tax instead of the full three per cent.

Chairman Waits threw out the figures in view of a developing deficit in the "tightly" balanced budget of 183 million dollars for the biennium commencing July 1. He wanted to show the members that there are legitimate sources to which they can turn if they have the "intentional fortitude" to apply the tax to all citizens equally.

MISSISSIPPI

Not Much Chance

However, there is about as much chance of the farmer exemptions being removed as there is for the Legislature to legalize liquor—even on a local option basis in the 16 counties which voted "wet" in a 1952 referendum.

Indications are that the legislators will be given the opportunity to turn down legalization in the "wet" counties, as a bill has been drafted for presentation to the current biennial assembly. The revenue from that source would more than wipe out a deficit that is rapidly developing in the recommended 183 million dollars budget.

Actually, the budget is out of line 10 million dollars insofar as revenues equalling anticipated revenues. That arises out of the fact that 10 million dollars of the "tightly" balanced budget represents a surplus to be on hand June 30 at close of the current two-year period of operation.

What will happen when the legislators return for the 1958 biennial assembly is that there will be 10 million dollars less to figure on in the new period and an amount that will have to be raised through some taxing scheme.

What has happened since the Legislature convened on Jan. 3 is that three items in the budget for $5,300,000 may not develop.

Pegging Proposed

Gov. Coleman recommended that general fund disbursements for the state-aid rural road program be "pegged" at 10 million dollars in the new biennium, with the other $1,600,000 that would have gone to it being retained in the treasury for other governmental functions. However, the politically potent County Supervisors Assn. has influenced the Legislature against the "pegging."

Also, and despite that the governor's recommended budget carried $1,700,000 from the black market liquor tax, he has now demanded that the "cancer on the state's integrity" be repealed. The tax was levied in 1944 in the face of Mississippi's statewide prohibition statute.

The other likely two-million-dollar loss is threatened in a House bill which prohibits the possession "of beer in any quantity whatsoever" in the 57 dry counties. Gov. Coleman had recommended that personal possession be limited to two cases per person, but when the bill hit the floor, members from the "wet" counties joined with those from the arid areas and eliminated all possession.

Officials estimate that two million dollars of the eight million dollars derived every two years from beer comes from sales made in the dry counties.

Some Exemptions

Some of the sales tax exemptions benefiting farmers listed by Chairman Waits on a two-year period include:

Fertilizer, $2,000,000; bagging and ties, $480,000; planting seed for agricultural purposes, $1,050,000; insecticides, $260,000; boxes, crates and syrup cans, $100,000; poultry, chickens and eggs by producers, $240,000.

Livestock and poultry feed, $4,000,000; sales to Rural Electrification Authority co-ops, $340,000; sales by REA co-ops, $410,000; sales by municipal light plants, $350,000; sales by municipal water plants, $270,000.

Others in the sales tax exemption "family" include:

Machinery and machine parts to manufacturers, $2,500,000; coffins, caskets and burial materials, $280,000; fuel and materials used or consumed by railroads in interstate commerce, $750,000; charges for transporting sand, gravel, fertilizer and cement, $40,000, and fuel used in trucks and pipeline booster stations, $200,000.

Those favored by concessions in the form of lower sales taxes include, other than automobile-truck dealers:

Sales of industrial gas, electricity and coal to manufacturers, 1 per cent, or $880,000 less than if the 3 per cent applied; farm tractors to farmers, 1 per cent, or $600,000 saved, and sales of pasteurized milk by the pasteurizer, 1 per cent, $80,000.

Atl Const 2/12/56

Const 2/18/56

Mississippi Chief Vows to Close School Rather Than Integrate

Bills Signed to Bolster State's Position on Keeping Segregation

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 25—Gov. J. P. Coleman's strongest statement on preserving segregation was made this week in the face of announced plans of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to file integration suits in Mississippi.

"Mississippi will close any white public school or college forced by the courts to accept a Negro student," the governor said. "The people of Mississippi simply will not support those institutions on an integrated basis."

"So, if the courts should open even one school to Negroes, it's as inevitable as the sun rises in the morning that it will be closed," he said. "To allow integration would be to destroy schools."

Authority for abolition of public education statewide, or by school districts, has already been vested in the Legislature by the people in constitutional amendment they ratified last year. No measures to implement the constitutional authority has thus far been adopted, but would if segregation is threatened.

Gov. Coleman said the sooner Mississippi educates its Negro citizens "the better off we will be because they are being roused by professional agitators."

Segregation Bills

Meanwhile, the governor has signed into law five bills passed at the current legislative session to strengthen the state's position in maintaining segregation by legal means. They are in addition to a 1954 pupil-assignment law based on morals, health and community welfare without any reference to race.

Gov. Coleman feels that the assignment law is Mississippi's best challenge against integration. He was bolstered in that position by the upholding in North Carolina of a similar statute.

The governor was not discouraged by the recent New Orleans federal court action in ruling unconstitutional the assignment law of Louisiana. He said it differs from the Mississippi statute in that it mentions race.

A "key" bill in the assignment course calling for repeal of Mississippi's common-law marriage statute is still to complete the legislative rounds. It has been approved by the House, but is pending in the Senate.

Sponsors of the common-law marriage banning feel it will bolster an assignment based on "morals," since children born under such circumstances are classed as illegitimates.

The current bills approved by the governor deal with preserving segregation in educational institutions, as well as all over levels.

MISSISSIPPI

One prohibits the "fomenting and agitating" of lawsuits, designated at those which would force integration and also makes it unlawful to solicit, donate or accept funds for the purpose of "filing or prosecuting" lawsuits. The measure is aimed at fund-raising campaigns in Mississippi by Negro leaders for prosecuting integration suits.

Prior Memberships

Another bill, designed to determine the memberships held by all public educators, requires them to file affidavits showing the organizations to which they have paid dues or donated to in the past five years. Negro leaders said in a public statement that bill would cause "unrest" among Negro teachers, as many had joined organizations in the past prior to recent controversies placing them in the lime-light in the segregation-integration issue.

The measure applies to all educators in public institutions and does not single out Negroes. It applies equally to college professors.

Three other new laws deal with segregation in other fields.

One requires railroads and bus lines to maintain separate waiting rooms for whites and Negroes traveling intrastate, another permits any public business, including parks and swimming pools, to choose those it will serve and makes those ordered to vacate trespassers and subject to arrest as such.

The third bill tightens the penalties for disturbing the peace in any public place.

One of the strongest of the segregation bills was vetoed by Gov. Coleman. It would have subjected FBI agents to arrest for "threatening or intimidating" any citizens in the "free exercise or enjoyment of any right, privilege or immunity secured to him by the constitution and laws of Mississippi."

Gov. Coleman had proposed the statute last year after FBI agents entered Mississippi and questioned election officials and county officials in the conduct of last summer's democratic primary election.

However, the governor changed his mind "because of a material change in the conditions which then existed and which promoted the recommendation."

The changes included refusal of the United States Department of Justice to take jurisdiction in the Till murder case because no federal question was found, and Director J. Edgar Hoover's denial of charges against the state by Dr. T. R. M. Howard, Negro leader of Mound Bayou.

Gov. Coleman also pointed out in his veto message that Mississippi has nothing to "hide or fear."

Education: Mississippi (1956)

2.22.56

A VERY PROPER VETO

Gov. Coleman showed good judgment in vetoing the law he had previously recommended seeking to prevent Federal agents from making investigations of alleged civil rights violations in this state.

Recent events have shown conclusively that the Federal government does not intend to listen to Dr. T. R. M. Howard, Mamie Bradley, or other radical agitators who demand a "civil rights" investigation every time a Negro gets killed, no matter what the circumstances surrounding the killing may be. J. Edgar Hoover is keeping his head squarely between his shoulders and he doesn't seem to mind the insolent and insulting remarks made about him by racial agitators.

The bill may have seemed a good idea at the moment but its authors, among them being Speaker Walter Sillers, wisely concluded that it embodied too much zeal and they cordially approve the Governor's veto.

"It may be safely said that the FBI and its agents still enjoy admiration, co-operation and respect of all law-abiding citizens," says Gov. Coleman.

Immediately following the "Black Monday" decision of the Supreme Court the NAACP leaders were seized with the foolish idea that they could make peremptory demands on the Department of Justice and have its agents harass Southern states with investigations whenever a crime involving a Negro was committed. Now they are upbraiding and bitterly denouncing Attorney-General Brownell and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover for not responding immediately to their demands.

Jackson Daily
(2/22/56)

Southern Politics
Ed. mess

MISS. COUNCIL ON HUMAN REL.
1107 LYNCH ST.
JACKSON 3, MISS. 8-16-56

Politics Hit Mississippi Colleges 20

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 25 (UP) —More than 20 years ago Mississippi's state-supported colleges were rocked by politics and removed from the accredited list.

Today, they are in a different kind of turmoil. This time official Mississippi's determination to preserve racial segregation is the agitator.

In the early 1930s Gov. Theodore G. Bilbo was in control of the State College Board. He managed to remove the incumbent college heads and put in his own men. Faculty appointments also were handled on a patronage basis.

The academic world holding that a college should not be a political machine, had the institutions discredited.

Board Reorganized

After Mike Conner became governor in 1932, the Legislature reorganized the board without the governor as a member. He appointed members, but to 12-year terms, and no one governor can control the 13-member board.

Since Bilbo days, the board has won certain acclaim for its administration of the institutions of higher learning.

After the racial issue was whipped up by the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision, however, the board adopted an order to "screen" persons who speak at the institutions.

Apparently the screening was left largely in the hands of the pres dire acts

clos
Be
tude mor
a n spea
Th
ized this on prog

MISSISSIPPI — Sunday partly cloudy and mild, fresh to locally strong southerly winds on the coast becoming westerly Saturday night.

ARKANSAS — Cool Sunday, lowest tonight 24 to 32 north and 30 to 38 in south.

The Delta Dem

60th Year United Press (UP) Associated Press (AP) Greenville, Missis

UMAN REL.

-16-56

Politics

ges 20 Year Ago; Now Turmoil Anew governor can er board.

the board has for its admintutions of high-al issue was upreme Court's ision, however, an order to who speak at screening was hands of the presidents, who are responsible directly to the board, which transacts all of its business behind closed doors.

Because of this "official attitude" two professors have resigned more have talked of quitting and a number of scheduled campus speakers have withdrawn.

The issue at point was crystalized at Mississippi State College this week when ministers scheduled on the Religious Emphasis Week program were told they would not be welcome if they discussed segregation.

Freedom of Speech

Four of them withdrew, including the Rev. Duncan Gray Jr., a Mississippian and son of an Episcopal bishop. He had told an off-campus religious group he believed segregation to be un-Christian.

This and other developments have made it clear to all concerned that the racial issue is not to be discussed freely, if at all, in state-supported colleges.

Gov. J. P. Coleman supports the official attitude that this, despite a loud dissent, is no slap at freedom of speech or academic freedom.

"Freedom of speech does not give one the right to holler fire in a crowded theater," he says.

Some educators, however, are holding the view that a ban of free discussion on any subject in colleges is something akin to having unqualified teachers.

Democrat-Times

SUNDAY EDITION

reenville, Mississippi Sunday, February 26, 1956 Price 10c No. 152

Bills Seek to Ban Racial Agitation

Mississippi Legislative Measures Have Effect of Curbing N.A.A.C.P., Keeping Status Quo

CORINTH, MISS., Feb. 7.—Mississippi's house of representatives has passed a bill that makes "advocating, urging or encouraging disobedience to any law of Mississippi, or nonconformance with the traditions, customs and usages of the state of Mississippi," a misdemeanor punishable by a $1,000 fine and six months in jail. The bill was authored by Karl Weisenburg, New York-born legislator from the gulf coast town of Pascagoula. Other adopted bills make it criminal to encourage anyone to file a suit about schools, to threaten to take away any privilege secured by the state constitution, or to require any business to serve all applicants. In effect, these bills outlaw activities of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Mississippi. One of the two house members who voted against the Weisenburg bill charged that it is a "threat to the freedom of the people of the state."

Other Restrictive Measures Are Proposed

Among other bills introduced but not yet acted on are a criminal libel bill making it illegal to write or say anything against any state agency or the state itself, one making playing a game with interracial teams a felony, and one forbidding out-of-state attorneys to practice in Mississippi and penalizing any native attorney who takes a case challenging segregation. A number of cities have adopted ordinances banning unsegregated waiting rooms, and the house has rushed through a bill to the same effect. Alton Massey, outgoing public service commissioner, discovered that the commission had never implemented an 1898 law empowering it to require segregated waiting rooms; so the legislature is set to correct this omission.

New Governor Promises No Change in Segregation

At his recent inauguration as Mississippi's new governor James Plemon Coleman declared that there will be no change in segregation practices during his four-year term. He opposed nullification as contrary to the principles of Jefferson Davis (but later attended the southern governors' "interposition" meeting in Virginia). He asked for regulation of public utilities for this state (the only one without such regulation), for a recall law, for improved education, for economy, and for enforcement of present laws against liquor and gambling. The first measure passed by the legislature implementing Gov. Coleman's program was a bill empowering the governor to permit the recall of sheriffs and other elected county officers.

Former Governor Admits Liquor Laws Were Not Enforced

Testifying in behalf of a friend seeking a television franchise in Biloxi from the Federal Communications Commission, outgoing

Gov. Hugh White stirred up opposition even from longtime supporters when he admitted that he never made any effort to enforce the state liquor laws in the coastal counties. The Booneville Independent, which previously had given strong support to White, noted that he also did little to enforce antigambling laws. So far nothing has been done about the violation of law in the series of Delta area murders (see The Christian Century for Jan. 4, p. 25). In March the Tallahatchie county grand jury will consider the killing of Clinton Melton, a Negro, at Glendora. In spite of objections by the Lowndes county Democratic party executive committee, the FBI held schools on civil rights and investigated last summer's election in that county.

Negro College President Addresses Episcopalians

Addressing the annual council of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Mississippi Pres. Milan Davis of Okolona College said: "If you hate me because I am ignorant I'll educate myself. If you hate me because I am dirty I'll clean myself. If you hate me because I am pagan I will become a Christian. But if you hate me because I am black I can only refer you to God, who made me black." This year the council abandoned its annual dinner, which for almost 30 years had been the only such interracial function at Mississippi religious gatherings, and Negroes were not invited to the layman's league banquet. Among the delegates were many members of white citizens' councils. The subject of segregation did not come to the floor. The diocese voted to become affiliated with the state council for alcohol education.

And So Forth

Earl K. Long's election by a heavy majority as governor of Louisiana is seen by many as a victory for his machine over "gamblers, extreme segregationists and friends of the utilities," as well as over former Gov. Kennon's organization, which supported Pres. Eisenhower in 1952. Louisiana is the first southern state to have voting machines in every precinct.

The University of Mississippi withdrew its Religious Emphasis Week invitation to Alvin Kershaw of Ohio after the Episcopal rector announced his intention to devote part of the money he won as a jazz expert on the "$64,000 Question" television show to Negro organizations.

With a contribution of $129 per member, the Wiggins, Miss., Baptist Church led all others in the state Baptist convention in missionary giving last year.

Ministers from 24 counties and 4 denominations attended the first institute for town and country church leaders held Jan. 23-26 at Mississippi State College. Leadership was drawn largely from the college's sociology department.

A Mississippi legislative committee has discovered that interest rates as high as 1,803 per cent are being charged by certain small loan companies in that state.

The Mississippi Light & Power Co., a Dixon–Yates subsidiary, received from the Office of Defense Mobilization a $5 million tax write-off in construction of new generating facilities. Boyd Campbell, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and a director of the company, recently told Oregonians that statements "against Mississippi" by Congresswoman Edith Green were untrue. CHARLES G. HAMILTON.

Southern Has No Application From Negro

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, said today he knows of no complete application on file from Negroes seeking admission to white Mississippi colleges.

He made the statement in answer to a question concerning a possible Negro applicant for Mississippi Southern College in Hattiesburg.

In Hattiesburg, Southern President W. D. McCain said the last inquiry on admission by a Negro came last November.

"The boy, Clyde Kennard of Hattiesburg, asked about entering Southern and filed a partial application," he said. "But he did not follow through."

Dr. McCain said no Negro girls have applied or inquired during the year he has been president of Southern.

Dr. Jobe said college board regulations require applications for admission to colleges to include a transcript of previous school records and letters of recommendation from five alumni of the college in which admission is sought.

Jackson Daily News March 1, 1956

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Tuesday, March 13, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

Stall Equalization?

THE REPORTED move to hold off the school equalization program by extending the deadline for consolidation for a year, is not a happy prospect, either from the standpoint of the Mississippi educational system or from the stand our state has taken concerning segregation.

It is obvious that as a whole our school system leaves much to be desired. The sooner we get started improving it the better. The first step is to set up an economically practical framework, and such a framework has to be drawn up in each county in compliance with a general consolidation of smaller schools into larger, less-expensive-to-operate units.

To balk at this is to hold up the whole program. And the program of equalization is our best argument against forced integration. It is certainly the only effective way to maintain segregation, by way of presenting an alternative on a local level.

Furthermore if we do not get the equalization program moving shortly, our inaction will indicate insincerity of our state to do anything about the problem of inadequate education for Negroes. It will be saying, "We only started to equalize schools in order to preserve segregation, and now, with interposition and the Southern manifesto, and Alabama-style rioting we expect to preserve it without equalization."

Such a statement does not we feel, reflect the thinking of most Mississippians—but that is the position we are being put into by those who would delay the equalization program.

State Common-Law Marriages Banned By Senate's Action

Clarion Ledger 3/31/56

Coleman Secures Passage Of Bill To Aid Segregation

(By Associated Press)

The Senate tonight voted 29-10 to abolish commonlaw marriages in Mississippi despite the warning of a senator that the action "would make 10,000 illigitimate children and make 10,000 women live in adultery."

The House approved a similar measure earlier in the session, but it was killed in the Senate Judiciary Committee. To get around the committee, the bill was then introduced as a Senate bill and passed tonight.

A vast majority of commonlaw marriages in Mississippi occur among Negroes, according to Welfare Department records.

Sen. W. B. Alexander of Cleveland, who fought the measure that had the endorsement of Gov. J. P. Coleman, said:

"I have repeatedly asked what possible benefit to maintaining segregation this bill will have and I have had no satisfactory answer. I feel as deeply as any mn in this chamber about segregation but I have never been told how this will help.

"As poor as Mississippi is, this will simply cost us thousands of dollars. The federal government recognizes marriage laws of the states and if we outlaw commonlaw marriages, so social security will be paid to widows and children of these marriages. There is not now a single suit on file to force integration of Mississippi schools. Let's study this for two years and see what its long-range effect might be."

Coleman was visiting on the Senate floor when the measure came up.

Sen. Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg, chairman of the judiciary committee, handled the bill on the floor. He said it was one of the bills Coleman felt the state needed.

Sen. Stanford Morse of Gulfport also fought the bill. He said since the measure is not retroactive "it will be at least six years before this could become effective since no child made illegitimate under this act would be of school age by that time."

Alexander called it a "cruel thing" to illegitimatize children and force them to live in adultery.

He said commonlaw marriages have been recognized among English speaking people for centuries.

Some of the senators said the bill might benefit a measure passed earlier permitting boards of education to assign students to schools.

Mississippi: News On Racial Scene

Memo Pad.

Legislature Enacts Laws Ordering 'No Compliance' with Supreme Court, Rejects Church Gag Bill

BOONEVILLE, MISS., April 11.—The Mississippi house of representatives adjourned the last week in March without considering the senate measure removing tax exemption from any church institution not racially segregated. Thus the proposal, which had passed the senate by a vote of 24-20, with five members not voting, was permitted to die. Fifty-six house members had introduced a similar bill, with the additional provision that tax exemption be removed from any church in which an integrated service was held. But it was not implemented. Rep. Chris Fraser, author of the house bill, declared that the church is the only group in the state which "offends against segregation." It is alleged that both bills were directed mainly against the Roman Catholic Church, but in debate on the floor the Methodist and other churches were mentioned as "guilty of opposing segregation." Gov. James P. Coleman termed the bills dangerous and said that "reforms against integration" should come within the churches themselves.

A 'Belligerent' Legislature

This year's session of the legislature was the most belligerent since 1860. It adopted an "interposition" bill instructing state officials to give no heed to the Supreme Court's decision on public school segregation. It passed a law requiring teachers to list the organizations they belong to or have supported—a law that the state Negro teachers association declared is "an instrument of fear to every law-abiding Negro teacher in the state," one "whose execution under pretensions will lead most teachers as a matter of conscience and economic safety to go underground." The legislature set up a 12-man "state sovereignty" commission, with the governor as chairman, to "protect" the state's rights "not specifically assigned to the federal government, specifically to maintain segregation in every agency and school." The commission has broad investigative powers, and can impose penalties of a $1,000 fine or six months in jail on persons or organizations for refusal to answer any questions or submit any records it may require.

Outlaw Common Law Marriage

A last-minute appeal by Gov. Coleman was rewarded by passage of a bill outlawing all common law marriages. Some legislators had pointed out that the Supreme Court might hold Mississippi's law against racial intermarriage unconstitutional, in which case children of white fathers and Negro mothers united in common law marriage might be able to attend white schools. Rep. Joel Blass was unsuccessful in his attempt to block an appropriation to the state library commission of $5,000 for books on "ethnology." Blass charged that last year, under a similar appropriation, the commission bought such "ethnological" books as White America and Unending Hate, by Ernest Cox; Black Mon-

4/12/56 Home Patrol

INDEX

AMUSEMENTS .....Pages 14-15, Sec. I
CLASSIFIED ADS .....Pages 5-7, Sec. I
COMICS ..Page 10, Sec. I; Page 3, Sec. II
EDITORIAL .....Page 12, Sec. I
FINANCIAL .....Page 4, Sec. II
MISS. NOTEBOOK .....Page 9, Sec. I
RADIO LOG .....Page 15, Sec. I
SOCIETY .....Page 13, Sec. I
SPORTS .....Pages 1-3 & 8, Sec. II
TV LOGS .....Page 15, Sec. I

Th

Established 1837

Coleman Pledges Mississippi To Stay In Democratic Fold

MEMPHIS, April 11 (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi said today that unless there is some "strong provocation" at the National Democratic Convention his state will be as solid a Democratic state as ever in its history.

There has been some talk of a possible third party, formed by southern Democrats at odds with the rest of the party's attitude toward integration.

Coleman, here for a brief vacation, also told newsmen that his state never will have integration.

He said that Adlai Stevenson is "by far the most able and, at the same time, the most sympahetic friend" Mississippi has among the presidential candidates and potential candidates.

He said Estes Kefauver and Averell Harriman "have no support at all in Mississippi." Admitting that Kefauver is making some showing, Coleman said "his basic and radical deficiencies, in the finish, will defeat him."

Coleman said recent statements made by Attn. Gen. Herbert Brownell that Mississippi would disqualify Negroes from voting "because they don't know how many bubbles there are in a bar of soap" are a disgrace and an insult to the people of Mississippi.

The governor said he assumed the National Democratic Convention will be in the hands of people "who know the facts of life and who also know that no amount of force could bring about integration in Mississippi."

He said he is going to the convention "in the faith" that the segregation and civil problems can be worked out.

"If not," he said, "we'll take action in the light of the circumstances. I am not going to condemn the convention before it gets into session."

Turning to the situation in his state, Coleman said:

"I think the crisis is definitely past in Mississippi. I think in the next three or four years it (integration) will cease to be a subject of agitation."

The visiting chief executive said the Negroes of his state "are now making more progress and are becoming more valuable citizens than ever before in history in Mississippi. Putting it in a nutshell, the Negroes are perfectly competent to operate their own schools and educate their children and I don't think they want to be deprived of the privilege."

Coleman said there are about 8,000 white teachers and 7,000 Negro teachers in Mississippi.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Coleman Says Mississippians Not Worried--Will Not Be Stampeded

MEMPHIS (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman says "The people of Mississippi are not worried and are not stampeded by the question of segregation that has been forced upon us from the outside."

The Mississippi governor yesterday told the Memphis Rotary Club his stat "is now the most quiet and most tranquil that it has ever been on the subject.

"We will hold the line on segregation without fail but will not keep ourselves in a daily uproar about it."

In Jackson, other Mississippi officials pledged to continue segregation.

(While discussing the U. S. Supreme Court decision Monday banning segregation in a South Carolina bus case, Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson promised that Mississippi will continue to resist integration efforts at all levels.

(Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin said "I see no change in our traditional separation of the races — for the good of both—in our public conveyances.")

Coleman told the Rotary Club there has been a "new outlook in Mississippi."

He said there has been an about face on the matter of law enforcement.

"There no longer is any clipping of tourists on the Gulf Coast," he said. "There are no gambling casinos, and the Gulf Coast has been surprised to find its business increasing since these were abolished."

Coleman said the new emphasis is on education. He said the last Legislature appropriated 80 million dollars for public school education in the next two years.

Delta Democrat — 4-25-1956

Delta Democrat
April 25, 1956

~~Segregation~~

Pol-Miss-56

day, by Circuit Judge T. P. Brady of Brookhaven; Whither Solid South? by C. W. Collins; Cult of Equality, by Stuart Landry; and You and Segregation, by Herman Talmadge, former governor of Georgia. Gov. Coleman vetoed a bill to forbid the FBI to investigate elections and court trials in Mississippi, explaining that the agency's refusal to investigate the Till murder case indicated that the bill was not necessary. He announced that if any Negro should succeed in enrolling in any college or other school in Mississippi, that school would be closed forthwith. "Mississippi is the sanest it has been in eight years," he said.

Some Attempts at Moral Reform Win, Some Lose

Between its bouts with integration the legislature was busy with matters pertaining to moral and political reform. It outlawed possession of beer in the 53 counties which, through local option, have voted out sale of beer. However, in its first chance to vote on the question since national Prohibition ended in 1933, the legislature defeated an attempt to initiate a constitutional amendment for statewide prohibition of liquor—in spite of evidence from local option results that the majority of Mississippi voters are opposed to sale of intoxicants. After rejecting an amendment which would have authorized the state public service commission to probe deeply into public utilities, the legislators adopted a mild bill regulating such utilities. (Mississippi had been the only state which made no provision at all for regulation of power companies.) When the biennial $2,500,000 appropriation for free textbooks came up, several legislators objected (without effect) to paying 8 per cent of that amount in profits to the only textbook distributing company in the state. That company is headed by Boyd Campbell, a director of a Dixon-Yates power company in Mississippi and until this month president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Compulsory School Attendance Law Is Repealed

The legislature voted to abandon the compulsory school attendance law. Mississippi was the last state to adopt such a law, in 1918. It was never enforced; if it had been, there would never have been enough buildings to accommodate all the children of school age in the state. For the third consecutive time, a legislative session defeated a proposal to reform our inadequate marriage laws. The Tupelo Journal blamed failure to enact on the influence of a "handful of money-worshiping circuit clerks." The legislature overruled the state supreme court's decision holding that newsboys come under workmen's compensation coverage. It declared them "little merchants" and independent contractors, and therefore not entitled to compensation if injured at work.

Racial News from the Campuses

The student newspaper at the University of Mississippi has asked the state college board to "lift the magnolia curtain" by doing away with the requirement that campus speakers be screened in advance. A poll of university students showed that one-fourth are against segregation and two-thirds expect the institution to be integrated. . . . Lydel Sims, Memphis columnist, declined an invitation to speak at the university; he gave as his reason its "lack of freedom." Last year, after Henry Hitt Crane of Detroit had condemned segregation in an address at Mississippi Southern College, the legislature adopted a resolution declaring that speakers who disagreed with "Mississippi ways" should not be allowed at state institutions. . . . Only three Mississippi speakers continued their engagements on Religious Emphasis Week programs at Mississippi State College after Pres. Ben Hilbun asked Duncan M. Gray, Jr., Cleveland, Miss., rector and son of the Episcopal bishop of Mississippi, either to withdraw his statement (made in an off-campus sermon) that "segregation is incompatible with Christianity" or not speak on the campus. Mr. Gray went home without further speaking, and the president requested all campus speakers to avoid the subject.

Louisiana's Racial Scene Not So Peaceful

The racial front in Louisiana is not as peaceful as it has been. District Judge Coleman Lindsay issued a temporary injunction forbidding the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to meet or take part in any legal action in Louisiana, and the state's attorney's office has demanded all its bank records. The N.A.A.C.P. was unable to stop what it called the "degrading and disgusting" Negro Mardi Gras parade. Louisiana laws on segregation have been invalidated by the New Orleans federal court. Archbishop Joseph Rummel has warned Roman Catholic legislators that they might be excommunicated if they attempt to forbid integration in church schools. In a pastoral letter read in all archdiocesan pulpits, he called racial segregation "morally

Atl. Const

Mississippi's New Party Echoes '48

5/31/56

Pol. Mar

States Rights Slate Revived

By KEITH FULLER

JACKSON, Miss., May 30 (AP)—A group called Mississippians for States' Rights organized today in a noisy, cheering meeting and pledged to qualify independent presidential electors to oppose both Republicans and Democrats.

Delegations from Alabama and Louisiana reported on their similar plans.

AGAINST BOTH PARTIES

The movement was created in Mississippi in opposition to both national parties anticipating neither will present candidates nor platforms accepable to the South.

Backers of the movement hope that by pledging electors to neither major party candidate, enough electoral votes will be diverted to prevent either from gaining a majority. This would throw the election into the House, where a compromise candidate would have a chance, or where the diverted electoral votes could be bargained to force one party to endorse states rights.

The movements do not have the backing of any of the governors of the states involved. Rather, Govs. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi, James Folsom of Alabama, Earl K. Long of Louisiana and Orval Faubus of Arkansas all were sharply criticized for what was called the lack of leadership against federal encroachment of states' rights.

Machinery was set up at the meeting for the Misissippi organization to form at the county level and a steering committee will be charged with getting the vote of the people for the independent electors.

LIKE WRIGHT PARTY

The movement was reminiscent of the 1948 States' Rights party which broke off from the Southern Democratic party in a third party. The late former Gov. Fielding Wright of Mississippi was a vice presidential candidate on that ticket.

Today, W. B. Fontaine, Jackson, former administrative assistant to Gov. Wright was elected permanent chairman of the new group.

Arkansas was represented by Curt Copeland who is under permanent federal injunction against making inflammatory speeches on the race issue.

The Alabama Delegation reported their electors already qualified and will be on the ballot in November. A Shreveport, La., attorney and Citizens Council official, Robert Chandler, said a slate of independent electors would be qualified for Louisiana.

Clarion Ledger 6/1/56 & Miss Pub.

State Invites Racial Probe

Would Welcome Senate Group

A U. S. Senate judiciary subcommittee has been invited to come to this state and see for itself the racial conditions that exist here.

The invitation was issued here Thursday by the State Sovereignty Commission in a telegram forwarded to the sub-committee chairman.

It is an official answer to a recent attack made upon this state by Roy Wilkins, representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, in testimony before the judiciary subcommittee on civil rights legislation.

The Sovereignty Commission's reply was in the form of a telegram, signed by Executive Director Ney M. Gore, Jr., to Judiciary Committee members, and reading as follows:

"With reference to charges made against Mississippi and Mississippians by NAACP's Roy Wilkins in hearings before Senate Judiciary Sub-Committee on civil rights legislation, concerning alleged "economic reprisals" against Negroes in Mississippi, in the interest of fair play we humbly extend a cordial invitation to the honorable members of the Judiciary Committee to visit Mississippi and see at first hand the evidence completely refuting Mr. Wilkins' scatter-gun accusations, of which the number of successful Negro businessmen in the state constitutes but one piece. If such a visit can be arranged at the convenience of the committee members, we will be happy to cooperate with you in every way in order that you may ascertain the facts."

See Politics

CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING, JUNE 4, 1956

Voice of the People

Letters to the Editor must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

To The Editor

The valiant fight which the people of Mississippi have made on principle against the integration decision of the Supreme Court has been waged with great effort and toil on their part.

Mississippi's Interposition Resolution, passed by the people through their legislators, firmly declares that the above Court decision is unconstitutional and of no lawful effect in this state. In taking this stand, our people have won the admiration and respect of millions of people in this country who love their freedom and who believe in constitutional government.

The people of this state want, and are entitled to have, their State Democratic Convention of July 16th to instruct its delegates to the National Convention to oppose with all their might the adoption of a platform calling for the enforcement of the above Court decision, and to also oppose the nomination of any candidate for President or Vice-President who advocates the enforcement of that decision.

The people having thus courageously set forth in their Interpostion Resolution the noble principles upon which they stand, any delegate who goes to the National Convention should be glad to publicly say before his fellow Mississippian that he will oppose any platform and any candidate voicing opposition to those principles. And if he will not so say, then we will be doing a good job in the protection of our families in not sending him.

Under our State Constitution the delegates to any political convention are the servants of the people and not their masters, for Section 5 of the constitution is in the following language:

'All political power is vested in, and derived from, the people; all government of right originates with the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole."

In addition, Section 3107 of the Miss. Code, outlining the organization and functions of the State Convention, makes it perfectly clear that the delegates of the people alone are to make the Convention's decisions, and no where can it be found in the law that one man should have a free hand in guiding the state's political fortunes in that convention.

The above Code section also contains the following specific authority for the recessing or adjourning of the State Convention: "And the said convention may adjourn from day to day, or to such time and place, or times and places, as to it may appear proper and desirable."

In 1948, and again in 1952, when the danger to us was not nearly so great as it now is, our delegates to the National Convention went instructed, and the State Convention was each time recessed until after the National Convention. This is a grave and perilous hour in the history of our state, and in order that we may know and see the path ahead before we finally commit the destiny of ourselves and our children let us do the common sense thing of recessing our State Convention until after the meeting of the Democratic National Convention.

Edwin White
Lexington, Mississippi

Through Hazel Eyes

by Hazel Brannon Smith

The political situation in Mississippi is very interesting, to say the least.

Our people want to keep all their rights, states rights we call them. Our politicians want to keep their jobs, particularly our congressmen and Senators want to keep their positions of power in the legislative halls in Washington.

The argument advanced by the professional politicians that we should stay in the Democratic party so that our congressmen and senators can keep these positions has always left us cold. Our politicians have been in power for a heck of a long time and look where we are now.

Where have all our Southern congressmen been while legislation hateful to the South has been passed—and did they not vote to confirm at least the majority of the Supreme Court justices who rendered the fateful decision? (Yes, we know about Jim's fight on Warren.)

The Congress of the United States has the power to make the laws—to prescribe and limit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. Why has it not done so?

The Congress has it in its power.

The South has always been, and always will be apparently, the red-haired stepchild of the Democratic party, unloved, unsung, unappreciated.

God speed the day when we have a real two-party system in the South—only then will the vote of the entire section count with either political party.

In the meantime all of the turmoil being stirred up as who will represent what at the Democratic national convention, and which nominee our electors will support, is much ado about nothing because President Eisenhower is going to be reelected anyway.

Why all the fuss and bother?

The truth about the matter is the Democratic party cannot possibly nominate a candidate for president that the South would be happy to support.

on Advertiser

Thursday, June 7, 1956 Number Ten d For Meeting Next Week

Adoption Of Resolution To Support Southern Manifesto Approved For June 12 Convention

Other Precincts Join Move To Back State's Rights Procedure Line

by E. J. Mays

The Lexington Democratic precinct delegation, meeting in executive session Tuesday morning, resolved and adopted a resolution to send an instructed group of delegates to the Holmes County Demcratic Convention which convenes Tuesday morning, June 12 at the courthouse at 10:00 o'clock.

In so doing they failed to heed a plea from Governor J P. Coleman—as did many other precincts throughout the state—who had asked statewide aid of his 1600 colonels to see that a non instructed delegation be sent to the various rounty and district meets and to the state convention.

The Lexington delegation heard the presentation of a resolution distributed by the State Citizens Councils with Lexington Attorney Edwin White explaining the resolution.

They then immediately ratified —with a single dissenting vote— the resolution and also voted to instruct their delegates to support the Southern Manifesto, whose principles are identical with the resolution presented by Attorney White. They instrocted the delegates to use thc unit rule of voting as well.

Meanwhile over the county, at Goodman, Durant, Tchula and Pickens who have already reported, other convention were sending delegates nt instructed but delegates who had affirmed their beliefs in the resolutions and the principles of the Southern Manifesto.

Tom Tubb, of West Point,

(Continued on Page 8)

Instructed Delegates—

(Continued From Page One)

chairman of the Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee, explained late Wednesday a ruling handed down to the Mississippi Democratic party regarding the number of delegates that sippi delegation would have and the numberf of delegates that would be seated at the National Convention at Chicago.

In a telephone conversation with Secretary of State Heber Ladner, Mr. Tubb said:

"Mississippi is divided into six congressional districts and each of these congressional districts will be allowed two of the state's total of twelve district votes. Each district will be allowed to send four delegates, credited with one-half vote each, and two alternates to the National Convention from that district. That accounts for the twelve district votes allowed Mississippians from their total of twenty-two to be cast at the natinal convention.

"As a result a total of 36 delegates and alternates will be decided at the district convention, with Holmes County attending the District meeting at Greenwood on Monday, July 6."

Meanwhile the state's other ten votes from the state at large, will be cast by twenty delegates, selected by caucus at the state Convention on July 16 at Jackson with each of the twenty delegates each having one-half vote to cast. Twenty alternates will make up the remainder of the forty delegates allowed from the state at large, giving Mississippi their total of seventy-six delegates and alternates at the National Convention.

In presenting the Citizens Council resolution to the convention Mr. White said:

The resolution circulated by the Citizens Councils of Mississippi does not instruct the delegates to vote against any candidate but instructes them to vote only for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice Presiden who stand for the principles announced in Mississippi's Interposition Resolution, which are in fact the same principles expressed in the Southern Manifesto. In 1948, and again in 1952, Mississippi's delegates went in-distributed by the State Citizens Councils with Lexington Attorney Edwin White explaining the resolution.

They then immediately ratified —with a single dissenting vote— the resolution and also voted to instruct their delegates to support the Southern Manifesto, whose principles are identical with the resolution presented by Attorney White. They instructed the delegates to use the unit rule of voting as well.

Meanwhile over the county, at Goodman, Durant, Tchula and Pickens who have already reported, other convention were sending delegates nt instructed but delegates who had affirmed their beliefs in the resolutions and the principles of the Southern Manifesto.

Tom Tubb, of West Point,

(Continued on Page 8)

Meanwhile the state's other ten votes from the state at large, will be cast by twenty delegates, selected by caucus at the state Convention on July 16 at Jackson with each of the twenty delegates each having one-half vote to cast. Twenty alternates will make up the remainder of the forty delegates allowed from the state at large, giving Mississippi their total of seventy-six delegates and alternates at the National Convention.

In presenting the Citizens Council resolution to the convention Mr. White said:

The resolution circulated by the Citizens Councils of Mississippi does not instruct the delegates to vote against any candidate but instructes them to vote only for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice Presiden who stand for the principles announced in Mississippi's Interposition Resolution, which are in fact the same principles expressed in the Southern Manifesto. In 1948, and again in 1952, Mississippi's delegates went instructed, and at both times, the State Convention was recessed until after the National Convention.

In mailing out the resolution, the Citizens Councils are not dealing in personalities but are standing on their principle of unflinching and outspoken opposition to intergration.

We have only one weapon with which to make this fight and that weapon is the principle that the Supreme Court of the United States had no constitutional authority to order intergration of the schools in the varius states. The people of Mississippi have been outspoken in their opposition to the decision, and to all groups and persons who attempt to enforce it. Because we are right on principle and have stood unwavering for it, millions of people over this country have joined up in the belief that the Supreme Court exceeded its authority.

No house built on shifting sand can stand, nor can any people wage a successful and courageous fight unless they outspokenly stand on the rock of sound principle. To now support a platfrom or candidate advocating enforcement of the Supreme Court decision, we would abandon the principle upon which we stand and lose not only the respect of millios over this country, but we would lose our own self-respect and by such a show of weakness would invite our enemies to come in and force intergration upon us.

The following delegates were elected to the County Convention to be held at the Courthouse in Lexington on Tuesday morning, June 12, 1956 at ten o'clock:

P. H. McMorrough, Pat Barrett, W. R. Ellis, Jr., William Moses, Wilburn Hooker, T. M. Williams, D. T. Ruff, P. P. Lindholm, H. L. Nichols, Sr., B. S. Darnell, Virgil Ingold, R. K. Farmer, Irby Ellington, Edwin White, D. B. Miles, W. D. Clay Herrin, John Tingle, Jihnson, Ruth Povall, W. Meek, Jr.

The following alternates in case any of the above twenty-one were not qualified voters were: John Martin, George Patterson, Eugene Herrman.

Included in the other delegates who will attend the county convention here Tuesday are: Clarence Robertson, Eph Cresswell, Ralph McGehee and Robert Ray, from the Durant precinct; T. Owen Buford and W. G. McGehee from Pickens; George Mitchell and Stanley Allen from Goodman; Ralph R., Guy Sharpe and James P. Love, delegates; H. B. Jones, N. S. Shelton and Mrs. Sarah Baine, alternates from Tchula.

Other precincts who will send delegates include:

West two delegates; Acona, Franklin, Emory, Bowling Green, Edsville, Eulogy, Ebenezer, Richland, Thornton and Cruger one each.

So Politics

Democrats 'Pressure' Coleman, Post-Chicago Parley Cleared

Mississippi Chief Sidesteps Test; Wins Uninstructed Delegation Plea

Atl Const 6/24/56

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., June 23—Gov. J. P. Coleman has sidestepped what could have been his first major political test since taking office in January.

That decision comes in the face of added patronage and its attendant power given the governor at the recent legislative session.

It also follows Gov. Coleman's "victory" in the county Democratic conventions for an uninstructed delegation to the national convention. Less than 10 of the 82 counties are sending delegates to the July 16 state convention "pledged" against the governor's recommendation for "free agents" being sent to Chicago.

The other counties are on record to vote for delegates without any binding ties so as to be in position to bargain for favorable consideration to Southern customs and traditions.

Opposed to Procedure

Before the conventions, Gov. Coleman had also stated he was opposed to the state convention meeting and then recessing until after the Democratic National Convention. However, he had a proviso in his position, in that he was opposed to the recess proposal "unless" a substantial number of other Southern states took the same action for a "second look" at the national convention actions.

When the governor said he would not oppose a recessed convention on those terms, he felt that most of the Southern states, with exception of South Carolina, had already met and adjourned sine die.

However, when Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson, his former assistant when the governor held that office, came out for a recessed convention—even if Mississippi is alone in the matter—the governor began giving the proposal a "second look."

Then, when delegates to the 1,800 precinct conventions indicated they favored the recess proposal and so expressed themselves in voting for delegates to their county conventions, Coleman began to change his views.

He was also confronted with the positions of many legislative leaders, including Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin and House Speaker Walter Sillers, that the recess convention was a "must." Since those leaders had sided with the governor on the uninstructed delegation proposal, he let it be known he was open to compromise.

Sponsor of the "compromise" is Speaker Sillers. He has suggested a change in convention rules to permit the reconvening of the state convention. Under existing rules, when the convention adjourns there is no way of calling the delegates back in session.

Mr. Sillers suggested that a certain percentage of the Democratic State Executive Committee be authorized to request reconvening of the convention. Gov. Coleman has agreed to support such a proposition.

MISSISSIPPI

The plan calls for a rule change under which 25 per cent of the executive committeemen can petition for another convention "after" the national meeting and one will be assembled.

That proposal also meets with approval of those Democrats who feel that the national convention delegates should have "strings" tied to their credentials. Such as they will oppose any nominee and platform plank calling for enforcement of the U.S. Supreme Court's integration decision.

Gov. Coleman's main reason for opposing the "strings" is that such binds will mean that Mississippi's delegation will not be seated. He also feels with the "strings" attached, the efforts of the leaders will be taken up in the credentials committee trying to get the delegates seated and not free to work for a candidate and platform Southern Democrats can accept.

All leaders agree that if the Mississippi delegates are not seated, or walk out, that the status of Mississippi's congressional delegation on House and Senate committees may be endangered. They fear the Mississippians will be declared "nonparty" members and their strategic committee chairmanships taken from them.

Faced Real Opposition

Of major concern is the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee held by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss). At the moment, he is under attack from Northern party members, along with the CIO and NAACP.

If Gov. Coleman had not agreed to the compromise, he stood to face the opposition of other party leaders in the state convention. With feelings high over the racial issue, Gov. Coleman faced a tough fight. That is particularly true since he has taken issue on some maneuvers by the Mississippi Citizens Councils "dedicated to preservation of segregation."

It was the Citizens Councils which sent out proposed resolutions to the county conventions urging delegates to the state meeting to be pledged to an instructed delegation to Chicago. However, the proposals were approved by the executive committee of the councils and not the rank and file.

Many leaders in the Citizens Councils are strong Coleman supporters and went along with him rather than the organization on the matter of instructing delegates.

Gov. Coleman's present position to favor the rule change to permit a reconvening of the state convention after the Chicago meeting is a sort of compromise with the Citizens Councils. They had also proposed that step.

Although the national convention delegates will be uninstructed, they will have as a "rule and guide" of their actions a resolution to be adopted at the state convention against the Supreme Court's integration decisions, and support of the state's resolution of interposition under which Mississippi refuses to recognize validity of the decisions and is pledged against their enforcement within its borders.

Chance for 'Rechecking'

A statement of principles along strong segregation lines is to be adopted at the July 16 state convention. It will be within that framework that Mississippi's delegates will seek favorable considerations at the hands of the national party leaders.

So with the rule change permitting recall of the state convention and the statement of principles, Mississippi Democrats are assured an opportunity to recheck the actions of the national convention and take their cue and future action accordingly.

Just what the "after" Chicago course will be remains for determination.

It could be that Mississippi Democrats will "go fishing" in November. That is, those who will not again vote the Republican ticket.

Or it could develop that other Southern states will take the same "wait and see" position and in that way influence somewhat the actions taken in Chicago. It was the Southern states that "stayed" with the party in 1952.

Big question facing those states is whether the party will remember that and stay with them in 1956.

A united South could demand that.

E CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING, JULY 16, 1956

Voice of the People

Letters to the Editor must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Dear Editor:

The eyes of the nation will be on Mississippi — cold and curious, intolerant and mocking. At the Democratic National Convention, the business will be as usual, and I am told that Mississippi delegates will be uninstructed as is customary. That this should be so at a time of lethal crisis to the principle of States Rights within the Constitution, to me seems a vicious situation. So far as Mississippi is concerned, it is not a time for the usual and customary political tactics or barter and trade.

At long last, Mississippi has been forced to the "lick log" so skillfully evaded on a national scale, by such stalwart sons of Mississippi as Bilbo, Rankin, Wright, White, etc., all of whom, and regardless of our State political factors, none the less did say the blunt words and perform the distasteful forthright actions, necessary to protect our own state sovereignty. Apparently we must go it blind, and the AP dispatch today says no Mississippian even as an "observer' attended the Southecn States Atlanta caucus to formulate Convention strategy. WHY, and what could be more important? Likewise, I read that at the American Legion Convention, there was no one to officially greet and recognize them in behalf of the State. If coming events cast their shadows before, it is an ill omen, because as surely as God lives, the Legion has never been found wanting, when the chips were down.

Other signposts, to me, was advice from the Republicans that four thousand, three hundred and twenty one news-men have already applied for credentials to cover the convention, — the press, radio, tv, newsreels, still photographers, etc Surely, Mississippi's sacrifice upon the alatr of expediency should have full coverage.

The unshakeable, unimpeachable implacable integrity of the Honorables Fielding Wright and Hugh White prevented the Vaughn-Stevenson combine from in effect, reading Mississisippi out of the Union, inso far as the Convention was concerned. There was no Till case then, not too much supra activity of such things as the NAACP, nor had so many white "little leaders" commenced shouting the songs of those whose bread they eat, so the tensions this time will be at the breaking point, and the only alternative will be that Mississippi be led, like a lamb, to the slaughter, and open not its mouth. Anything, great or small, that will tend to throw the Presidential election into the House of Representatives is the only remedy. Granted that the same forces are present there, it none the less is true that the cross currents of give and take, the power flows at national level are more subject to representative control, than are those of any political convention which springs up as a toadstool and withers in a few days. The House of Representatives lives on forever.

Ike and Adlai see eye to eye on the race question, and this race question is the paramount issue, regardless of the brainwashers most cunning efforts. These anonymous brainwashers have been entirely too successful with certain types of white folk South of the Mason & Dixon Line, if anyone asks me.

Respectfully,
W. L. Hardin Sr.
Jackson, Miss.

Visits In S. C.

7/21/56 · Sunpaper

Gov. Coleman Says South Must Present Unified Front

COLUMBIA, July 20 (AP) — Gov. James P. Coleman of Mississippi said here tonight that the "South must present a unified front at all times."

Coleman pointed out that the purpose of his visit to South Carolina was "more social than anything else," but added, however, that he would have dinner with Gov. Timmerman later tonight.

When asked if the two governors would discuss politics and specifically the Southern unity issue, Coleman replied, "when Southern governors get together all Southern problems are discussed."

The freshman Mississippi governor stated that he would spend tomorrow and Sunday near Winnsboro in Fairfield County, attending an annual family renunion. Coleman said he hoped to make a special trip to the birthplace of Andrew Jackson.

At a press conference before his dinner date with Timmerman, the Mississippi governor emphasized that at present Gov. Stevenson of Illinois appears to be "our best friend" among the candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Coleman called the possibility of Gov. Harriman of New York and Sen. Kefauver (D-Tenn) getting the nomination "hypothetical" and declined further comment.

Coleman predicted a Democratic landslide in his own state if the Republicans adopt an "unreasonable civil rights" platform.

Coleman spoke with warm praise for two favortie son candidates — Timmerman and Sen. Lyndon Johnson of Texas. He called Johnson "a close and personal friend."

Coleman declared that he was in sympathy with Timmerman's Southern solidarity movement but deferred comment on the possibility of a pre-convention caucus to further this action.

He said Missiissppi's 44 delegates to the national convention next month in Chicago are uncommitted at preent.

Commenting on the segregation issue, Coleman asserted that it should always be the practice to "treat the Negro with fairness". But there should always be a "traditional separation of the races."

Coleman will leave here Monday after the traditional annual reunion of the Feaster-Coleman-Mobley famliies near Winnsboro on Sunday. The governor is president of the group and a descendant of the South Carolina Colemans.

Miss-Politics

Clarion-Ledger

Mississippi's Leading Newspaper For More Than A Century

Jackson, Mississippi, Thursday Morning, August 9, 1956 VOL. CXVIII NO. 109

Lily Whites Push Recognition Drive

By GENE WIRTH

A blistering four-point brief supporting the "seating" argument of E. O. Spencer's Mississippi Republican forces was placed this week in the hands of the Republican National Committee.

The strongly - worded document presenting "new facts and fresh leadership" for the consideration of the national party was filed just a few days before the Spencer - Lily White delegation was scheduled to depart for San Francisco to take up the "on the scene" fight for recognition over the Black and Tan faction headed by Negro Attorney Perry Howard.

NEW ORLEANS—John Minor Wisdom, national committeeman for Louisiana, said today he would ask the Republican leaders to put him on the credentials committee where he "can help seat the Spencer-Yerger delegation from Mississippi.

"If the case is decided on its merits, the Spencer group will win," he said. "Howard is not a bona fide resident of Mississippi and the issue does not revolve around the racial question."

The 19-page original brief is further supported by a 148 - page appendice supplement that reveals publicly for the first time a startling account of activities of the Howard group. The broad detailed brief and supplement was prepared by a 7-man delegation counsel composed of W. N. Ethridge, Sr., Graham H. Hicks, B. B. McClendon, Jr., N. W. Overstreet, Jr., Nelson E. Taylor, J. A. White and Lester E. Wills.

The document discloses a pledge entered into in 1952 between the Mississippi Citizens for Eisenhower group and officials of the Republican National Committee which provided "that the officials of the National Republican Executive Committee will give assurance that they will endeavor to have the Mississippi Republican Party recognized as the official Republican Party in Mississippi."

The Spencer faction is recognized officially by the state as the Republican Party of Mississippi and the group's legality has the convention nominees on the Mississippi ballot.

Mississippi law provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person or group of persons to set up or establish any political party in this state, except in the manner provided by the laws of this state, and it shall be unlawful for any person or group of persons not lawful members thereof to use or attempt to use or to operate under the name of any other political party theretofore and at the time lawfully existing and operating under the laws of this state, and each and every person participating in such unlawful act, in addition to such other measures or penalties provided by law, may be enjoined therefrom upon application to the courts by any person, or persons, or any political party, official or representative of such political party, aggrieved thereby."

In further support of its argument that the Perry Howard faction could not even list on the ballot as their candidates the nominees of the Republican convention, the Spencer group points to a 1948 statute which provides:

"No political party shall use any name in any campaign literature listing or describing its candidates which does not correspond with the name of said political party registered with the Secretary of State."

Spencer forces contend that the only way the Howard group could avoid conflict with this latter statute would be for their own state convention to nominate the nominees of the Republican national convention. This can not now be done, they say, because the Howard convention adjourned without recess and under the statutes another convention cannot be called until 1960.

The Lily White convention recessed and in all probability will be re-convened after the San Francisco convention.

In their bid for seats and national recognition at San Francisco, the Spencer group contends further that:

The Howard group, listed as

Politics, Miss

Tan faction headed by Negro Attorney Perry Howard.

The 19-page original brief is further supported by a 148 - page appendice supplement that reveals publicly for the first time a startling account of activities of the Howard group. The broad detailed brief and supplement was prepared by a 7-man delegation counsel composed of W. N. Ethridge, Sr., Graham H. Hicks, B. B. McClendon, Jr., N. W. Overstreet, Jr., Nelson E. Taylor, J. A. White and Lester E. Wills.

The document discloses a pledge entered into in 1952 between the Mississippi Citizens for Eisenhower group and officials of the Republican National Committee which provided "that the officials of the National Republican Executive Committee will give assurance that they will endeavor to have the Mississippi Republican Party recognized as the official Republican Party in Mississippi."

The Spencer faction is recognized officially by the state as the Republican Party of Mississippi and the group's legality has already been upheld by both the state and U. S. high courts.

Spencer forces represent both the so-called Lily White Republican faction and the Mississippi Citizens for Eisenhower group.

The Spencer faction contends that the Perry Howard faction, even if seated in San Francisco, would be without legal right to campaign in Mississippi or place the Spencer group points to a 1948 statute which provides:

"No political party shall use any name in any campaign literature listing or describing its candidates which does not correspond with the name of said political party registered with the Secretary of State."

Spencer forces contend that the only way the Howard group could avoid conflict with this latter statute would be for their own state convention to nominate the nominees of the Republican national convention. This can not now be done, they say, because the Howard convention adjourned without recess and under the statutes another convention cannot be called until 1960.

The Lily White convention recessed and in all probability will be re-convened after the San Francisco convention.

In their bid for seats and national recognition at San Francisco, the Spencer group contends further that:

1. The Howard group, listed as the Mississippi Black and Tan Grand Old Party, did not legally constitute itself as a party in the election of national convention delegates.

from the Mississippi Republican Party, the Spencer group says that all of its party's precinct meetings were fully open to state that if members of

Politics, Miss

Mississippians In Varied Reaction To Adlai Blast

By DOUGLAS STARR
Associated Press Staff

Reaction from Mississippi Democrats ranged Wednesday from "wait and see" to outspoken objection to Adlai Stevenson's suggestion the party platform support the U. S. Supreme Court integration ruling.

Every Mississippi state public official was elected on a promise to strive to continue the state's segregated way of life. None has indicated any evidence of a waiver in this goal.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, a Democratic national convention delegate and a leader in Mississippi's fight to keep Negroes and whites separate, rejected Stevenson Wednesday:

"I didn't hear his statement. But if Stevenson came out flat-footedly as the papers have reported he has for the supreme court ruling, I don't think the southern delegation will go for him.

"I, for one, will not, but I speak only for myself."

Stevenson's statement apparently rattled the Mississippi Democratic party.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, leader of the state's Democrats, had hailed Stevenson as the "best friend the South has among the announced candidates."

That was before Stevenson's latest statement.

After the former Illinois governor spoke up, reporters in Chicago asked Coleman about reports Stevenson's camp claimed Mississippi's 22 convention votes leaned toward Stevenson.

"There is a great deal of basis for that," Coleman said. "Or was. Up to this date, he has been the best friend the south has had."

Another delegate, House Speaker Walter Sillers of Rosedale, where Negroes outnumber whites two to one, said:

"If Stevenson advocates the Democratic platform contain a plank approving the decision of the Supreme Court, he is diametrically opposed to my views and I can't go along with him in that respect."

Circuit Judge M. M. McGowan of Jackson, one of the founders of the Mississippians for States' Right movement, exploded:

"That's just what could be expected of him (Stevenson). He's the leading integrationist in the country. He's an intellectual of the socialist type. I've always said that."

(Continued On Page 5, Sec. II)

Mississippians ---

(Continued from Page One)

McGowan, whom Coleman "read out" of the Democratic party for his states' rights action, said Stevenson's "moderate" views are "just a ruse. Look at his record."

The jurist said he believes "every Southern state should refuse to take part in any form of platform that contains civil rights. If they don't refuse, there'll be an implied acceptance of the plank."

He suggested the Southern states "walk out" if a civil rights plank is included in the platform.

Ross Barnett, of Jackson, twice an also-ran for the governor's chair, said he was "not surprised at anything he (Stevenson) says.

"It's apparent that he has sold out to the minority pressure groups in the larger cities. He has turned his back on the South. . . No true southerner will compromise his principles on segregation."

Former Gov. Hugh White, a delegate who has said he won't be able to attend the convention, put his faith in Gov. Coleman.

Declining comment, White said, "I think Coleman will take care of our situation. They'll hear from him."

And Secretary of State Heber Ladner, another delegate, said he was "unalterably opposed to including in the platform endorsement of the Supreme Court decision on integration. Until the platform is finally adopted, we won't know for whom we will cast our vote."

Mississippi, otherwise uninstructed, is bound to cast its 22 votes in a bloc.

Hayden Campbell, a state senator representing the Fourth District, said in Detroit, "To place too much confidence in Stevenson's southern friendship is foolish thinking. His use of the National Guard as Governor of Illinois to force integration in Cicero and his use of armed force in Southern Illinois in a similar case is a matter of public record.

"This should be sufficient answer to the question of what his actions would be as President of the United States. His militant support of the left of center liberals in this country who spend half of their recognized as the official Republican Party in Mississippi."

Politics, Miss

The Spencer faction is recognized officially by the state as the Republican Party of Mississippi and the group's legality has already been upheld by both the state and U. S. high courts.

Spencer forces represent both the so-called Lily White Republican faction and the Mississippi Citizens for Eisenhower group.

The Spencer faction contends that the Perry Howard faction, even if seated in San Francisco, would be without legal right to campaign in Mississippi or place cisco convention.

In their bid for seats and national recognition at San Francisco, the Spencer group contends further that:

1. The Howard group, listed as the Mississippi Black and Tan Grand Old Party, did not legally constitute itself as a party in the election of national convention delegates. Few county conventions were held.

2. Howard is not a bona fide resident of Mississippi.

3. Voting for delegates at the Howard state convention was not legitimate.

4. The Howard group does not truly represent the Republican voters in Mississippi.

In answer to anticipated Howard arguments that there are no Negro delegates in the delegation from the Mississippi Republican Party, the Spencer group says that all of its party's precinct meetings were fully open to state electors and that if members of the Grand Old Party had desired to participate in the legal Republican organization they could have done so.

Mississipp[illegible] Reaction To Adlai[illegible]aried Blast

By DOUGLAS STARR
Associated Press Staff

Reaction from Mississippi Democrats ranged Wednesday from "wait and see" to outspoken objection to Adlai Stevenson's suggestion the party platform support the U. S. Supreme Court integration ruling.

Every Mississippi state public official was elected on a promise to strive to continue the state's segregated way of life. None has indicated any evidence of a waiver in this goal.

Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson, a Democratic national convention delegate and a leader in Mississippi's fight to keep Negroes and whites separate, rejected Stevenson Wednesday:

"I didn't hear his statement. But if Stevenson came out flat-footedly as the papers have reported he has for the supreme court ruling, I don't think the southern delegation will go for him.

"I, for one, will not, but I speak only for myself."

Stevenson's statement apparently rattled the Mississippi Democratic party.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, leader of the state's Democrats, had hailed Stevenson as the "best friend the South has among the announced candidates."

That was before Stevenson's latest statement.

After the former Illinois governor spoke up, reporters in Chicago asked Coleman about reports Stevenson's camp claimed Mississippi's 22 convention votes leaned toward Stevenson.

"There is a great deal of basis for that," Coleman said. "Or was. Up to this date, he has been the best friend the south has had."

Another delegate, House Speaker Walter Sillers of Rosedale, where Negroes outnumber whites two to one, said:

"If Stevenson advocates the Democratic platform contain a plank approving the decision of the Supreme Court, he is diametrically opposed to my views and I can't go along with him in that respect."

Circuit Judge M. M. McGowan of Jackson, one of the founders of the Mississippians for States' Right movement, exploded:

"That's just what could be expected of him (Stevenson). He's the leading integrationist in the country. He's an intellectual of the socialist type. I've always said that."

(Continued On Page 5, Sec. II)

Mississippians - - -

(Continued from Page One)

McGowan, whom Coleman "read out" of the Democratic party for his states' rights action, said Stevenson's "moderate" views are "just a ruse. Look at his record."

The jurist said he believes "every Southern state should refuse to take part in any form of platform that contains civil rights. If they don't refuse, there'll be an implied acceptance of the plank."

He suggested the Southern states "walk out" if a civil rights plank is included in the platform.

Ross Barnett, of Jackson, twice an also-ran for the governor's chair, said he was "not surprised at anything he (Stevenson) says.

"It's apparent that he has sold out to the minority pressure groups in the larger cities. He has turned his back on the South. . . No true southerner will compromise his principles on segregation."

Former Gov. Hugh White, a delegate who has said he won't be able to attend the convention, put his faith in Gov. Coleman.

Declining comment, White said, "I think Coleman will take care of our situation. They'll hear from him."

And Secretary of State Heber Ladner, another delegate, said he was "unalterably opposed to including in the platform endorsement of the Supreme Court decision on integration. Until the platform is finally adopted, we won't know for whom we will cast our vote."

Mississippi, otherwise uninstructed, is bound to cast its 22 votes in a bloc.

Hayden Campbell, a state senator representing the Fourth District, said in Detroit, "To place too much confidence in Stevenson's southern friendship is foolish thinking. His use of the National Guard as Governor of Illinois to force integration in Cicero and his use of armed force in Southern Illinois in a similar case is a matter of public record.

"This should be sufficient answer to the question of what his actions would be as President of the United States. His militant support of the left of center liberals in this country who spend half of their time backing his candidacy and the other half backing Communist causes certainly puts a question mark on his thinking concerning many vital questions facing our nation today.

"I am not up here to do my best to nominate Adlai Stevenson, to do so in my opinion would be a dereliction of duty as I see it, to my state and nation. If Stevenson is the best man the Democratic party can nominate then I think the time for the South to unite behind a favorite son, throw the election in the House of representatives and rescue our government from the radicals and minority groups who are fast destroying its foundation. It might be wise to count Mississippi's 22 votes before they are committed to Stevenson.

Other reaction was of the "wait and see" variety.

State Treasurer Bob Morrow, Tom Tubb of West Point and Bidwell Adam of Gulfport, chairman of the Democratic State Executive Committee, were bewildered by Stevenson's statement.

They all said they would wait until they get to Chicago and "see the platform."

Chat. Times 8/10

THE CHATTANOOG

SOUTHERNER SEES DESIRE FOR UNITY

Miss Politics

Coleman Says Democrats Want to Respect Views of Region on Rights

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 9 (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman said today Democratic party leaders in Chicogo are "very anxious to have a civil rights plank the South can live with."

In a statement issued through his Jackson office, the governor declared:

"Our position for the first time in 12 years is certainly receiving friendly, sympathetic consideration." He called it a "contrast" with previous treatment of the South.

He said:

"There is no doubt in my mind that the leadership of the party is very anxious to have a civil rights plank the South can live with. They, of course, know we are unalterably opposed to many of the thoughts which have been advanced by liberals and radicals from the North and East. In return for their consideration we are trying to realize too that they have their problems in their states."

Coleman, only Deep South governor on the platform committee which has been meeting all week in Chicago in advance of next week's national convention, has been named to the 10-member subcommittee to work out the civil rights plank.

'Greatly Encouraged

"I am greatly encouraged by the friendliness and consideration uniformly shown the Southern members (of the platform committee) by those from all the rest of the nation," he said.

"Chiefly because of the attitude of the South, I think, no member of the platform committee to this hour has made any public statements or demands as to what the civil rights plank should contain.

"This is in great contrast with experience in previous conventions wherein the matter was actually settled before the convention ever met, and Southern delegates received practically no consideration at all."

The civil rights plank came up for consideration today, with former President Harry Truman among the witnesses. Coleman said he was "sure the people of Mississippi will be pleased to learn" that Truman, "although twice asked the question, did not advocate going beyond the 1948 or 1952 planks on the subject, and said he was willing to leave the matter to the good judgment of the committee."

GOV. HODGES OPPOSES

States' Righters Move Into Action

Miss. Press Politics

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Aug. 8 (AP)—State Sen. Earl Evans, rejecting Adlai Stevenson for president but conceding he probably will be nominated, today advocated a states' rights slate of presidential electors on the Mississippi Democratic ballot.

The president pro tem of the Senate, speaking at the Neshoba County fair, declared:

1. "There is no possibility for the South to receive any help from either national political party as a result of the presidential election."

2. "Our fight for preservation of segregation, states' rights and all other high principles should be conducted within the Democratic party. . . We cannot afford two strong political parties, much less a third party."

3. Therefore, the Mississippi Democratic convention should be re-convened and name two slates

See Page Eleven, Column Four

STATES' RIGHTERS MOVE INTO ACTION

From Page One

of presidential electors. . . "One slate to be pledged to vote for the national Democratic nominee and a second slate to be unpledged; this second slate should be given authority to vote for a states' rights candidate."

4. "It is altogether possible that several other Southern states" also will put an unpledged but states' rights slate of presidential electors on the ballot. Evans said "the ultimate goal would be to throw the election of a president into the national House of Representatives where each state would have one vote."

"Patriotic states' rights organizations are being formed in practically every state in the union," Evans declared.

Evans said his formula would give Mississippians "an opportunity to vote their conscientious convictions and still remain within the framework" of the Mississippi Democratic party.

The state senator, a Citizens-for-Eisenhower worker in 1952, was a principal speaker today at the county fair which, in 67 years, has built up an unusual tradition of political speeches.

Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss), Ross Barnett, Jackson attorney who made two races for governor, and Secretary of State Heber Ladner are among principal speakers tomorrow.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8 (AP)—A States' Rights leader said today voters who wish to kick over their party's traces would be welcomed by groups in 26 states.

Kent Courtney of New Orleans, acting secretary of the Louisiana States' Rights party, said he believed a Southern bolt was possible and he and other independent party advocates had been working "so the South won't be alone like it was in 1948."

Courtney said 17 states outside the South have an independent party framework to catch dissident voters, in addition to nine Southern states.

Coordinated States' Rights movements, he said, range from Massachusetts to California.

The Louisiana States' Righter said he had been appointed "coordinator of new parties for the national committee for the new party," and had toured much of the nation in recent weeks in efforts to fit together the various movements.

8-9-56 Sentinel

WINSTON-SALEM, NORTH CAROLINA

'J. P. Will Win'

'Suave' Coleman Speaks for South

By TIM PARKER

JACKSON, Miss. (AP).—The street-corner talk in Mississippi is that J. P. will win for the South at Chicago.

J. P. is James Plemon Coleman, Mississippi's eloquent 42-year-old governor. "At Chicago" is a capsule phrase often heard whenever two Mississippians meet. They're talking about the fight to keep the Democratic National Convention from doing things the South doesn't want.

The South doesn't want any interference with its right to segregate the races and say who can vote. She also doesn't want a presidential candidate who believes otherwise.

Coleman, a onetime plowboy whose 6-foot-2 frame is still tight-muscled, is in some ways well set up to speak for the South. He is a militant segregationist, an able constitutional lawyer, a loyal Democrat and he could talk a hound dog into sharing his meal with a raccoon.

As a Deep South governor sitting on the platform committee—which will decide, among other things, on a civil rights plank—Coleman's goal at Chicago is to keep the South, and particularly Mississippi, in the Democratic party without any compromise on segregation and state's rights.

He won the right to make the fight—and some say he also will have to take the responsibility for its outcome — by putting down a a states rights rebellion at the state Democratic convention. The states righters wanted a date set for a recess convention at which Mississippi Democrats could jump the party traces if they disliked the party's presidential nominee. Coleman spiked the move, but made it plain that he's not rushing into anything.

Some of his recent outspoken quotes:

"I know the Democratic party, with all its shortcomings, is the best friend of the South."

But he added: "They could do something (at the convention) which would make it impossible for Mississippi to support the nominee. Mississippi will take no 'loyalty pledge' to support the nominee before seeing who he is."

"I do not now favor the Negro voting in Mississippi. He is wholly unprepared to assume this responsibility."

But he added that Mississippi is spending a large sums to give the Negro "equal education and opportunity."

"I am opposed to any form of coercion by the federal government. If federal bayonets held over the heads of a prostrate people from 1865 to 1877 couldn't do it, how do you suppose it could be done now?"

But he added: "Spending our time cussing the North is no way of getting anywhere."

"Mississippi is the only state which hasn't given an inch on segregation. She never will."

But he added: "Mississippi is a state of laws, not of violence."

The governor is not a member of the Citizens Councils, formed in the South to oppose integration.

Coleman, who will head the state's 22-vote delegation to next week's convention, still leans toward Adlai Stevenson as the Democratic nominee, although he and others are not happy about Stevenson's civil rights stand.

"Of those actively running," he said, "Stevenson appears to be the best friend of the South." The delegation is bound to vote as a bloc, but otherwise is uncommitted. Stevenson earlier this week called for "unequivocal approval" in the party platform of the Supreme Court's school segregation decision.

By heritage and inclination, Coleman is both a devout Southerner and a devout Democrat.

"I remember when Daddy saddled up his horse and rode through the rain to vote for Al Smith when everyone else wouldn't do it because Smith was a Catholic," he recalled in a recent interview.

But there was no smile when he recalled how the Yankees ravaged the Ackerman, Miss., farm which still is in his family or the South Carolina home from which his ancestors set forth to help settle Mississippi.

"I've got as many relatives in Confederate graveyards as any man living," he said. "My great uncle, Billy Coleman, went to the Confederate Army from Winston County with 180 men. Eleven were left at the surrender."

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Sunday, August 12, 1956.

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government. I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson

The Calm Voice

POLITICS, MISS

THE ONLY calming voice we have heard so far from the pre-convention activities in Chicago has been that of Governor Coleman. Mississippi's chief executive seems to have become quite a leading figure as the spokesman of the South, and he spoke calmly and with great confidence in his report to the people Friday night.

We particularly liked his reply to a jibe that he was serving as a member of an "integrated committee" to work on the Democratic party platform. He said he did not name the committee and had no control over who was named to it, and he had heard no accusations that our state representatives, such as John Bell Williams, were serving in an "integrated House of Representatives" just because there were Negroes serving in it.

Back home Senator Earl Evans says he will resign as an elector if Stevenson is nominated. He would accept either Stuart Symington, Lyndon Johnson or Harry Byrd as a candidate. Since none of them have any more of a chance to be nominated than Happy Chandler, and haven't from the beginning, we wonder why Senator Evans ever took the job in the first place.

MISSISSIPPI VOTERS BACK 2 CONGRESSMEN

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 29 (AP) —Reps. John Bell Williams and William Colmer Tuesday won renomination by margins of more than 15-1 on the basis of incomplete returns from Mississippi's Democratic primary.

Williams, 39, seeking his fifth term in Congress, ran far ahead of Wallace Hailey, 34-year-old flight instructor from Crystal Springs.

Unofficial returns from 181 of 292 precincts in the Fourth District gave Williams 7,758 votes to 503 for Hailey.

Colmer, 66, who sought his 13th term, drew far ahead of Wayne L. McClure, 40-year-old Hattiesburg salesman.

Unofficial returns from 275 of 366 precincts gave Colmer 19,069 votes to 1,170 for McClure.

INDEX

AMUSEMENTS ..... Pages 8-9, Sec. I
CLASSIFIED ADS .... Pages 5-7, Sec. II
COMICS ..... Pages 10-11, Sec. I
EDITORIAL ..... Page 12, Sec. I
FINANCIAL ..... Page 4, Sec. II
MISS. NOTEBOOK ..... Page 6, Sec. I
RADIO LOG ..... Page 8, Sec. I
SOCIETY ..... Pages 9, 13 & 15, Sec. I
SPORTS .....Pages 1-3 & 8, Sec. II
TV LOGS ..... Page 8, Sec. I

Established 1837 Clarion Ledger 8-15-56

Southerner

Spencer GOP Group Loses In Contest To Obtain Seating

By GENE WIRTH

E. O. Spencer's Mississippi Republican were packing their bags in San Francisco last night for the long, hot trek back home.

The contest committee of the Republican National Committee voted unanimously late Tuesday to seat a split delegation from the opposing Mississippi factions. The committee verdict gave eight seats to Perry Howard's Black and Tan faction and seven seats to the Spencer group.

Mr. Spencer told The Clarion-Ledger by telephone that his group was refusing to be seated in that manner and would "walkout" and return home unless the verdict was upset Wednesday when it went before the full committee.

He frankly admitted that there was little chance of such an upset and said that he expects to be back in Jackson Thursday.

Mr. Spencer, who, as head of the state Citizens for Eisenhower Committee, delivered 39.6 percent of the state's popular vote to the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket four years ago, viewed the situation darkly. He feels that the action dashed any hopes that the Republican party may have for establishment of a two-party system in the state and will greatly hinder any Mississippi effort for Eisenhower this year.

Mr. Spencer's future political plans are indefinite at this time. He said that he expects to call the Citizens for Eisenhower leaders together as soon as he returns and will be governed by their decision.

Spencer earlier had revealed that the Eisenhower campaign would be conducted within the framework of the Citizens for Eisenhower Committee.

Although defeated and unrecognized by the national party, the Spencer group does have state recognition and control of the party's label on the ballot.

During the Eisenhower administration, the Spencer forces have handled all patronage matters in Mississippi.

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Wednesday, August 15, 1956.

Misinformed On Mississippi

IT is always with something of a shock, however often it happens, to read a mistatement of fact about Mississippi in cold black and white print. It is just as bad to have someone over-simplify an issue or a situation that concerns us.

We have come upon two such instances this week. The first was in a national magazine which contained an article which purported to tell the "real story" about the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. In the article was a statement that in "most Southern states, except Mississippi" Negroes vote, leaving the clear untruth that no Negroes vote in Mississippi. If the rest of the article was as inaccurate as that statement, the NAACP need take no bows for it.

Then on Tuesday a press story out of San Francisco said that "the Mississippi squabble" in which two factions seek to be seated as the lawful delegation to the Republican convention, "mainly boils down to a fight between the regular Republican delegation and a group of 'Lily Whites' which is opposed to Negro members on the delegation."

As we recall the "Lily Whites" even took a Negro delegate along on one of their futile trips to a Republican convention, but that is not the real point. The fact is that the Perry Howard "regulars" are not representative of the registered Republicans of Mississippi, who in 1952 showed unusual strength. That is the real issue in the credentials fight in San Francisco. Not that we expect any different than usual outcome. But it is difficult for people outside Mississippi to understand what is happening here when important issues are so summarily understated.

Politics, Mississippi
(1956)

Miss. Democrats Enjoy Added Accord; Leaders Back Adlai

Republicans Suffer Setback In Convention Delegation Ruling

Politics Miss

8/26/56

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON ,Miss., Aug. 25—Mississippi is back in the Democratic party "bag" in a big way.

Its officials have publicly endorsed the Stevenson-Kefauver presidential ticket in the November general election. Some of them are ready to take the stump in its behalf.

That's a far cry from the positions of those who lead the 1948 states' rights bolt and others who backed the Republican ticket in 1952 for its largest vote in Mississippi history — nearly 40 per cent of the total cast.

Although admittedly not entirely satisfied with the party's candidates and platform, Mississippi officials minimize that position on grounds that preservation of Southern congressional committee chairmanships is of more importance to the state and the South in general.

MISSISSIPPI

They look upon the chairmanships as possibly the last stronghold against speedy enactment of drastic anti-South legislation. Even then, they are frank to admit it may be difficult for the Southerners to hold on to those assignments in the organization of the new Congress.

Key chairmanship around which the Mississippians are rallying is that of the powerful Senate Judiciary Committee held by Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi. Sen. Eastland was the target in an unsuccessful effort to unseat the delegation to the Chicago National Convention in order to "throw" him out of the party and his seniority in its congressional ranks.

The party leaders' support for the national ticket has already been felt by a revived states' rights movement. One of its members estimated that a slate of independent electors qualified by the States' Righters will "do well to get 20 per cent of the votes" in contrast to the 88 per cent a similar ticket polled in 1948. That's about 10 per cent more than the pro-Truman electors got in that election.

As for the Republicans, their electors can count on far less than the 40 per cent they received in 1952. They will likely do well to beat the 2 per cent given that ticket in 1948.

To Tell Course

The "toe-hold" gained by the Republicans in 1952 was lost when the present convention refused to give full recognition to the "lily-white" wing headed by hotel executive E. O. Spencer of Jackson. Instead, the "black-and-tans" under leadership of Perry Howard, Negro attorney of Washington and Jackson, won a majority of the 15 seats and the right to cast the Mississippi vote in the convention.

Mr. Spencer returned to Jackson and is soon to announce his course. He headed the Citizens for Eisenhower in 1952 which was made up mostly of Democrats who didn't like what their party had to offer.

On his return, Mr. Spencer said the convention "had sacrificed some of the real friends of the party in Mississippi for political expediency in order to cater to minority pressure groups in other states."

In contrast, Gov. J. P. Coleman returned from the Democratic convention with a feeling that the South had regained some of its voice in the party councils in defeating a drastic civil rights plank offered by Northern liberals. As adopted, the plank did not go all-out for the Supreme Court's school integration decisions, nor did it support "force" as an implementing feature.

Governor Coleman also pointed out that strong Northern party leaders, anxious for unity, had fought the South's "moderate" position on the floor against equally as strong Northern liberals.

Governor Coleman has publicly announced his full support for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket, and has extended Mr. Stevenson an invitation to keynote a planned Jackson Day fund-raising dinner, as well as for a campaign address.

Official Support

Mississippi's two senators, both of whom hold key committee assignments, likewise have thrown their support to the ticket, along with the congressional delegation.

Senators Eastland and John C. Stennis both have come out flat-footedly for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket with no reservations. They claim a Democratic Congress and Democratic administration are for the best interest of the South.

Most of the state's officials have also thrown in their backing for the party ticket. They include Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin, Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson, Secretary of State Heber Ladner and State Treasurer Robert Morrow.

On the other hand, State Sen. Earl Evans Jr., of Canton, the third-ranking official has quit as a Democratic presidential elector. He has not, however, endorsed the States' rights or Republican positions.

Meanwhile, a provision for reconvening the state convention is not expected to be used. Sentiment is against a second meeting of the July convention at which Governor Coleman beat down an effort to set a date certain for the "after Chicago" meeting.

Bidwell Adam, chairman of the Democratic state executive committee, has said he will not call it in session to determine whether a majority favor recall of the convention. He indicated a majority of the 18 members are opposed to it.

8-27-56
8-28-56

Colmer, Williams Win Re-election to Congress

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 27 (AP)—Rep. William Colmer will return for a 13th term in Congress and Rep. John Bell Williams will have a fifth term on the basis of incomplete returns from Mississippi's Democratic primary.

Chancellor Thomas Ott of the 10th Chancery Court, who was appointed to a vacancy, appeared to have won the rest of the term in the other major office at stake in Tuesday's election, one of the quietest in years.

Politics Miss Gen Primary 8/28/56

One Act May Have Caused Both Of These Headlines

The appearance and wording of two headlines in one Times-Picayune front-page column may have been coincidental but the combination is of amusing interest and spurs speculation of the possible fact that one GOP convention decision and action may have inspired and connected both stories.

The first headline proclaims: "Mississippi GOP Seats Together," and the story reports the placing of the two Mississippi GOP delegations in one block of seats.

The second headline over a separated story printed just under the first announces: "Mississippi's GOP Vote to Fall — Howard."

And that Howard, of course, was Perry W. Howard, Negro attorney and Republican national committeeman.

The Mississippi vote may enhance his reputation as a political prophet, and the seating of the two delegations together may have influenced the vote.

Clarion Ledger 8/26/56

1956
Politics - Miss

State Righters Pick Electors In Mississippi

8/22

Constit

Politics Texas

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 21 (AP)—Mississippians for States Rights, at a mass meeting which drew a crowd of from 150 to 200, today blasted nominees of both major political parties as "obnoxious" and selected their own presidential electors.

Despite the states righters' strong stand for segregation and the Southern way of life, their eight presidential electors were pledged to vote only "their conscientious feelings" in choosing a president and vice president.

The delegates girded themselves for the task of obtaining the necessary 1,000 signatures on the petition to place their electors on the Nov. 6 general election ballot.

The eight electors are: Dr. Monte Q. Ewing of Amory, John Ben Perry of Grenada, State Sen. Thomas Williams of Lexington, W. B. Fontaine of Jackson, John C. McLaurin of Brandon, Dudley W. Conner of Hattiesburg, J. H. Peebles of Greenwood and Clay B. Tucker of Woodville.

RESIGNS—Senator Earl Evans, Jr., of Canton, president pro tem of the Mississippi Senate, has submitted his resignation as a Democratic presidential elector to the State Democratic Executive Committee.

BLASTS NOMINEES

Earl Evans Quits As Demo Elector

Sen. Earl Evans of Canton announced Wednesday his resignation as a Democratic presidential elector with a blast at the party's candidates and platform.

"When I was chosen as a Democratic presidential elector at the State Democratic Convention July 16th," Evans said, "I made a pledge that in event I could not conscientiously support the nominees of the National Democratic Party, I would resign as an elector representing Mississippi.

Evans, president pro tempore of the State Senate and Misissippi's third-ranking official by virtue of being second in succession to the governor's chair, added that "I cannot conscientiously support the nominees of the National Democratic Party."

"Neither can I find even a puny excuse to go along with the platform adopted in Chicago and upon which these nominees are now running," he added.

Evans, who was a presidential elector for Eisenhower four years ago, made his resignation in a letter to Chairman Bidwell Adam of the state Democratic Executive Committee.

"I devoutly believe in the principles of the Democratic Party of Mississippi which were set forth and unanimously adopted at the same convention which elected me as a Democratic elector," he wrote. "But because of the attitude of a number of our Mississippi leaders in the party, I now find it impossible to vote my honest conscientious convictions and remain an elector pledged to the National nominees.

AN OPEN MIND

"I have listened, with an open mind, to the urging of friends who, I am sure, are conscientiously concerned with the seniority standing of our Senators and Congressmen in the Congress. I am advised that these representatives of Mississippi and her people in Washington have been threatened with party Discipline — with the removal of their seniority status — if they bolt the National Democratic Party.

"No one is more concerned than I with regard to the status of our Senators and Congressmen. I have followed the work of each in Washington. They have done a good job, often under severe handicaps, in fighting for Mississippi and her people.

"I fully realize that with respect to socalled civil rights, both major parties are following the line of political expediency in appealing to Negro votes in the heavy voting states.

"I am convinced, however, that the political bosses of both these parties have discovered that the Supreme Court's Black Monday decision is not as popular with the masses of the people as they thought it was before our highest court usurped the prerogatives of Congress to legislate and the right of the people to amend the constitution, in handing down the punitive edict. . . .

A HEAVY HEART

"Personally, I do not feel that the threat to the seniority standing of our Mississippi Senators and Congressmen is as great as it has been pictured by those who say we must stick with the Democratic Party, regardless. . . .

"I am convinced, before God, that the current threat to the party seniority standing of our Senators and Congressmen is of minor importance, when the principles involved are so vital to our people. .

"With a heavy heart and a fervent prayer to God Almighty for the salvation of the system of government that has made these United States the greatest nation in the world, I am submitting to the Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee my resignation as a presidential elector."

EDITORIAL PAGE

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Publisher
T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Editor

State Chief Justices Oppose Power Grab By Federal Court

At their annual national convention in Dallas recently, Chief Justices of the 48 state supreme courts have unanimously condemned present trends which concentrate all power in a centralized federal system of government. This trend, the distinguished jurists note, upsets the traditional balance between state and national powers.

The resolution adopted by the Chief Justices is all the more significant because they represent a wide divergency of opinion and philosophy. Some are Democrats, others are Republicans but all agree that today's attempted federal power grab is dangerous and contrary to Americn principles.

The state Justices are especially disturbed at the steady drift away from federal court decisions based on constitutional law. Instead, they complain, the U. S. Supreme Court is marching at a tangent to the fundamentals of our Declaration of Independence and Constitution. The highest tribunal's members regard themselves more as philosophers than as judges.

Eminently noteworthy has been the statement by Georgia's Chief Justice William H. Duckworth at the Dallas convention. He said that federal justices "use the welfare clause of the Constitution but they concentrate on the word 'welfare' and forget the other word —'general'. Thus they help any special group they please, including labor." (And, we might add, malcontent minorities.)

The U. S. Supreme Court has been a leader in an unwarranted drift toward centralized government, through decisions which consistently deprive states of their constitutional authority. Surely all thoughtful Americans must be impressed by the gravity of this trend, now that it has been unanimously denounced as unwholesome by Chief Justices of all 48 states.

Ole Miss Secretary Has A Fine Record

Alumni, students and friends of th University of Mississippi regret the retirement of beloved and capable W. C. "Chuck" Trotter as financial secretary, a position which he has filled with distinction since 1930.

During his nearly four decades of service with our state's institutions of higher learning, Mr. Trotter has served under four administrations. A native of Winona, he first went to Ole Miss in 1907 as a student. He was captain of the Red and Blue football team and president of the law school during his tenure as a student.

Active in state, civic and educational affairs, Mr. Trotter is a former president of the Southern Association of College and University Business Officers. He had spent three years as secretary of the State Building Commission prior to becoming financial secretary at Ole Miss and was a member of the Board of Trustees for seven years.

Mr. and Mrs. Trotter now retire to their delta farm near Indianola with the thanks and best wishes of Mississippians. "Chuck" [illegible] by the Univer-cal and Communistic groups and organizations that race segregation must be abolished in the United States to support the nation's respect and prestige in international affairs, that continuance of segregation in the United States is being used effectively in anti-American propaganda in the Far East, creating suspicion and distrust of the United States.

The report of an interview with Mrs. Kume in New Orleans after her Jackson visit during a tour of the South to study the desegregation controversy included this statement:

"Asked if she thought that people in Japan and other parts of the Far East were interested in the race problem in the United States, Mrs. Kume replied negatively.

"I don't think many people are interested in the problem," she said.

Her nationality, education, occupation and status all enhance the potential significance of her statement and make it all the more interesting.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Leters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters end to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Government Only As Good As Its Courts

Dear Editor: Woodrow Wilson, in his book, CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT, refers to "the famous sentence of the Massachusetts Bill of Rights, 'to the end that this may be a government of laws and not of men' ". He then adds: "There never was such a government", but also says that "Constitutional Government is par excellence a government of law."

He then explains that all government is a government of men, and is no better than the men to whom it is intrusted. He says: "The gauge of excellence is not the law under which officers act, but the conscience and intelligence with which they apply it, if they apply it all. And the courts do not escape the rule."

And this significant statement: "A constitutional government is as good as its courts; no better no worse. Its laws are only its professions. It keeps them, or does not keep them, in its courts."

MIXING NOT "LAW"

We are now having a glaring example of government by men, if you please by Federal judges. Regardless of what Adlai Stevenson says, the school mixing degree or ukase, is not lak. There is no law in all the Federal Statutes which says that the races must be mixed in schools. The word "school" is not in the Constitution. In fact there were no public schols when the Constitution was adopted.

The Great Republican Chief Justice, quoting Mr. Nixon, cannot tell us when a school is mixed, he can cite no law on the subject; he cannot tell us who is to do the mixing. Neither can he tell us what penalty is to be applied if he races are not mixed. He merely cites in isolated ignorance, viewing note, upsets the traditional balance between state and national powers.

The resolution adopted by the Chief Justices is all the more significant because they represent a wide divergency of opinion and philosophy. Some are Democrats, others are Republicans but all agree that today's attempted federal power grab is dangerous and contrary to Americn principles.

The state Justices are especially disturbed at the steady drift away from federal court decisions based on constitutional law. Instead, they complain, the U. S. Supreme Court is marching at a tangent to the fundamentals of our Declaration of Independence that federal justices "use the welfare clause of the Constitution but they concentrate on the word 'welfare' and forget the other word —'general'. Thus they help any special group they please, including labor." (And, we might add, malcontent minorities.)

The U. S. Supreme Court has been a leader in an unwarranted drift toward centralized government, through decisions which consistently deprive states of their constitutional authority. Surely all thoughtful Americans must be impressed by the gravity of this trend, now that it has been unanimously denounced as unwholesome by Chief Justices of all 48 states.

Ole Miss Secretary Has A Fine Record

Alumni, students and friends of th University of Mississippi regret the retirement of beloved and capable W. C. "Chuck" Trotter as financial secretary, a position which he has filled with distinction since 1930.

During his nearly four decades of service with our state's institutions of higher learning, Mr. Trotter has served under four administrations. A native of Winona, he first went to Ole Miss in 1907 as a student. He was captain of the Red and Blue football team and president of the law school during his tenure as a student.

Active in state, civic and educational affairs, Mr. Trotter is a former president of the Southern Association of College and University Business Officers. He had spent three years as secretary of the State Building Commission prior to becoming financial secretary at Ole Miss and was a member of the Board of Trustees for seven years.

Mr. and Mrs. Trotter now retire to their delta farm near Indianola with the thanks and best wishes of Mississippians. "Chuck" Trotter will be sorely missed by the University but he can take pride in his contributions to education and in the large number of lasting friendships made there during many fruitful years of service.

Sound Formula For Successful Business

Our state and national economy can expand only if advertising helps to create demands for new services and products, according to a distinguished authority in the sales and promotion field.

Fairfax M. Cone, famous Illinois executive, made this not-surprising declaration at a meeting last week of a journalism association in Chicago. He added that advertising must concentrate on creating public interest rather than merely stressing price.

Of course Mr. Cone is right on both counts. To successfully market new products or increase the sale of established ones, systematic advertising is needed to do the best possible job.

Successful merchandisers have long been aware of basic points which Mr. Cone lists as all-important. As to the best type of advertising, records of long experience clearly show that more sales and more customers can be secured through newspaper advertising than any other media.

Many Not Interested In The Race Problem

One statement credited to Mrs. Ai Kume, president of the Women's Bar Association of Japan and recently a Jackson visitor, may not only interest many Jacksonians but may also be of possible national interest and significance.

It seems to amount to a contradiction of vehement charges and allegations by radical and Communistic groups and organizations that race segregation must be abolished in the United States to support the nation's respect and prestige in international affairs, that continuance of segregation in the United States is being used effectively in anti-American propaganda in the Far East, creating suspicion and distrust of the United States.

The report of an interview with Mrs. Kume in New Orleans after her Jackson visit during a tour of the South to study the desegregation controversy included this statement:

"Asked if she thought that people in Japan and other parts of the Far East were interested in the race problem in the United States, Mrs. Kume replied negatively.

"I don't think many people are interested in the problem," she said.

Her nationality, education, occupation and status all enhance the potential significance of her statement and make it all the more interesting.

THE NEIGHBOR

ernment is a government of men, and is no better than the men to whom it is intrusted. He says: "The gauge of excellence is not the law under which officers act, but the conscience and intelligence with which they apply it, if they apply it all. And the courts do not escape the rule."

And this significant statement: "A constitutional government is as good as its courts; no better no worse. Its laws are only its professions. It keeps them, or does not keep them, in its courts."

MIXING NOT "LAW"

We are now having a glaring example of government by men, if you please by Federal judges. Regardless of what Adlai Stevenson says, the school mixing degree or ukase, is not lak. There is no law in all the Federal Statutes which says that the races must be mixed in schools. The word "school" is not in the Constitution. In fact there were no public schols when the Constitution was adopted.

The Great Republican Chief Justice, quoting Mr. Nixon, cannot tell us when a school is mixed, he can cite no law on the subject; he cannot tell us who is to do the mixing. Neither can he tell us what penalty is to be applied if he races are not mixed. He merely sits in isolated ignorance, viewing the evil his works have wrought.

In Tennessee, the Federal judge, a man, not law, has orderd the schools in Clinton, Tenn. to be mixed. Is the Principal to be made to mix the races, or is it the Trustees, or the Town Officers, or perchance the parents? Blindly he undertakes, as a substitute for law, an injunction, and the penalty is such as he may fix in his anger or frustration. One man has been sentenced to jail for one year. Why not make it ten years, or fifty years? There is no law.

Several decades ago there was a great hue and cry against "rule by injunction" in the case of trade unions. Congress stopped the practice.

NO PRECEDENT

The Great Republican Chief Justice could cite no law in his edict; he could cite no court decision, but had to resort to Gunnar Myrdal, a Swede and an alleged Socialist. The Federal Courts have upheld separate schools since the Civil War. In 1883 it declared the Civil Rights Bills of the Reconstruction Era void. Separate schools were established by the carpetbaggers and scalawags, in Mississippi. The carpentbagger sheriff of my home county, Yazoo, states in his book, that in Yazoo County they had established, in 1870, 14 schools for white children and 6 schools for Negro children. Incidentally, this sheriff, A. T. Morgan, was married to "a nigger school marm", as he descibed her, in Jackson, on Yazoo street one half block East of Galloway Memorial Church. Date Aug. 3, 1870.

The great men of early America were fearful of usurpation of power by the President, Congess or the Supreme Court. Jefferson was especially harsh in his writings on the Court, and boldly urged impeachment. Among his many adverse comments is this famous statement: "They are then in fact the corps of sappers and miners, steadily working to undermine the independent rights of the states".

IMPOSING LIST

There is an imposing list of cases where the court has struck down the reserved rights of the state. In a case from Hammond, La., it was held that a hamburger joint which sold to passing motorists from other states was engaged in interstate commerce. The process is proceeding at an accelerated pace. The next attack will be to strike out state laws against inter-marriage. W. E. DuBose, lists that as the first item, in his listing of "What The Negro Wants."

If we are to survive we must fight NOW, not four years hence.

A. S. Coody
776 North West Street

Ath-Const-Sept 14-56

States Rights Electors Filed In Mississippi

Politics - Miss

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 13 (AP)—Mississippians for States Rights, an offshoot of the Democratic party, today qualified an independent slate of electors pledged only to states rights and segregation.

The secretary of state's office said three attorneys, states rights secretary Russell Moore and Sebastian Moore of Jackson and John McLaurin of Brandon, filed the papers which included a 1,400-signature petition.

The eight electors were identified as Dr. Monte Q. Ewing of Amory, John Ben Perry of Grenada, State Sen. Thomas Williams of Lexington, W. B. Fontaine of Jackson, John C. McLaurin of Brandon, Dudley W. Conner of Hattiesburg, J. H. Peebles of Greenwood and Clay Tucker of Woodville.

The States Rights group now must qualify under the state's Subversive Activities Act by swearing it does not plan to overthrow the U.S. government by force. The state attorney general must approve the slate for printing on the ballot for the Nov. 6 general election.

The States Righters are holding their national convention in Memphis, Tenn., under the permanent chairmanship of Mississippi State Sen. Earl Evans of Canton who resigned as a Democratic elector because he could not support Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver.

State Board Eyes Color 'Breakdown'

Clarion-Ledger 9-6-56

Politics - Miss

(By The Associated Press)

Mississippi's State Sovereignty Commission Wednesday launched an investigation into breakdown of color bars in Federal institutions in the state.

The step was approved at a secretive two-hour meeting of the commission set up to preserve the state's "way of life" — principally segregation.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, who ushered reporters out of the meeting at the start and gave them a brief oral statement afterward, said a three-man committee was named to make the probe.

It is headed by Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson. The other members are State Sen. Earl Evans of Canton, president pro tem of the Senate, and Rep. William H. Johnson of Decatur.

The governor told reporters the committee "is going into executive (closed) session because we've got some things to talk about, like the V-A hospital, on which we want to be able to talk freely."

He referred apparently to a controversy set off this summer when a Vicksburg veteran complained that his wife had been assigned a room in the Veterans hospital here from which she could see Negro male patients across the hall.

The hospital, though confirming it is integrated in accordance with Federal policy, denied the woman was given a room near one occupied by Negroes. The VA hospital manager said the adjacent rooms and the one across the hall were occupied by whites.

The governor declared "no particular facility was pinpointed" during the commission's two-hour discussion.

P. O. PROBE

State Times 9/13/56

Politics - Miss

Johnson Accused Of Being Tyrant

WASHINGTON (UP) — Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield has accused Sen. Olin D. Johnson (D-S.C.) of "dictatorial misuse" of senatorial power.

Johnson is chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee which opened hearings Tuesday in Louisville, Ky., on the 1953 dismissal of Assistant Postmaster Herman Schmeing.

Summerfield said the hearing is "part of a witch-hunt, politically animated and designed to fool the public by striving for newspaper headlines based on inuendoes."

The investigation, he said; "was a shocking example of dictatorial misuse of senatorial investigating power, a travesty on justice, and a waste of the taxpayers money which should be stopped."

Summerfield said in a statement Wednesday that his department was not advised of the "Star Chamber" hearing and that Johnston could have obtained information about the case by asking the department for it.

Summerfield said Schmeing was dismissed from his job with the department in Louisville after "he had been given ample opportunity to reply to written charges" by the department in July, 1953.

He added that "significantly" Schmeing did not appeal the decision.

The department at that time charged Schmeing among other things with using his office to secure assignments for his friends and of using government personnel and material for construction projects at his home.

Not A Third Party

Delta-Dem. Times
9/21/56
Miss-Politics

250 In Cleveland Organize To Support States Rights Electors

By JAY MILNER
Staff Writer

CLEVELAND—About 250 Bolivar countians organized here Thursday night to support the States Rights movement, described carefully as "not a third party but an attempt to defeat both major Presidential candidates and bring about a realignment of the nation's major political parties."

Mrs. Florence Sillers Ogden of Rosedale was elected chairman of the first Bolivar county judicial district and J. W. McClellan of Cleveland was named chairman of the second judicial district's organization. Ben F. Mitchel of Cleveland was selected treasuurer and W. B. Alexander Jr. of Cleveland was chosen secretary.

Keynote speaker at the county-wide rally—the first of several scheduled in the state—was state Senator Earl Evans of Madison county, who was openly a strong sympathizer of the States Rights movement even before he resigned as state Democratic elector shortly after the national convention at Chicago.

Objectives

Evans, who backed the Republican ticket four years ago, listed the objectives of the new States Rights organization as:

1. "To give the Constitutional rights of the states back to the states."
2. To Preserve segregation.
3. To make U. S. immigration laws stricter. "Immigrants entering this county contributed immeasurably to the problems now confronting the South. Enough aliens have come into this nation during the past 10 years to equal the population of the entire state of Mississippi. And to a large degree—there are some immigrants who are fine people—they join the radical left wing groups which are fighting the South.
4. To curb the U. S.'s "foreign give away program."
5. To promote free enterprise by "getting the government out of those fields which should be operated by taxpayers."

Evans denied that the States Rights movement is a third party. "Our immediate objective," he said, "is to throw the election of a President into the House of Representatives where each state will have one vote. Those who say it can't be done have a defeatist attitude. It was done in 1884 and in 1948 we lacked less than 15,000 votes winning in two states which would have done it again."

"'Our ultimate goal," Mississippi's third ranking state official said, "is to create a realignment of the national parties, not the creation of a third national party."

He added, "No matter what some of our state officials may say, the way Mississippi votes will not affect the seniority of our Congressmen."

Hits Reuther

Evans blasted the platforms of the national parties as "carbon copies of each other." He called labor leader Walter Reuther the "darling of Adlai Stevenson's campaign" and "an ex-Communist at best."

He quoted from a letter written by Reuther from Russia in the early '30s as urging U. S. labor leaders to "fight for a Soviet America."

"Now I wouldn't put it beyond the power of the almighty God to reform any man," Evans declared. "But Reuther is an atheist and an atheist can't be reformed. . . And this same Walter Reuther, a socialist and fcrmer Communist at least, will be the most powerful man in Washington if Adlai is elected."

Evans was introduced by Senator W. B. Alexander of Cleveland. Also on the speaker's "rostrum" in the Circuit Court room were Russ D. Moore II, Jackson attorney who is secretary of the Mississippi States Rights group.

Miss. Voters Get Wide Choice; Ballot Lists 4 Elector Slates

Democratic Group Gets Top Spot; States' Rights Organization Included

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 22—Like its local sentiment-governed state prohibition laws which satisfy the drys as well as the wets, Mississippi is offering that same freedom of choice in the November election.

Definitely a state which seeks to please all segments, official approval has been given to four slates of presidential electors on the November ballot.

Top position has been assigned the eight Democratic electors pledged to the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket. State party leaders are confident of its victory.

Other slates to appear on the ballot, not necessarily in that order, are:

State - recognized Republican electors named by the all-white wing of the party.

The electors of the national convention recognized biracial Republican faction.

And the independent, unpledged electors qualified by a newly formed Mississippians for States Rights organization.

Two GOP Slates

Both Republican slates are pledged to the Eisenhower-Nixon candidacies. Leaders in the all-white faction are seeking an agreement similar to the one in 1952 when only one slate of Republican electors was on the ballot. It cornered nearly 40 per cent of the votes, a record in this once Democratic stronghold.

However, the 1952 slate of Republican electors were all Democrats who were dissatisfied with their party's nominees and ran under a state law permitting party-line switches in national elections without injury to their state party status.

That's one of the arguments being advanced by the all-white faction for the asserted political-wise single slate of electors.

Another is that since state law permits only one group to run under a party label, which is held by the all-white faction, it would be better politics to present one slate since the votes are not combined for a grand total for the candidates.

Proponents of the single slate also point out that the biracial electors, even though they are also all-white, cannot run under the Republican label, but as candidates of the Grand Old Party. That is the name taken after the former state-recognized Republican faction headed by Perry Howard, Negro attorney of Washington and Jackson, was beaten to the secretary of state's office by the all-whites in 1948 to gain exclusive title to the party name under the party registration statute.

The situation facing the all-white group this year, however, is far different from that four years ago. Many of the Democrats who joined in backing the Republican ticket in 1952 were staunch States Righters, many of whom are now supporting the States Rights electors. They are not satisfied with either the Republican or Democratic nominees or the platforms they are running on, especially with reference to segregation.

MISSISSIPPI

That is what faces E. O. Spencer, hotel executive of Jackson, who in 1952 as a Democrat formed the organization of "Democrats for Eisenhower," but who since has changed his party to Republican and is national committeeman for the all-white faction.

Mr. Spencer plans a meeting of the 1952 "Democrats for Eisenhower" to determine their present positions. Many of his 1952 leaders will be missing as they have joined the Mississippians for States Rights, while others have returned to the Democratic fold.

Meanwhile, Gov. J. P. Coleman, titular head of the Democratic Party in the state, and other leaders, have mapped an all-out statewide campaign in behalf of the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket. Headquarters are to be opened in Jackson, and speakers will take the stump in an effort to "wash out" the big 1952 Republican vote.

The Democrats have invited the States Righters to "return home without punishment."

Gov. Coleman said nothing will be done to "cause internal strife," and that he will not criticize the States Righters unless attacked first.

Bidwell Adam, the former lieutenant governor of Gulfport and now chairman of the Democratic state executive committee, has also invited those "who have strayed away" to return and "put their feet under our table." He said the States Righters are on a "sleeveless errand" without presidential candidates to vote for.

Since that statement, the States Righters have announced their electors, if victorious, will cast their votes for Coleman T. Andrews, the Virginia Democrat and former Internal Revenue commissioner, and former Republican Congressman Werdel of California.

'Third Party' Denial

Even with candidates other than those of the two major parties, the States Righters still insist theirs is not a "third party" movement. An effort in that direction failed at the recent nationwide States Rights convention held in Memphis.

State Democratic leaders are more concerned over the States Rights situation than they will admit. They recognize that many Mississippians are not pleased with the civil rights planks in both party platforms, as well as the candidates, and may "bolt" just to register their protest.

Indicative of that is the fact that the state's third-ranking official recently resigned as one of the Democratic electors and is heading the States Rights movement. He is State Sen. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, president pro tem of the Senate.

Another is the candidacy of State Sen. T. M. Williams Sr. of Lexington, as one of the independent, unpledged, States Rights electors, and the lead being taken by State Sen. W. B. Alexander Sr. of Cleveland, in the States Rights fight.

Determined to make a good showing, the States Righters formally opened their campaign at Cleveland in the Delta section Thursday night. Sen. Evans was the keynoter. They plan to conduct an information campaign to acquaint the voters with the records of the candidates of the two major parties, with special attention to their civil rights positions.

The States Righters qualified their slate of independent, unpledged electors with petitions signed by 4,000 qualified electors. They needed only 1,000 signatures.

'Eisencrats' Desert

Meanwhile, Will Wells, Jackson attorney, who was among the 1952 "Eisencrats," is a leader in the States' Rights movement, along with former Sen. L. B. Porter of Newton.

Former Gov. Hugh White, who led the 1948 States' Rights "bolt" of the national convention, is in the councils of those planning the all-out campaign for the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket.

Gov. Coleman, who bitterly opposed Tennessee Sen. Kefauver's nomination for the presidency and fought his nomination for the vice presidency, said in view of his nomination, he is going to back the Tennessean.

Coleman Says State Not Having Racial Strife; Is Prepared

ABERDEEN, Miss. (AP) — Gov. J. P. Coleman said his state of Mississippi, unlike Tennessee or Texas, has no racial strife because of planning.

He told the Monroe County Farm Bureau convention last night Mississippi is peaceful because:

1. Mississippi segregation policies are well known.
2. People who want to make trouble are not allowed to get a toehold.
3. Mississippians are in no mood for agitation.
4. New Mississippi laws will prevent the kind of trouble exhibited in Tennessee and Texas.

SNAKE-NAPER

DETROIT (UP) — A 70-year-old former carnival worker faced possible grand larceny charges today for snake-naping a seven-foot boa constrictor and carrying it about town wrapped around his waist.

STATES RIGHTERS LIST MISSISSIPPI ELECTORS

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 13 (AP)—Mississippians for States Rights, an offshoot of the Decocratic party, today qualified an independent slate of electors pledged only to states rights and segregation.

The secretary of state's office said three attorneys, States Rights Secretary Aussell Moore and Sebastian Moore of Jackson and John McLaurin of Brandon, filed the papers which included a 1,400-signature petition.

The States rights group now must qualify under the state's Subversive Activities Act by swearing it does not plan to overthrow the United States government by force. The state attorney general must approve the slate for printing on the ballot for the Nov. 6 general election.

Lesson In Politics

Delta Dem. Times 10-10-56

Miss Politics

You'd have to go a long way in Mississippi to find a better student of both history and of practical politics than Governor James Plemon Coleman, and he gave two excellent reasons this week for not throwing away a good vote on the States Righters.

The avowed purpose of defending segregation would not be served by such a throw-away vote in a national election, since it is the local and state officials who will or will not maintain segregation.

If by some long chance the States Righters won their point by throwing the election into the House of Representatives, this would not result in the election of a T. Coleman Andrews or a Senator Byrd — but a Republican..

And does that make sense for Mississippi?

Miss-Pol & Gov

The Christian Century

Mississippi Holds Segregation Line

Ed.

No Integration Permitted in Schools or at Polls—Louisiana Tightens Enrollment Requirements

BOONEVILLE, MISS., Sept. 25.—The racial front in Mississippi was relatively quiet as the fall school term opened; no attempts were made by Negroes to enter white schools. At a meeting of the Lee county white citizens' council Aug. 30, State Rep. George Payne Cossar of Tallahatchie county (scene of the Till trial) declared that the laws passed earlier this year by the Mississippi legislature will keep the state's schools segregated "for at least 50 years." Noting that though 60 per cent of Tallahatchie county is Negro not one of its Negroes votes, Cossar said: "The way to fight integration is to deny Negroes the right to vote." A small crowd attended the meeting. Former Congressman John Rankin did not even make a headline in the local paper with his charge that the Supreme Court decision on school integration was the result of a "communist conspiracy." Mississippi's white citizens' councils claim a membership of 80,000 in 62 of the state's 82 counties.

Louisiana's Public Schools Still Segregated 10-10-56 Christian Century

Louisiana's public schools remain segregated. Emile Wagner, a Roman Catholic layman, recently demanded that Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans reveal the names of the few parochial schools which have been integrated, but he received no official answer. By a 67-15 vote the Louisiana legislature tabled a bill which would have allowed the annual Sugar Bowl football game in New Orleans to provide segregated seating except in the section assigned to the visiting team, and granted permission for the visiting teams to be interracial. Jack Vermillion, state attorney general, has ruled that new college enrollees must present certificates of "good character," and that if any secondary school superintendent or principal signs such a certificate for a Negro intending to enter a white college he shall be subject to dismissal for "taking a step leading to integration." Over objections from some segregationist leaders, the attorney general held that the new rule does not apply to the 100 Negro graduate students already enrolled at the state university.

Democratic Delegation Abandons Plans for Recess Convention Miss Pol.

The delegation representing the regular Democratic party leadership in Mississippi, which was seated at the convention in Chicago over the protests of a rival delegation, returned in a chastened mood. Many of its members were for Eisenhower in 1952. It has abandoned its plans to hold a "recess convention"—unless Adlai Stevenson says something in the campaign to arouse its antagonism. Earl Evans, an Eisenhower elector in 1952, was forced to resign as a Democratic elector. He charged that Mississippi congressmen were told by Democratic leaders that they would lose their seniority in Washington if they bolted the national ticket, and said that the "regular" delegation was seated in Chicago on its promise not to bolt. Later Evans was chairman of the national "state's rights convention" in Memphis which endorsed T. Coleman Andrews for president. The McComb Enterprise pointed out that the national Democratic platform and the nominees' positions are in direct opposition to stands adopted by the state Democratic convention in July. The rival delegation which failed to get seated in Chicago claims victory nevertheless, in that plans for the recess convention were abandoned, the 1952 Eisenhower electors were dropped, and a statement of loyalty was issued by the seated delegation. Only two members of the official delegation attended the final convention session, presumably because of bitterness over the nomination of Estes Kefauver, and they did not vote for Stevenson.

Christian Century 10-10-56

Enthusiasm for Eisenhower Cooling 10-10-56 Miss. Pol. Christian Century

Ardor for Eisenhower cooled here when the "black and tan" Republican delegation from Mississippi was recognized at the San Francisco convention and when Perry Howard, Negro attorney, stayed on as Republican national committeeman from Mississippi. Dr. T. N. Howard, Mississippi Negro, has transcribed six speeches for use in the Republican campaign in New York. He is to head a drive to capture the New York Negro vote for the Republican ticket, stressing the baleful influence of Sen. James Eastland and the treatment of Negroes in he's playing "FAMILY GUARDIAN"...

Over

Politics & Govt
Mississippi
1956

Promise More 'Surprises'

Coleman Calls John Bell's 'Big Decision' A Snipehunt

Delta Democ. Times 10-23-56

Miss-Pol

By TIM PARKER

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Rep. John Bell Williams (D-Miss) switched to the States Rights camp last night and a leader in the splinter movement hinted today more surprises may be in store.

State Sen. Earl Evans of Canton, chairman of the States Righters' Mississippi Steering Committee, said:

"I think we have a chance of several of our leading Mississippi political figures voting with us before this campaign is over. I wouldn't like to mention names."

Gov. J. P. Coleman, who along with almost all public office holders here supports the Stevenson-Kefauver ticket, said "I regret exceedingly to see him (Williams) take off on this political snipehunt."

A "snipehunt" is a trick in which someone is stationed in the dark, holding a bag, while his "friends" scatter to hunt snipes which they promise to bring to him. The friends go home leaving the snipe hunter holding the bag.

Both Coleman and State Democratic Chairman Bidwell Adam took issue with the way Williams framed his announcement. Williams, declaring presidential candidates of both major parties advocate "amalgamation of the races," said in telecasts over six Southern stations:

Take Issue

"I shall support the independent Democratic electors in the November general election."

Pointing out the States Rights electors will be on the Mississippi ballot only as "independent and unpledged" and without party label, Coleman declared:

"Members of this independent slate are not independent Democrats but bolters who refuse to abide by the decision of the State Democratic Convention."

Adam, saying "I regret to see him as a Democratic candidate for Congress leaving his party," charged that Williams "is trying to give these independent electors a Democratic complexion when they are not in all fairness entitled to it."

Williams said in his television appearance:

"The candidates and platforms of both major political parties are dedicated, not only to a completely centralized form of government, but to the destruction of the integrity of white civilization in the South.

Race Issue

"Both Stevenson and Eisenhower have resolved publicly that they will use the full force of the executive branch to compel integration of white and Negro children into one public school system .... and openly advocate a complete amalgamtion of the races."

The congressman said "I am not unaware of the possibility that this declaration of conscience might conceivably bring an end to my political career."

Coleman, commenting on the speech, said "I trust that this act on the part of Congressman Williams will not cost him his committee assignments in Washington."

Evans, who resigned as a Democratic presidential elector to join the States Rights cause, said:

"I think Congressman Williams' courage and his forthright facing of the real issues confronting the people of Mississippi is going to give great impetus to our movement in Mississippi and throughout the nation."

Delta Demo Times 10-24-56

Pol-Miss

Beyond Reasonableness

ANY lingering hope that the States Rights leaders in Mississippi are reasonable men has gone glimmering in the wake of that organization's singular denunciation of Governor Coleman and regular Democratic leaders in the state.

Only one excerpt is necessary:

"Unless the governor and Mr. Wilhite can satisfactorily deny or disapprove these facts, we shall charge they have deserted the Democratic party of Mississippi and are tools of the Socialist, race-mixing, labor-dominated National Socialist party masquerading under the name Democratic."

Hooey. And speaking of masquerades, we suggest that folks who comment thusly ought to be measured for clown suits.

Letters to the Editors must be brief, ~~must be signed~~ (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Summarizes Stand For States Rights

Dear Editor:

The two issues of life and death importance to all Mississippians in the Presidential Election are Segregation and Civil Rights. All others are side issues.

The July 16th Convention of the Democratic Party of Mississippi declared among its chief principles its firm support of segregation and its positive opposition to the civil rights legislation which has been pending in the Congress. Under this legislation representatives of the NAACP, the American Civil Liberties Union, and other Communist inspired organizations, could roam over our state on Federal expense accounts, cause charges of unfainness to be made against our people, and then have them, and their books and records, carried before the Civil Rights Commission in Washington for hearings there. Also, the Federal Courts would for all practical purposes replace our State Courts on questions of voting.

"SOUTH'S ONLY WEAPON"

The platform of the national Democratic Party strongly supports integration and civil rights legislation. It also urges and end to the filibuster, the South's only weapon to prevent the passage of this legislation . The Democratic candidates have not only expressed their determination to carry out the platform, but both have commended the action of Governor Frank Clement in using troops to force integration in Tennessee.

The platform of the Republican Party, and its candidates, are as staunch for integration and civil rights as the national Democrats.

Only the States Rights Cause is opposed to the Integration Decision of the Supreme Court and the Civil Rights bills.

The States Rights ticket has a good chance to carry Virginia, South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, and thus throw the election into the House of Representatives where our demands for local operation of our own schools could be won.

But even should we not succeed ir throwing the election into the House of Representatives, in voting States Rights we shall speak the truth and the principles which are within us, which principles are higher morally than the forces which oppose us.

"STAND FOR PRINCIPLE"

Without the help of either national political party, and ~~in spite~~ of the Supreme Court decision, Mississippians have made a noble and winning stand for segregation so far. Millions of people over these United States believe us to have the courage of our convictions, and they are looking to us to stand fast for what we have said we believe in. If we continue to stand for principle they will help us and we shall never be defeated.

The States Rights ticket is our one opportunity to stand for our principles which were also the principles of our fathers. If we fail now to stand for these principles, they will surely die.

For the sake of the honor of Mississippi, for the sake of our wives and children, for the sake of generations yet unborn, and for the sake of those millions over the country who have believed in us who are trusting our leadership and courage, let us every one go to the polls on November 6th and vote the States Rights ticket.

Our delegation in the Congress will not lose their committee assignments if Mississippi goes States Rights. No state outside of the South went Democratic in 1952, and yet no Democratic member of the Congress from those states was affected. In 1952, the national Democrats failed to carry Virginia, Texas, Florida and Tennessee, yet, not one Democratic member of Congress from those states lost his committee assignments.

Resectfully,
Edwin White
Lexington, Mississippi

Andrews And Werdel Seen As 'Only Hope'

Dear Editor:

We do not feel that we are forsaking the Democratic Party (run by gangsters, now) when the best they can beat from the bushes is a carpet-bagger and a scalawag!

We went all out for the Republican Party in 1952, because we were sick and tired of the filth, but all the Republican Party has done is to spend billions for blunders, promote a few individuals, and move the furniture, to cover up a few more rat-holes!

This disillusionment of conservative Southerners towards both Parties, and the Republican performance during the last four years, is a major cause for the creation of the new conservative coalition, ie States Rights, or Constitutional government.

Andrews and Werdel are our only hopes in these troublesome times. The ticket is Andrews and Werdel.

Mrs. T. C. Watson
Strong, Miss.

Clarion Ledger 10-26-56 Southern Opinion

Clarion Ledger 10-26-56

PUBLIC RELATIONS

Recently, the State Sovereignty Commission spent a sizeable sum bringing some 20 New England Yankees down here to Mississippi to see how fine segregation works. The results are in doubt.

Actually, a page from a Long Beach, California newspaper, the Long Beach Independent, convinces us today that we would have done better to send Mayors Billy Meadows, Gulfport, and Laz Quave, Biloxi, to New England.

Meadows and Quave, certainly did a public relations job in lower California, and we herewith reprint a story appearing in the Long Beach Independent—

Mayors of two thriving Mississippi cities Thursday answered critics of segregation policies. "We don't have the per cent of the racial tension that exists in Chicago or New York City," said Atty. R. B. Meadows Jr., mayor of Gulfport.

His colleague, tourist court proprietor Laz Quave, mayor of Biloxi, emphasized he spoke only for his community. He said:

"Frankly, we have no problem. We're satisfied."

PROGRESS

Both cities are on the Gulf of Mexico. Biloxi, which has a population of about 50,000, is considered the electronic center of the Air Force. It is noted for its sea food and is a tourist mecca. It's the third oldest city in the United States.

Gulfport has a population of about 35,000, is a seaport and has considerable retailing and manufacturing activity. It is the county seat for Harrison County.

Mayor Meadows, who is also president of the Mississippi Municipal Assn., claimed Negroes and whites were making progress long before the 1954 Supreme Court decision banning segregation.

"We were making considerable progress and we still are," he said.

But politicans seeking the Negro vote in such states as California, Pennsylvania and New York have found it "very popular to hold Mississippi up to a lot of whipping around the post."

In Gulfport, 16 per cent of the population is Negro as compared with a 45 per cent average throughout the state, according to Mayor Meadows.

SAME PRIVILEGE

"The Negroes in Gulfport have the same privilege of voting as the white men," he said. "They have the same economic and political opportunities.

"We have four Negro doctors and two dentists. We have two Negro policemen on our force.

"We have Negro businessmen driving around in Cadillacs. We've just completed a million-dollar school for the Negroes.

"But we still have segregation and we still want it."

Mayor Meadows claimed his state was expending "many millions of dollars" to keep the educational facilities separate but equal.

Mayor Quave interjected:

"And it's damn near bankrupting the state to do it."

He added that only about five per cent of Biloxi's population is Negro.

"Some of the facilities we have for the Negroes are better than those for the whites," Mayor Quave said.

CONCESSION

Mayor Meadows conceded that the progress made in the two coast communities was not general throughout Mississippi.

"The delta section has a 75 to 80 per cent Negro population," Mayor Meadows said. "The Negroes there still are the white man's burden.

"But they are making progress and trying to catch up with us. When they do, I think the Negroes will be satisfied.

"I don't want to speak for the whole state, but in Gulfport I don't think the average Negro wants to be integrated."

"If the Negroes in Mississippi were as alarmed about the question of segregation as other groups, we would have racial tensions that would be of powderkeg proportions," he said. "That just isn't the case.

LEAVE US ALONE

"If the South is left alone, I think this thing will be worked out. People of good will—Negro and white—are working together on it."

Both mayors were brought here Wednesday as guests of the Air Force. They were greeted by Mayor George Vermillion, taken on a tour of the Long Beach Harbor and escorted through Douglas Aircraft Co.

Both left Thursday evening for Las Vegas. Their two major impressions of Long Beach: friendly people and oil wells.

Miss, Pal.

(Local file) Delta Democrat Times

10-28-56

Most Mississippi Daily Papers Decide To Sit Out This Election

By TIM PARKER

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Probably never before in history have so many Mississippi daily newspapers decided to sit out" a presidential election campaign.

Of the state's 22 daily newspapers, 10 or more are not endorsing any candidate.

A partial survey shows three supporting the States Righters. And, in traditionally Democratic" Mississippi, three support the Democratic ticket.

The greatest contrast with 1952 is in support for Eisenhower. In 1952, at least seven Mississippi dailies supported Eisenhower, whose campaign was handled by a "citizens for Eisenhower" group and without the Republican label.

None For Ike

There are no reports of a daily supporting Eisenhower this campaign.

The newspapers surveyed, only four "kept out of the fight" in 1952. Four supported the Democratic ticket that year.

"None at all," Maj. Frederick Sullens, fiery editor of the Jackson Daily News, said when asked which presidential ticket his newspaper was endorsing. The Republican and Democratic slates, he said, offer a man only "his choice of poison." He did not make any reference to the States Righters.

Newspapers sitting out both the 1952 and 1956 campaigns include the Vicksburg Herald and Evening Post, the Daily Corinthian, the the Gulfport-Biloxi Daily Herald.

Joining them in the "no position" camp this year are:

The Clarksdale Press-Register. Editor Joe F. Ellis Jr. says, "there's little interest here" in the campaign. The newspaper dorsed Eisenhower in 1952.

The Laurel Leader Call, one of the first to endorse Eisenhower in 1952.

The Meridian Star, which endorsed Eisenfhower in 1952.

The Tupelo Journal, which endorsed Adlai Stevenson in 1952. Editor Harry Rutherford said the Journal has carried editorials against "a third party."

Two newspapers switched from Eisenhower in 1952 to the States Righters this year.

They are the Hattiesburg American and the Columbus Commercial-Dispatch. The American editorialized that the States Righters "represent the Southern conservatives who have been abandoned by the Democratic Party." Editor Birney Imes of the Commercial-Dispatch said many Southerners "will be voting their convictions and conscience rather than riding a winner."

The West Point Times Leader switched from Stevenson in 1952 to States Rights this year. Editor Henry Harris said, "We can't see it any other way."

The Jackson Clarion-Ledger, among few dailes to support the same party in both campaigns, endorses Adlai Stevenson again. Managing Editor Purser Hewitt said the principal reason for seeking a Democratic victory is to strengthen the hold of our congressional delegation."

The State Times of Jackson, which has come into existence since 1952, endorses Stevenson as sharp, intellectual, able to cope with gnawing issues in a way most beneficial to the majority."

Another new Mississippi daily, the Tupelo Tribune, endorsed the Democratic ticket as a weekly in 1952 but is endorsing no one this year.

Democrat-Times

The Greenville Delta Democrat-Times, one of Eisenhower's strongest Mississippi supporters four years ago, is as strong this year for Stevenson.

The newspaper has been especially critical of the GOP foreign policy, farm program and Vice President Nixon as the "heir apparent."

The Natchez Democrat, which was an Eisenhower supporter in 1952, has not formally endorsed anyone but has published editorials with a strong States Rights flavor.

The McComb Enterprise Journal, which actively supported Eisenhower in 1952, has not announced its preference this year but Editor J. O. Emmerich has indicated he would not supp Stevenson.

Coleman Calls Move GOP Political Bluff

Pol-mis.

Delta Democ. Times

JACKSON (UP) — Gov. J. P. Coleman branded federal plans to prosecute alleged purgers of Negro voters a "cheap political bluff" by the Republicans which will be challenged "at every turn of the road" in Mississippi.

Coleman said in Memphis Wednesday night he and State Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson will "appear personally" in federal court to defend any Mississippian "indicted on these trumped-up charges."

He denied that any Negroes had been purged from Mississippi voting lists.

"This is no more than I had expected from the Republican administration and Mr. Herbert Brownell Jr.'s Justice Department," he said.

Makes Talk Today

Coleman said the government, which revealed its plans Wednesday to prosecute white supremacists who purged Negro voters in Southern states, could not "prove any charges against Mississippians."

Coleman was to address the Lumberman's Club in Memphis today.

At Prentiss, Circuit Clerk James Daniel said Negroes and whites alike had been stricken from the voter registration lists in Jefferson Davis County under the state's new qualification tests.

He denied the charge by the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that more than 1,000 Negroes were systematically stricken from the poll books.

Fewer of Both

"We do have less Negro voters," Daniel said, but we also have fewer white people."

He said there had been no pressure on me from any source," including the pro-segregation citizens council, to purge Negro voters.

The NAACP also had charged that Forrest County was "typical" of the counties keeping Negroes from voting, saying less than 25 of the county's 12,000 Negroes were registered.

Forrest Circuit Clerk Luther M. Cox said he would "rather not" comment on registration in his county or the government's prosecution plans.

10-25-56

"If they're telling the tales, let them tell them," Cox said.

Farm Bureau Hears Strong States Rights Speech

MOORHEAD — If the present trend toward centralized government continues, the main job of state legislatures will soon be just to meet and appropriate money to match federal funds". John C. Lynn of Washington, legislative director of the American Farm Bureau Federation, told approximately 400 members of the Sunflower County Farm Bureau at their annual meeting in the Sunflower Junior College auditorium in Moorhead.

Declaring that the Farm Bureau is the only organization in Washington fighting for states rights, the speaker deplored what he called "the cancerous growth that is eating away at America".

"Even the church peoole have been duped into giving away their freedons", he said, "and Walter Reuther now has more power over agriculture than the Farm Bureau".

He warned against complacency and urged farmers to maintain their voice in agriculture, saying that "it is not enough to be just a spectator".

He said that a little more cotton must be grown and the cost of production must be cut if "we are to meet competition and stay in business". On the credit side of the ledger he listed the results-getting sales promotion campaign of the National Cotton Council and increased appropriation for research and extension. The soil bank was described as an "effective temporary measure".

David Allen of Indianola was re-elected president of the Sunflower County County Farm Bureau. Other officers are O. L. Cox, Doddsville, first vice president, Earl Shurden, Drew, second vice president, and directors, Jo Prichard and J. W. Stowers, Inverness, S. J. Ely, Indianola, Eugene Fisackerly, Blaine, Talmadge Clark, Drew, Mrs. C. K. Fisackerly, Blaine, Sidney Levingston, Ruleville, and Edward Brit, Indianola.

Sunflower County King, Haley Fisackerly of Blaine, and Queen Haywood Brumfield of Inverness, who will compete in the state contests in November, were presented by Miss Christine Hollis, home demonstration agent. A social hour was enjoyed in the cafeteria following the address. The buffet tables were beautifully decorated with harvest arrangements.

Clarion Ledger

SR Leader Attacks Coleman Position

Politics-mis.

10-30-56

A States' Rights leader said Monday, "it comes as no surprise that Adlai Stevenson congratulated Gov. J. P. Coleman on what the governor did at the National comvention to save the Democratic party."

State Senator Earl Evans, chairman of the states' rights steering committee, referred to a statement Coleman made at a New Albany Democratic rally in which Coleman said Stevenson told him he (Coleman) had done as much as any man to save the Democratic party.

Evans said, "This is further proof that Coleman, Stevenson and Kefauver all favor the same race-mixing socialistic ideals, or Coleman does not have the courage to stand up and fight for states' rights, segregation and constitutional government.

"The people of Mississippi should take a look at what their governor helped save at Chicago. He apparently is afraid to tell them. It stands for mixing the races, abolishing the filibuster in the United States Senate, civil rights legislation and opening the flood gates of immigration."

The Canton lawmaker asked, "What kind of a Mississippian is a man who is proud to have saved these things for his people?"

Hitting at Congressman Jamie Whitten's statement that to vote Democratic would strengthen the position of Mississippi Congressmen, Evans asked, "What will be Congressman Whitten's answer to his fellow Democratic Congressman Negro Charles Diggs when Diggs jumps him for not supporting civil rights laws in Congress if Mississippians, at Whiten's suggestion, give overwhelming approval to the Democratic integration platform? These people seem to think we are playing games, but to us this is a most serious affair. The sovereignity of the state of Mississippi and the tradition of the South are nothing to play with, nor are they items to be swapped away for political expediency."

Evans said, "Coleman is right in saying Eisenhower is no friend of the South and he is greatly lacking in intelligence or is deliberately deceiving the people of this state when he says Stevenson and Kefauver are friends of the South.

"The only way Mississippians can show the nation that we stand for principle and will never compromise is to vote for the unpledged States' Rights Electors."

Clarion Ledger

Politics-mis

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1956

Coleman Urges Everybody Vote To Thwart Olney

Gov. J. P. Coleman Monday issued a statement calling on all qualified electors in Mississippi to go to the polls and vote in the general election of Nov. 6.

"Regardless of how you intend to vote," he declared, "I hope every qualified elector in Mississippi will visit the polls on election day.

"Assistant Attorney General Warren Olney, III, has issued a blanket indictment to the effect that the people of Mississippi are being intimidated and not allowed to vote.

"Let us turn in an overwhelming vote and further disprove his inaccurate statements," Gov Coleman declared.

"I hope that everyone will vote Democratic," the governor concluded, "but, regardless, let us vote"

Clarion Ledger 10-30-56

Leters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters end to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Calvin-Miss,

Takes Issue With Governor's Stand

Dear Editor:

Governor J. P. Coleman's letter of the twentyfifth instant is certainly enlightening from at least two standpoints; and seems to throw a ray of light upon his political philosophy which has heretofore been so shrouded in official mystery and jargon.

Mississippians are sure to remember that the Governor, during his candidacy, was verbally a most staunch and hearty defender of the whole Southern system of things; and previous to that, while Attorney-General, he even threatened, once or twice in the newspapers, to attack in the courts the Fourteenth Amendment, which he thought he could have stripped and torn from the Constitution forever. (However — perhaps because of the natural and undue brevity of any four year term in office — he was never able to achieve the time necessary to level the heavy guns of his batteries against it.)

It appears simply, from the Governor's own words, that he so greatly relishes the idea of being on the winning side, no matter what rank and noxious doctrines that side may espouse, that he professes to be unaware even of the existence of any States Rights party — the only party that believes in the traditional Constitution, and the Caucasian race. Contrary to what so many early American statesmen held — he had rather win than be right.

So at last we have it: To be on the winning side is the frontmost duty of any statesman. And it is better to sit among the councils of the victorious, even though they reek with their foul deeds, than to take up arms with the beleaguered patriots. But the only certain thing about the future is its complete uncertainly — the Southern people may suddenly wake up and see the National Democratic Party for what it really is.

And a second thing emerges from this letter and typifies the "true-blue" Democrat: And that is to ignore and refuse to answer the most pertinent issues involved:

What does Governor Coleman say in defense of a party which is pledged to the utter destruction of the Southland, and of the principles to which, earlier in his career, he so avidly ascribed?

How does he call Adlai Stevenson "the South's best friend"— who, when governor of Illinois, used troops to integrate the white children of Cairo?

And lastly, if the Committee were so all powerful and so all important — and not unfettered, dynamic political action by a party that would unrelentingly represent the South — how have we in the South continued to drift, founder, and in our time be almost cast upon the rocks and shoals of destruction:

Respectfully yours,
Elmore D. Greaves
Jackson, Miss.

Voters Suffer Confusion Over SR's And Eisencrats

By JOHN HERBERS
United Press Staff Correspondent

We have now reached that stage in the presidential campaign where all factions in Mississippi politics have read each other out of the Democratic Party.

Gov. J. P. Coleman and his regulars read out the States Righters for not supporting the Democratic nominees.

The States Righters read out the regulars for supporting candidates for president and vice president who don't go along with the principles set forth by the state Democratic convention.

President Eisenhower and Vice President Richard Nixon are described by Republicans wanting Democratic votes as the best Democrats of them all.

Rep. John Bell Williams of Raymond, in bolting the national Democratic Party, told the people what a good Democrat he is. He came out for States Rights electors—who call themselves independent unpledged electors—but called them "independent Democratic electors."

LEADS TO CONFUSION

All of which leaves the average voter to rattle his confused head and ask: "What the devil is a Democrat, anyway?"

That, of course, is a stpuid question among politicians. In Mississippi a good Democrat is a person who believes in state sovereignty, segregation of the races and usually 100 per cent of parity for cotton.

And since every politician is a good Democrat, why the bitter feuding over the election of a president?

It's all a matter of procedure. Battles may be fought over conflicting principles and personalities in places but in Mississippi some of the greatest political wars are over how to go about getting done what everybody who has anything to say about it wants to get done.

Coleman and his boys, all of whom were bolting States Righters themselves just eight years ago, are taking the practical approach toward maybe accomplishing something for the South in the long run and staying in the national party.

DRAWS PARALLEL

The States Righters, Coleman said, are like a man going to a game between Ole Miss and State and hollering for TCU. He can shout all day but TCU won't score a touchdown.

But the dead serious States Righters don't see it that way. They liken themselves to the virtuous maiden in an old time melodrama who is given a choice between taking a smoke or a drink of whisky. They must abstain from sin at all costs.

They are playing an outside chance of lining up a strong party composed of all conservatives. But if they don't succeed, what's so wrong with going down in glorious defeat for a set of principles?

Clarion Ledger - Jackson Daily News 10-28-56

Politics - Miss.

Clarion Ledger - Jackson Daily News

SR Electors Only Ones Pledged For Segregation

Politics - Miss.

Sen. Earl Evans said today the states rights independent electors are the only ones on the Nov. 6 general election ballot pledged to vote for segregation-favoring candidates.

Evans, a States Rights leader, said the States Rights electors are unpledged except to uphold the principles of Mississippi, including state sovereignty and segregation.

He said they would vote, only for a presidential and vice presidential candidate who supports those views.

In an earlier speech at Philadelphia, Evans said:

"If we vote for the independent electors we will strengthen the position of our congressmen by giving them a mandate to continue fighting the anti - Southern legislation which has and will continue to come before the congress.

"If we approve the race mixing, socialist policies of Stevenson and Kefauver, it will be an insinuation to the nation that the people of Mississippi want our congressmen to stop their fight in Washington."

The senator said Stevenson and Kefauver and Eisenhower and Nixon are in favor of the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation.

State Times 10/31/56

Urge Voters To Attend Rally Here

Pol - Miss.

According to James A. White, president, Progressive Voters League, the Rev. A. W. Wells, local leader, now ill in the Baptist Hospital, has requested all registered voters to attend the rally at the College Park auditorium Thursday, Nov. 1, at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be held in the committee room of the auditorium.

The meeting is expected to serve a fourfold purpose—(1) To get a clear picture of the ballot and how to distinguish between the four slates of electors; (2) To recruit volunteer workers to get out the vote for Nov. 6; (3) To pay special tribute to A. J. Noel, civic leader; and (4) To expand the campaign for getting eligible persons registered.

The local increase in Negro voters registration in Hinds county, according to Mr. White, is not sufficient, who said that it should be 15,000.

Mr. White said that as president of the Progressive Voters League he is not interested in who persons vote for, only that Negroes vote.

Coleman Seeks 'Bolting' Curb; Studies Special Session Call

Mississippi States Righters Claim Democrats Fear Loss of State

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 17—Gov. J. P. Coleman is planning a special legislative session in February to repeal a law which permits a voter to bolt his party in a presidential election without affecting his political status in the state organization and its primaries.

Definite decision on the assembly hinges on how the lawmakers feel about it and whether they are willing to enter into an "ironclad" agreement not to remain in session longer than 10 days.

Gov. Coleman plans a series of conferences next month with the legislators to sound them out on it.

Immediate reaction of Democrats who voted for other than the party's presidential candidates this year, as well as in 1952, was that the governor's "decision to push for a change in the law so soon after the recent presidential election is the result of the narrow margin—8 per cent—by which the Democrats carried Mississippi."

Most outspoken critic is State Sen. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, third ranking state official as president pro tem of the Senate, who in 1952 was an independent elector pledged to the Republican candidates, and who this year resigned as a Democratic presidential elector to head up the independent States Rights movement.

MISSISSIPPI

Under the so-called "vote as you please in national elections" law, enacted in 1948 by the then-strong States Rights group, Sen. Evans was able to desert his Democratic Party in the two presidential elections and still remain a Simonpure Democrat on the state level. Fact is, after the 1952 election, he ran in the 1955 Democratic primary for re-election and was unopposed.

The "vote as you please law" was enacted to permit Democrats in 1948 to vote the Thurmond-Wright States Rights ticket in opposition to the Truman-Sparkman Democratic slate and still be "loyal" Democrats. They voted 80 per cent for the States Rights ticket under the leadership of the late Gov. Fielding L. Wright, the vice presidential nominee.

Evans Cites Dangers

Gov. Coleman said his plan is to amend the voting statute so members of one party "cannot take an active part in the campaign of another party, such as becoming a presidential elector on another tucket." It would apply to those who actively campaign for the opposition national ticket, as did Sen. Evans and other state Democratic officeholders, including many legislators.

If the governor's plan is adopted, Evans said, "Mississippians may find themselves bound and forced to support a NAACP and AFL-CIO dominated candidate for president in 1960."

Pointing out that an independent slate of States' Rights electors "collected 40,000 votes from people who were casting their ballots for principle" of the 100,000 antiDemocratic tallies in the recent presidential election, Sen. Evans said:

"The recent statements by the titular head of the Democratic Party (the governor) to have the voting law changed are the result of our strong showing and his fear that in the next election the Democratic candidates may be even more obnoxious than Stevenson and Kefauver and the opposition might be even stronger."

Evans charged that "the NAACP and AFL-CIO objectives are being fostered by officials of our state government whether intentional or not by effort to force an elected official to vote for a Democratic candidate or give up the right to hold office as has been the custom in the past."

Says Coleman Afraid

"It is further effort to hold the people of Mississippi in the political bag for the Democratic nominees who advocate principles contrary to our beliefs," he said. "If the governor was not afraid the States' Rights movement is in position to defeat the Democratic Party in Mississippi he would not advocate denying the right of citizens to vote as they please."

Gov. Coleman has said, however, that "there was never any intention of repealing the law outright or telling the people they can't vote as they please in presidential elections."

"You couldn't enforce such a law anyway," he said.

Mississippi has no law requiring registration by party designation.

From another front, W. M. Colmer (D-Miss) said here that the South must choose a new political course, either becoming an "independent two-party section" or an "organized militant minority group because we can no longer afford the luxury of being taken for granted."

"Personally," he explained, "I prefer the course of an organized militant Southern unity within the Democratic Party."

"We must have a new 'Solid South'—a South unified politically for the South," Mr. Colmer said. "We should form an organized, militant bloc like the NAACP to strengthen our position on the segregation issue.

"This won't be easy to do, but it can be done."

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

By TOM ETHRIDGE

Miss - Pil 11-29-56

TOO CONFIDENT?

"Some of our politicians are much too smug over Mississippi's defenses against racial integration," opines Editor Tommy Alewine in his Brandon News. "One lawsuit could tie up all funds of the State Educational Finance Commission and leave the state's pubic schools high and dry without state funds.

"With the stranglehold of the Federal Reserve Board and the F. D. I. C., no bank would dare cash warrants drawn contrary to an order of the U. S. Supreme Court. We need to scatter our authority and our funds quickly. Think it over!"

Coleman Gives Qualified Okay To New Apportionment Plan

Jul-Const. 12-2-56

Governor Says Advance Agreement Mandatory Before Legislators Meet

Miss. Pol

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 1—Support from two leaders from the area which has been successful in blocking a convention for modernization of Mississippi's antiquated constitution of 1890, has cheered proponents who have been waging a losing fight for years.

However, one of them qualified his backing with a provision that the controversial issue of legislative apportionment would either have to be agreed on in advance by the legislature or that subject eliminated from the agenda.

Making that conditional endorsement was Gov. J. P. Coleman, whose home county of Choctaw is in the northeastern section which has representation far in excess of its population insofar as other sections are involved.

There was no "proviso" in the endorsement given the constitutional convention proposal by State Rep. Sam Lumpkin of Lee County, also in the favored section. Lumpkin is a former lieutenant governor, one-time speaker of the house and an unsuccessful 1951 candidate for governor.

Basis for Disagreement

As Gov. Coleman pointed out, the "fly in the ointment" in giving approval of a convention has been the legislative apportionment issue and refusal of the less populous but favored section of Northeast Mississippi to surrender its big block of votes to more populous areas—principally South Mississippi.

Prior to the 1890 convention which drafted the present constitution, legislative representation at a time when the Federal Government "supervised" Mississippi elections and Negroes were allowed more freedom in voting, the apportionment was based on "voting population." That gave the heavily Negro populated counties advantages over the smaller white counties.

With Negro voting discouraged by a poll tax requirement and provision for interpreting sections of the constitution following the War Between the States, the 1890 convention set up legislative representation on the basis of three "grand sections" without regard to population or voting strength. The sectional representation was drafted on the basis of "voting population." The ~~white~~ delegates from the heavily populated Negro counties, anxious to retain their large representation, went along with that plan after 12 additional votes had been given the white counties and since negotiating had been minimized.

MISSISSIPPI

Since that time, new counties have been formed, mostly in the southern section, and because of the limitation placed on each district, they were allowed only one representative with no provision for more as their population increased.

As a result of the 1890 apportionment, 23 counties in the northeastern section with a population of 473,087 have 44 seats in the 140-member house, and 14 in the 49-member senate.

The 24 counties in the western area, which includes those along the Mississippi River, have 56 in the House and 20 in the Senate, and a population of 857,149, while the 35 counties in the so-called southern section with a population of 888,294 have 43 in the House and 14 in the Senate.

Indicative of what the present apportionment has resulted in is the fact that Benton County in the northeast, with a population of 8,789, has one and one-half votes in the House; while Harrison County on the Gulf Coast, with a population of 84,019, has the same representation. Noxubee County, in the upper section of the southern area and a heavily Negro-populated county, with a population of 19,981, has three members of the House, the same as Washington County in the Delta with a population of 70,257.

On the Senate side, Benton has one half vote in the Senate, the same as Harrison County, while Noxubee County has a full vote as does Washington County.

Hinds County's Vote

Meanwhile, Hinds County, site of the state capitol, with a population of 142,164 has one senator and 3½ votes in the House.

Chief advocate of a reapportionment based on population is State Rep. Upton Sisson of Harrison County. His proposal for a convention to correct that discrimination at the 1956 session was killed in committee.

In defense of his proposal, Sisson pointed out that 12 counties, with 26 members in the house, and a population of 735,648 paid $3,383,113 in personal income taxes in 1952, compared to the $1,835,144 from the other 70 counties with a population of 443,266 and 114 house seats.

Sisson also pointed out that 16 counties paid 60 per cent of the sales tax and the other 66 accounted for only 40 per cent.

States' Righters Poor Third

Politics Miss?

Delta Dem. Nov 7

Stevenson Makes His Best Show In State

Miss Pol

By JOHN HERBERS

JACKSON (UP)—Adlai Stevenson today apparently made his best showing in Mississippi with better than a two-to-one margin over President Eisenhower, who still managed to establish a record vote for the Republican ticket.

The states' rights faction supporting Sen. Harry Byrd of Virginia and Rep. John Bell Williams of Mississippi placed a poor third, even though they had been favored to run a close second.

Gov. J. P. Coleman said the result is a "repudiation of those who would divide the people of Mississippi." The states righters said they hoped "generations to follow will not live to regret it."

With 1,417 of the state's 1,820 precincts reporting from Tuesday's election, Stevenson had 119,119 votes; Eisenhower 54,931; and the independent states rights ticket 37,744. Eisenhower polled 50,848 votes on the Mississippi Republican Party (Lily White) ticket and 4,083 on the Black and Tan ticket.

Adlai's Best Margin

On the basis of incomplete returns Mississippi appeared to have given Stevenson his greatest margin in the nation. Eisenhower, however, polled an all-time record vote for an outright Republican ticket. In 1952 he won 117,000 votes in Mississippi as an independent.

Coleman, who led the campaign to keep Mississippi in the Democratic column, said the state "should now have a bigger voice in the councils of the Democratic Party. I am highly unhappy about the national scene but Mississippi cannot be blamed for the consequences."

The steering committee for the states' righters who had opposed both major parties, said their purpose "was to give the people a choice other than to endorse an advocate of forced racial integration. They have now made that choice with their eyes wide open and we sincerely hope that they and generations to follow will not live to regret it."

Cities Favor Ike

The states' righters carried or were leading in Bolivar, Madison, Holmes, Humphreys, Jefferson, Sharkey, Wilkinson and Yazoo counties. Eisenhower carried Adams, Forrest and Warren and was leading in Hancock. In 1952 he carried Natchez, Vicksburg, Hattiesburg and was leading in Jackson and running close in Biloxi and Gulfport.

The all-Negro community of Mound Bayou in the heart of the Delta voted overwhelmingly for Eisenhower. The precinct gave him 112 votes on the black and tan ticket and ~~six on~~ the lily white ticket to 38 for Stevenson and none for the states righters.

Politics-
Mississippi -1957

Coleman Pleased By Vote In Mississippi

Politics Miss

JACKSON, Miss. (AP)—Gov. J.P. Coleman says the Democratic victory in Mississippi gives him "renewed hope" for the future.

Statements by various political leaders: Delta Democrat 11-7

Coleman: "I am highly gratified with the election results in Mississippi. I think it will be regarded as a declaration of confidence in the elected leaders in Mississippi and it is a repudiation of those who sought to undermine those leaders. So far as I am personally concerned, I expect to face the future with renewed hope based upon this expression of the people. I repeat my gratitude to my fellow Mississippians."

State Sen. Earl Evans of Canton, States Rights leader: "The purpose of the States Rights movement was to give the people of Mississippi a choice other than to endorse an advocate of forced integration. They have now made that choice with their eyes wide open, and we sincerely hope that they and future generations will not live to regret it."

State Democratic Chairman Bidwell Adam: "I am gratified at the Democratic victory in Mississippi despite candidates who did nothing for the ticket against a man with such tremendous popularity as President Eisenhower enjoys. This popularity was intensified with World War III in the background. We also had to fight a huge Republican campaign chest and big business. Please convey all my love to Sam Lumpkin and congratulate him on his influence in his home county."

State Rep. Lumpkin of Lee County supported Eisenhower. His home county went top-heavy for Stevenson.

Rep. John Bell Williams (D-Miss), who supported the States Righters: "I congratulate the winners and wish them the best. As for my own personal situation, I have no regrets. I supported the only white man's ticket on the ballot. I have no regrets."

Legislator Blasts Mississippi Officials For 'Wasteful Spending'

Delta Democrat 12/4/56

JACKSON (UP) — State Rep. Zealous Paul Polk of Prentiss has unleashed a scathing attack on Mississippi officialdom for driving the state toward "bankruptcy" through wasteful spending and bureaucracy.

Polk made his attack Monday night on station WLBT here. The Jefferson Davis County lawmaker paid for his own time and promised to continue his crusade in the future.

Pointing to a record 186 million dollars appropriated by the 1956 Legislature, Polk warned that "unless we change our present course we are going to face bankruptcy."

Polk struck out at legislators who hold state jobs they helped to create as members of the House or Senate. He said the practice "will lead to despotism."

"When members accept jobs created by their own votes, they violate the state Constitution," he said. "Not only is it illegal, it is morally wrong."

He obviously referred to Rep. Ney Gore of Quitman County who accepted appointment as executive director of the State Sovereignty Commission, a segregation watchdog group formed in the 1956 session. Gore still holds both positions despite efforts to force his resignation from one of the posts.

Polk also declared that Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson "took himself out of politics in Mississippi" when he defended Gore's right to keep his state job and legislative seat.

"Recess committees serve no good purpose," continued Polk, "but merely serve to give employment to members of the Legislature. Creation of boards and bureaus in Mississippi must be discontinued. We have more than 100 of them now. They merely give a political machine a chance to build up power to stay in office."

"We haev by legislative enactment created in this state a bureaucracy so great that thousands of people are working for the taxpayers and many of them don't know what they are supposed to do."

Praising State Auditor Boyd Golding for "uncovering graft and corruption" in the state, Polk predicted: "If we had honest and efficient administration... we could cut taxes 50 per cent."

Miss. Politics

6 The Clarion-Ledger Wednesday, December 19, 19

Barnett Criticizes Atty. Gen. Brownell

By CHARLES M. HILLS
Clarion Ledger Staff Writer

MEADVILLE, Dec. 18 — Ross R. Barnett, twice candidate for governor, charged here tonight that the U. S. attorney general places the rights of criminals ahead of their victims in bids for civil rights legislation.

Speaking to a county-wide meeting of the Franklin County Citizens' Council, the Jackson attorney declared that the protection of woman hood is discounted by Attorney General Herbert Brownnell and that the interests of the attacker, when a Negro, are placed foremost.

Barnett declared that "no one ever heard of the attorney general being interested in helping to apprehend or punish a Negro charged with criminally assaulting a white woman."

The text of his speech is given herewith:

ONE UTTERANCE

"I call upon the splendidly educated and highly trained Attorney General, Herbert T. Brownell, that chief Republican law enforcing officer of America, to point out one utterance recorded or produced either from a speech or statement whereby he pledged or promised the resources of his powerful office to prosecute any man charged with criminally assaulting an innocent girl at any time.

"I ask our clever and highly skillful Attorney General if the proposed Civil Rights Laws that he is so anxious to have put upon the statute book of this Country are for the protection and benefit of innocent womanhood ravished or criminally assaulted or are they for the benefit of a man that committed the crime of criminal assault upon innocent childhood and womanhood?

"I ask him if it is not for the special benefit and protection of a negro man who committed the crime of criminal assault rather than for the benefit of the victim.

"If the brother or father of an outraged assaulted girl in a moment of madness or anger should seize a gun and shoot his sister's or his daughter's assailant or the man who disgraced his sister or daughter, if it is not, then that we witness the power and the influence of the Republican Attorney General's ofice in the Dept. of Justice as seeking to invoke the Civil Rights Laws in behalf of the man who committed the crime of criminal assault, and if the incensed father or the angry brother is not charged with violating the Civil Rights Laws and not the man who committed the criminal assault? In all fairness, let us be remained that this is a one-sided law.

"The Civil Right Laws as promulgated by Brownell are simply recorded upon the pages of our Federal Statutes to protect the man charged with criminal assault and not the victim. In other words, no one has even heard of the Republican Attorney General taking any steps or expressing any concern for the welfare of the victim, even though her Civil Rights had been violated and the shadow of shame cast about her as she travelled down life's journey the remaining years of her life.

the Republican Attorney General

"No one has yet ever heard of of the U. S. or his office force being interested in helping to apprehend and to punish the negro charged with criminal assaulting the white woman.

"They are more interested in passing the laws that will safeguard and protect this wrongdoer rather than they are in seeing that he is punished. The Civil Rights Laws that they will attempt to pass do not guarantee any protection of the rights of the victim."

AFFAIRS OF STATE

Politics Miss

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Clarion Ledger 12-24-56

MARRIAGE MILLS

Rep. Hilton Waits, Washington county, would go along with strengthening of Mississippi's marriage laws, but he doesn't want to place too many restrictions.

"I could take the medical examination as a law or the 5-day waiting period, but I don't like both," he said.

In fact, Waits doesn't like the bill which Rep. John Kennedy, of Marshall county, proposes for the next session of the legislature.

On the other hand, Rep. John R. Junkin, Adams county, would accept the Kennedy bill en toto, and Rep. Russell Fox, Claiborne thinks that it would be a good thing to strengthen the marriage laws so as to stop the borderline marriage mills in Mississippi.

The threesome met in front of the governor's office the other afternoon and became engrossed in quite a discussion. Their views on the marriage bill might be worth considering.

All three are powerful legislators.

For instance, Waits is chairman of the ways and means committee which handles all revenue matters; Junkin is chairman of the House appropriations committee which spends our money and Fox is a member of the legislative investigating committee which keeps us "honest."

MAIL SIGNS

Several outraged citizens have called to this writer's attention that mail trucks traveling around Jackson carry big signs advocating integration.

This writer hasn't seen one of them, but our informants say that a funny paper character is used to accent the deal.

One indignant local resident told us:

"Talk about Russia and Red China brain-washing. . .our own postoffice department is trying to brainwash us, now!"

Be that as it may, in the present socialistic trend of federal government, we are not surprised at anything you might see.

The best advice this writer can give is:

Scoff and forget it. . .just look the other way.

CONSTITUTIONAL

The federal constitution has become so twisted by court interpretations here of late that most of us don't recognize it, or at least don't want to.

And, there is talk of a constitutional convention to revamp Mississippi's operational "Bible."

But, the Mississippi Public Service Commission still find it necessary to use the state recipe every now and then.

For instance, the commission has just told the Illinois Central Railroad that because of the state constitution, it can't close a depot at Sumner, one of Tallahatchie county's dual capitals.

The railroad had sought to close the Sumner station during the slack agricultural season.

But, the commission ruled that the railroad must conform to the 1890 constitutional requirement that railroads maintain depots in county seat towns, and that an agent be on duty.

Tallahatchie county has two county seats, Sumner and Charleston.

STRAIGHT TALK

Ross R. Barnett, local attorney and twice candidate for governor, talked straight from the shoulder down at Meadville as he addressed a citizens Council meeting.

He inquired if Attorney General Herbert Brownell's so-called civil rights laws are not directed to the benefit of Negro criminals and rapists rather than to the protection of innocent white women?

Barnett charged that Brown and his civil rights bills show more interest in protecting the wrongdoers than their victims.

It is good that somebody comes out fighting against the attacks by integrationists upon our southern way of life.

We have heard considerable wonderment as to why no official of this state has openly defended us against attacks by a Negro lieutenant recently.

Even a national television commentator claimed he "couldn't get any official reaction from Mississippi."

Politics - Mississippi
1956

Swampland Kingfish!

White Supremacy His Scepter

The Story of Senator James O. Eastland

As Told to WILLIAM G. NUNN SR. by L. H. MOORE

WHO . . . and what . . . is James O. Eastland, senior Senator from Mississippi, and chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee; ofttimes referred to as the second most powerful committee in the nation's Upper House?

Why was there such a hue and cry from Negroes and from liberals of both parties when he was named chairman of this committee a few months ago?

Is Eastland another "Justice Hugo L. Black in disguise" . . . or is he an unreconstructed rebel?

■

MISSISSIPPI . . . "hell-hole" of America . . . spawned Jefferson Davis, James K. Vardaman, Theodore G. Bilbo!

Mississippi . . . where Emmett Till was lynched . . . where Rev. Lee was murdered . . . where Gus Courts was ambushed.

Mississippi . . . with its deltas, its swamps, its Tallahatchie and Sunflower rivers . . . its enfolding forests . . . places which will forever hide the grisly, gruesome mementoes of "man's inhumanity to man."

Mississippi . . . where white is RIGHT; where the average WHITE citizen looks not to God, but to "Senator Jim" to point the way. Where the average NEGRO is just beginning to learn that he's a human being!

SENATOR EASTLAND

■

IT WAS ALMOST 100 years ago that Jefferson Davis, driven by an insane phobia, led the South through four bloody years of Civil War.

THE COST:—600,000 dead . . . a million wounded . . . a "way of life" eliminated.

Out of the holocaust which was the Civil War came the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments.

■

TODAY . . . almost a century later . . . the same inexorable urge that drove Jefferson Davis to his folly is being reborn in the cold and humorless (but exceedingly crafty) brain of a 51-year-old disciple of white supremacy.

"Senator Jim" . . . the man from Doddsville, Miss. . . . is a throwback to his native-state forebears.

On his 3,000-acre plantation, he's King James!

He rules his 84 Negro plantation hands with an iron will!

He exacts unswering loyalty and devotion from those who add to his enormous wealth by the sweat of their brows.

■

KING JAMES is to the manor-born! His maternal grandfather, Dr. Richmond Austin, served as a cavalry officer under Nathan Bedford Forrest, the general who founded the Ku Klux Klan at Civil War's end.

His paternal grandfather was a man of great wealth, acquiring large tracts of land, together with slaves to work it . . . near Doddsville, where Jim was born.

View of Senator Eastland's Mississippi Plantation

Although Eastland "raves" from the Nation's Capital and in the Senate Chambers, which accepts him grudgingly, he lives in feudal glory on the banks of the Sunflower river.

■

THE MISSISSIPPI Delta . . . where Senator Jim lives . . . basks in the reflection of his evaluation of Negroes.

If you drive through the region, you "burn" over the studied insults and the sit-down indifference of white service station operators . . . that is, if you're a Negro.

If you're a Negro . . . and your license plate identifies you as coming from an area outside the South . . . you'll hear the boss ask the attendant (even before you're out of ear-shot); "Where was that damn 'nigra's' tag from?"

■

DAVIS . . . Vardaman . . . Bilbo . . . Eastland! The first three were show-offs, swash-buckling proponents of white supremacy.

Eastland is smart . . . clever . . . ruthless . . . calculating!

And he's determined that as long as he can raise his voice in protest, integration in ANY form will NEVER BECOME a part of the life of Mississippi's illiterate, teeming millions.

A GRADUATE of the University of Mississippi, Vanderbilt and the University of Alabama, he was admitted to the Mississippi bar in 1927 (at the age of 23) and served as a member of the Mississippi House of Representatives from 1928 until 1932.

He was appointed to the U. S. Senate in 1941 and was elected for his first full term in 1943.

He's the most deadly enemy of civil rights Mississippi has ever produced.

He can't mimic the extravagances of Davis . . . the man who failed to divide a nation.

A 20th century world just won't tolerate it!

■

BUT HE'S using his brains . . . his talent . . . his education . . . his enviable Senate position . . . to defy the U. S. Supreme Court.

He's an implacable foe of justice for the Negro.

Mississippi knows where Eastland stands . . . the world knows where Eastland stands!

Eastland is determined to keep "the Nigra" in his place!

■

NEXT WEEK—What they say about Eastland in his own home state!

ANNUAL MEETING NUMBER

Church Council Bulletin

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Vol. V SEPTEMBER, 1944 No. 4

WORLD-WIDE COMMUNION SUNDAY

October 1, 1944

U. S. Army Signal Corps Photograph

Courtesy, United Lutheran Publication House

SOLDIERS RECEIVING COMMUNION IN SOUTH PACIFIC

Design for Living Today

An Adventure in Applied Christianity

GREENSBORO, N. C.

November 17-19, 1944

Auspices

THE NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

and

THE AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE

SPEAKERS

Y. C. YANG

Noted Christian statesman and educator of China. President of Soochow University. Director of the Chinese News Service, New York City.

•

IRA DeA. REID

Nationally known sociologist of Atlanta University. Editor of Phylon Magazine. Associate Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga.

•

CHARLES JONES

Minister of the Presbyterian Church of Chapel Hill. Member of the Southern Field Council of the Student Y. M. C. A. and a Director of the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen.

Design for Living Today

Greensboro, N. C. November 17-19, 1944

CONFERENCE PROGRAM

Friday, November 17

4:30-7:30 p. m.—Registration
(Administration Building, Bennett College)

8:30 p. m.—"The Unfinished Tasks of Christianity"
Speaker: Dr. Y. C. Yang
(Annie Merner Pfeiffer Chapel, Bennett College)

Saturday, November 18

9:00 a. m.—"What Is Wrong With the World"
Speaker: Rev. Charles Jones
(Assembly Hall, Henry Pfeiffer Science Building, Bennett College)

10:30 a. m.—Workshop Discussion Period

12:00 noon—"China's Contribution to Tomorrow's World"
Speaker: Dr. Y. C. Yang
(Assembly Hall, Henry Pfeiffer Science Building)

1:00 p. m.—Lunch

4:00 p. m.—Workshop Discussion Period

6:30 p. m.—Supper

8:00 p. m.—"Christian Students and the Building of the South"
Speaker: Dr. Ira Reid
(Annie Merner Pfeiffer Chapel, Bennett College)

Sunday, November 19

9:30 a. m.—Workshop Discussion Period
(Odell Auditorium, Greensboro College)

10:15 a. m.—Student Panel—Conference Summary
(Odell Auditorium, Greensboro College)

11:30 a. m.—"Working With God for a New World"
Speaker: Rev. Charles Jones
(Odell Auditorium, Greensboro College)

WORKSHOP DISCUSSION LEADERS

MISS ETHELENE SAMPLEY, Director of Religious Education, Centenary Methodist Church, Winston-Salem, N. C.

DR. WILSON Q. WELCH, Jr., Professor of Religion, Hood Theological Seminary, Salisbury, N. C.

DR. A. D. BEITTEL, Professor of Sociology, Guilford College, N. C.

DR. IVAN E. TAYLOR, Dean of Instruction, Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C.

MISS EMMA LOUISE BENIGNUS, Professor of Religion, Randolph-Macon College, Virginia.

DR. EUGENE PFAFF, Director of the Southern Council on International Affairs, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Others to be announced.

WHO MAY ATTEND

Although planned especially for college people, the conference is open to all persons interested in the building of a better world. College delegates (students and faculty) will be given preference in the assignment of accommodations in the homes of church people in the community. Ministers, teachers, and others who wish to attend the sessions may find it necessary to make their own arrangements for overnight accommodations. Registrations should be made in advance.

COSTS

The costs for registration fee and meals at the conference will be $3.00. Attenders should plan to secure their Friday evening and Sunday noon meals individually.

WHEN YOU ARRIVE

Come to the Administration Building at Bennett College in Greensboro (Washington and Macon Sts.), to receive your housing assignment, meal tickets, etc. The registration desk will be open from 4:30 to 7:30 p. m. The opening session of the conference will begin at 8 p. m. Friday evening in the Pfeiffer Memorial Chapel at Bennett College.

For registration blanks and further information write:

EDWIN L. DUCKLES, Southern Field Secretary
AMERICAN FRIENDS SERVICE COMMITTEE
Woman's College, Greensboro, N. C.

CONFERENCE CALL

We, the undersigned student organizations in North Carolina and Virginia, are planning to send delegations to the Conference on Applied Christianity in Greensboro, N. C., November 17-19.

We issue this call to all interested individuals and student groups in the region and extend an invitation to join with us in this search for a "Design for Living Today."

A. & T. College Y. M. C. A.
A. & T. College Y. W. C. A.
Atlantic Christian College Social Science Department
Atlantic Christian College Student Christian Assoc.
Barber-Scotia College Y. W. C. A.
Bennett College Student Senate
Bennett College Sunday School Organization
Bennett College Woman's Society of Christian Service
Bennett College Y. W. C. A.
Brevard College Christian Student Movement
Catawba College Baptist Student Union
Catawba College International Relations Club
Catawba College Y. W. C. A.
Duke University Y. W. C. A.
Greensboro College International Relations Club
Greensboro College Y. W. C. A.
Guilford College International Relations Club
Guilford College Y. M. C. A.
Guilford College Y. W. C. A.
High Point College Youth Fellowship
Livingstone College Sunday School
Livingstone College Christian Endeavor
Livingstone College Ministerial Alliance
Livingstone College International Relations Club
Meredith College International Relations Club
North Carolina Baptist Student Union
North Carolina College Y. M. C. A.
North Carolina College Y. W. C. A.
North Carolina College Sunday School
Queens College S. C. A. Cabinet
Salem College International Relations Club
St. Mary's School Canterbury Club
University of North Carolina Wesley Foundation
Virginia Union University Y. M. C. A.
Wake Forest College Baptist Student Union
Western Carolina Teachers College International Relations Club
Western Carolina Teachers College Student Senate
Woman's College Baptist Student Union
Woman's College Inter-Faith Council
Woman's College St. Mary's House
Woman's College Wesley Foundation
Woman's College Westminster Fellowship
Woman's College Y. W. C. A.

"THE BIBLE IS THE CORNERSTONE OF LIBERTY."—Thomas Jefferson.

WEEK-DAY RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NUMBER

Church Council Bulletin

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Vol. V NOVEMBER, 1944 No. 5

Week-day Religious Education in North Carolina

FAMILY CO-OPERATION

All the children of school age are enrolled! The above is a picture of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Gantt whose four children James, Hazeline, David and John, are taking the Bible courses offered in the Davidson Public School. Their teacher Miss Louise Maxwell, is the other member of the group. Davidson is one of the smallest towns in the state, where a full-time teacher of Bible is employed. Instruction is given to both white and colored pupils in the elementary and high school grades.

TEACHERS' WORKSHOP

The vast majority of those teaching Bible in the public schools of North Carolina are well prepared for their task. Many of them have one or two years of graduate work in the field of Religious Education. A commendable professional pride animates these instructors. They are organized on a statewide basis and into regional groups for more effective exchange of suggestions and experience.

Teachers of the Bible throughout the state are cooperating in developing suitable curriculum materials for their work. During the academic year 1943-44 they set up district workshops for the purpose of discussing available teaching materials, revising them if necessary, and creating new ones. Each of

(Continued on page 3)

"SHARING"

"Sharing" is the title of the professional bulletin issued several times each year by the Bible teachers in the public schools of North Carolina. It is an excellent publication, well supported by those devoted to this cause. Two items appearing in the October, 1944, issue are worthy of special mention. One is a quotation from Dr. Highsmith, Director of Division of Instructional Service, State Department of Public Instruction. In it he makes the statement that credit is allowed for study in Bible precisely as in the case of other courses or subjects. Two of the sixteen units required for graduation may be allowed for work in this field. He goes on to say that the North Carolina College Conference and the Southern Association of Colleges and

(Continued on page 3)

REPORT FROM THE FIELD

As evidence of the thoughtful consideration which our teachers are giving to their work, we submit the following from a report of Miss Katherine Wicker, a Bible teacher in the J. W. Cannon High School, Kannapolis, N. C.

"The following aims state very clearly what we hope to accomplish from Bible study in High School.

I. To develop an attitude of appreciation and reverence for the Bible.
   a. To foster in the pupils a consciousness of God and love for Him as revealed in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit.
   b. To form an attitude of appreciation of goodness, beauty, and truth; to draw the Bible view of Morality and standards of value in society

(Continued on page 2)

Church Council Bulletin

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Vol. 6 JANUARY, 1945 No. 1

Plans Completed for Seventh Convocation of Churches

Mission to Christian Teachers Scheduled for February 11-13

DURHAM COUNCIL OF CHURCHES TO BE HOST

Announcement of the Mission to Christian Teachers to be held in Durham on February 11, 12 and 13, is given at this time in order that denominational leaders, as well as local pastors from throughout the state, might attend if at all possible.

This meeting, which is being sponsored by the Durham Council of Churches in cooperation with the North Carolina Council of Churches, will feature outstanding leadership in the field of religious education. Among the leaders will be:

Dr. Jesse M. Bader, Executive Secretary, Department of Evangelism, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, New York City.

Dr. James A. Jones, Pastor, Myers Park Presbyterian Church, Charlotte.

Miss Elsie L. Miller, Assistant in Department of Christian Education of Children, The Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. S. J. Patterson, Jr., Director of Men's Work, Presbyterian Church, U. S., Richmond, Va.

Dr. Raymond M. Veh, Editor, Evangelical Crusader, Harrisburg, Pa.

The primary purpose of this Mission is to help teachers become more clearly aware of their evangelistic opportunity and to provide them with guidance and inspiration in undertaking this responsibility. It is designed also to bring them to a more vital personal Christian experience.

A world at war confronts the churches with heavy responsibilities and unusual opportunities. There are many evidences of a new openmindedness toward the Christian message; a mood of prayer among the people; and a heightened

(Continued on page 2)

INTEREST GROWS IN VISITATION EVANGELISM

Visitation evangelism has caught the attention of religious leaders in North Carolina. Religious forces of several communities have tried it and report amazing results. At the last meeting of the North Carolina Council of Churches attention was given to the request that we launch a state-wide approach. The first in the series will be held at Morganton, February 18-22, under the direction of Dr. F. S. Love, state chairman. Dr. Love has had wide experience in this field and is in a position to assist other communities in this type of program. Complete information concerning visitation evangelism may be had by writing the Council office, or Dr. F. S. Love, Lake Junaluska, N. C.

The effectiveness of such a program

(Continued on page 3)

MORGANTON PROGRAM

Sixteen.. churches.. representing practically all of the white and Negro churches of the city are participating in the Morganton Visitation program. Many churches in the surrounding area are also expected to participate. Plans for the program have been in the making since late fall and reports already received from this community indicate a great deal of enthusiasm and interest. Other interested ministers and laymen across the state should make every effort to attend this first in the series. For further information address Rev. R. B. Conner, 111 East Avenue, Morganton, N. C.

EVENT SCHEDULED FOR CHARLOTTE, APRIL 3-5

As this Bulletin goes to press, indications are that the Convocation will be cancelled in line with the recent government order affecting conventions. Ed.

The Seventh Convocation of Churches will be held in Charlotte April 3, 4 and 5, 1945. Dr. H. Shelton Smith of Duke University and chairman of the Convocation, announces the following out-of-state leaders:

Miss Margaret Applegarth, United Council of Church Women, and also a member of the staff of the World Council of Churches, New York City.

Dr. Harold Bosley, Pastor, Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Church, Baltimore, Md.

Dr. Truman B. Douglass, Executive Secretary, Board of Home Missioons, Congregational-Christian Churches, New York City.

The Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, D. D., Bishop, Diocese of Washington, Washington, D. C.

Hon. Walter H. Judd, Member, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Miss Katherine Lenroot, Chief of the Children's Bureau, United States Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Dr. John A. Mackay, President, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J.

Dr. Arthur F. Raper, Social Science Analyst, Division of Farm Population and Rural Welfare, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Among the host of state leaders who will participate in the program will be Dr. John R. Cunningham, President, Davidson College, Davidson, and Presi-

(Continued on page 2)

Church Council Bulletin

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION OF THE NORTH CA[redacted] COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Vol. VI MARCH, 1945 No. 2

Racial Conditions Reviewed in North Carolina

Convocation Cancelled—O. D. T. Rulings Draw Attention

ALL MAJOR RELIGIOUS MEETINGS CANCELLED

The Seventh Annual Convocation of Churches will not be held in Charlotte April 3, 4 and 5, as previously announced. Action to this effect was taken on January 24 after consultation with religious and government leaders in New York, Washington, Charlotte and Raleigh. Government officials with whom we conferred continually referred to the "critical stage of the war." It was our belief that all groups were being asked to cooperate in the conservation of transportation, hotel facilities and fuel. It was, therefore, in good faith that we cancelled the Convocation and urged many of the Council's leaders to go the extra step of encouraging the cancellation of other meetings that were not classed as absolutely essential in the opinion of the respective denominations.

After the cancellation of such events it was a great disappointment to the religious leaders of the state to learn, directly from the Washington ODT, of the government's act of discrimination in that the ruling concerning conventions did not affect athletic events. Consequently, the fact that such things as the Southern Conference Basketball Tournament in Raleigh in February, involving some 3,000 people, and countless other such athletic events involving much travel, could go ahead as scheduled, makes it appear that in the minds of some of our Washington leaders, athletic events are entitled to a priority while the work of the church must be considered less essential.

The protests which have been made have not been aimed against the athletic events but over the fact that the government through the ODT in setting itself up as a judge to determine what is and is not important, has decreed that athletics should have a priority, while the church is less essential. Today there are too many broken hearts and weary souls for us to say that a basketball tournament takes precedence over the ministry of the church.

"I am glad to contribute to any cause for the uplift of humanity, and I consider The Council of Churches one of the best." — Judge R. Lee Wright, Salisbury.

WANTED!

Wanted—Eighteen earnest, Christian laymen to direct the financial affairs of a cooperative Christian movement in North Carolina.

This is the call that has gone out from the chairman of the Council's Board of Finance, Bishop Edwin A. Penick. Bishop Penick and other Council leaders are convinced that the effectiveness of this movement which includes thirteen of the major Christian denominations, will be strengthened if the interest and activity of such an impressive body of laymen can be enlisted.

The state has been divided into eighteen areas. Our aim is to secure a prominent layman to serve as chairman of each district, with associates from the included counties.

The Council's budget is not large. Its need for 1944-45 of $10,994.50 is far less than that of many average size churches, but it must be remembered that the Council's program is that of a coordinating agency, designed to foster the work which is done locally and through denominational channels. Today, more than ever, we know of the need and the effectiveness of this organization. It merits the support of individuals, local churches, and all denominational bodies.

As this bulletin goes to press the following laymen have agreed to serve as district chairmen:

Area III—J. E. Paschall, Wilson (Northampton, Halifax, Nash, Edgecombe, Wilson and Warren counties.)

Area XII—George M. Ivey, Charlotte (Mecklenburg, Union, and Anson counties.)

Area XIII—Willard B. Revelle, Winston-Salem (Forsyth, Surry, Stokes and Yadkin counties.)

Your personal contribution is needed. If your local church is not contributing either through its Sunday School organization or its regular church budget, this is an opportunity for you to urge the extension of its ministry beyond the local parish into all the world.

Send all contributions direct to your District Chairman, or:

The North Carolina Council of Churches
College Station, Durham, N. C.

OPINIONS REPORTED HERE FOR STIMULATION OF THOUGHT

In December, 1944, the North Carolina Commission on Interracial Cooperation sought first-hand information on racial conditions across North Carolina. We attempted to get a fair reporting by sampling opinions from at least 150 communities. In each community we contacted members of both races. In no case did we pick our correspondents. They represented all professions, including doctors, lawyers, educators, laborers, ministers.

The following are excerpts from the replies received in answer to our question, "Are there evidences of tension among the races in your community?" The ones herewith quoted are not picked or edited. They are as received from the representatives of both races.

Are these the conditions as you would have reported them? If not, may we hear from you?

Asheville . . . reasonably free at this time from any threatened or smouldering racial conflict.

Chapel Hill . . . not much conflict between the races, but much conflict over the interracial question.

Cooleemee . . . more of a tension between races at present than existed twelve months ago.

Durham . . . considerable tension here . . . in connection with the enforcement of the separation of the races in transportation and matters involving the enforcement of justice.

Elon College . . . no evidence of friction between the white and colored people who live at Elon College.

Elizabeth City . . . racial conditions . . . very good . . . do not know of any conflicts.

Gastonia . . . no trouble at all between the races in our city.

Greensboro . . . no racial conflict, and no problem needing immediate attention has come before our executive committee for quite some time.

Greenville . . . relations most satisfactory . . . no tensions at this time. Even the rumors have died out.

Henderson . . . no real tension between the races here, but there are conditions that our people feel are unfair.

(Continued on page 2)

Politics, Southern

NATIONAL REPORTS

South Joins New Isolationist Movement

By Charles O. Lerche

ATLANTA

OLD STEREOTYPES in politics die hard. One current example of a myth that still lingers on is the claim that "the South is the most internationally-minded section of the nation." In fact, a new strain of particularly virulent isolationism can be spotted all through the South and is especially powerful in Georgia.

The state's leaders in this new advocacy of American withdrawal from world affairs are U.S. Senators Richard B. Russell and Herman Talmadge, and—among others—James C. Davis (Atlanta) and "Jack" Flynt (Griffin) of the Congressional delegation. Locally, considerable support is being given to this trend.

A straw in the wind is the attitude taken by Roy V. Harris, ex-Speaker of the Georgia House. Although Harris has been out of office for some years now, he remains a major figure. He is a co-founder of the Georgia States' Rights Council (the local version of the White Citizens Council), and publisher of the weekly Augusta Courier. This four-page sheet advocates the extreme segregationist position, reprints inflammatory speeches and literature, and during the past year has been one jump ahead of official circles in advocating segregationist moves.

A few weeks ago, in the course of an impassioned plea to Georgia's citizenry to take back control of the Government from the "race-mixers," "crackpots," "wildcats" and "Communists" who dominate Washington, Harris put in his oar for isolationism: "It seems to me that the time has come when we ought to realize that we are not strong enough, great enough and big enough to do the fighting for . . . the whole damn world. This is the time to do away with economic aid to other nations."

Senator Russell earned considerable local praise by his amendment to the Eisenhower Doctrine that would have stripped all military- and economic-aid provisions from it. He is also on record as saying that "one wing of the Strategic Air Command" would do more to pacify the Middle East than all the aid programs ever conceived. His high point was reached in a speech in which he admitted that he had changed his views about Washington's Farewell Address and was finding many virtues in it that had formerly escaped him. The Senator's reputation as the perfect "Senate type" (in William S. White's words) obscures the fact that he has voted against every foreign-aid bill since 1950 and has consistently favored massive military expenditures as an alternative to any kind of concerted foreign policy.

Senator Talmadge has concentrated on foreign-policy issues instead of civil rights and race during his first two months in the Senate. His "maiden speech" was given wide publicity here, complete with verbatim texts and TV film clips, and no one has been permitted to forget that it was an all-out assault on the whole concept of foreign aid—and, indeed, on the notion of a foreign policy itself. His theme is "take care of our own first—and give foreigners what's left over."

The Georgia Congressional delegation is divided to some extent, although none of its members has been conspicuous as a defender of foreign economic assistance. Congressmen Davis and Flynt were the only ones who went so far as to vote against the Eisenhower Doctrine, but several of the others have entered protests against the general line of the Administration's foreign policy. In contrast, Representative Henderson Lanham (Rome) has not only deplored reckless ("meat-ax") budget cutting but has taken a much more restrained position on foreign-policy and foreign-aid issues.

So powerful has the isolationist trend become that a few responsible voices in Georgia have attempted to call a halt. The Atlanta newspapers, operating a very profitable monopoly in the entire metropolitan area, are famous for their refusal to take a strong stand on any question that might offend influential circles; recently, however, they have spoken up on this issue, as forthrightly as they dared. Ralph McGill, the well-known and influential editor of the Atlanta Constitution, published a signed column attacking unnamed "extremist groups" which were sabotaging American foreign policy; in another, he repudiated Senator Russell's amendment to the Middle East resolution in carefully unspecific and inoffensive language (he never mentioned Russell by name). Unsigned editorials in the papers have been much more outspoken, condemning the entire isolationist trend and even defending the President and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles.

But even the newspaper opposition and the continuing (if not particularly well-organized) campaign by various pressure groups in Atlanta to slow down the drive toward withdrawal have not been especially effective. There are strong economic interests which feel they have a stake in minimal foreign policy, of which the cotton-textile producers are only one example. There also is some reason to believe that the Russell-Talmadge line is genuinely popular in Georgia and that this is in no sense a plot being put over on an innocent and unsuspecting citizenry.

4/15/57

What is interesting about Southern isolationism is how it fits into what has become the standard equipment of a certain Southern political school. Where you find a Southern isolationist, there you are also likely to find a budget-cutter, a tax-cutter, an opponent of Federal aid to schools, a segregationist, and a highly articulate manipulator of "states' rights" and the myth of the Yankee "liberal-Communist-labor union" invasion of the South. Reading Roy Harris, one would think that the Eisenhower Administration is dominated by Americans for Democratic Action; Harris professes to find control of the Government divided among Henry Wallace, Eleanor Roosevelt and Walter Reuther.

Some Northern Democrats are discovering with dismay that there is very little difference today between Herman Talmadge and William Jenner. Except for minor differences on the civil-rights issue, right-wing Republicans and many Southern Democrats are discovering more and more common ground. Southern sectionalism, despite the clamor about school and bus integration, is no longer a maverick. It has found kindred spirits in the Middle West, in the Rockies and in some of the pockets of conservatives in California. To get the voting support it needs on issues in which it is interested, it has had to barter on foreign-policy issues. The powerful trend toward isolation in the South is one result of that exchange.

Resist. Group - Misc.

file

Reprint,

March, 1960

Mr. Muhammad Speaks

By Alex Haley

As head of a fast-growing, violently anti-white, anti-Christian cult, this mild-looking little man is now called "the most powerful black man in America"

As another Negro and I walked down the main hall of the New York City Public Library, a third, a stranger, joined us. He apologized, "I couldn't help overhearing that you were discussing Mr. Muhammad. It seems that whenever I notice two of us talking, he's the subject."

I had recently arrived from San Francisco. There, too, Negroes were talking about the small, light-brown man who calls himself "Elijah Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah to the Lost-Found Nation of Islam in North America." The founder and leader of a vitriolically anti-white, anti-Christian cult that preaches black superiority, Muhammad bluntly declares, "I am doing all I can to make the so-called Negroes see that the white race and its religion, Christianity, are their open enemies."

With a program built on tenets allegedly taught to him by "Almighty God Allah in Person," Muhammad has converted to his "Muslim"—cult pronunciation, moose'lem—religion an estimated 70,000 Negroes. (These should not be confused with the 33,000 true Moslems in America.) He has established over 50 "Temples of Islam" and numerous smaller missions that operate in rented quarters or private homes, in 27 states—north and south, and coast to coast. The largest are in Chicago, Detroit and New York; the fastest-growing, in Los Angeles, Atlanta and Miami. In addition, there are in Chicago and Detroit two "Universities of Islam"—the latter accredited through ninth grade—where "Future Leaders of Islam" attend classes 50 weeks a year, and third-graders start learning Arabic.

In an effort to eliminate Negro dependence on whites, Muhammad promotes Muslim-owned and patronized businesses: dress shops, barbershops, groceries, dry cleaners, restaurants, bakeries, a department store, apartment buildings. Now in the financing stage is a Chicago "Islamic Center," which will cover two city blocks and cost 20 million dollars.

His appeal seems to be chiefly among the great masses of Negroes who have migrated to large cities and have been unable to acquire satisfactory new identities. To these, he offers a new way of life—a militant and arrogant black unity. "This is a fast-growing form of black fascism," says Father William McPeak of All Saints' Parish, Harlem. Dr. J. Oscar Lee, of the National Council of Churches, says, "The doctrine used is most dangerous. But we are forced to concede that its followers get a new pride and purpose."

When I went to hear Mr. Muhammad, New York's 5000-seat St. Nicholas Arena was packed. The floor was lined with standees; 1000 of the faithful were in the basement and many more were outside. They would hear the message on loudspeakers.

The meeting was opened by Wallace D. Muhammad, one of Muhammad's six sons. Next to speak was Muhammad's tall, whip-smart assistant, a New York minister named "Malcolm X." He had been serving a sentence for larceny in the Charlestown, Mass., state prison when he was converted.

"When I was a Christian I was a criminal. I was only doing what the white man taught me," Malcolm X was saying calmly, conversationally.

Suddenly, shouting rose from the audience. From the rear marched two double rows of Muslim men. Between them walked a meek-looking little man wearing a blue suit and an embroidered pillbox fez.

Malcolm X waved furiously to stop the wild ovation. Then he introduced the shy-looking little man as "the boldest black man in America . . . the most powerful black man in America . . . the smartest black man in America."

Muhammad took the rostrum. For two hours he shouted such statements as: "Everybody has failed the Negro! . . . Christianity has failed! . . . the FBI has failed! Christianity is a white man's religion! It contains no salvation for the black man! . . . Properly read, the Resurrection means that we, the black men of North America, will rise from mental death—then, like Joseph, go on to become master in the land wherein we once were slaves. . . . Why, after 400 years of murder, rape and slavery, do our oppressors now wave the olive branch of integration? Our oppressors are determined to keep our eyes in the sky while they control the land under our feet—smite our cheeks, rob our pockets! . . . They do not want a united Negro! They do not want an Islamic Negro! They know that Islam frees black men from fear!"

Afterward, Muhammad's words were discussed throughout Harlem—in apartments, along the sidewalks, in taverns and restaurants. Exclaimed a retired U. S. Coast Guard steward: "What kind of fools sit and hear him run down God?" A social worker at her desk: "The man is either a gifted opportunist or a psychotic!"

But for every antagonist, at least three defended Muhammad. For example, a woman in a beauty parlor said, "Muhammad just talks facts, and white people call it hate. Negroes already got plenty to hate—he's just bringing it out! If they want to stop Muhammad, the quickest way is to stop the Faubuses."

"It's got to go further than that," said another. "Integrate schools—what have you got? Graduation day, white kids go in one direction, and black another. They know better than to ask for the jobs the white kids get. The Constitution says the same thing for all the citizens—it just gets twisted when it's us!"

And still another: "You read where some of them Southern churches fire preachers for just talking tolerance. Sunday morning is the most Jim Crow day in this country. It's going to be a bad time in heaven, I think."

None of it was surprising to a professor of sociology, who said, "I've studied this man. He would never have got off the ground without so many evils to point out. But Muhammad's the extravaganza. Go to a routine temple meeting if you want to see the real spadework."

I went to Harlem's Temple of Islam No. 7, the next Sunday afternoon. Facing us there was a blackboard; painted on it was an American flag, captioned "Slavery, Suffering, Death"; opposite it was an Islamic Star and Crescent, captioned "Freedom, Justice, Equality." Printed between the two was, "Which One Will Survive the War of Armageddon?" After an inflammatory harangue by a 26-year-old Korean War veteran named "Curtis 2-X," all non-Muslims were invited to step to the rear of the temple to declare themselves.

All new converts begin a series of intensive lectures and lessons. The core of these is fierce black-race pride: "You are superior. Act it." "Principles of Belief in Islam" come next: keep up prayer; spend of what Allah has given in the cause of truth; speak truth despite circumstances; keep clean internally and externally; love the brother or sister believer as oneself; be kind; kill no one whom Allah has not ordered to be killed; worship no God but Allah; fear no one but Allah; never be the aggressor, but always defend yourself if attacked.

In other edicts that alter personal habits, Muhammad prompts even his severest critics to agree when he says he attacks "traditional reasons the Negro race is weak." Alcohol, tobacco, drugs are banned, along with swearing, gambling and dancing. A Muslim woman may not use cosmetics; she may never be alone in a room with any man but her husband. Old friends of new Muslims are astounded at the incredible changes of personality which take place as converts swap lifelong habits for new spartan standards.

Adult Muslims attend classes one night a week. Men take "physical hygiene"—body-building, military drilling and judo. Selected students between 18 and 30 compose the elite corps, "Fruit of Islam," who travel in chartered buses to wherever Muhammad speaks.

"It's nothing more than you find in the YMCA, CYO, Masons or Boy Scouts," New York minister Malcolm X said of "physical hygiene." But law-enforcement officials view it differently. New York City deputy police commissioner Walter Arm points out that in emotionally tense minority communities, a Muslim interpretation of "defend yourself," backed by the well-trained "Fruit of Islam," could easily ignite a riot.

I applied through Malcolm X to interview the leader, and flew to Chicago to be available when his heavy schedule would permit an appointment. Elijah Muhammad had come a long way from Sandersville, Ga., where, in October 1897, he was christened Elijah Poole, the son of a Baptist minister.

After an eighth-grade education, Elijah moved to Detroit where, he says, he met "Allah in Person" in 1931. This was a man named Fard Muhammad—"the first and only man born in Mecca who came to America for the express purpose of teaching the so-called Negro." Fard Muhammad allegedly tutored Elijah, who then founded the first Temple of Islam, in Detroit. Moving later to Chicago, Elijah was arrested for lecturing against Negroes' fighting "the white man's war." Absolved of sedition but found guilty of draft-dodging, he served three years in the Federal Correction Institution at Milan, Mich.

Released in 1946, he concentrated on grooming dedicated assistants. The staff has at its core Muhammad's six sons. A son-in-law, 210-pound Raymond Sharrieff, is "Supreme Captain" of the "Fruit of Islam." Malcolm X is an ubiquitous aide-de-camp who flies about the United States counseling city and territorial ministers, who in turn designate subordinate lieutenants, sergeants and corporals within the congregation. This deep-rooted organization gives Elijah Muhammad a control and direct power unequaled among Negro leaders.

Nowhere is the Muslim bond of unity displayed more graphically than in their business establishments, which do brisk trade. But Muslim cash registers provide only part of the revenue that reaches Muhammad. At the St. Nicholas Arena in New York I saw no coins in the offering—nothing but bills fluttered into the large paper sacks which ushers passed in the packed hall. More money comes from monthly bazaars and sidewalk sales of jellies, pies, candies and cakes.

All together, enough U.S. Negro dollars flow in to Mr. Muhammad to enable him to finance new businesses, amass funds to begin the 20-million-dollar Center and purchase a large, modern Chicago apartment building. (From the latter he evicted white tenants, moved in Negroes, then lowered the rent—a point not lost upon non-Muslim Negroes.)

A few days after the interview I was invited to dine with the Muhammad family. Muhammad spoke in a calm voice—mostly of his problems. The FBI, for instance, was building a thickening file on the organization's activities. He knew that a Congressional probe was rumored, and that the Internal Revenue Service maintains keen interest in Muslim finance. But he said that he fears no agencies. "I have all I need—the truth," he said.

Five times during dinner, Mr. Muhammad excused himself to take long-distance calls. As the evening waned, he occasionally gave a glimpse of his dreams. "What 20 million Negroes could finance for themselves with just a dollar apiece a month!" he once exclaimed. Again, he mused, "—a million black people under the Crescent . . ."

Among every 300 Negroes there is one registered Muslim—anti-white, anti-Christian, resentful, militant, disciplined—and sworn to follow Elijah Muhammad to the death. How far can he go?

In Chicago, Detroit, Washington, Philadelphia and New York, I talked with top-caliber Negro professional men, with scholars and executives to whom the mere thought of cult membership is repugnant. I heard unanimous denunciation of the anti-white, anti-Christian aspects of the Muslim program. Yet all these people felt that beyond doubt Muhammad is a figure to be reckoned with—because there is so much truth in his charges.

As long as inequity persists in our democratic system, Elijah Muhammad—or some variation of him—will be able to solicit among the Negro population enough followers to justify the title, "the most powerful black man in America." It is important for Christianity and democracy to help remove the Negroes' honest grievances and thus eliminate the appeal of such a potent racist cult.

Negro Ghettos in the North

MAY 11 1960

Fanatic Muslims Symbolize And Spur Negroes' Unrest

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

Resist.. Misc

By HARRY S. ASHMORE

Lenox avenue and 116th street was once the main corner of the Harlem that Carl Van Vechten, a popular novelist of the twenties, in that simpler time, without offense could identify as "Nigger Heaven." It isn't an important intersection any longer, but there still stands there a sagging office building bedecked by signs that are intended to signalize the American Negro's protest movement.

Third in a series.

A white man entering the old building causes a mild flurry. An ancient custodian peers out of his cubbyhole with obvious surprise, and a numbers runner scuttles off down the street to spread the word of possible trouble.

The open-cage elevator ceased functioning in some forgotten epoch. Worn, dimly lighted steps take the visitor upward across the yawning distances between old-fashioned high ceilings, and past closed doors that recite their own pathetic litany.

The second floor is the headquarters of the Garvey Club, keeping alive the name of old Marcus, the first and probably the most spectacular of the Black Nationalists. On the third floor there is the Universal Nationalist Movement, a splinter of the larger United African Nationalists which is the private preserve of a smooth-talking public relations man named James R. Lawson. Down the hall a door bears the imprimatur of the Prophet Judah. The fourth floor is taken up with a sizeable meeting hall which is Temple No. 7 of Muhammad's

Continued on Page 10, Column 1

Negro Ghettos in the North

Fanatic Muslims Profit from Unrest

Continued From Page 1

Islam—the New York center of the so-called Black Muslim movement which now makes militant anti-white sounds in every major city of the country.

All these doors are firmly closed to the white visitor. So are the meetings of the Muslims, where even those with the black skins must submit to a search upon entry. There is the unmistakable aura here of the secret society—and one who has lived in the South thinks instantly of the ironic parallel with the Ku Klux Klan.

The Muslim movement began, so its reluctant historians say, about 20 years ago in Detroit. Temple Nunber One is now in Chicago, and this is the seat of the aging, bald man who came into the world as Elijah Poole and now calls himself Messenger Elijah Muhammad. The claims made on behalf of the Messenger in his own publication go like this:

"Messenger Elijah Muhammad, spiritual leader of America's Muslims, whose undisputed control of his fast-growing, well-disciplined, fearless young followers . . . and his growing influence throughout the African-Asian world, makes him one of the most loved and respected Black Men in America. He heads the best organized group of young Black people in the Western hemisphere, dedicated young people whose 'unto the death' obedience of his fearless and uncompromising leadership amazes and impresses his sharpest critics."

A CALL TO ARMS

There is the sound of bugles here, and of a call to arms, and it follows that the Messenger's sharpest critics include the police officials of a number of cities, who keep a wary eye on the movement. In Los Angeles, where the Muslim invasion is fairly recent, Chief Parker has asked in the public interest that the local newspapers not publicize it, and they have complied.

Muhammad does not see white newspapermen, but on occasion his number two man will. He is the prophet of the New York temple and the editor of the sporadic Muslim publications—a thin, intense man of medium color who was christened Malcolm Little, the son of a Baptist preacher, and who will say of his youth only that he "grew up all over." Today he calls himself Malcolm X, rejecting his pre-Muslim surname as the unworthy heritage of a white man who thrust it upon a slave forebear.

Malcolm insists that the Black Muslim movement is an authentic offshoot of Islam; the Messenger, he says, has made the pilgrimage to the inner shrine at Mecca, and the only reason he hasn't gone himself is that he didn't want to get there ahead of his ecclesiastical superior. This claim is privately and somewhat indignantly denied by practicing Middle Eastern Moslems in this country, but there has been no official disclaimer because there seems to be no one to provide it in a religious movement which operates without a priesthood and relies largely upon the individual's inner call.

SONS OF THE CRESCENT

In any event the Black Muslims are unshakable in their assertion that theirs is, among other things, a religious movement. Those who join must sever their ties with other churches. They are enjoined to follow the Moslem dietary proscriptions against pork and alcohol—and for good measure the Messenger on his own motion has added tobacco to the list. Malcolm says the faithful eat only one meal a day, and face East to say their prayers. Cosmetics and fancy clothing are frowned upon; a hot bath every 24 hours is mandatory; and the male members normally shave their heads. Malcolm wears the somber black hat and suit, and the stiff white collar and black tie of the conventional Protestant minister.

Franklin Williams, former NAACP director on the West Coast and now assistant attorney general of California, has said of the movement: "It combines the emotional religious drive of Father Divine and Daddy Grace with the legal and political protest of the NAACP, and on top of that it offers the hope of a Black utopia on this earth. Above all, it gives the poor, ignorant, disturbed Negro a sense of identity—something the white world has always denied him. This is its appeal, and it is a powerful one."

The Muslims preach brotherhood, but it is restricted to the Blacks. (They reject the term Negro, and refuse to use it.) The white man is an enemy, or at best a neutral entity. Malcolm claims that he can produce 200 of the faithful on any street corner in Harlem within five minutes if there is a racial incident worthy of Muslim attention. What would Black community which will not have to depend upon the white man for capital, services, or employment.

THE DREAM OF AUTONOMY

Malcolm takes the dream to its ultimate absurdity.

"Marcus Garvey was right as far as he went," he says, "but he was wrong in telling Negroes they should go back to Africa to achieve their goal. We're going to build our own society here in the United States. We're going to have our own all-Black state."

Malcolm's vision is a complete entity, with its own government and, presumably, with an official connection or at least diplomatic relations with the United States. Where would he locate it? He was not specific, but he did summarily reject the suggestion of a Negro reporter that there were some people in the country who might be willing to give him one of the Southern states.

Malcolm shows no sign of being aware that what he and the Messenger are really preaching is the basic segregationist doctrine of the Southern White Citizens Council—and, to add the ultimate touch of irony, the separatist policy that in the Twenties and Thirties was part of the American Communist Party line. There is a strange, intense innocence in this man, who freely talks about his own conversion to the Muslim faith during the seven years he endured in a Massachusetts prison after being convicted of breaking and entering in the nighttime.

Malcolm himself still does a considerable amount of recruiting for the movement in the local jails.

PRISON AS A CONVERTER

"Prisons are all corrupt, you know," he says, out of the wisdom of experience. "If you've got the price you can get anything in jail—cigarettes, liquor, even dope. We think a man ought to be able to get the true religion in jail, too, and we try to provide it. Most of the prison officials won't recognize us as a religious group, and I have been denied visiting privileges in some places. But we've got converts in all the major prisons. And when those prisoners come out they'll be wonderful additions to our movement. [illegible]

Resist Sep. - 1960

Negro, and refuse to use it.) The white man is an enemy, or at best a neutral entity. Malcolm claims that he can produce 200 of the faithful on any street corner in Harlem within five minutes if there is a racial incident worthy of Muslim attention. What would they do? "Whatever is necessary," Malcolm says, "but peaceably, of course. We do not start trouble. But we do not turn the other cheek.

Most visible Muslim activity consists of picketing—to protest what the Muslims consider white discrimination, or to push the economic line that Negroes should spend their money only with Negroes. This is the pie in the sky, and its most tangible evidence can be seen in Chicago, where the Muslims operate their own school (for children mostly, but proudly called the University of Islam), grocery stores, restaurants, garment manufacturing plants, and a rudimentary department store. This, proclaims the Messenger, is the shape of the American Negro's future—a completely separate and self-sufficient recognize us as a religious group, and I have been denied visiting privileges in some places. But we've got converts in all the major prisons. And when those prisoners come out they'll be wonderful additions to our movement. Cowards don't go to jail, you know. We'll rehabilitate these men and women and they will march in the ranks."

There are, of course, no available membership figures on the Muslim movement. Even as does the Kleagle of the Klan, Malcolm only grins wisely and says, "We're big and we're growing."

Muslim literature lists the main centers as Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Pittsburgh, Newark, Los Angeles and New York, but there are small groups active now even in many of the Southern cities. The symbolic use of X as a last name (the first John to join is John X, the second is John X2, etc.) serves as a public mark of identification, and can be used as an instrument of pressure. Thus when advertisements start appearing in Negro newspapers identifying the advertisers as John and Mary X, the publisher can assume that a Muslim leader will soon be around to discuss editorial policy. The Muslims have leaned hard on the Pittsburgh Courier, which circulates nationally, and on New York's Amsterdam News.

"It is interesting," says Malcolm, who also edits the sporadic Muslim rotogravure magazine, "that while the Courier carried a column by Mr. Muhammad, the circulation went up. When we discontinued the column the circulation went down."

Whatever the reason, the Negro press now generally treats the Muslim movement seriously, and in its usual sensational way probably gives it a certain added impetus.

Even so it is doubtful that any of the Temples, with the possible exception of Chicago's, could count an actual membership of more than a thousand. The Muslim rallies rarely attract an attendance in excess of that figure, and it must be assumed that the audiences are padded by curiosity seekers, colored newspaper reporters, and undercover agents of the police.

A FEW SEEM A CROWD

But even a few fanatics can make a fairly loud noise, and the Muslims have discovered another truth—that it is part of the white man's racial myopia that to him a couple of dozen colored men look like a crowd, and possibly even the beginning of a mob.

The Muslims, then, are rather pathetic symbols of Negro unrest. They are not themselves going anywhere. But as long as they are around and talking it is a reasonable assumption that the great mass of American Negro people are not going to be content to stand still.

misc

Resist Grp. - 1960

the early ..., painting signs in Tampa.

eral ... practice runs on ... with his own endeavors.

would be respon... in event of an emergency.

Sun - 9-11-60 WS Journal (not stamped)

Religious Cult

Negro Race Supremacists Are Moving South

Resist. Mise.

By Charles L. West

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Muslim, an anti-Christian religious cult nourished in Negro slums of the North, is trying to bring its doctrine of black supremacy south, into the land of the white supremacist.

s zealous disciples, who call their founder and spiritual leader "the most powerful black man in America," claim to have established Temples of Islam in nearly a dozen Southern cities.

Their latest claim to a temple is in Charlotte, center of a recent recruiting drive.

So far, the movement south appears to be on a small scale, attracting interest chiefly among relatives of Negroes who have moved North and become Muslim converts. The movement is opposed by many Negro leade.s.

Muslim does not publicly advocate racial conflict. But such conflict is implicit in the utterance of its founder, Elijah Muhammad, self-styled "messenger of Allah." Muhammad, a small, balding Negro born Elijah Poole in Sandersville, Ga., nearly 63 years ago, entices his followers with the promise that the Negro soon will be master in the land where once he was slave.

FBI on Alert

It is no secret that the FBI is watching the movement wherever its shoots appear.

The segregationist, supremacist doctrines of Muslim are ironically parallel to those of the Ku Klux Klan.

The young Negro today has been brainwashed into believing the most important project in his life is to sit beside a white man," says the Los Angeles Herald-Dispatch, a weekly Negro newspaper and strong voice of Muslim.

"He has no ambition to become anything, nor to build a life for himself; he is not interested in his history — just to be integrated with the white man. Poor fool. He does not realize this is a trick to save the white man's life or to prolong it here in Babylon —Babylon is going to burn."

Muslim's strength is in such cities as Philadelphia, New York, Detroit and Los Angeles. Its headquarters is in Chicago.

In the South, Muslims list temples in Wilmington, Del., Richmond and Norfolk, Va., Winston-Salem and Durham, N. C., Orangeburg, S. C., Birmingham, Ala., and Miami, Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., and Atlanta, Ga.

Some of these temples, however, are hardly worthy of so majestic a name. In Winston-Salem, the temple is a small structure containing a store on the ground floor and a private residence above. The Durham temple is a rented hall where a Muslim minister from Baltimore conducts services once a month. The advertised location of the Charlotte temple is next door to a pool room in a small commercial building.

Negro Christian ministers and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People fight Muslim beachheads in the South, fearing its extremist doctrines will destroy what ground has been won in civil rights.

NAACP Stand

"We can't gain much if we are taken in by any ideology that separates, divides people and practices racial superiority," says Kelly M. Alexander of Charlotte, president of the North Carolina chapter of the NAACP. "This follows the same pattern as white supremacy."

Muhammad's way of life has no use for drinking and smoking, gambling, dancing and gluttony. It stresses cleanliness, self-respect, racial pride and independence.

Muhammad combines in Muslim the flamboyant tactics of the late Sweet Daddy Grace, the Arabic trappings of the true Moslem faith which rejects Muslim's claim to kinship, and the Negro nationalism policies of Marcus Garvey.

"America is falling," Muhammad preaches. "She is the real habitation of devils and every evil and unclean and hateful person. There is no future for her. One destruction after the other shall come upon her until she has been laid low, even to the ground."

Muhammad decries Christianity as a hold-over from the days of bondage. "The white race," he asserts, "has spread their religion called Christianity all over the black man's world and have deceived millions of black people . . . It is now only a matter of time before the so-called Negroes' eyes will be opened."

Resist. Mis, 1960

Court has thrown out the old Southern 'separate but equal' principle in respect to public institutions, it is this very principle in all other respects that millions of Negroes now seek, in their hearts.

"It is not to be wondered at, I suppose, that, in the foreign policy gyrations over the Congo and Lumumba, great numbers of American Negroes reacted as Americans second and as Negroes first.

"I do not understand all the psychological mysteries involved in man's reactions to pigmentation of the skin. But I am aware that even in countries like Brazil, officially unsegregated in all realms of life, the blackest men generally do the roughest and dirtiest work.

"But the age of the conquistadores is long past. This is the twentieth century. One can hope, at least, that dark men in power in this age will prove more enlightened than did white men in power in their dark ages." ("Reflex Action," New York Post, Apr. 3, 1961)

BLACK MUSLIMS: CATALYSTS OF CIVIL RIGHTS?

An ordained Methodist minister, Dr. Lincoln is a professor of social philosophy at Clark College in Atlanta. He has made a special study of the extremist nationalist Black Muslim movement (see Current, September 1960, page 30).

C. Eric Lincoln

"The American conscience is like a Georgia mule drowsing under a mulberry tree: it will twitch where the fly bites, now here, now there, and so to sleep again.

"This lethargy is the problem of America. She is neither more evil nor more immoral than any other nation, but she has a jaded social consciousness that has not been truly alerted since the time of the abolitionists. The 1954 school desegregation decisions and the student sit-ins have troubled her sleep, but they have not yet awakened her. She has not been stung in a tender enough spot in recent times. Perhaps the Black Muslims will find such a spot; if they do, and if they sting hard enough, we may all be benefited by the smarting.

"The American Negro does not truly hate the white man. Not yet. For a long time, Negroes have tried to convince themselves that the white man's resistance to social change derives not from a sense of racial superiority but from a twisted nationalism. Some Negroes, at least, are still willing to believe that the white man behaves as he does because he is American. . . . But 'American' also has an implication of color. Few of us have really lost the feeling that this is a 'white man's country' and that all other races enjoy it by the white man's sufferance. We do not say this bluntly: it is considered in poor taste and, if quoted abroad, not in the national interest. But we act as if we were certain of its truth and validity. Our textbooks, mass media and community behavior confirm this white nationalism everywhere.

"A diminishing number of Negroes, therefore, believe that the Negro is rejected in America not primarily because of his race but because he is 'not truly American.' The Negro, they believe, is considered an alien, an outsider, for whom special adjustments must be made in law and custom. His color merely identifies him and serves to warn 'real Americans' of his presence. The immediate result, of course, is the same: the Negro is barred from full participation in the values of citizenship. But the long-range prospect for a solution would be vastly different. If discrimination is based on pure racial antagonism, the white man will have to change his prejudice, for the Negro cannot change his skin. But if discrimination is based on national sentiment, the white man need not revise his thinking so drastically. He can still draw the comforting, sharp line between 'American' and 'not American'; he need only realize that his Negro neighbors are on the 'American' side of the line. From there it would be a short step to accepting the Negro as an equal.

"Sophistry? Perhaps—a sophistry encouraged by the Negro's desperate wish for a peaceful way out of his second-class prison. And like his more naive, more pathetic trust in the white man's ultimate 'good intentions,' it has been all but completely shattered. A vestige of faith remains—but for how long? If the white man's conscience remains drugged, the flood of disillusion will soon sweep even this last frail hope away. . . .

"From time to time, the trusting Negro has sought to prod the white man's moral sense indirectly—through the churches, the labor unions and various interracial organizations—and by personal appeal. Always there has been a willingness to give the white man the benefit of every doubt. But nothing changed; and after a hundred years of waiting and hoping, the Negro finally went to court. Where he had been willing to accept 'consideration,' he now began demanding his rights—his rights to work, vote, buy a home, eat a meal, see a movie, worship in a church, ride a bus, sit in a public park and send his children to school on the same terms as all of America's other first-class citizens. But the courts are slow; litigation is expensive; and the implementation of court rulings seems to be peculiarly uncertain in the area of civil rights.

Tired of waiting

"So there has developed, in the last decade, a wide and dramatic spectrum of extralegal Negro protest. The passive Negro, who trusts that God and the NAACP will salvage his dignity while he concentrates on avoiding trouble, is rapidly becoming extinct. Those Negroes (most of them young) who still believe in the possibility of peaceful change have developed a bold but gentle technique to quicken the white man's conscience. They simply ignore restrictive laws and go wherever they know they have a moral right to be—on trains and buses, in restaurants and stores, public beaches and houses of God. These are not 'angry young men'; they are not 'bitter.' They are just tired of waiting.

"At the opposite end of the spectrum are the Black Muslims. They are angry; they are bitter; and they are also tired of waiting. Their response to white nationalism is extreme, and their militancy is barely restrained. But America can benefit from the lesson they seem intent upon teaching. . . .

"The Black Muslims constitute a unique movement: a dynamic social protest that moves upon a religious vehicle. The movement's main emphases are upon social action. Yet it is none the less essentially a religion —a religion of protest. . . .

"On the surface, the movement seems to be unequivocally separatist, with a restricted membership and an overwhelming dedication to group identification, racial solidarity and mutual aid. But the membership is not restricted to Negroes; it is restricted to Black Men who comprise all mankind except the white race. The movement is thus highly integrative in intent. Yet whites and Negroes account for very nearly the entire population of America, so the movement is clearly separatist in effect.

"As a separatist group, the Muslims might be expected to show a strong awareness of group solidarity, backed by a generous program of mutual aid. And so they do. Like other Negro separatist groups, they might also be expected to pay only casual attention to racial tensions and the prospect of integration in America. The Muslims, however, are obsessed with this issue. They reject and detest the very idea of integration, but discussion of it dominates all their preachings and publications. In this focus of attention they seem to range themselves as an integrative group—turned inside out.

Aggression, avoidance, acceptance

"Indeed, in their whole sphere of social concerns, the Black Muslims are a paradox. They are obsessed with the humiliation of white supremacy, yet they scorn any gesture toward civil rights. And they respond to racial tensions in all three basic ways: by aggression, avoidance and acceptance.

"Their aggression is extreme; their vilification of the white man is impassioned and caustic, with its cardinal tenet the white man's imminent doom. This aggression has thus far fallen short of physical violence; but few observers doubt that the Muslims, if they were physically harassed, would hesitate to retaliate in kind. At the same time, the Muslim doctrines of religious and economic separation are a model of avoidance. And the Muslim dogma of absolute hostility between the Black Man and the white 'devil' is simply an acceptance of the dogma of the white supremacists, made palatable by reversing the values held to be inherent in 'black' and 'white.' The Muslim dogma is thus, in great part, a lightly disguised rationalization of things as they are, though the Muslims declare that their destiny is to change the social order rather than to accept and reinforce it. . . .

"The functional and dysfunctional [that is, as tending to shatter the organic unity of society] aspects of the Black Muslim movement are not always easy to assess. But an attempt must be made. The Muslims are growing daily in size and power, and they are determined to have an impact on our entire way of life.

"The Black Muslim movement is functional for its membership, for the entire Negro community and for the society as a whole in its insistence upon high standards of personal and group morality. It encourages thrift, cleanliness, honesty, sexual morality, diet control and abstinence from intoxicating liquors, and it effectively re-establishes a center of authority in the home. Muslims are expected to hold steady jobs, to give a full day's work for their pay and to respect all constituted authority. As a result, the movement reduces adult and juvenile delinquency and strengthens its members' sense of independence and self-respect.

An outlet for tensions

"At a deeper level, the movement provides outlets, short of physical violence, for the aggressive feelings roused in its members by the callous and hostile white society. Muslims tend to be Negroes for whom the pressures of racial prejudice and discrimination were intolerable, whose increasing resentment and hatred of the white man demanded release. Unable to rationalize their deprivations (as Negro intellectuals do) and unable to find relief in the Christian church or any secular institution, they might well have followed the downward paths open to the despairing everywhere —the paths of crime, drunkenness, dope addiction, prostitution and wanton violence, directed indiscriminately against their oppressors or displaced senselessly against others of the oppressed. As Muslims, however, they find a 'safe' outlet for their tensions in verbal attacks on the white man and in powerful demonstrations of group solidarity. . . . On the whole, it is better for society for its dissatisfied elements to be associated with some religion rather than with none. . . .

"In several important ways the Muslims tend to strengthen the dignity and self-reliance of the Negro community. They are proving dramatically that a new, positive leadership cadre can emerge among the Negroes at the grass-roots level. The Muslim schools are emphasizing Negro history, Negro achievements and the contributions of Negroes to the world's great cultures and to the development of the American nation. These facts are rarely taught in public schools, and the Muslims may be alone in trying to bring the Negro community to an awareness of its racial heritage. Again, the Muslims' 'buy black' policy is creating some new opportunities for Negro business and professional men—opportunities which are almost universally denied them in the wider community. . . .

"Finally the very existence of the Muslims—their extreme black nationalism and their astonishing growth and vitality—is functional to the extent that it forces the larger, Christian community to face the reality of racial tensions, to acknowledge its own malfeasance and to begin a spiritual and moral reform. The Muslims' dramatic expression of racial solidarity may shock the white man into a realization that Negroes will no longer permit their just demands to be casually shrugged aside. Indeed, Muslim extremism may even rebound and actively assist the forces of integration. It may, for example, force a white reappraisal of other protest organizations, such as the NAACP, which are now widely resisted as 'too pushy' or 'radical.' If these groups come to be seen as relatively conservative, if they gain increasing white support, and if the great surge of Negro protest is constructively channeled as a result, the Muslims will have proved integrative despite themselves. But this possibility hangs upon a slender thread—the hope that America will take the warning and act to save itself in time.

"The Black Muslims' virulent attacks on the white man may prove to be a useful warning, but they are deeply dysfunctional in the most immediate sense. They threaten the security of the white majority and may lead those in power to tighten the barriers which already divide America. The attacks create guilt and defensiveness among both Negroes and whites, and offer to extremist elements on both sides a cover for antisocial behavior. Above all, the attacks promote a general increase in tension and mutual mistrust. Calm heads might see the Muslims as a timely warning; jittery and frightened men are more likely to lash back in an unreasoning and potentially explosive panic. . . .

"The meaning for America is clear. We must attack the disease, not its symptoms. We must confront the issue of racism and discrimination. When we have done so with the determination and moral conviction so brutal a problem deserves, there will be no Black Muslims. There will be no need for them. And America will be a better place for us all." (The Black Muslims in America)

CHANGING REACTIONS IN THE SOUTH

The editor of the Richmond News Leader in Virginia, Mr. Kilpatrick has been known as an ardent segregationist.

James Jackson Kilpatrick

"A letter came across my desk this week from a Richmond woman who identified herself, at the outset, in the fashion of one presenting a membership card, as a supporter of Nixon in the last election. She was irritated at the arrest of several Negroes in Lynchburg as the outgrowth of a drugstore 'sit-in.'

" 'In a state where freedom and individual liberty have always been taken so much for granted,' she wrote, 'this is a ridiculous situation. There is no room in the future for segregation as we have known it in the past. Progress will be made, and if conservatives can't adjust they will, in the

Resist Bpc. Negro

The CRISIS

FEBRUARY, 1962

The Meaning of Black Nationalism

By John A. Morsell

A REPRINT FROM CRISIS MAGAZINE

■ An NAACP official offers his reflections on black nationalism

The Meaning of Black Nationalism[1]

By John A. Morsell

A week or so after a violent black nationalist demonstration in the United Nations in February 1961, the New York Times published two lengthy background articles dealing with this recurrent manifestation of Negro discontent. The reporters were able to identify and interview the leaders of some thirteen groups based in New York City and adhering in one way or another to racially self-assertive programs for Negro Americans.

These groups included, besides the well-known Temple of Islam (the so-called "Black Muslims"), such names as Muslim Brotherhood (hostile to the Black Muslims), United African Nationalist Movement, Universal African Nationalist Movement, African Nationalist Pioneer Movement, United Sons and Daughters of Africa, Liberation Committee for Africa, Cultural Association for Women of African Heritage, Provisional Committee for a Free Africa, and so on.

Solid information regarding the numbers of people involved is unobtainable; the Times reporters estimated that the total might be as low as 2,000 in the city itself, at least half of them Black Muslims. Figures on the nationwide strength of these groups are even more elusive; Eric Lincoln has made current a figure of 100,000 for the Black Muslims, but he concedes that this guess is based on nothing that can be subjected to verification.

The significance of the black nationalist groups is not, however, simply a matter of their numbers. As a matter of fact, it derives in part from the very obscurity which surrounds the estimates of size. As numerous observers have noted, black nationalism is an extremist manifestation which rises out of deep and ancient fear and suspicion and which is nourished by contemporary frustration at the persistence of racial discrimination. If even a relative handful is sufficiently impelled to active and personally satisfying participation; and particularly if partial echoes of their arguments can be heard at nearly all levels of the Negro community; then there is some justification for thinking that the potential for espousal of black nationalist doctrines may be a good deal greater than the ascribable organizational base suggests.

[1] Originally presented as a position paper at the 15th annual conference of the National Association of Intergroup Relations Officials, San Francisco, California, November 8, 1961.

DR. JOHN A. MORSELL is assistant to the Executive Secretary of the NAACP.

NOT NEW

It is important to understand that black nationalism is not a new phenomenon. In organized form, it reached its peak in the Universal Negro Improvement Association, founded and led by Marcus Garvey just after World War I. There may have been as many as 300,000 American Negroes who enrolled as members or made contributions looking toward the establishment of an African state to be populated by black American émigrés. Although the organization and its program failed to survive, it is likely that fond memories have sent at least a few of its veterans into the present-day black nationalist camp.

In its African fatherland aspect, even Garvey's movement was antedated in American history. The colonization movement, conducted and financed largely by pro-slavery elements in the decades prior to the Civil War, was the real forerunner. Despite its temporary appeal to some opponents of slavery, it never flourished; it was doomed by the near-total lack of interest on the part of free Negroes and by the eventual ascendency of abolitionism in the allegiance of those opposed to human bondage. But the colonizationists must be reckoned the originators of "Back to Africa."

It is equally important to understand something of the varied strains which have entered into black nationalism, sometimes in combination, sometimes indirectly, and to see them in relation to the sustaining forces at work today. I do not attempt here to develop a systematic analysis, but am perforce content with what is largely an itemization.

In this should be included the rebellion against the sense of personal inferiority, bred of generations of inferior status and fed by the constant exclusions, disabilities and humiliations characteristic of the segregated society in which the basic orientations of most Negroes are formed. To escape some measure of this has been the good fortune of only a few, but the urge to escape it is virtually universal; many seek release in what is, in all logic, the most direct way—namely, by creating an image of racial superiority in which the bruised personality can find solace.

Parenthetically, it may be noted that the rallying cry for today's black nationalism is Africa and the African heritage, and there is obviously an element of contemporary accident here—i.e., the rise of new black nations in the Dark Continent. Fixing on Africa as the chief symbol of Negro militancy is something of a paradox: it really implies acceptance of the derogatory stereotype of the American Negro as submissive and dependent, the passive beneficiary of a freedom bestowed upon him. Persons genuinely free of this stereotype and adequately informed as to their history might well have chosen their heroes and heroines from the American Negro's too little-known record of slave revolts, escapes, resistance to captors, abolitionist crusading, and valiant combat by tens of thousands in the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812 and the Civil War. And they might have reflected, too, that Africa's new states won their independence, not on the field of battle, but by the relinquishing of sovereignty through negotiation and under the pressure of world opinion.

AN ADDITIONAL STRAIN

Another strain of great importance in the nurture of black nationalism is the abandonment of hope that racial justice will or can be achieved in the United States through invocation of the established process of democratic government. It was the belief that the Negro's quest for constitutional rights had no hope of sucess in his or the succeeding generation that led Booker T. Washington to preach the doctrine of Negro self-improvement rather than Negro rights. The conviction that Negroes can never expect full equality of citizenship with the white majority—indeed, that no white people can sincerely advocate such equality—is basic to the creed of the Black Muslims and some of the other racist groups.

The self-improvement doctrine has persisted, and it has numerous adherents who do not by any stretch of the imagination belong in the black nationalist category. It is essentially separatist nonetheless, drawing upon the seemingly unquenchable appeal of an economically self-sufficient Negro community, owning its own businesses and industries and, in the perennial phraseology of its advocates, "keeping the money in our own neighborhoods." It rests heavily upon the assumption that once Negroes as a group have acquired their proportionate share of the nation's wealth, they will move as a matter of course into political and social acceptance. Its most common overt manifestation, aside from the endless spinning of schemes for the raising of millions of dollars among Negroes for investment in grandiose business proposals, is the "Buy Black" movement.

The reference here is of course to economic self-improvement preached as a doctrine of racial salvation. Obviously, there can be no question of the necessity for achievement by Negroes in economic affairs as in other areas of life.

The itemization would not be complete without a passing reference to the Communist Party's advocacy for many years of a separate Negro state, as formulated in its policy of "Self-Determination in the Black Belt." Although this policy was imposed upon the American Party leadership during the Twenties for rigid ideological reasons and was as remote as could be from any realistic evaluation, it remained in the Party's program until comparatively recently. Evidence of Communist connections in any of the nationalist groups is thus far not established, and some of them are explicit in their rejection of such links. (Communists and Russians are, after all, mostly white people.) But it is most unlikely that the thought of infiltration has not at least entered the minds of the Party leaders.

Besides the racial elements in black nationalist growth, there are other kinds of contributing factors, including a substantial amount of anti-semitism. Of most of these, it can safely be said that they would constitute sources of frustration and discontent even if every kind of purely racial discrimination were wiped out tomorrow.

BLACK NATIONALISM URBAN

With almost no exception, black nationalist activity is urban. It is most vigorous in the largest cities. Squalid housing, a narrow range of job possibilities because of poor training, low family income, and the cultural aridity typical of the demoralized, slum-shocked fringe component of the city population are a way of life from which black nationalism seems to many to promise salvation. A dim view of authority, particularly as embodied in the police; resentment of the more fortunate, in this case middle- and upper-class Negroes; endemic dislike of landlords, shopkeepers and bosses, often Jews and in any case usually white; all these help to fuel the fire and to focus its heat on specified targets.

The grievances themselves are genuine enough. The police are frequently brutal, other Negroes are too often insensitive to the needs of the disadvantaged, and exploitation is not unknown on the part of landlords, shopkeepers and employers. (It is true, of course, that police brutality directed against Negroes has been and remains an important target of local action by the NAACP and other civil rights groups. Historically, however, oppression by the police has existed regardless of race and it continues in most of the world to be the particular cross of the economically helpless.)

For the very reason that these are essentially class, not racial, grievances, they cannot properly be top priority items in organizational programs which are committed to the struggle against racial wrongs. Such problems are thus not within direct reach of the organized efforts in which aggrieved Negroes are accustomed to think of themselves as being (actually or potentially) involved on a personal basis. If, however, these nonracial problems can be so represented as to seem part and parcel of the racial burden per se, the black nationalists hope to accomplish two things. First, in the minds of their followers, a remote, impregnable complexity will be replaced by an apparently simple and direct line of attack. Second, the established civil rights efforts can be exploited as whipping boys for their failure to solve all the problems that happen to affect Negroes.

In the case of the Muslim groups, there is, finally, the explicit element of religion. In a fashion made familiar by the Father Divine movement, spiritual regeneration becomes part of the arsenal, and numerous claims are made of the movement's achievements in reforming thieves, drug addicts, prostitutes and so on. There is no reason to doubt that some of these claims, at least, are warranted, in view of the tremendous ego-satisfaction derived by many adherents from their Muslim affiliation.

Beyond the "Buy Black" appeal and other activities growing out of the self-improvement philosophy, little in the way of specified objectives and their related programs is discernible. For some there seems to be nothing beyond activity intended to buttress internal morale by endless review and denunciation of the spectrum of grievances. All profess to be concerned with "awakening" American Negroes to their true ethnic status and with inculcating pride in their racial origins; some do what they can along this line, through meetings, literature and individual example and exhortation.

The purely cultural manifestations often include campaigning for wider or exclusive use of African themes and artifacts in decoration. Negro women are called upon to abandon the hairdresser and to substitute "natural" modes of wearing the hair in the African style (or, more accurately, in one of the great variety of African styles).

A few of the groups concern themselves chiefly with activity in behalf of what they conceive to be the best interest of the African nations. They seek to interpret African needs to the American public generally and to have United States diplomatic pressure exerted in behalf of the African states and in opposition to colonial rule. Many of them have enshrined as patron saint the late Patrice Lumumba, who is depicted as a black hero singlehandedly opposing the imperialist machinations of the Western countries and murdered conspiratorially at the behest of those nations.

The closest approach to formulation of an ultimate goal—i.e., one intended to be the final solution to racial discrimination—is that of the Black Muslims. They are committed to working for the cession by the United States government of a portion of the continental United States, preferably on the southeastern seaboard, for settlement by Negroes who will establish there a nation of their own. No program of any kind has ever been announced for bringing such an event to pass, although on many occasions attempts have been made to obtain one from Black Muslim representatives.

At least one group, it should be noted for the record, has been identified with a genuinely violent program looking to the disruption of civil authority by force. This is the First Africa Corps (sometimes known as the Rastafarians) originating in Jamaica, West Indies Federation, and with at least one unit in New York City. Death sentence was pronounced earlier this year on one of its leaders who had been convicted in Jamaica of the murder of two British soldiers. The Rastafarians, however, are a lone exception to the rule of professions of peaceful intent by black nationalist groups.

Some observers have inferred an ultimate Black Muslim commitment to violence on the theory that they must know that peaceful requests cannot acquire for them their black slice of United States territory. It scarcely seems necessary, however, to insist that the Black Muslims face up to the logical consequences of their propaganda premises. They are surely not unique in their readiness to employ arguments of great emotional appeal without regard to where implementation of the arguments should logically lead. Southern segregationists are an eminent case in point.

Indeed, much else of what we see in the world today suggests that our age is strangely characterized by the potent allure of calls to action, action—almost any action—and to intense personal commitment—almost any commitment—so long as they are intense and personal and fill the individual with a sense of purposeful involvement. The need for escape from the hard work of seeking out and studying the facts, which only leads to the even harder task of serious thinking and planning, has made the emotional jag highly alluring to thousands and tens of thousands of people—in this country and elsewhere.

For example, this partly explains the massive appeal of the radical right with its substitution of nameless and ubiquitous conspiracies (to fluoridate our water and poison us; to promote mental health and brainwash us; to lead us hypnotized down the road from free inquiry to communism) for evaluation and acceptance of the realities of our national position and of the rigorous programs needed to sustain it.

Certain special responsibilities are obviously imposed upon all of us who are in the fight for racial justice and who want it conducted with intelligence and effectiveness as well as with passion. We must face the fact that, logic to the contrary notwithstanding, sizeable segments of the community will continue to heed the call of false prophets and with properly disturbing implications. We should anticipate the strong possibility that the followers of black nationalist messiahs may become explosively frustrated when they discover that what they have bought is not hope, but illusion. If we understand the need, not only for making such diagnoses, but for performing the necessary preventive and remedial functions, we must of course go farther.

At the very minimum, we must never cease to be possessed by a level of moral resentment and indignation at least as high as that of the misled victims, an indignation directed not so much at the false prophets as at the conditions which permit them to flourish. Failing in this, we will not deserve and cannot arouse the confidence and respect on which our chances of being helpful rest. Among other things, this means that we should be as deeply moved by a restricted apartment or a racial job denial or a segregation-stunted mind as we are by a Freedom Ride—and that we should see to it that others achieve the same comprehension. The fact is that there are hardly any priorities: the evils we face are all of a piece and we have no choice but to take them on collectively. And we have very little time.

JOIN NAACP TO HELP:

1. Expand the Negro vote throughout the country.
2. Secure enactment of additional federal legislation to protect civil rights.
3. Ban discrimination in employment.
4. Continue desegregation in public schools in compliance with United States Supreme Court rulings.
5. Abolish Jim Crow in transportation and other public accommodations.
6. Wipe out the ghetto and establish freedom of residence.
7. Secure equal justice under law in the courts of the land.
8. End police brutality.

FILL OUT AND MAIL THIS COUPON

.....19.....

N.A.A.C.P.
20 West 40th Street, New York 18, N. Y. or your local branch

I wish to become a member and enclose $.....

I enclose $..... as a contribution.

Name .....

Address .....

City and State.....

Annual Membership $2.00, $3.50, $5.00, $10.00 and up. Youth Membership (under 17), $.50, (17-21), $1.00. Life Membership $500.00. Memberships of $3.50 and up include a year's subscription to The Crisis magazine at $1.50.

Rec Gp. - Negro
MAR 19, 1962 materials

'AFRO-AMERICANISM IS A UNIQUE FUSION OF CONFLICTING IDEAS'

Negro Nationalism's New Wave

By Harold W. Cruse

DURING THE PAST 15 years, there has been more noise in the United States about the Negro's changing status than actual changes in that status. At the same time, the social changes taking place in the colonial world—especially in Africa and Latin America—have been more revolutionary than anything the American Negro has experienced since the post-Civil War period. By comparison with colored peoples elsewhere, Negroes in America have found that their own advance toward fuller freedom is lagging. And an uncomfortable awareness of the discrepancy has given rise to a new set of political and cultural values which, taken together, have come to be called "Afro-Americanism."

Most of the young generation of Negroes who articulate this point of view are beset with a compelling problem of self-identification. They are plagued by an obsessive search for identity in a predominantly white society which has its own problems of self-identification, both at home and abroad. The rise in the fortunes of colonial self-determination has intensified many an American Negro's sense of alienation and isolation in the West. For those who adopt it, Afro-Americanism serves the purpose of placing them in close rapport with the content and spirit of the world revolution.

The first publicized demonstration of the new position took place at the United Nations shortly after the murder of Patrice Lumumba, while the Security Council was debating the Congo crisis. It involved more than 50 Negroes who had been seated in the gallery and forced the Council President to call a half-hour recess.

The general reaction to what was considered the worst disorder in UN history was a mixture of surprise, shock and indignation. Reporters went scurrying up to Harlem to determine the causes of the UN row. The result was a series of factual but superficial surveys on the temperament of Harlem.

The New York Times, for example, ran two articles under the heads, NEGRO EXTREMIST GROUPS STEP UP NATIONALIST DRIVE and NEGROES SAY CONDITIONS IN U.S. EXPLAIN NATIONALIST'S MILITANCY. Now the presence of "nationalism" among United States Negroes may come as a surprise to some whites, but it has existed a long time. Americans will have to learn to cope with it, for as adapted by Afro-Americans it is an increasingly popular ideology.

Americans have long believed that this country was never a "colonial" power. This is true in the strictest sense of the word. Moreover, the crasser aspects of economic colonialism do not show through the mores of race relations; as a nation we are so rich that we can boast of rich Negroes in Georgia and rich Indians in Oklahoma. But from the nationalist viewpoint, the nature of economic, cultural and political exploitation common to Negro experience in the U.S. differs from pure colonialism only in that the Negro maintains a formal kind of half-way citizenship within the nation's geographical boundaries.

The difference in social status between an American Negro and a black African in South Africa, it is felt, is one of degree, not kind. Thus Negro nationalism in the U.S. has its roots in the same kind of soil as the nationalism of the African colonies proper. Or, to use a frequently heard analogy related to American minority politics, Negro nationalism can be likened to Jewish nationalism (Zionism) in motivation, although, of course, their histories and social causes are dissimilar.

HAROLD W. CRUSE, a new contributor, frequently writes on developments in the Negro community.

In this light, it is easy for the nationalists to show that the American Negro suffers a more insuperable kind of subjugation than would be true under pure colonialism: He cannot sever his ties with his rulers and go his own way. This is why Negro nationalism will become the foremost political issue in future American race relations. It is even conceivable that a domestic counterpart of this country's foreign policy toward African nationalism will have to be adopted.

Not all Afro-Americans, however, are really traditional Negro nationalists. The genuine nationalist ideology stems from the economics of Negro ghetto existence and a pride in black African heritage which often borders on chauvinism. It is defensive in posture and, because it feels trapped and overwhelmed, strident in tone. Its stridency is disturbing to both moderate Negroes and liberal whites, who insist that American racial democracy will prove itself viable.

Most traditional Negro nationalists simply have no faith in the democratic promises of whites. They believe that the American Negro will get only as much racial democracy as his economic power can buy on Wall Street or in Congress. They have less respect for liberals and left-wingers than for conservatives of the Barry Goldwater type. The latter, they believe, at least honestly expresses real white attitudes on economics, politics and race relations. White liberals, nationalists feel, do Negroes a disservice because they conceal the true character of American mass attitudes on race from the impressionable young Negro.

"The best friend a black man has in the U.S.," I once heard a veteran Negro nationalist say, "is a reactionary Southern cracker, because that cracker will look a black man in the face and tell him, 'I think you're inferior to a white man. If you ain't inferior, goddammit, prove it.' "

This fits in with the nationalist belief that second-class citizenship is largely the result of the Negro's lack of economic control over services and consumer products in the segregated Negro community. It is not the segregation which rankles as much as the fact that Negroes themselves have no control over the ghetto exchequer. Hence, the typical Negro nationalist economic slogans—"Buy Black," "Don't Buy Where You Can't Work," "Build Negro Business," etc.

THE NEGRO nationalist ferment has been working at various levels of intensity in the Negro ghetto ever since Marcus Garvey's "Back to Africa" movement went into eclipse back in 1927. It gave rise to the new Afro-American trend of the younger generation. But Afro-Americanism is not so much a traditional nationalist movement as it is a unique fusion of conflicting ideas.

It is critical of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), the Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), Martin Luther King, the Democrats and the Republicans; contemptuous of white liberals; ambivalent toward Marxist factions; and shy of the extreme position of Muslims and other old Negro nationalist groups. Yet the Afro-Americans are much indebted to the original nationalists, who kept the embers of hope for African freedom alive at a time when most Negro intellectuals were ashamed of their African heritage.

The zeal of the Afro-Americans is often frighteningly self-righteous and often contradictory. They consider themselves revolutionaries, but the new movement has emerged from a social situation which has provided no philosophy suitable to its needs or relevant enough to guide its eclecticism.

In the face of the realities of Negro development in the U.S., it is surely an almost impossible task to reconcile nationalism and integrationism. Yet this is precisely what the Afro-Americans are trying to do. They disdain the legalism of the NAACP because the organization is not sufficiently militant in its fight for integration. They refuse to accept the hard reality that integration, if it is ever to achieve its aims, has to be gradual.

Afro-Americans consider the Freedom Riders a revolutionary phenomenon (which in actuality it is not). They reject, in principle, the passive resistance of Martin Luther King and the CORE group as a negation of the revolutionary essence of the Freedom Rides. Confusing protest with revolution, they equate being more demonstrative and militant than the NAACP with being more revolutionary. This is the position of James Baldwin and others like him when they talk about the "intriguing" problems of integration, as Baldwin did in a Harper's article on Martin Luther King not long ago.

In his article, Baldwin unwittingly revealed Afro-Americanism's major weakness: an almost complete lack of historical perspective. Writing about Booker T. Washington, he shows little understanding of the man or his period. In another article on nationalism in Harlem, which appeared in the New York Times Magazine after the UN demonstration, Baldwin was unable to explain those tendencies of Negro nationalism which run counter to racial integration. He could not cope philosophically with the Black Muslims' almost complete rejection of every aspect of white society. Clearly, his difficulties reflect the split intellectual personality of the Afro-American.

Interestingly, neither the traditional Negro nationalist nor the NAACP-King-CORE position on integration is inconsistent; each group is true to its own logic. The nationalists are for complete or nominal separation of the races; the NAACP, King and CORE are for complete, unqualified integration.

Afro-Americanism, by its very nature, must plant itself solidly in both the Negro community and in the international politics of African liberation, or else it can have no real meaning beyond a certain social or racial symbolism. Over the past 15 years, however, the trend toward integration has favored the eradication of the Negro community as a symbol of segregation. And proponents of integration frown on any kind of racial togetherness among Negroes, be it economic, cultural or political. Long in vogue among Negro intellectuals, the tendency to seek assimilation among whites has militated against the cultivation of a strong sense of racial identification within the Negro community, as well as between the Negro community and Africa.

Consequently, Afro-Americanism has no established social base other than the original Negro nationalist organizations. But considering the old nationalists too extreme, while at the same time disdaining the moderation of the NAACP, the Afro-Americans are finding themselves pulled by political gravity toward the far left. Here they are fighting hard not to become absorbed in the dead-end politics of American Marxism, which has lost its relevance to the realities of Negro existence.

But with all their inadequacies, inexperience and lack of any historical sense of Negro life, the Afro-Americans are here to stay. In the future, they will undoubtedly make a lot of noise in militant demonstrations, cultivate beards and sport their Negroid hair in various degrees of la mode au naturel, and tend to be cultish with African- and Arab-style dress. They will probably not frown upon interracialism, if only to prove that nationalism must be made acceptable to whites in their own terms. The intellectuals will read more Western philosophy than has been their custom. Today it is not uncommon to see Albert Camus' The Rebel protruding from the hip pocket of a well-worn pair of jeans among the Afro-American set.

Already they have a pantheon of modern heroes—Lumumba, Kwame Nkrumah, Sékou Touré in Africa; Fidel Castro in Latin America; Malcom X, the Muslim leader, in New York; Robert Williams in the South; and Mao Tse-tung in China. These men seem heroic to the Afro-Americans not because of their political philosophy, but because they were either former colonials who have achieved complete independence, or because, like Malcom X, they have dared to look the white community in the face and say: "We don't think your civilization is worth the effort of any black man to try to integrate into it." This to many Afro-Americans is an act of defiance that is truly revolutionary.

In Coming Issues:

BEYOND THE HEADLINES
Chester Bowles

MALAYA: ASIA'S BRIGHT SPOT
William J. Lederer

THE REVOLT IN ANGOLA
John Marcum

Reint Trpe - Negro

FROM: MUHAMMAD'S MOSQUE NO. 11
35 INTERVALE STREET
DORCHESTER 21, MASS.
HI 2-5762 HI-2-0054

July 18, 1962

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

MUSLIMS CALL FOR UNITED EFFORTS OF ALL NEGRO LEADERS TO END POLICE BRUTALITY.

(Boston, July) Louis X Minister of Muhammad's Mosque No. 11 in Boston in a letter to all of the Negro Community Leaders, called for a united effort of all leaders regardless of religious, political, or fraternal differences, "to eliminate police brutality from our neighborhoods." He urged all leaders to be present at the mass protest rally in honor of the late Ronald T. X. Stokes of Boston, which is scheduled to be held at the Boston Arena, July 29th at 2:00 P.M.

He pointed out that today with the ugly specter of police brutality hanging over every Negro community, No one is Safe. Citizens have been brutalized on the streets, in their homes, in police cars, and in station house cells, by the very men who are charged with the reponsibility of safeguarding the rights, property and lives of All citizens. Despite the fact that some mayors and Police Chiefs have stated that they intend to have their police attend human relations courses to curb the hostility of the police towards Negroes, police brutality continues to plague the country, and today a situation amounting almost to a reign of terror exists in every Negro Community.

In Los Angeles, this reign of terror erupted into violence. On April 27th, in what has come to be regarded as one of the most infamous days in the annals of police history, seven innocent unarmed Negroes were attacked and shot down by over 75 well armed, so-called Law enforcement officers on the streets of Los Angeles.

The viciousness of the attack,on the part of the police was verified, by newspaper reports and on the scene witnesses. Police Chief Parker said, "there has never been anything as brutal as this conflict." That the gun battle, was, the largest such battle he can remember since he has been on the Police Force. The Police were the only ones with guns, a fact attested to at the subsequent Grand Jury Hearings.

When the smoke had cleared from this brutal unprovoked attack, six men lay wounded on the sidewalk, and one man, Ronald T. X. Stokes of Boston, Massachusetts, was dead. The Negro community of Los Angeles was confronted with a scene that could easily have been mistaken for the aftermaths of an O.A.S. terrorist attack in Algeria. Bodies were strewn in the street left bleeding and handcuffed. The California Eagle Newspaper describe the incident as, "The most ruthless mass shooting by local police in recent history."

The Negro communities across the country are outraged by this vicious police attack, and in an unprecedented display of unity has demanded a complete investigation of the incident. Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary of The NAACP, questioned why police had to use guns in what was essentially a brawl, and stated, "From our knowledge, The Muslims are not brawlers." Perry Parks, head of The Civil Liberties Division of The Elks, Said, "positive action must be taken to eliminate police brutality from our neighborhoods. " Attorney Paul Zuber, noted Civil Rights Lawyer, addressing a mammoth protest rally in New York, proposed a United Nations investigation of the genocidal shooting of unarmed innocent American Negroes.

Today in every Negro community throughout the country, mass protest and fund raising rallies are being staged. Positive programs of immediate action must be developed to stop police brutality. Adequate funds must be raised to see that these latest victims of police brutality are given the proper medical attention they need and to see that they get justice in the courts.

On July 29th Mr. Elijah Muhammad Spiritual Leader of the Muslims, will be the honored guest at a giant fund raising and protest rally in honor of the late Ronald T. X. Stokes. Boston being the home town of the slain man it is anticipated that one of the largest crowds ever to assemble in Boston to hear a Black Man speak, will be on hand to hear Mr. Muhammad outline his plan to stop police brutality.

Ronald T. X. Stokes was a former Boston University and Mass. College of Pharmacy Student, a member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, and a Korean War Veteran. A factual report of the incident leading to his slaying will be given by Min. Malcolm X, National Representative of Mr. Elijah Muhammad.

(XXX) Public Relations

White Bible Student, Kidnaps Girl, 16

Wipes Out Family Of 3

See Story Below

Dedicated to Freedom Justice and Equality for the so-called Negro. The Earth Belongs to Allah

MUHAMMAD SPEAKS

NOW PUBLISHED TWICE A MONTH
TO GO WEEKLY IN '63

Vol. 1 No. 11 | Chicago, Illinois — July, 1962 | 10c OUTSIDE CHICAGO 12c

EXCLUSIVE

The Honorable Elijah Muhammad Tells —

WHAT THE

EXCLUSIVE

The Honorable Elijah Muhammad Tells —

WHAT THE MUSLIMS WANT!

See Page 3

The Messenger Of Allah

CORRECTION ON DONALD WEESE

See Page 2

Orphaned After A Day Of Terror

By SAMUEL HAMMIT

MARION, Ind.—One bright Sunday morning in the Full Gospel Tabernacle Church of the Rev. Forest Winfrow, the Harris family met Death—but mistook him for a friend.

Death apparently appeared in the form of a white ex-convict who piously walked into the church to "study the bible," alongside the Harris family.

And he came many times to the Harrises home and neighbors report he was befriended and treated kindly.

Now a Grant County Grand Jury has decided that Death, to the Harrises, was apparently David Byrum Niccum, 26, who once served time for rape and assault.

Death had eyes, it seems, not upon "sweet Jesus" but upon a sweet, beautiful, 16-year-old brownskin girl with long pony tails.

She was Karen Harris.

She was the only pride of her 50-year-old father, George a physical therapy expert at Veteran's Administration Hospital, her 40-year-old mother, Delores and the companion of her 81-year-old blind aunt, Ruth N. Robinson.

Continued On Page 2

Karen Harris

2 Aug 62 Resist Bye - Negro

Such statements have a basis neither in fact nor logic. The very nature of the State implies the concept of welfare or positive action. Whatever the form or purpose of the State—be it democratic or totalitarian, republican or monarchial, Communist or Fascist, capitalist or collectivist—there must be a sufficiently strong feeling throughout the community that its welfare is served by the instrumentalities of government or else it cannot survive.

Certainly our Founding Fathers did not fight a great war and labor through an arduous constitutional convention to found a government that would do nothing. Let us never forget the historic statement of purpose found in the preamble of our Constitution:

> We the People of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessing of liberty, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Our great progress and genius is not that of a people and their government who did nothing. Our freedom and our welfare have been expanded by great Presidents and legislators who acted boldly and positively to meet the changing needs of time. Thomas Jefferson acted extremely bold when he doubled the size of the United States through the Louisiana Purchase. President Lincoln acted boldly when he secured free land for those who moved West and established our national system of land-grant colleges.

President Franklin Roosevelt acted positively when he fought for and received a Federal deposit insurance program which today allows our people to rest assured that their savings will never be wiped out in a serious depression. President Eisenhower acted positively when he created the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to help look after and care for the needs of our people.

Today the Nation is faced with unprecedented national and international problems—problems which will not be solved by doing nothing. To be sure, 17th- and 18th-century ideas will not do the job, just as 17th and 18th-century technology will not get us to the moon.

As Abraham Lincoln so well observed:

> The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew. We must disenthrall ourselves.

I can sympathize, Mr. Speaker, with those who find it difficult and uncomfortable to live in the 20th century. I can understand their fear of democracy and their fear of an informed people.

But the Nation cannot afford to remain inert while these fears and difficulties of adjusting to the problems of a new age prevail among the critics of the President. We must move forward.

In his final address to the American people, Franklin Roosevelt said:

> The only limit to our realization of tomorrow is our doubts of today. Let us move forward with strong and active faith.

Mr. Speaker, President Kennedy is providing the leadership we need to make our realization of tomorrow become reality. Let us join him in moving forward to the challenges that lie before us.

TO HELP THOSE WAITING IN ITALY FOR VISAS TO JOIN THEIR FAMILIES IN THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, all of us are the products of immigrant forefathers. Hundreds of thousands of Americans go abroad in a year on a sentimental journey to visit distant relatives and ancestral homes in the old country.

We have a special understanding and sympathy, unique among the nations of the world, for those in other countries whose greatest ambition in life is to become citizens of the United States. Our sincere desire to help them reach this goal is blocked by the outdated laws that control immigration.

"But you cannot open the doors to everyone who wants to come to the United States" some people say. "There would be neither jobs nor homes for them. If tens of millions of people streamed into the United States in a given year, the confusion and chaos would be indescribable. Everyone would suffer." Even first-generation Americans realize that there must be some control over immigration.

If the general public knew more about the Immigration and Nationality Act, however, they would insist upon a major overhaul and modernization of its provisions. Their opposition would concentrate on the quota system, a formula that was devised 40 years ago to give preferential consideration and encouragement to immigrants from some countries, while practically closing the door to people in other countries who have their hearts set on coming to the United States.

The quota system was artificially contrived and unfair when it was adopted, and it is more so today because the United States and the rest of the world are far different than they were in the early 1920's.

Furthermore, the quotas for some countries are never filled, but the quotas for others are oversubscribed, with long lines of applicants waiting and hoping for a chance to move up and become eligible for a permanent visa. And yet, no effort is made to transfer unused quotas to the credit of oversubscribed quotas.

With the exception of emergency legislation after World War 2, to make room for limited numbers of displaced persons and refugees, our immigration laws have remained rigid and unrealistic. An effort was made to remedy the forced separation of close relatives, but this became a victim of statistics and timetables.

The 1959 amendment provided for the nonquota admission of fourth-preference applicants who were registered on consular waiting lists prior to December 31, 1953, and for whom petitions were approved by the Attorney General. This law expired in March 1962.

There were 170,000 registered applicants of various nationality groups—Italians, Greeks, Spaniards, Chinese, Portuguese, and other nationalities, including their spouses and their children—who saw their hopes and plans wrecked by the automatic death of a law. We could not blame them for feeling betrayed when their petitions were accepted, then mired down in redtape that delayed the issuance of visas until it was too late.

There is a large Italo-American population in Massachusetts. Some of them have come to me with hurt in their eyes. "We can't understand why the Government would do this to us. We had made all arrangements, filled out all the necessary papers to clear the way for our parents—or brothers, sisters, sons, or daughters—to become reunited with us. We had been told that everything was in order. Then came the long wait and now the disappointment of learning that it was all for nothing. We are still separated. Why does the law build up our hopes only to destroy them?"

It is not enough to reassure them; to counsel patience. If we are to keep faith with our promise to reunite as many of these families as is humanly possible we must enact a liberal law to solve this problem. We can help some of them now.

For an interim remedy, until the Immigration and Nationality Act can be carefully but thoroughly revised and brought up to date, I have introduced a bill to move up the cutoff date of registrants by 1 year.

It provides that any alien who is registered on a consular waiting list under a priority date earlier than December 31, 1954, and is eligible for a quota immigrant status on the basis of a petition approved by the Attorney General prior to January 1, 1962, and the spouse and children of such alien, shall be held to be nonquota immigrants and if otherwise admissible shall be issued nonquota immigrant visas.

Immigrants created and developed our Nation. Their hunger for freedom has found a fulfillment here that has not as yet been equaled in any other part of the world.

Our people's regard for humanity, their faith in the worth of every individual, is nourished by the varied racial and cultural contributions that come to us in the person of immigrants who are welcomed to our open society.

By helping aliens to join the family circle of their close relatives in the United States, we shall strengthen our Nation with the love and gratitude of those who are reunited in freedom.

RIOTS AT LORTON REFORMATORY

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

(Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include newspaper clippings from the Washington papers.)

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, even the most naive person alive must have known the Black Muslims would instigate and foment a violent riot at the Lorton Youth Center when they were officially recognized as a "religious group."

A large part of the responsibility for this outrageous spectacle, staged in deliberate defiance of lawful authority at the youth center on Tuesday, must be shared by District Court Judge Burnita Shelton Matthews.

Last month Judge Matthews, in a ruling designed to guarantee even further kid-glove treatment of hardened criminals of today, decided that the rights of these coddled thugs had been denied since they were not permitted to hold so-called religious services as Black Muslims.

Judge Matthews, speaking for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, ruled that the Black Muslims represented an established religion. Therefore, prison officials were directed to acknowledge this group as the 28th official religion available to the Lorton inmates.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot comprehend how anyone can truthfully believe the Black Muslims to be a religious sect.

The spiritual leader of the Black Muslims is Elijah Muhammad. He describes himself as the messenger of Allah and such description is accepted by his followers. In his writings, he portrays the white race as a race of total evil—a race of devils, murderers, thieves, robbers, scientists at tricks, world snoopers, meddlers, and liars. He declares that to survive, negroes and whites must be separated. He advocates the establishment of a separate black state. In short, if this philosophy reflects a religious belief, then nazism and communism should be similarly recognized as religions.

Religious? May God forbid use of the word in conjunction with the Muslims.

Dedication? They are dedicated not to God, but to murder, naked violence, hatred, mugging, and yoking.

This is not a religion as we use the word, Mr. Speaker, but an ideology, whose members enjoy a propensity for degeneration, for degrading acts against civilization.

Mr. Speaker, if I had my way, I would toss these hardened, vicious members of an outerfringe element of society right in solitary confinement.

The do-gooders, the bleeding hearts would wail and gnash their teeth, but if such a sect as this is continually granted its so-called rights at the expense of decent society, then the day will soon arrive when civilization truly is a sidewalk jungle, with only the very strong and very brave venturing forth from their homes during the day.

Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution in the Congress to direct the House Committee on Un-American Activities to delve into the terrible ideology behind the Black Muslim sect.

I am confident the committee will find it a subversive organization.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to inform the gentleman that the Committee on Un-American Activities has made a preliminary investigation of the question of whether or not that committee has jurisdiction to investigate this matter. If the committee has the authority under the law and is charged with the responsibility, it will conduct a very intensive investigation.

The committee has received many complaints about the Muslims and demands that it investigate the movement.

It has obtained evidence that members of this organization are employed by Government agencies, including, in at least a few instances, sensitive security agencies, and that they also are employed by contractors engaged in classified work for the Government.

Claude Lightfoot, a vice chairman of the Communist Party and a member of its national committee, national executive committee, and national board, has recently called upon all Communists in this country to work for a united-front type of operation with the Muslims. Lightfoot hopes that the Muslims will direct their fire against the "reactionary ruling class" in this country.

Communists of the United States—

Lightfoot went on to say—are dutybound to go among our Muslim brothers and to help light an understanding among them. We will help to enlist [them] in the great battle for freedom [sic] in the United States.

Aside from the issue of ties between the Black Muslims and Communist Party, it appears to be clear that on the simple basis of what the Muslims teach, they are subversive of our form of government and pose a growing danger to our internal security.

Although the Muslims preach against the use of narcotics, it is a fact that a number of the organization's top leaders have police records for narcotics addiction.

It also is a matter of deep concern that the Muslims are operating schools in various parts of the country in which the children of sect members are indoctrinated with the Muslim principles of violence and hatred.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I would like to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and, anticipating that action I have today introduced a resolution giving you exactly that authority and a direction from the House of Representatives. That resolution was introduced a minute ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I regret very much that my good friend from South Carolina saw fit to inject Judge Matthews into this discussion. Evidently he does not know Judge Matthews. For his information, Judge Matthews is a gracious lady, an eminent lawyer, and honest in every respect. Her integrity has never been questioned, and I can assure my good friend that her decisions are not based on political considerations, but rather, on the law in the case as she believes it to be.

I am not familiar with the opinion to which the gentleman addresses himself, but I can say that Judge Matthews ruled the way she did because she believed it to be the correct and proper legal ruling. No doubt it may be in line with the rulings of the higher courts. But I would be more inclined to place the blame on the several rulings of the Supreme Court which have laid the predicate for this type of thing of which the gentleman complains, and rightly so.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I do not question what the gentleman says about Judge Matthews, and I positively do not deny what he says of the Supreme Court, but Judge Matthews, speaking for the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, ruled that the Black Muslims represented an established religion; therefore, prison officials were directed to acknowledge this group as the 28th official religion available to the Lorton inmates.

Do you remember a few days a former colleague, Sam Yorty, came from Los Angeles to Washington and went to see the Attorney General of the United States and asked him to for God's sake investigate this sect, that they were creating riots, and yoking and had violently attacked the police of Los Angeles, Calif. In short, raised the plain devil and did everything that goes along with that out in Los Angeles in a wave of anarchy and violence. These are dangerous people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the references that the gentleman made which might have reflected on the character and ability of Judge Matthews, and which references were made, I am sure, in good faith but with lack of acquaintance with Judge Matthews, her background, character, and qualifications, I certainly subscribe to everything else that the gentleman has said about the Black Muslim outfit.

I hope that the resolution which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS] has introduced will be considered favorably, and soon.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not only are the so-called Black Muslims using religion as a cloak to conceal their despicable aims and activities, but religion is also being used as a false front by other racketeers such as Martin Luther King and those who associate themselves with him, in an attempt to promote a political and social point of view which is entirely unrelated to religion.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I certainly accept what the gentleman from Mississippi has said. But I must insist that Judge Matthews is naive, she made a bad decision, and I insist that she must accept the responsibility regardless of her sweetness, regardless of her distinguished background, regardless of anything. Judge Matthews is responsible for what happened down at Lorton Penitentiary.

You know, we had a judge in South Carolina who got brainwashed one time, and may God have mercy on his miserable soul.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that I must agree, insofar as that judge is concerned. Let me assure the gentleman, that Judge Matthews is not a Judge Waring. Unlike him, she is a person of honor and a most competent lawyer. I might disagree with her ruling, but I certainly would not question her judicial integrity.

Mr. RIVERS of South Carolina. I will not permit my affection for the gentleman from Mississippi to change my opinion of this decision.

I think the world of the gentleman from Mississippi when he is right, but I will not follow even my wife when she is wrong. Judge Matthews may be as pure as the driven snow from a convent roof, but her Black Muslim decision is not sound. The gentleman from Mississippi and I go together 99 percent of the time. But can one imagine what would happen if the gentleman from Mississippi, JOHN BELL WILLIAMS, and the gentleman from South Carolina, MENDEL RIVERS—and we will even take the gentleman from Florida, BILLY MATTHEWS for good measure—created a sect known as the "White Muslims"? Can one imagine what would happen if we had the White Muslims in America? They would put us in jail so fast it would make your head swim if we even advocated such a thing in the name of white supremacy.

Can you imagine what would happen? This thing is terribly dangerous and it is designed and dedicated to disorder and anarchy, and everything that is evil. You read these newspapers which I am putting in the RECORD. They are getting worse and worse, and God help you if you are caught on the street after night. They conduct schools in hatred or something of that sort. They are out to get rid of you. You would be sagacious indeed if you would look out for yourselves.

Mr. Speaker, let us start with the House Un-American Activities Committee before it is too late. Some do-gooders pooh-pooh some of these organizations as being harmless and a lot of people have said that it cannot happen here. It will happen here. It is happening here.

Mr. Speaker, the newspaper articles to which I have referred follow:

[From the Evening Star, Aug. 1, 1962]

LORTON GUARD SITUATION VIEWED AS EXPLOSIVE

A chronic shortage of guards at the District penal institutions in Lorton, Va., could lead at any time to another outburst of violence such as the riot staged yesterday by 30 inmates at the youth center, Donald Clemmer, Department of Corrections Director, said today.

Calling the situation explosive, Mr. Clemmer said he has persistently sought increases in his guard force in annual District budgets since taking over the Corrections Department shortly after World War II.

"When the disturbance broke out yesterday," Mr. Clemmer said, "I had just 26 guards to handle the 280 inmates in the center. And six of the guards were on tower duty. It would require 30 to 35 guards to supervise that many prisoners adequately."

CHAPLAIN IS STRUCK

He said Commissioner John B. Duncan has asked for a special report on the disturbance. attributed to 15 inmates belonging to the Black Muslim sect—a Negro religious group that is actively antiwhite and seeks complete separation of Negroes and Caucasians.

Prisoners involved in the riot broke 50 or 60 windows with sticks and mop handles they found on the grounds when the disturbance started shortly after noon. Damage was estimated at $1,000 to $1,200.

One unidentified prisoner struck the Catholic chaplain, the Reverend Donald Sheehy, on the head with an ax handle. Father Sheehy was not seriously injured by the glancing blow.

Mr. Clemmer said an early-morning check today indicated the inmates spent a quiet night. He said the trouble appears to be over for now.

WILL BE PUNISHED

Inmates of the youth center, whose ages range from 18 to about 22, are serving time for what Mr. Clemmer described as serious crimes such as armed robbery and parole violation.

As the inmates began storming around the grounds, Mr. Clemmer said, he called in the other two shifts of guards. In addition, the Metropolitan Police Civil Disturbance Unit, equipped with helmets, gas masks and riot guns, hurried to the scene but was not used.

Prisoners who took part in the riot definitely will be punished, Mr. Clemmer said. He will confer with his aids to determine just what punishment to administer.

The riot was finally broken up when Mr. Clemmer met several of the rioters' demands.

"I gave in to their demands," Mr. Clemmer said, "because they were an angry mob and there could have been trouble and bloodshed."

The demands granted them were:

1. That the 27 members of the sect be permitted to live together in a dormitory.
2. That pork no longer be cooked with vegetables. The sect does not eat pork.
3. That the intensive treatment unit be discontinued because the rioters were against the confinement.

Mr. Clemmer said he agreed to end the psychotherapy experiment which was objected to by the prisoners because it involved close confinement. "I was skeptical about it anyway," he added.

PARADE WITH STICKS

The riot started spontaneously around noon near the mess hall when 15 inmates began parading around the grounds with sticks in their hands, Mr. Clemmer said.

They were all members of the religious group, but they were soon joined by 15 other inmates.

Capt. Fulton C. Rogers, acting superintendent, sent guards to control the men, but they were repulsed. The rioters continued to parade and began smashing windows.

Mr. Clemmer said the men then tried to break into the canteen for cigarettes and candy, but failed. They then went to the kitchen in search of knives, but the knife cabinets were locked. They overturned equipment in the kitchen and left.

CALLED TO SCENE

Mr. Clemmer was called to the scene from one of the neighboring reformatories about 1 p.m. and was told of the riot.

He talked to the men, but said they were in such a violent mood that he could not understand their shouted reasons for rioting.

Lucas X. Brown, a minister of the religious sect, was called to the prison and talked to the men. Later the rioters agreed to have five of their members meet with the prison officials.

During the riot, none of the prisoners escaped or attempted to flee.

[From the Washington (D.C.) Post, Aug. 1, 1962]

PRISONERS' RIOT QUELLED AT LORTON—OUTBREAK IS LED BY BLACK MUSLIM; CHAPLAIN SLUGGED

(By Everard Munsey and Wendell P. Bradley)

Black Muslim prisoners supported by other inmates at the Lorton Youth Center staged a protest march yesterday that erupted into an uncontrolled window-smashing riot. About 40 inmates were involved, authorities said.

The fierce but brief outbreak, first in Corrections Head Donald Clemmer's 17-year experience as director, began in humid, overcast weather shortly after noon.

It ended 45 minutes later when Clemmer began conferring with five leaders of the riot, and agreed to several of their requests.

Clemmer said the only inmate to be injured in the demonstration was a man who smashed a window with his fist and required 10 stitches in his hand and arm.

The center, one of four District institutions near Lorton, Va., 16 miles south of the District, is for inmates from 18 to 26. Most of them have been convicted of thefts and similar crimes.

The 300 inmates of the center, a campus-like institution of 38 acres dedicated in 1960, had returned from morning work details, had eaten and were quietly awaiting the call to afternoon duties.

Suddenly, said Clemmer, a group of a few inmates, their average age about 20, moved from one of the five dormitories. They carried broom and mop handles. Within moments, the group grew to 15.

They set up an uneven line of march on the lawn of the administrative building, brandishing the sticks as well as a pickax and ax-handle and shouting unintelligibly as guards gathered, Clemmer said.

Thirty or so employees, none of them carrying firearms, played a dangerous game of ring-around-the-rosy with the shouting inmates in an effort to contain them in a small area.

Meanwhile, from vantage points in red brick towers in view of the marchers, guards, armed with machine guns, rifles and pistols, trained weapons on the increasingly agitated inmates, who by then numbered 30 or 40, Clemmer said.

The guards were unable to contain the marchers, who broke wildly from the lawn to nearby dormitories, a school, the canteen and a kitchen, Clemmer told reporters.

The rioters shattered windows in a classroom and in the dormitories as they roamed through the buildings, said Clemmer. In a kitchen, they tore at a locked drawer containing knives but were unable to get at them, he said. They dumped over a potato peeler and other equipment, while other rioters tried to raid the canteen where cigarettes and other small items are kept.

Clemmer estimated damage at $1,500 although other observers said the total might go higher.

During the melee, a Roman Catholic chaplain, the Reverend Donald Sheehy, sought to quiet the men. One rioter hit him on the head with a pickax, Clemmer said. He said the priest was not injured seriously.

After 45 minutes, Clemmer said, the original group of employees, joined by 10 others from the nearby reformatories and workhouse, were able to herd the rampaging men to an area near the administration building.

When Clemmer, Acting Superintendent Fulton C. Rogers and other officials arrived, the rioters "were in a bellicose mood, waving the stick and yelling loudly," Clemmer said.

LEADERS CONFER

Clemmer said he urged them to return to their dormitories, but there was a shout of "we are willing to die right here." The men finally agreed to go back to their dormitories while their leaders conferred with Clemmer.

For another 45 minutes, five ringleaders, three of them Black Muslims, conferred with Clemmer and his aids, Clemmer said.

"The entire conversation was tinctured with the Black Muslim ideology," said Clemmer. The Black Muslims are a militant, Negro, antiwhite cult.

Meanwhile, outside the 12-foot-high double chain-link fence topped by 3 feet of barbed wire, a small army of guards stood by.

About 30 to 40 guards armed with pickax handles were supported by men with rifles and shotguns. Also nearby was a Lorton Reformatory armored car containing men armed with tear gas and a firetruck. A Metropolitan Police riot squad and K-9 dogs also had been dispatched.

"I pointed out to the five that they were in violation of the law," Clemmer said. At first, he said, the Black Muslims talked "about Babylon in an allegorical way" and that there was talk of 400 years of slavery.

Clemmer said the Black Muslim complaints which apparently triggered the riot involved at least five points.

OBJECT TO PORK

The ringleaders, he said, complained that pork was used in cooking vegetables in violation of Black Muslim bans on the eating of pork. Clemmer said he agreed to cook all vegetables without pork fat.

The five also complained against a new intensive therapy unit "which we are conducting as an experiment," said Clemmer. He said the group opposed being kept inside under the plan and "I've been skeptical of it and agreed to dispense with it."

Clemmer said he also agreed to change the hours of the Black Muslim church service, but pointed out that the hours had been set to accommodate the Black Muslim minister.

Clemmer said he also agreed that the Black Muslims, of whom there are about 27 among the inmates, can live together at least "for the present."

Clemmer declined to act on their protest that "two or three officers had picked on them because they were Muslim," he said.

Clemmer said that in return for his agreement, "they have promised to behave themselves" and would not ask for further concessions.

The inmate representatives asked about punishment, and Clemmer said he told them there definitely would be punishment, but that he had not decided what it would be.

"I feel we are very lucky in having avoided a vast riot with bloodshed and very extensive damage," Clemmer told reporters after his 45-minute talk with the prisoner representatives.

He said he felt his aids at the scene when the riot broke out were wise in not using force immediately. A show of force, guards feared, might have spread the uproar to other inmates.

Shortly after the riot was brought under control, a Black Muslim minister, Lucius X. Brown, who said he preached at 1519 Fourth Street NW., arrived.

He said Clemmer had summoned him and that he advised the inmates "they should not cause trouble; that the teaching of Islam proscribes trouble and violence. I hold them if they cause trouble, they would not be really Muslims."

The minister said he thought that a white inmate had told "some untruths" about being beaten by five Negro prisoners and they were punished unjustly. Clemmer said that five inmates had been confined pending an investigation of a reported beating.

The center is separate from the male reformatory with its 2,000 prisoners, mostly jailed for serious crimes; the women's reformatory with 170 inmates; and the workhouse with 1,400 prisoners.

[From the Washington, (D.C.) Post, Aug. 1, 1962]

BLACK MUSLIMS CONGREGATE IN U.S. METROPOLITAN CENTERS

(By Wallace Terry)

Ever since a former Georgia plowboy discovered the lost-found nation of Islam in North America about 30 years ago, his Black Muslim followers sporadically have run into trouble with the law.

Elijah Poole says that he became Elijah Muhammad when Allah instructed him to rescue the American Negro from his "enslavement" by Christianity and Western culture.

Through the years, Muhammad has not made his task any easier by demanding exemption from military service for his ministers, permission for Black Muslim youth to attend temple-sponsored schools and separate religious service for prison inmates converted to his faith.

The Black Muslims today number about 70,000, including some 2,000 in the District. They operate mostly in the large metropolitan areas of the North and West, where many Negroes, hard pressed by the economic and housing conditions of living, bear resentment toward whites.

Muhammad's followers want to get as far away from whites as is possible but do not champion Marcus Garvey's "back to Africa" idea. Instead, they frequently demand separate States from the Federal Government as repayment for work done by Negro slaves in building America.

Orthodox Islam has denounced the cult because it excludes white membership. Muhammad teaches that the white man is the creator and perpetrator of all evil in the world but in orthodox Islam, evil is ascribed to no particular color.

The Black Muslims also have parted company with the traditional Negro civil rights movements which look to the democratic process as a means to end discrimination and segregation.

"Why should we want to integrate with the Devil?" Muhammad asks.

The Black Muslims follow strict dietary laws, abstain from illicit sex, worship regularly and support the variety of small businesses operated by their brothers.

Several police officials have characterized them as "law abiding" and "gentlemanly." But the inflammatory nature of their antiwhite doctrine has keep them under FBI surveillance.

Their ministers demand strict discipline in public and the Black Muslim is enjoined against violence unless he is attacked.

The Black Muslims cried police brutality when one of their numbers was killed in April during a battle with police in Los Angeles. Police were cleared of the charges, but in New York 3 years ago the Black Muslims won a $70,000 judgment against New York City in a false arrest case.

In Chicago and Detroit Muhammad went to court and won the right for his followers to attend separate elementary schools.

He has not yet succeeded in getting his ministers exempted from military service. He and one of his sons have been jailed for refusing to register for the draft.

Besides personal contact, the mailing of temple literature to prison inmates has helped to convert large numbers. These Black Muslims find faith after they have gone to jail.

Recently the Black Muslims won the right to separate religious services at Lorton Reformatory and in Federal prisons in New York. They also have approached the courts in Michigan and Massachusetts.

[From the Washington (D.C.) Post, Aug 2, 1962]

LORTON CHIEF LAYS MUSLIM RIOT TO OUTSIDE SOURCE

(By Alfred E. Lewis)

The 26-man guard force at Lorton Youth Center was reinforced and put on overtime yesterday. Superintendent Joseph H. Havener also was called back from vacation as Donald Clemmer, Department of Corrections Director, moved to guard against further outbreaks.

A riot Tuesday at the District's youth prison, which involved a small segment of the 280 inmates, caused no personal injury, but wreaked about $1,200 damage to prison property, mostly windows and kitchen equipment.

It ended late Tuesday after Clemmer met with a committee selected by the 30 rioters and agreed to several of their demands.

But the situation continued tense yesterday, Clemmer said, as work crews of inmates and maintenance personnel cleaned up the mess and word of the riot spread to other Lorton institutions.

Early yesterday, Clemmer said, guards made a thorough search of the dormitories where prisoners sleep in the experimental penal institution, and confiscated everything that could be turned into a weapon.

In a room occupied by members of the Black Muslim sect, Clemmer said, guards found a homemade knife. Rioters were armed with pickax handles, mop handles and brooms in an outbreak which officials said was triggered by Black Muslims.

The Lorton Youth Center, which will be 2 years old in September, has an informal, campuslike atmosphere where young convicts are imprisoned apart from hardened criminals. Inmates range from 18 to 22 years of age.

There are no cells and prisoners wander singly, or in groups to and from meals and classes. Last month a bus-load of the more progressive inmates was taken to Carter Barron to watch a production of "The Mikado."

Against this background, a small clique of Black Muslims, a Negro religious sect that preaches race separation and hatred of the white race, rioted Tuesday because they wanted a nonpork diet, separate sleeping area, and an end to the intensive treatment unit and experimental psychotherapy.

Clemmer agreed to these demands but yesterday he said the leaders in the riot "unquestionably will be punished."

"We'll have a disciplinary committee decide on punishment, and until then we don't want to tip our hand," he said.

Tension yesterday reportedly had spread to two other District penal institutions in Lorton, the Reformatory and the Workhouse, where the Black Muslim sect is also active.

Clemmer said the Youth Center's experimental program had worked well for 2 years, and any minor problems could be blamed on "the rambunctiousness of youth."

This latest trouble, however, appeared to have been instigated from outside Lorton, he said.

Clemmer said the rioters, in their meeting with him, talked about Babylon and 400 years of slavery.

"That kind of talk doesn't begin with them," he said. "This unrest has to originate from somewhere outside."

San Quentin and the Federal prison at Jackson, Mich., have also had trouble with Black Muslims, Clemmer said.

"Until Tuesday we were under the impression there were about 16 Muslims in the youth center," he said.

"Then we learned there were at least 40."

Many inmates with no apparent connection with the sect apparently become Black Muslims after arriving at the prison, he said, adding that he did not know how many were bona fide members of the religion which was granted permission last month to conduct religious services within the prison.

The problem of how to treat Black Muslims at the different institutions at Lorton has bothered corrections officials and courts for at least 2 years.

In May 1960, two members of the sect complained that they were being denied religious freedom by a ban on Black Muslim services. Early this year the Reverend Charles M. Whelan, legal consultant for the National Catholic Welfare Conference, said the sect fell within the first amendment's guarantee of religious freedom, though he knew of "no other religion which teaches racial hatred as part of its faith."

Last month District Court Judge Burnita S. Matthews ruled that the Black Muslims have a legal right to hold religious services at Lorton and shortly after, the cult became the 28th religion available to Lorton inmates.

One of the Muslims' demands—separate sleeping facilities for 27 of their members—will temporarily segregate a part of the Lorton system which desegregated its sleeping facilities in May.

Racist Bigot Negro

MUSLIMS, BLACK AND WHITE

From the Commonweal, January 18, 1963

James Baldwin's "Letter from a Region in My Mind" came out in the November 17 New Yorker, but people are still talking about it. And no wonder, either; Baldwin's piece is one of the most memorable ever written from inside the world of the Negro.

There is no use pretending the Negro's world is mine; it isn't. Once a Negro realizes that he is not white, and what this means in our society, his world becomes different. "I began to feel in the boys a curious, wary, bewildered despair, as though they were now settling in for the long, hard winter of life," Baldwin puts it.

It is hard to argue with the facts. A Negro, simply by virtue of that fact, is fighting the odds from the day he is born. His chances of a secure, happy childhood are less. His opportunity for a good education is restricted, North and South. His chances for a decent job even if he gets a good education are small. "In the same way that the girls were destined to gain as much weight as their mothers, the boys, it was clear, would rise no higher than their fathers," Baldwin writes. "School began to reveal itself, therefore, as a child's game that one could not win, and boys dropped out of school and went to work."

In short, the kind of home a Negro will live in, the kind of food he will eat, the kind of medical care he will receive, even the kind of burial he will receive, all are drastically affected by the color of his skin. "My friends were now 'downtown," busy, as they put it, 'fighting the man." They began to care less about the way they looked, the way they dressed, the things they did; presently, one found them in twos and threes and fours, in a hallway, sharing a jug of wine or a bottle of whiskey, talking, cursing, fighting, sometimes weeping: lost, and unable to say what it was that oppressed them, except that they knew it was 'the man'--the white man."

The Negro is an American, but his America is not mine, and what bothers people about James Baldwin, I think, is that he recognizes this fact and says so, bluntly. For believers in Christianity and democracy, the presence of the Negro minority represents a great challenge--one we have so far failed to meet squarely. This is a hard truth, and when Baldwin spells it out, it makes people nervous.

A good many people think of Baldwin as a Black Muslim. He is not, but he understands what makes Black Muslims what they are. "This world is white," he writes, "and they are black."

Black Muslims are, of course, racists. They make sense only in a society where there are too many White Muslims. Believing in black superiority, the Black Muslims represent an extreme reaction to a culture shaped by a belief in white superiority. "Neither civilized reason nor Christian love would cause any of those people to treat you as they presumably wanted to be treated. only the fear of your power to retaliate would cause them to do that, or seem to do it, which was (and is) good enough."

(over)

Estimates on the number of Black Muslims range as high as 100,000. This is probably exaggerated, but whatever their number, this much is certain: they number in their ranks thousands of American Negroes who have lost faith in democracy. "One did not have to be very bright to realize how little one could do to change one's situation; one did not have to be abnormally sensitive to be worn down to a cutting edge by the incessant and gratuitous humiliation and danger one encountered every working day, all day long."

Nor are men like Baldwin any more kindly disposed to Christianity. "It is not too much to say that whoever wishes to become a truly moral human being...must first divorce himself from all the prohibitions, crimes and hypocrisies of the Christian church. If the concept of God has any validity or any use, it can only be to make us larger, freer, and more loving. If God cannot do this, then it is time we got rid of Him."

For a Christian, this does not make pleasant reading. It may be easy enough for us to dismiss even as many as 100,000 Black Muslims;there must be hundreds who have run head-on into white walls all their lives and who have, as a result, developed a definite sympathy for the various black nationalist movements. The American Negro is tired of moving toward freedom on the white man's timetable. When we ignore this truth, we are only kidding ourselves.

If I read James Baldwin right, this is part of what he is telling us. It is not too late, I hope, for us to begin to pay attention.

James O'Gara.

Red Rights Plot Seen By Barnett

Negro Movement Called Conspiracy To Divide Nation

By Richard L. Lyons
Staff Reporter

Gov. Ross R. Barnett of Mississippe charged yesterday that Negro demonstrations for equal rights are "largely Communist-inspired," part of a world conspiracy "to divide and conquer ou rcountry from within."

He also told the Senate Commerce Committee that President Kennedy and his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, have encouraged demonstrations and are "sowing the seeds of hate and violence" from which the Nation "could reap a bloody harvest."

Barrett was challenged by Democrats on the Committee on both counts, and was chided by Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) as being "off base" in equating the merits of legislations with the views of some who profess to be for it.

The Governor, symbol of all-out resistance to desegregation, was invited by Sen. Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) to testify on the President's bill to bar discrimination in public accommodations. Barnett said its passage would mean the "complete end of constitutional government in America" and "racial violence of unimaginable scope."

Monroney Disagrees

Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) was the first to strongly disagree" with Barnett that the President or Attorney General were encouraging demonstrations or sowing hatred.

Barnett said he based that on the President's civil rights speech to the Nation last month, which Barnett interpleted as encouraging demonstrations. Monroney asked for proof that a Communist conspiracy is behind the Negroes' fight for rights.

Barnett held up a printed sheet containing a picture and titled "Martin Luther King at Communist Training School." Barnett said the picture showed King and some persons identified on the sheet as Communists at a school in Tennessee.

Monroney asked Barnett if he had checked the picture and the printed allegations with the FBI. Barnett said he had not, but suggested that the Committee might want to do so.

"I feel it does a great disservice," said Monroney, "to try to brush off these demonstrations as part of a foreign conspiracy. I don't think this Committee feels there is a

See RIGHTS, A4, Col 3

Demonstrations Largely Red, Barnett Charges

everyone in this room"—a reference to the Communist-hunting McCarthy era of the early 1950s.

"That was a tragic period and should not be repeated," said Hart. "The witness says he does not know that Martin Luther King is a Communist, but it will raise doubts in the minds of some. I would walk with Martin Luther King. I hope that would not make me suspect."

Magnuson asked:

"What do demonstrations or pictures have to do with my decision on a matter I have thought about for years? What if demonstrations were inspired by the Communist Party, the John Birch Society or the Elks Club? What do they have to do with my honest convictions? Some great churchmen have demonstrated. If no one demonstrated, people might think there was no fnterest in the issue."

Barnett argued that a public accommodations law would be unconstitutional.

"Every citizen has the right to own and operate his own business as he sees fit without interference from any source," said Barnett. "The legitimate purpose of government is to protect a man's home as his castle. Does not this same basic American constitutional fact of life apply equally to a man's private business?"

He told of a woman in Winona, Miss., who operated a restaurant in a bus terminal. Ordered to desegregate it, she tried but both whites and Negroes stopped eating there. She was forced to close and has $20,000 worth of equipment on her hands, said Barnett.

Racial questions should be left to the states, said Barnett.

"If New York wants to integrate and end up with a mongrel race, that's their business," said the Governor. If Mississippi prefers segregation to "preserve the purity of the races," that should be its business, he said.

Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.) said that if Communists were trying to use the race issue, wouldn't it be better to guarantee Negroes' rights and remove this weapon? No, said Barnett.

Hart said the civil rights struggle has taken a new turn because demonstrations have destroyed the argument that Negroes are satisfied and like segregation.

Barnett answered that a Jackson, Miss., Negro recently told him: "Governor, if you spend one Saturday night on Farrish st. (Negro night life center) you would never want to be a white man again."

James J. Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader and vice chairman of the Virginia Commission on Constitutional Government, also testified against the public accommodations bill. He questioned the constitutionality of Federal regulation of private business, regardless of how desirable" it might be considered.

Despite talk of wanting to exempt little establishments, the main thrust of the bill is bound to be against the "Mrs. Murphys," said Kilpatrick, because the big restaurants, hotels and stores are desegregating rapidly.

WP July 13 '63

Negro Demonstrations Largely Red-Inspired, Barnett Charges

Communist conspiracy involved.

Thurmond said he was one member of the Committee who did believe a Communist conspiracy was behind the civil rights movement, but he added he believed many "sincere" people also have taken art in demonstrations.

Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-ich.) said he hoped the hear-g was not "creating an at-sphere this country experi-ed within the memory of

Kennedy had couraged demonstrations are "sowing the seeds of and violence" from whic Nation "could reap a bi harvest."

Barrett was challenge
Democrats on the Comm on both counts, and was ed by Chairman Warre
Magnuson (D-Wash.) as "off base" in equating merits of legislations wi views of some who prof be for it.

The Governor, symbol out resistance to dese tion, was invited by Sen.
Thurmond (D-S. C.) to on the President's bill discrimination in publ commodations. Barnett its passage would mea
"complete end of consti al government in Am and "racial violence of aginable scope."

Monroney Disagrees

Sen. A. S. Mike Mon
(D-Okla.) was the firs strongly disagree" with nett that the Presiden
Attorney General were en aging demonstrations or ing hatred.

Barnett said he based on the President's civil rights speech to the Nation last month, which Barnett interpleted as encouraging demonstrations. Monroney asked for proof that a Communist conspiracy is behind the Negroes' fight for rights.

Barnett held up a printed sheet containing a picture and titled "Martin Luther King at Communist Training School." Barnett said the picture showed King and some persons identified on the sheet as Communists at a school in Tennessee.

Monroney asked Barnett if he had checked the picture and the printed allegations with the FBI. Barnett said he had not, but suggested that the Committee might want to do so.

"I feel it does a great disservice," said Monroney, "to try to brush off these demonstrations as part of a foreign conspiracy. I don't think this Committee feels there is a

See RIGHTS, A4, Col 3

everyone in this room"—a reference to the Communist-hunting McCarthy era of the early 1950s.

"That was a tragic period and should not be repeated," said Hart. "The witness says he does not know that Martin Luther King is a Communist, but it will raise doubts in the minds of some. I would walk with Martin Luther King. I hope that would not make me suspect."

Magnuson asked:

"What do demonstrations or pictures have to do with my decision on a matter I have thought about for years? What if demonstrations were inspired by the Communist Party, the John Birch Society or the Elks Club? What do they have to do with my honest convictions? Some great churchmen have demonstrated. If no one demonstrated, people might think there was no interest in the issue."

Barnett argued that a public accommodations law would be unconstitutional.

"Every citizen has the right to own and operate his own business as he sees fit without interference from any source," said Barnett. "The legitimate purpose of government is to protect a man's home as his castle. Does not this same basic American constitutional fact of life apply equally to a man's private business?"

He told of a woman in Winona, Miss., who operated a restaurant in a bus terminal. Ordered to desegregate it, she tried but both whites and Negroes stopped eating there. She was forced to close and has $20,000 worth of equipment on her hands, said Barnett.

Racial questions should be left to the states, said Barnett.

"If New York wants to integrate and end up with a mongrel race, that's their business," said the Governor. If Mississippi prefers segregation to "preserve the purity of the races," that should be its business, he said.

Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.) said that if Communists were trying to use the race issue, wouldn't it be better to guarantee Negroes' rights and remove this weapon? No, said Barnett.

Hart said the civil rights struggle has taken a new turn because demonstrations have destroyed the argument that Negroes are satisfied and like segregation.

Barnett answered that a Jackson, Miss., Negro recently told him: "Governor, if you spend one Saturday night on Farrish st. (Negro night life center) you would never want to be a white man again."

James J. Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond News Leader and vice chairman of the Virginia Commission on Constitutional Government, also testified against the public accommodations bill. He questioned the constitutionality of Federal regulation of private business, regardless of how desirable" it might be considered.

Despite talk of wanting to exempt little establishments, the main thrust of the bill is bound to be against the "Mrs. Murphys," said Kilpatrick, because the big restaurants, hotels and stores are desegregating rapidly.

Cook Says King Withheld O'Dell Data

Atl Jour. 3/16/63

Intergroup Org. Misc.

By The Associated Press

The state attorney general says Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., integration leader, has refused to give him information he requested concerning Jack H. O'Dell.

A spokesman for Eugene Cook said he was preparing to start an investigation into the relationship of King and O'Dell, a former employe of King's Southern Christain Leadership Conference (SCLC).

King announced July 25 that he had accepted O'Dell's resignation after it became apparent that his employment could be used against the SCLC by segregationists and "race baiters."

He said O'Dell's services were terminated after an investigation into published reports that O'Dell was a Communist. He added:

"O'Dell made it clear that he was not a member of the Communist party but he did say he worked with the party at one time in Louisiana."

O'Dell had worked in the SCLC's New York Office.

King identified O'Dell as one of the persons questioned about alleged Communist activities by the U.S. House Committee on Un-American Activities at an Atlanta hearing in 1958. O'Dell refused to answer many of the questions asked at the hearing.

THE DAY after King's news conference announcement of O'Dell's dismissal, Cook asked the Negro leader to explain his relationship with O'Dell.

Cook said King's office responded by sending him a letter and a notarized copy of a press release made by King regarding O'Dell's dismissal. Cook said he specifically asked that King "reveal the name of the person or persons recommending O'Dell, and the name of the person or persons interviewing him for employment when he was initially employed and subsequently re-employed."

IN A LETTER to Wyatt Tee Walker, King's executive assistant, Cook wrote:

"I note with regret that Dr. King has refused to give me the benefit of this information. It was my hope that we could cooperate in the exchange of information regarding people who are notoriously identified with known Communist activities in this country, such as O'Dell. It so happens that I have a complete file on him and to my certain knowledge the attorney general of the United States has a similar file.

"In view of the fact that Dr. King has seen fit to refuse to comply with a legal and legitimate request made by me under Georgia's Subversive Activities Act of 1953 by furnishing the requested pertinent information for the state government's official files, I will keep the file current pending my own investigation."

Cook's letter added:

"I dislike this procedure, as we agreed that we would exchange such information when we discussed the subject matter in my office."

Dr. King to Give Cook A Statement on O'Dell

Atl Con. 7/30/63

Intergroup Org. Misc.

By BILL SHIPP

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. planned Monday to send a "notarized" press release to Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook as an explanation of his connections with Jack H. O'Dell, identified as a one-time organizer for the Communist Party USA.

Ed Clayton, public relations director for Dr. King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said Dr. King would submit a "notarized" copy of a prepared statement to Cook.

Clayton said it will be the same statement issued by Dr. King at a press conference last Thursday.

Cook said King sent two attorneys to see him over the weekend after Cook sought to question King about O'Dell's employment by the SCLC. It was agreed that King will furnish the information by affidavit, Cook said.

The Atlanta Constitution said in a copyrighted story Thursday that O'Dell was employed as director in Dr. King's New York office, although the Negro leader had said earlier that O'Dell had resigned.

Dr. King called a news conference and said his civil rights group had accepted O'Dell's resignation after it became apparent that his connection would be used against SCLC by segregationists.

United Press International reported that O'Dell was identified as an "administrator" of Dr. King's New York office Thursday morning, but he was reported gone from the office Thursday afternoon.

In the press release he plans to give Cook, Dr. King said:

". . . The fact is that Mr. O'Dell is not presently on the staff and has never been in our employ as director of the New York office . . ."

Dr. King said it was decided in a meeting in New York on June 26 that O'Dell should resign.

Cook said he wanted King to state under oath the beginning and ending dates of O'Dell's employment with SCLC, who recommended O'Dell, who interviewed him and who hired him. Cook said he did not wish to investigate King but merely get verification and clarification of King's statement to the press.

Atl. Con. 8/27/63

Intergroup Org. Misc.

Savannah's Negroes Severing Ties to Union Linked to Reds

Constitution State News Service

SAVANNAH — The president of the Chatham County Crusade for Voters announced Monday that it is severing ties with the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in order to "prevent our being associated in any shape, form or fashion with any unAmerican-like activities."

Hosea Williams, president of the Chatham Crusade and the Southeastern Georgia Crusade for Voters, said his Savannah-based civil right organization is vacating the offices of the union this week and will move to new quarters.

Williams announced the move after a recent series of stories in The Atlatna Constitution reported that the mine - mill union furnished rent-free office space to the crusade. The International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers has been labeled Communist-controlled by the Subversive Activities Control Commission of the U.S. government. That ruling is under appeal.

Williams said the report on the relationship between the mine-mill union and the crusade proved "beneficial in one way . . . because I had no idea how much damage" could be done to a civil rights movement that became involved with "such things."

Williams said, however, he knew of no members of the Savannah local of the mine-mill union being involved in subversive activities.

The Negro leader also said his organization was strapped financially but he hoped to receive new aid from the Voter Education Project of the Southern Regional Council.

"If we can't get help from the VEP, I think we're doomed," he said. The Southern Regional Council withheld support of the crusade in June when the crusade became involved in massive street demonstrations.

Williams said the crusade will participate in no more large-scale demonstrations but will concentrate on voter registration and organizing "adult citizenship schools."

A preview of Southern white and Negro children sharing the same classrooms:

THE SCHOOLS THAT BROKE THE COLOR LINE

What happens when white and Negro youngsters study together for the first time—in a state that has kept them apart? Here, in the experience of three small schools in Delaware, is a preview of the change facing the whole South

REPRINTED FROM OCTOBER 1954

Redbook
THE MAGAZINE FOR YOUNG ADULTS

BY WILLIAM PETERS
PHOTOGRAPHY BY IKE VERN

The first day of school this fall in Delaware—a state in which racially segregated public education is required by law—found three public schools beginning their third year of teaching Negro and white children side by side in the same classrooms. These three schools are the first public schools in any of the 17 segregation states to have experienced the change-over now facing the entire South.

All three schools are within a short distance of Wilmington, Delaware's largest city. Two of them—Claymont High School and Hockessin School No. 29—accepted Negro students for the first time in September, 1952, as a result of a court ruling which found the corresponding Negro schools unequal, a finding upheld by the Delaware Supreme Court. The third school, Arden Elementary School, voluntarily—and in defiance of the State Constitution—opened its doors to colored children at the same time.

The instrument which began this revolution in the Delaware schools was the pen of a 53-year-old Negro woman, Mrs. Fred Bulah. Sarah Bulah, in the fall of 1950, began writing letters to local and state authorities complaining about the lack of a school bus to take her adopted daughter, Shirley, to the Negro elementary school in Hockessin, Delaware, about two miles away. White children in Hockessin who traveled no farther to their school were furnished a school bus by the State. The white children's school bus passed twice daily in front of the Bulah home.

Shirley Bulah had been abandoned by her real mother in Wilmington at the age of about one year. Mrs. Bulah read in her newspaper of the child found on a doorstep. "As soon as I read that the little girl was colored," Mrs. Bulah said recently, "I ran to the chicken yard where my husband was working. I told Fred I wanted that baby." Two weeks later, Shirley was placed in their home as a foster child. Two years later, the Bulahs adopted her legally.

When Shirley was six, Mrs. Bulah entered her in Hockessin School No. 107, the Negro elementary school. "Since there was no bus," Mrs. Bulah said, "I had to drive her both ways each day. I did that for two years." The lack of a school bus meant a number of things to Mrs. Bulah. It meant she could not work. In bad weather, it frequently meant dangerous

Big changes started because a school bus wouldn't stop

The Bulah family touched off the Delaware experiment. When the school bus wouldn't stop for Shirley, they sued to have her admitted to the white children's school.

Shirley Bulah now attends Hockessin School No. 29, along with a small number of other Negro youngsters—and rides to school every day on the bus that used to pass her by.

driving. Worst of all, the school hours at the little one-room, six-grade country school were exasperatingly irregular.

"Sometimes," Mrs. Bulah said, "the teacher let them out at noon. Sometimes at one o'clock. Sometimes two. Shirley would go next door and telephone me to come after her. I never knew when she'd be through."

When Shirley was ready to start third grade, Mr. Bulah, a chicken farmer who had lived in Hockessin 55 of his 69 years, told his wife he didn't see why the State couldn't give Shirley transportation to school. Mrs. Bulah agreed, and she telephoned the woman who drove the bus for the white children. "She told me I could write to the Supervisor of Transportation in the Department of Public Instruction, in Dover, the State Capitol," Mrs. Bulah said. "And I did, too."

Receiving no answer after several weeks, Mrs. Bulah wrote to the Governor. In due time, she received answers to both letters and an application for transportation to be filled out by Shirley's colored teacher, Miss Constancia Beaujohn. "Miss Beaujohn said I was just wasting my time," Mrs. Bulah said. "She said she had tried to get transportation before and never could. But she filled out the papers, anyhow, and I sent them in."

The answer to the application from the Supervisor of Transportation in Dover told Mrs. Bulah what she already knew: No transportation facilities were provided for Hockessin School No. 107. "I wrote again," Mrs. Bulah said. "This time I asked for Shirley to ride on the white children's bus and be dropped at the colored school. The State Board of Education answered that letter. They said bus transportation was part of a school program and, since the State Constitution required separate educational facilities for colored and white, Shirley couldn't ride on the white children's bus."

At that point, Mr. and Mrs. Bulah went to a colored lawyer, Mr. Louis L. Redding, a member of the Wilmington Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), who also serves on that organization's national legal staff. "Lawyer Redding told us," Mrs. Bulah said, "that the next step was to ask that Shirley be admitted to the white school. We had tried everything else. So I wrote again, and of course, the answer was no.

"We talked the whole thing over again, and we decided Shirley was never going to get transportation until she could go to the white school. I knew she'd be better off in every way at the white school—it's just a better school—so we finally told Lawyer Redding to go to court."

The Bulah case was not the only one Louis Redding filed in the Court of Chancery, for about that time he had learned of a number of Negro parents who had tried to enroll their children in schools around Wilmington. It was apparently a spontaneous movement. "The Shirley Bulah case involved an elementary school," Mr. Redding said, "and it was thought best to seek to open a high school at the same time. So the local NAACP got together a number of parents of Negro children who had been refused admission to Claymont High School, in the community of Claymont, about seven miles north of Wilmington. The parents of eight children agreed to have suit filed in their names."

In the days before the Bulahs' suit came to trial, Sarah Bulah found that her action had divided the Negro community in Hockessin. There were whispers that it was all because Sarah, as Fred Bulah's second wife, was a "newcomer to town." (She had lived there only nine years.) There were even whispers that, because Shirley is light-brown in color, the Bulahs thought she was white and didn't want her associating with colored children. For one reason or another, most of the colored parents seemed willing to accept things the way they were.

for a little girl....

The children show less concern about integration of the schools than their parents do. White and Negro students sit side by side in the cafeteria as well as classrooms.

At graduation, Claymont High School seniors sign each other's autograph books. When the school first admitted Negroes, opponents predicted there would be "race riots."

"I had some of them with me," Mrs. Bulah said, "and they stuck with me. There were times when I wavered and wondered if I should give up, but somebody always backed me up. And I knew in my heart that segregation was wrong. After the suit was filed, the State spent a lot of money fixing up that little colored school. They put in toilets and a drinking fountain. They put in new desks. They even planted shrubbery. But they never added a bus.

"I talked to the Reverend Martin Luther Kilson, our pastor at Chippey African Union Methodist Church. He told me he was in favor of segregation, and that discouraged me. I know he must have told some of the other parents the same thing."

"I was opposed to the Bulahs' suit at first," the Rev. Mr. Kilson said recently. "Seemed to me they were getting into segregation under the disguise of trying to get a bus for the colored school. There's always been a good relationship between colored and white in the eleven years I've been in Hockessin. We never had any difficulties until this. Most of the colored parents didn't want to end segregation. Some of them might have been afraid the Negro teachers would lose their jobs. Some just didn't see any reason to change."

On April 1, 1952, Chancellor Collins Seitz, of the Court of Chancery of the State of Delaware, delivered his opinion in the two cases involving the schools in Hockessin and Claymont. While he did not rule on the constitutionality of segregated schools in general—a ruling he indicated the United States Supreme Court would have to make—he held that the schools in question would have to admit Negro children. The schools which the colored children had been forced to attend, he ruled, were not equal, as the law required them to be.

The State of Delaware appealed the decision to the State Supreme Court. On August 28, 1952, just one week

The Story Behind This Story

A report on as controversial a subject as segregation is a difficult challenge for a writer, a photographer and a magazine. To allow personal convictions to intrude even slightly would be to miss the mark of objective reporting—showing things as they are.

While working on this article, writer William Peters and photographer Ike Vern were often asked: "What kind of a story are you going to tell?" "We came down here," Peters told a group of Delaware citizens, "with blank paper and unexposed film. The paper is being filled with the words which you and others like you have spoken. The film is recording the things that we are seeing here. Nothing has been posed or arranged to prove a point. No one has been asked to say anything he didn't volunteer. When we leave, we'll take back the story we saw and heard being lived here—nothing more."

This, then, is their report—the simple, factual story of what Jack H. Caum, president of the Delaware State Education Association, calls "three schools daring to move out in front of official action with a warm understanding of the needs of all children."

The Delaware experiment has aroused strong—and differing—feelings

Mrs. Grace Moore changed her mind about segregation. As principal of Hockessin School No. 29, she became convinced that integrated schools can operate smoothly.

Nancy Stevens, an eighteen-year-old senior, had "no particular feeling" about the admission of Negro students. But she thinks that "they feel a little lonely at the school."

before the reopening of Delaware's schools, the State Supreme Court upheld the ruling of the lower court.

On the first day of school, armed with health and birth certificates and Shirley's report card, Mrs. Bulah drove her daughter to Hockessin School No. 29. She asked to see the principal, Mrs. Grace Moore. "Mrs. Moore took the papers I'd brought," Mrs. Bulah said, "and she said. 'Shirley, we are so glad to have you.' I asked to meet Shirley's teacher, and Mrs. Moore introduced us to Mrs. Christopher Vandegrift. She welcomed Shirley, too, and then she said. 'Shirley, I want you to pick out any desk you want,' and Shirley ran and picked out a desk.

"I told Mrs. Moore I had brought Shirley to school in my car and I wanted her to come home on the bus. Mrs. Moore said she'd arrange it. And that afternoon when that same bus came by my door as it always has, it stopped, and Shirley got off."

Hockessin School No. 29 is a four-room, four-teacher school covering the first six grades. In addition to its four regular classrooms, it has a wide, grassy playground, a combination auditorium-gymnasium and, of course, bus transportation. Mrs. Grace Moore, who has been the teaching principal of the school for four years, has been teaching for 43 years.

"I was born in Maryland," she said recently, "and all of my schooling was there and in Delaware—in segregated schools. I grew up with the idea that segregation was right, and when I first learned that our school here might have to admit Negro children, it bothered me plenty.

"All three of my teachers and I were terribly surprised when the State Supreme Court upheld the decision. But the biggest surprise was when Shirley Bulah was the only colored child to enroll the first day of school. A month later, two more entered, and in January, three more. We've had six colored children out of a total enrollment of a little over one hundred ever since. Most of the colored children stayed at the colored school.

"I know now, after two years of experience with integration, that it works. It works even when some of the teachers are against it, as they have been at this school. Most teachers have too much professional pride to let their feelings interfere with their teaching. It took me a long time to see it, but I think now that integration is right. But there's no sense pretending it hasn't meant problems. The biggest ones have been with parents and teachers, not children. And also, of course, we had absolutely no preparation, and no help whatsoever. There's been absolutely no leadership from the State, and they're supposed to be the policy makers." Mrs. Moore's eyes blazed. She paused, then went on.

"We teach rhythm in gym classes—square dancing. Some of the white parents objected to having their children dance with colored children. I solved that by getting the approval of some parents I knew were in favor of integration for their children to dance in the sets with the colored children.

"One mother called me right after we admitted Negro children. 'I'd like to know why my child can't sit next to white children,' she said. I knew if I changed one seat, I'd be through. I told her I wasn't going to change anybody's seat, and after that, no one else called about seating. Most of these difficulties came at the beginning. Now, after two years, I think a lot of that feeling has broken down."

Of the four teachers at the school, Mrs. Moore is the only one who has come to feel that integration is right. Mrs. Christopher Vandegrift, Shirley Bulah's first teacher at the school, has taught school 19 years, nine of them at No. 29. Before the court order, she told Mrs. Moore she'd Merle Anderson was given "a definite feeling of being welcome" at Claymont. She encountered no special problems in transferring there from an all-Negro high school.

Miss A. Ethel Cheyney, teacher at Hockessin, is against integration. "I just believe that segregation is right," she declares. "And not just in the schools, but throughout."

resign if Negroes were admitted to the school. "I was thinking it would mean large numbers of them," she said recently, in explanation.

"The week after Shirley Bulah entered my class," she continued, "I received at least four telephone calls from white parents who didn't want their children to sit beside or near her. Some of them threatened to remove their children from school if I didn't change the seating. Of course, I refused. I know of only one child who has actually been taken out of school since the colored children entered.

"I just don't think we're ready for integration, and I know it means trouble with the white parents. There haven't been any problems with the colored parents at all. I can't see why Negro children can't just go to their own schools, the way they did before. But if we have to integrate our school, at least I know now that it can be done. We've had colored children here two years now, and nothing very bad has happened. If I have to put up with it, I will, and I think I can be fair about it, too. I think I have been fair."

Mrs. Mildred C. Insinga, a teacher of 15 years experience, six-and-a-half of them at No. 29, had the same problem of telephone calls about seating as her colleagues. She handled it the same way. Her feelings about integration differ slightly from the others'. "My first colored pupil was a very well behaved fifth-grade boy. I couldn't help feeling what a pathetic figure he was, one colored boy in a class of thirty whites. I felt a little resentful toward the court and the NAACP for putting a child into such a situation. I just don't think we are ready for integration."

This idea that a community should be prepared for integration is obviously one which the teachers at Hockessin School No. 29 believe in firmly, yet none of them had any idea as to what kind of preparation was needed.

Of the four teachers, Miss A. Ethel Cheyney, who has taught school in Hockessin for 30 years, was by far the most outspoken against integration two years ago. She still is. "There has never been any racial tension in Hockessin," Miss Cheyney said, "until this thing came up.

"I'm against this integration, and I'll tell you why. It was done by an organization that used pressure. It wasn't done by the State Board of Education or the local people or the State itself. There's a lot of feeling against the NAACP here, and they haven't been so successful, either. You notice that a majority of the colored children still go to the colored school, don't you?

"I got my first colored children this last year—three first-grade boys. At first, I seated them together, because at least they knew each other. Then, I separated them so no one could say I was sticking them together. But they drifted back together all by themselves. So, finally, I put them together again.

"Now, you take the PTA," Miss Cheyney continued. "Mrs. Bulah comes to most of the meetings, and she usually brings her daughter. No one else brings children to PTA meetings; why should she?

"I just believe that segregation is right, that's all. And not just in the schools, but throughout. Look at South America, where all the races and creeds have intermarried, and what have they got? Lazy, unproductive, backward people. The court decision sickened me, because it gave no value to individuals. This kind of thing may lead to intermarriage, and then where will we be?" Miss Cheyney shook her head. "I'm against it," she said, "but I don't think my feelings have influenced my treatment of the colored children. We all pity them here."

As for Shirley Bulah, any (Continued

Children in Delaware's first integrated schools get more than textbook learning. Important lessons come from studying and playing together.

The Schools That Broke the Color Line

problems her entry into the school may have caused are unknown to her. "I felt a little nervous the first day," she said, "because I didn't know what it would be like. The work is a little harder, but outside of that, I haven't had any trouble. I like the school and the teachers."

"I've been to most of the PTA meetings," her mother said, "and if we colored parents aren't welcome there, they certainly have put on a mighty good front. Last meeting, in May, they asked me to make cookies, and everyone there enjoyed them.

"The colored parents who have kept their children in the segregated school just don't know any better," Mrs. Bulah added. "Lots of Negroes feel inferior to whites. They're afraid to speak up. One father told me the colored school was good enough for him and it would have to be good enough for his children. But some of my neighbors—white people—have congratulated me for going ahead with the suit."

Until 1952, when the court decision went into effect, there were two Negro teachers in the one-room colored school in Hockessin. Today, Miss Constancia Beaujohn, Shirley Bulah's former teacher, teaches there alone. The other teacher was moved when the enrollment dropped because of the six children who transferred. Miss Beaujohn is defensive when she hears comparisons between her school and the white school.

"That's a much larger school," she said recently, "and for a small group of children, we have everything they have. Some of the playground equipment you see up there was given by the PTA, and you can't count that."

"I'm not opposed to integrated schools," Miss Beaujohn said, "but I've talked with some of the colored children at No. 29, and they aren't too happy there. Most of the colored children are still right here, and their parents would rather have them here. They're used to having their own school, and they like to have their children taught by a colored teacher."

Hockessin is a community still divided on the question of integration two years after it was put into effect. The division, which affects Negroes as well as whites, shows signs of narrowing with the passage of time. Integration is working, even in a divided community.

Harvey E. Stahl, Superintendent of Schools of Claymont, Delaware, is a determined-looking man with a twinkle in his eye. His job involves the supervision of Claymont's three schools: a Negro elementary school, a white elementary school and the high school, in reality, a junior high and high school combined. Until the court's decision, Negro children above the sixth grade were forced to attend Howard High School, a segregated Negro school in Wilmington, seven miles from Claymont.

"I came to Claymont 32 years ago from Indiana," Mr. Stahl said recently. "I never had any racial prejudices, and I haven't any now. When I learned that the State Supreme Court had upheld the lower court's decision that Negro children be admitted to Claymont High School, I decided right then and there that we would make integration work. I think we have."

Mr. Stahl learned of that decision a week before school opened. "On Tuesday," he said, "two days before school opened, we had faculty meetings. No official word had been received by anyone in Claymont.

"On Wednesday, our local Board of Education decided to enroll Negro children even though we had no mandate from the court. That day, eleven colored children appeared with their parents at the school. I talked with them myself. I told them they were welcome, but that this new experience would be difficult in many ways. 'I'm going to do everything I can to help you,' I said, 'but you will have to co-operate one hundred percent.'

"They all—parents and children—agreed," Mr. Stahl added. "Every one of them promised complete co-operation. And every one of them has kept his promise."

The next day, school opened. The eleven Negro children were divided among five of the school's six grades. There were no high school seniors. In a total enrollment of about five hundred, the eleven Negro students were hardly noticed by the white children. "The next day," Mr. Stahl said, "I received telephone calls from the Attorney General and the State Superintendent of Schools. Both instructed me to drop the colored children from school because the case was going to be appealed to the United States Supreme Court. They felt their case might be prejudiced if the Negro children were already in the school.

"I refused flatly," Mr. Stahl said. "I told them the children had already been admitted and that we were dealing with human beings, people with feelings, not just a legal case."

A special meeting of the Claymont Board of Education upheld Mr. Stahl's refusal, and the faculty of the high school passed with only one dissenting vote a resolution expressing the conviction that the Negro children, having once been admitted, should not now be dropped. Four days later, Mr. Stahl received the official mandate of the State Supreme Court to admit Negro children.

About halfway between Wilmington and Claymont is a small community called Arden, settled originally in 1900. In 1922, and again in 1950, nearby plots of land became available, and first Ardentown and then Ardencroft, two similar communities, were begun. For the first time in 1950, a number of Negro families leased land in one of the three communities—Ardencroft. Four Negro families built homes. One of them was Dr. Leon V. Anderson, a Wilmington physician, and his wife and six children.

When the State Supreme Court's decision was rendered, three of Dr. Anderson's children were enrolled in Wilmington's Negro High School. Two younger children had been attending a segregated Negro elementary school. The decision meant the three older children could now attend Claymont High School, which was closer to Ardencroft. Dr. Anderson called the trustees of Arden to see if his younger children could attend the Arden Elementary School.

None of the community's trustees objected, and the school principal agreed. But all were worried about integrating their school in defiance of the State Constitution and in the absence of a court mandate. The children were entered, and the trustees went to the State Capitol to attend the next meeting of the State Board of Education. They explained what they had done and expressed their desire to allow the Negro children to remain in the school, at least until the U.S. Supreme Court's decision had been rendered. The State Board refused to approve the move, but there were indications that nothing would be done to oppose it.

Arden, thus, became the third community in a segregation state to integrate its schools. At the same time, it became perhaps the first community in history to integrate a school in direct violation of its State's Constitution. For Arden, that was the end of it. Integration has raised no problems whatsoever.

At Claymont High School, the situation is much the same. "Some friends of mine," Mr. Stahl said recently, "told me when we first admitted Negroes how sorry they were for me. They said we'd have race riots for sure. I said I didn't believe it. And, of course, I was right.

"Only one of our teachers had any opposition to integration, and she had taught in an integrated school in Philadelphia—a tough school in a tough area. It was hardly a fair example. And besides a united faculty, we had another tremendous advantage—Mrs. Dyson, the Negro teacher of the colored elementary school here in Claymont. I don't know what we would have done without her.

"Mrs. Dyson has taught the first six grades for colored children in Claymont since 1925. I believe she's missed exactly one week of school in that time. Three of her own grandchildren were among the eleven Negro children we admitted that first day. She's a real leader in the community, and to show you what the white community thinks of her, she was elected the outstanding woman of Claymont last year in a contest sponsored by the local American Legion and other groups.

"Mrs. Dyson talked to all the Negro children and their parents before they enrolled here. She told me, 'If any of my boys and girls cause you any trouble at all, you let me know, and I'll take care of it.' We have done that exactly twice in two years, and both times it was a child who just wasn't applying himself."

Merle Anderson is one of Dr. Leon V. Anderson's three children who entered Claymont High School in the fall of 1952. Mrs. Dyson, the teacher of Claymont's colored elementary school, is her maternal grandmother. Merle's two-year experience at Claymont High School bears out Mr. Stahl's contention that there has been no trouble. Merle is an accomplished pianist and has served as the accompanist for the school chorus and glee club.

"From the first day," she said, "I've had a definite feeling of being welcome at Claymont. I've always felt perfectly free to go to any of the teachers about anything. I never had to."

Merle Anderson was graduated from the high school last June. In the graduating class with her was Nancy Stevens, a pretty, eighteen-year-old white girl. "I didn't have any particular feeling when I heard that Claymont would have colored kids," Nancy said shortly before her graduation.

"My father didn't see why they had to change things, but he didn't do anything about it. My mother had no feeling one way or another. Some of the Negro students have been real assets to the school—Merle Anderson is one. I think she's been accepted by everyone. The same is true of some others. But most of them don't mix much with the white kids. In the cafeteria, most of them eat together. I don't blame them. I think they feel a little lonely.

"Some of the white fellows were against having Negroes in the school last year, and some of them picked on the younger ones a little. It's died out pretty much this year. I think integrated schools will work, all right, and I certainly have no prejudice against Negroes. But I would hate to see the Negroes take over. You know, if there were more of them than us, they might take over in all the activities. And I think some of the colored girls would like to go out with white boys, and I don't agree with that. But so far, it's worked fine."

Spencer Robinson is one of the eight colored children in whose names the original court case was filed. Both he and Merle Anderson, each with a colored partner from another school, attended last year's Junior Prom. Merle attended the one the year before. Neither of them seemed to feel there was anything unusual about it.

"I was surprised when we won the court case," Spencer Robinson said. "Surprised and happy. I knew this was a nice school, and I wanted to go to an integrated school. Everyone has made us feel welcome here since the beginning. Oh, there have been a few remarks about my color—but nothing like what I expected. We all sit where we please, and we're all treated equally."

"There just haven't been any social problems at all," said John A. Stoops, a teacher of English, mathematics and civics. "The children—both white and colored—have adopted the social patterns of their parents. Dancing is an example. This community doesn't accept interracial dancing. At school dances, the children have just adopted that pattern."

Social dancing in the gym classes was a problem for Miss Claire Byler, the girls' physical education teacher at Claymont High School. "In classes where the colored boys and girls weren't evenly divided, I just eliminated social dancing," she said. "But we never stopped teaching square dancing. Basically, I think the white children have accepted integration. We have colored girls on the field hockey, softball and basketball teams—all teams that play against other schools, white schools. The one colored girl on the basketball team was so popular the other girls elected her captain.

"My own observation," Miss Byler said, "is that the colored students are all polite and co-operative, more so, usually, than the white children. And the credit for that goes to Mrs. Dyson, who taught them all in elementary school. She's a wonderful woman and a fine teacher."

The school where Mrs. Dyson teaches, State Line School—so-called because it is situated only a short distance from the Delaware-Pennsylvania line—is technically a two-room school, though only one room is used as a formal classroom for the 29 colored children who are Mrs. Dyson's students. In that one room, Mary Pauline Dyson, a short, stocky woman with graying hair and a warm smile, teaches the first six grades of school.

Recalling her meeting before the opening of the high school with the colored parents and children affected by the court's order, Mrs. Dyson said recently, "I told them all that the eyes of the whole world were on us here in Claymont. I told the children that their behavior in high school would affect all colored children, everywhere. It is our own attitude that is reflected by other people, I said. 'If you go to the mirror with a smile, you'll meet a smile. Expect everyone to be your friend until you find out otherwise.' And I told them to remember that the white children would have a problem of adjustment, too.

"After they started going to the high school, it got to be a habit for some of them to come back here to this little school every day to tell me about what happened that day. Sometimes, there were problems, a white boy who had punched one of the colored boys, maybe. I'd tell him we can't always hit back. But they really haven't had any problems that weren't problems all children have, whatever their color.

"I know some Negro teachers in the South are afraid they'll lose their jobs when the schools are integrated. I'm not worried about that. Whatever they do to the schools, we need all the teachers we can get, white or colored. I'm not worried about teaching white and colored children together. I've been teaching for 29 years, and I know that a child is a child."

On the road from the State Line School to Claymont High School is a small service station owned by Louis Scarpitti, a young white man. Many of the Negro families in the company houses nearby are customers of his. "I haven't seen anything you could call a problem in the integration at the high school," he said. "The court said do it, and they did it. That's all. If there've been any white people against it, and I'm sure there have, they've sure kept quiet about it.

"I have a boy in second grade over at the white elementary school. I suppose now that the United States Supreme Court has declared segregation illegal, they'll be integrating the elementary school, too. It doesn't bother me. I grew up with most of the fathers of those colored children up at Mrs. Dyson's school. I played baseball with them and went swimming with them. Nice people. I don't see why my boy shouldn't go to school with their children."

Harvey Stahl summed it up in his office at the Claymont High School. "Of course, integration works. It works if you want it to work. And maybe even if you don't.

"Children have no prejudice unless they're taught. We had a girl in a gym class who square-danced one day in a group that included a Negro boy. When she got home that afternoon, she told her mother what fun they'd had. She mentioned, in passing, that one of the boys in her set was colored. Her mother jumped on that, asked if she'd danced with him and then threatened to call me and object. The girl put her foot down. 'If you call anyone, Mother,' she said, 'I'll never tell you another thing.'" Harvey Stahl chuckled. "I learned about that incident much later," he said. "It shows you how far ahead of us our children can be."

On May 17, 1954, the United States Supreme Court handed down its historic unanimous decision barring segregation in public schools. This month, the Court will hear arguments on how and when that decision should be put into effect throughout the South. Sometime later, a decision on those questions will be rendered.

Meanwhile, the three schools in Delaware which jumped the gun on integration hold a lesson for the rest of Delaware and the 16 other states which require school segregation by law. None of the three schools can possibly duplicate exactly the situation in any other school. None of them can be considered representative of all or even a portion of the schools throughout the South. But if the experience of Hockessin, Arden and Claymont shows anything, it shows that integration can be accomplished, even where there is strong opposition.

And the experience of these three communities demonstrates one other important fact: Where there is real leadership in the schools, leadership which is responsible and willing to try, the job is much easier.

Negro and white children can go to school together in the South. Delaware has helped show the way. THE END

War Plants Need Colored Workers

WASHINGTON— Colored workers are urgently needed to man critical war plants producing war materials for the armed forces, according to Benjamin F. Wilson, Chief of the Minority Group Servce of the War Manpower Commission.

Mr. Wilson recently return from a trip covering three WMC regions including New York, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Indinia. He states that with WMC officials ways of intensifing the recruiting of colored workers.

Immediate manpower need, Mr. Wilson pointed out, is in artillery, mortor and small arms ammunitionplants, forges and foundries, tire plants, cotton duck mills, ship yards, aeroplane and tank plants, plants making trucks, wire and

Journal & Guide Jan 13 1945

Must Be No Discrimination In Employment

Urges Strong Stand To Create Real Job Opportunities

CHICAGO, Ill.—(ANP)— Demobilizing Negro soldiers will be the testing point of America's postwar democracy, declared Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission last week.

In a frank appraisal of peacetime prospects for Negroes in industry, the WMC chief said that the solution of the job problem for all workers is in a "60,000,000 job America."

"Post-war America cannot be divided," McNutt stated. "Jobs for whites cannot be separated from jobs for blacks or jobs from women separated from jobs for men.

NO SEPARATE LINES

"No separate job lines can be drawn if we are to have a prosperous- democractic- America. The color line in industry is a line against democracy. Let us remember that the only lines that counted in making a ship, a plane, a jeep, a rifle were the lines on the blueprints."

McNutt credited America's record production to an all-American team powered by white and black manpower.

"The expansion of production schedules cracked industry's former practice of dividing workers into 'white man's jobs' and 'black man's jobs'," he said.

URGES STRONG POLICIES

Pointing out that 70 per cent of the Negroes now in war production are in emergency, mushroom industries, such as shipbuilding, munitions, and aircraft, McNutt urged the establishment of strong federal policies to prevent post-war race discrimination.

He said that establishment of the President's Executive Order 9346 "proved that the United States were engaged in an anti-fascist war."

"Opposition to Negro manpower in time of war foreshadows a greater opposition in time of peace—unless we lay down policies now to protect Negro manpower and all other minority manpower when the cutbacks and other production adjustments reduce jobs," he continued.

SHOW SKILLS

"Negroes have demonstrated their know-how in all the war industries," he said. "Their wartime skills are potentially convertible into the pay envelopes of peace."

McNutt pointed out that "Prejudice cannot be swept away by fiat, by wishful thinking, by rhetoric. The industrial progress the Negro has made in the war years can only be guaranteed by an America in which there will be jobs for all Americans who want jobs."

* * *

Lauds Labor Aid to Race

ATLANTA. (ANP) — The labor movement offers Negroes their best chance to rid themselves of the second class citizenship stigma, according to Frank McAllister, director, War Labor Board, Region IV.

McAllister appeared as principal speaker Wednesday at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Butler Street YMCA.

In order for the Negro to make full use of the labor movement to better his situation, the speaker said, he "must get rid of his fear and distrust of the white workers." He added that it was also necessary for the "white worker to rid himself of his prejudice against the Negro."

Declaring in favor of a "functioning democracy" in the nation, the WLB director said that "Labor unions now face the problem that if they do not discontinue the practice of discrimination within their ranks, heir license, which is the very life-blood of their existence, will be taken away from them."

* * *

Negroes Told To Accept Dixie Racial Patterns

BIRMINGHAM — (ANP)—Negroes were advised last week to accept southern race theories by the Modern Education and Religious Bureau, Inc., when it celebrated its eighth anniversary here.

The local office is headed by the Rev. Joseph B. Bonner, who works under the direction of Bishop Joseph J. Higgs, Washington, D. C., national director.

Here is how this organization advises Negroes:

1. "The South is the natural home of the Negro.
2. "The southern white man is the Negro's friend and anyone who teaches otherwise is an enemy to the Negro's welfare and progress.
3. "The white man understands the Negro from the fact that he has spent 265 years with him in the South and this period has created instinctive friendship.
4. "The Negro should remember that it took the white man 5,000 years to arrive at his present status, whereas the Negro has come from a heathen state to his present standing in only 265 years through the help of the white race.
5. "The Negro's stay with the white man has resulted, for the former, in education and prosperous, desirable citizenship.
6. "Let us be patient and not hasty, law down undue suspicion and become self-controlling, respect everybody and practice to the greatest degree politeness, gratefulness to every man, and God and angels will bless us.
7. "Communism is dangerous and destructive to American principles and citizenship.
8. "Communism is against Christian religion."

Southern newspapers allow the organization ample space in appreciation of the attitude a Negro organization should take on the race question.

Founded in 1912, the Modern Education and Religious Bureau, Inc., is dedicated to the purpose of combating communism among Negroes and promoting harmony between the races in the South. It sends speakers to industries and distributes literature in Negro churches and schools, urging Negroes to remember that the southern white is his "natural friend and champion."

LIBERALS IN THE SOUTH

This gem from The Anniston Star, "liberal" Alabama daily, in advocating federal aid for schools —particularly Southern schools:

"Strikes, race riots and other social disorders have been attributed to the migration of illiterate persons of both races from the South to the large cities of the North. That trend probably will be accelerated after the war, and as a result thoughtful persons in every part of the country are coming to the conclusion that education is more nearly a panacea for all ills than any other remedy that has been offered."

Who "attributes" these "strikes, race riots and other social disorders" in the North to "illiterate persons" from the South. If the Anniston newspaper does not know it can easily find out. The Northern people, ashamed and afraid, incapable of handling a problem which the South itself has handled, "attributes" these troubles to people from the South—and The Anniston Star, guillible as are most Southern "liberal" newspapers, swallows the whole thing hook, line and sinker. After the Detroit riot, one of the professional do-gooders, finding no better way of explaining the disorder, blamed it on Southern white men hired as Detroit policemen! Who, we ask The Anniston Star, was responsible for the zoot suit riots in Los Angeles? For the lack of a better explanation, we suspect that The Star and all other "liberal" Southern newspapers will accept the story that if those Mexicans, underprivileged [illegible] Alabama [illegible] there would have been no trouble!

Southern Watchman
Jan. 20/45

The truth of the matter is that the great racial problems, and the great educational tasks of today, are not Southern; they are Northern and Western. In the racial field, the North and the West are just now being confronted with problems which the South has handled, fairly successfully, for generations In the field of education, as it applies to race relations, the North and West have yet to learn that it is no panacea. To educate the negro is not, by any means, to make him immediately acceptable for amalgamation with the white race. To educate the negro is often to improve him; at other times, it is merely to make him more adroit and more vicious in his association with the white man. Harlem is, or should be, the negro capital of America. There is money in Harlem; New York tolerates no "racial discrimination"; it guarantees good hospitals, good schools, and various other opportunities for the negro. And yet Harlem is an indescribable hell-hole; it has slums worse than anything below Mason and Dixon's Line; it is an urban jungle of voodooism, magic powders, strange cults, and assorted other superstitions, with the paved streets and sidewalks, rather than its people, to distinguish it from the real thing in Africa. The Rosenwald Fund, in its 1944 report, revealed: "Two hundred separate teen-age gangs were reported in Harlem, vicious and looking for trouble; colored hoodlums have mauled white passengers on trolleys and subways in Brooklyn."

If there is need for federal aid in education, there is need for it in the North and West, not in the South. There is a vast need in the North and West for some program whereby the people of the North and West may be taught the things which the South long ago learned.

FDR Naming Of Wallace Jolts Dixie

WASHINGTON — President Roosevelt dealt Dixie's Jim Crow bloc a crushing blow this week by naming liberal Henry A. Wallace as Secretary of Commerce.

Dixie's anti-Negro Jesse Jones from Texas was ousted from the multi-billion dollar Reconstruction Finance Corporation despite bitter protest from southern bourbons.

The President wrote Jones stating:

"Henry Wallace deserves almost any service which he believes he can satisfactorily perform."

Meanwhile Dixie's most rabid Negro haters threw their support behind a coming fight to defeat Senate confirmation of Wallace's appointment.

Senatory Connally (Dem. Tex.) and Bailey (Dem. N. C) were reported to have pleaded with the President throughout last week to keep Jones within the department.

Jesse Jones was one of the leaders of last year's anti-Negro, anti-Roosevelt Texas "third party" revolt which fought against the renomination of Roosevelt and against the Supreme Court's decision banning lily-white primaries.

The Jones-Roosevelt letter, however, was viewed here as expressing the President's solid, inflexiable stand in favor of the Wallace who is diametrically opposed to many of Jones' views.

"I must accede to your decision," said Jones in a letter emphasizing that he could "not agree" that Wallace would be a good man for the job. Jones accepted the President's appointment of Wallace with as much resentment as his Dixie friends.

The background of the 56-year-old Wallace was said by officials backing him to be admirably suited for the new job. His friends, who include the CIO Political Action Committee, believe that in a top spot like the Department of Commerce, the former vice president can build towards the political campaign of 1948.

As Secretary of Commerce, Wallace will be in position to aid small business element, among which lies most of the Negro business in the country.

Pittsburgh Courier
Jan. 27, 1945

Capital Transit Tells FEP Probe Negroes Barred In 'White Men's Jobs'

By VENICE T. SPRAGGS
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON.—While thousands of war workers shivered in freezing temperature on Washington's street corners trying to get street cars and buses to work, the Fair Employment Practices Committee last week listened to "puny" excuses offered by the Capital Transit company on why idle equipment cannot be put into service because platform jobs are considered "white men's jobs."

The case is considered a test of the President's committee.

For two years the case has been hanging fire, and FEPC trial attorney, Mrs. Evelyn Cooper, charged that the company had maintained a "negative" attitude during the entire period of negotiation. She said the company has been "astute and skillful in its attempts to cope with the manpower problem in every way possible short of employing Negroes."

Edward L. Jones, counsel for the company, claimed that "conscientious efforts" had been made to follow the committee's suggestions but since 80 per cent of their platform employes were born and raised in the South, it would cause a complete work stoppage.

Union Fights Hiring

"The company has no prejudice against hiring Negroes for platform jobs," Jones said, but added, "We do not believe that their employment will relieve the acute manpower shortages on the company's lines."

The Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America, AFL, bargaining agent for the employes, has resisted strenuously the employment of Negro operators. The union is reported to have threatened to fine any member $100 who undertook the training of any Negro for such positions.

Testimony offered by T. A. Sager, chief engineer for the Public Utilities Commission, brought out that the company has increased by 215 the number of cars owned from the period January, 1940, to October, 1944. However, the company has decreased by 54 the number of cars actually operated during the period. Increase in bus ownership and decreases in buses actually operated were likewise indicated.

Passengers Increase

cated they would walk out if Negroes were employed in this capacity, the larger number giving "lowering of social prestige" as their reason.

Lunt said he used the "unguided interview" method for obtaining these reactions, although he admitted prior informal meetings were held with the employes as a group, during which time the whole plan was explained.

Dr. Louis Wirth, professor of sociology, Chicago university, strongly challenged Lunt's methods, stating that the survey was in "no sense unguided." Dr. Wirth said "attitudes are betrayed rather than expressed," intimating the employes answered more or less as they were expected to answer

Matter of "Public Policy"

He termed the company's attempt at integration with a single trainee "deplorable." Had the company been honest in its attempt, Dr. Wirth asserted, they would have experimented with 20 or more trainees.

Discussing at length the case, the Chicago U. professor said the Capital Transit case was not a "matter of private prejudices and opinions but a matter of public policy."

FEPC Chairman Malcolm Ross cited the successful integration of Negroes as platform operators in Los Angeles, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Chicago and Detroit as proof that where a firm decision is made by both management and union to utilize all available manpower, it can be done "without violence"

A total of 4,846 Negroes are employed throughout the country in significant occupations by local transit companies, 2,904 of which are platform operators. The larger number are employed in Detroit, Mich., where a total of 1,500 operate buses and street cars.

Capital Transit President E. D Merril said it was easier to integrate Negroes in these cities than in the nation's capital where, he claims, a "degree of segregation makes a difference in mental attitudes."

Merril contended his company had tried and failed. To try and and go further, Merril said, would result in "serious," almost "certain," work stoppage.

Under rapid-fire questioning by FEP Committee Member Charles Houston, Merril was bandied into admitting that the company considered platform jobs to be "white men's jobs."

Moreover, he admitted that the total educational job done by the company for the acceptance of Negroes by white platform employes had been a few laudatory articles on the Negro printed in the company's publication.

Lunt testified he attempted no educational-program with the men. Merril said the union was not in accord with the steps taken in spite of non-discriminatory claim of the international.

International President W. D McMahon, in a letter to the Washington local, reminded them of the union's policy and attested that there was "no difference as far as he could find out in the work records of white and Negro operators."

Appearing as witnesses for the President's Committee were Mrs. Edith Hughes, Charles W. Bias, Pvt. William Alexander, Frank N. Johnson and Bernard Simmons, all of whom except Simmons had received no reports from applications they had made to Capital Transit for platform positions.

Alexander Shapiro, CTC personnel director, said the company now employs 3,981 white employes, 2,481 of which are platform employes, and 525 Negroes, none of whom have been so employed.

Chairman Ross said a proposed statement of facts and findings would be made with opportunity for the company to review, correct or supplement information. Following this, final facts and findings will be drawn up and presented to the company with specific directives.

Members of the FEP Committee hearing the case were: Boris Shiskin, John Brophy, Atty. Charles Houston, Miss Sarah Southall, Milton Webster and Chairman Ross Committee Member Charles Horn was absent.

the employment of Negro operators. The union is reported to have threatened to fine any member $100 who undertook the training of any Negro for such positions.

Testimony offered by T. A. Sager, chief engineer for the Public Utilities Commission, brought out that the company has increased by 215 the number of cars owned from the period January, 1940, to October, 1944. However, the company has decreased by 54 the number of cars actually operated during the period. Increase in bus ownership and decreases in buses actually operated were likewise indicated.

Passengers Increase

Edward A. Roberts, director of traffic highway department, Office of Defense Transportation, said that during the same period the number of revenue-paying passengers hauled by Capital Transit had increased from 9,733,000 to 20,190,000.

During this period, approximately 233 Negroes made application for jobs as platform operators but except for a half-hearted effort made to train and employ Bernard A. Simmons, applications of the others are gathering dust in the company's personnel files.

Simmons, a quiet-mannered former school teacher and chauffeur, was taken through the required period of instructional training but when he was taken out to the barn for his initial training as operator, trainers one by one refused to help him. For a brief period of approximately 40 minutes the operators pulled a strike, were suspended for 30 minutes and then put back on their runs. The company considered 30 minutes suspension adequate punitive measure for flaunting orders given to each of the operators to instruct Simmons. They dismissed the incident with "we tried."

Among abortive efforts which Mrs. Cooper charged the comany used to meet its schedules in order to by-pass Negroes were: Conversion of two-man cars to one-man operation; lowering of job qualifications; importation of workers from neighboring states of Virginia, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Maryland; and employing women for select runs at the price of foregoing seniority privileges for certain male operators.

The company's "star witness" was Paul Lunt, sociologist, employed to survey the attitudes of white operators with respect to the employment of Negroes in the same category. Out of a sampling of 250 employes selected from a total group of 2700, Lunt said approximately 75 per cent had indi-significant occupations by local transit companies, 2,904 of which are platform operators. The larger number are employed in Detroit, Mich., where a total of 1,500 operate buses and street cars.

Capital Transit President E. D Merril said it was easier to integrate Negroes in these cities than in the nation's capital where, he claims, a "degree of segregation makes a difference in mental attitudes."

Merril contended his company had tried and failed. To try and and go further, Merril said, would result in "serious," almost "certain," work stoppage.

Under rapid-fire questioning by FEP Committee Member Charles, cific directives.

Members of the FEP Committee hearing the case were: Boris Shiskin, John Brophy, Atty. Charles Houston, Miss Sarah Southall, Milton Webster and Chairman Ross Committee Member Charles Horn was absent.

Along The Interracial Front

Pittsburgh Courier Jan. 27

By GEORGE EDMUND HAYNES, Ph.D.

Executive Secretary Department of Race Relations, The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America

The proposal for a National Service law to draft all workers now recommended by the President with the endorsement of the military leaders raises an old question, which was discussed during the first world war as well as at present. It has certain interracial aspects that may not get into the news, certainly not into many editorials of the daily newspapers.

DANGERS CITED

Some people will remember a movement during World War I in some of the Southern states led by a saw-mill magnate, called "The Self-Preservation Loyalty League," which sought to get compulsory work ordinances from city councils and work-or-fight laws from State legislatures. The effort succeeded in some cities. Its net effect as this writer saw it was to tie down both white and Negro workers to employers. Each worker carried a work card which had to be signed by his employer if the worker undertook to change jobs or if for some reason he wanted to stop work his employer had to give his signature for the release. Cases were found where employers refused to sign such release cards. Police officers were known to stop workers to demand their work cards and to take them into custody when they could not produce the required card. Police visited Negro homes to see that all able-bodied persons signed up to go to work or go to war. If he did not sign a fight-or-work card, he went to jail. There was agitation also about Negro women who left their domestic jobs because for the first time they were staying at home to care for their families since they were getting allotments from their husbands or other relatives in the Army or since their men folks were earning enough in war jobs to provide for the family.

TODAY'S PROBLEM

These and several other facts about the movement for compulsory labor, led many people to conclude that it was not wise then. Similar misgivings raise the question whether it is wise now to have any legal draft of labor. It does not stand on the same basis as the military draft, which brings men and women to national defense and into the public service of the Nation. A labor draft law as proposed brings workers into private industries for private employers. It would tend to freeze Negroes in the work status where they are. In some areas of our country racial minority workers are too recently removed from a serf status to view such a proposal of any compulsory work law with anything but apprehension bordering on fear. This is especially true of Americans of Negro, Mexican and Japanese ancestry. For all workers, too, there is the caution lest the gate opening into such a draft of labor may not swing as freely on its hinges outward toward freedom after the war as it may swing inward now.

—VV—

F. D. R. Hints Peace Time Conscription to be Free of Jim Crow

IN ANSWER TO LETTER OF N. A. A. C. P

Opposing Passage of The Measure

CHIEF EXECUTIVE ADMITS THAT ARMY

Set-up Has Some Imperfections

New York—In a letter to the NAACP, President Roosevelt has hinted that peacetime military conscription may not be on a jim crow segregated basis.

The chief executive does not make any promises, or any flat statement, but writes, "final plans have not been cystallized."

Mr. Roosevelt's letter was in reponse to one from Roy Wilkins, acting secretary of the NAACP, setting forth the apprehension of colored people over the probable extension of the present segregated army policy into peacetime conscription.

"The views you've expressed are predicated upon the assumption that all policies have been finally determined with regard to the composition of the army during peacetime and that they will be discriminatory in their application to Negroes. This is contrary to the facts. Final plans have not been chystallized.

"Obviously those responsible for the development of war department policies will utilize all of their experiences of the past four years," the letter said. "It would not be contended by the army or anyone speaking in its behalf that no mistakes have been made during the pe[illegible] time to [illegible] unfair racial situations. Most assuredly this process will be repeated in the future."

Mr. Roosevelt revealed that the army is studying te records of Negro troops in training and combat and asserted that the future utilization of Negroes in the army "will depend upon an evaluation of this material which will be conducted in a fair manner and with due regard for all available facts."

The president admitted that the peacetime military training program " affects not only our military policy, but also the social, economic and educational aspects of our life." He expressed confidence that the statutes which may finally be enacted will provide maximum

Opposes Plan For Separate Hospital

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A protest against the announced plan of the Veteran's Administration to contstruct separate hospital facilities for Negroes was voiced by Leslie S. Perry of the Washington Bureau of the NAACP in a letter this week to Brigadier General Frank T. Hines, administrator of the Veterans' administration. In registering concern over the attitude of the war administration, Perry pointed to Hines' own testimony before the appropriations committee of the House of Representatives regarding appropriations for 1945, in which he said,

"We are going to have a problem of providing another Tuskegee hospital or a solid colored hospital probably more in the Mississippi-Alabama area. There is a large number of colored troops from that area. The board is studying all of that now."

In response to Hines' statement, Perry said: "The racial attitude and practices of the Veterans Administration [illegible] matter of deep concern [illegible] Association as well as to [illegible] hands of thoughtful white and colored people throughout the nation. We must express ourselves as being irrevocably opposed to the extension of jim crowism by the veterans administration, whether under the guise of 'solid colored hospitals or otherwise, it seems. We again must urge that Negro employes be integrated in the Veterans Administration at their proper skills and levels, and that Negro patients be hospitalized in your facilities on the basis of medical need and not of color."

White Soldier Scores White Press for Biased Coverage

COLUMBIA, S.C. — (ANP) — Criticism of white newspapers, which fail to tell the story of the part Colored soldiers are playing in the war, was voiced last week by Pfc. Raymond J. Ross, a white soldier stationed here.

Writing under the heading, "Colored Soldiers Fight Too," Pfc. Ross, whose letter was published in the Lighthouse and Informer, asserted; "Set my white readers gain sense and read both sides of the story."

"Were one to read just what the white press printed, it would seem that all the fighting is being done by the white men, while a little investigating would show that the colored men are doing their bit.

Hope of Tan Yanks

Pointing to the colored service men on guard at distant outposts, he added, that they will return to a civilian life in which they can detect the rights they left home to defend.

After exlotting the colored man for his valor; he concluded, "I burn when I see signs reading "white only." Since when do we whites defy the laws of our Creator?"

Norfolk Journal & Guide 2/17/43

Urge White Press Be Fair

COLUMBIA, S. C., (ANP)—The white press of this state was recently urged by a resolution adopted by the South Carolina Interracial Committee to tell the true story of the Negro soldier's valor on the battlefield as a constructive contribution to better race relations in South Carolina.

The resolution adopted by the interracial committee read:

"Resolved that it is the con-sensus of this meeting that the publication by the white press of South Carolina of news stories, articles and pictures, fairly presenting the achievements of Negro members of the armed forces of the United States, would be a distinct contribution to the cause of improvement of race relations in this state, and the white press is, therefore, urged to give appropriate publicity to such accomplishments."

Rep. Clason Defends FEP Clause In Labor Draft

Chi Defender Feb 17, 45

By EUGENE C. ZACK
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.—Administration leaders killed the fair employment amendment to the labor draft bill fearing it would cost them Democratic support, Congressman Charles R. Clason of this city, charged in a radio address last week.

Defending his stand in attempting to put the employment practices rider on the national service legislation act, Clason made a radio address to his constituents to explain his action.

"Different labor witnesses," he said, "had testified that many Negro workers, both experienced and inexperienced, were available for jobs in different sections of the country, but were not permitted to work.

Would Eliminate Shortage

"If they were placed on jobs, much of the apparent shortage of manpower would be eliminated without calling upon workers to move from one plant to another.

"In fact, Philip Murray, president of the CIO, said that he thought it was disgraceful to hear of so many complaints about labor shortages while so many able-bodied Negroes are idle and want to work in different localities in the United States.

"I offered an amendment based upon this evidence and which would have prohibited unfair discrimination based upon the race or creed of a worker. All of the discrimination is not aimed solely at the Negro group. My amendment was directly in line with a plank in the Republican platform of last year and accorded with the principles set forth in another plank of the Democratic platform.

Might Cost Votes

"The Administration leaders had determined that they did not wish any amendments made to the committee bill, fearing that each amendment might cost them votes. Their arguments against my amendment were not directed at the value of the amendment but on the grounds either that it was unnecessary or that legislation covering the subject matter of my amendment was about to be offered in the House from the labor committee.

"When I suggested to the majority leader, Mr. McCormack, that I might withdraw my amendment if he would promise to secure a rule for the labor committee bill as soon as it was presented in the House, he indicated that he was not in a position to do so."

Clason's discrimination charges were backed by prominent local Negroes who indicated the necessity for an FEPC legislation in the Congress.

Chicago Defender Feb. 17, 1945

Georgia Court Defies U.S. On Negro Jurors

By JOHN LE FLORE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

ATLANTA, Ga. — The Georgia Supreme court in a decision which is regarded by many as being in open defiance to a ruling of the U.S. Supreme court, on last Thursday held that county jury commissioners were not required to place Negroes on jury lists in the same ratio as whites.

The stake in the decision is the life of 17-year-old David Watkins, who was convicted and sentenced to death on a charge of slaying Mrs. J. J. Connell, 68-year-old white woman, in a robbery at Macon. Watkins' conviction was upheld by the Georgia high court.

Court-appointed defense attorney W. C. Turpin, Jr., white, stated after the decision was rendered that it is his present intention to appeal to the U.S. Supreme court.

In a contemptuous disregard of the highest court of the land, the Georgia court in an opinion written by Justice Warren Grice charged that decisions by the U.S. Supreme court in recent year were "depriving" states of sovereignty.

Ruse Upheld

The decision also held that Solicitor Charles H. Garrett, of Bibb county, in which Macon is located, who was the prosecuting attorney in the case of the Watkins youth, had been within "his rights" in keeping Negroes off criminal court juries since 1919 through the exercise of peremptory challenges.

The justices said that Georgia law allowed the prosecutor and the defense attorney a fixed number of peremptory challenges and ruled that either could excuse a prospective juror "for any reason on earth or for no reason at all."

In a covenant plactd before the court, Garrett contended, "We have not reached the point in the social affairs of Georgia which would make it possible for Negro jurors and white jurors to work together and possibly eat together and sleep together, and conserve the ends of justice."

Cites Negro Illiteracy.

Garrett further contended that Georgia statutes require jury commissioners to place on the jury lists a "sufficient number" of "upright, and intelligent men" as prospective jurors, not all who are "qualified." A stipulation agreed that 35,536 of the Bibb county population of 83,783 were Negroes, and that only 44 Negroes were on the jury rolls of 2,493 persons named on the lists.

In upholding the contention of Garrett in that particular, the Georgia high court said:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that there is more illiteracy among the blacks in our midst than among the whites. By far the greater portion of the former are ignorant, unskilled manual laborers, many of whom are utterly incompetent to serve on juries.

"It would be contrary to what everyone knows, who is acquainted with the facts, to judicially declare that among the blacks of the states there is as large a percentage of those who possess the qualifications for jury servile laid down by our code as with the white population.

"It should be a matter of no surprise that the return of the jury commissioners (ratio on jury lists) of Bibb county indicated as much."

Cites 1854 Law

To give further support to their white supremacy decision, the Georgia justices intimated a belief in "states' rights," especially in dealing with the desire of Southerners to deprive Negroes of their rights as citizens.

They referred to an 1854 Georgia decision holding the Georgia court co-equal with the U.S. Supreme court and not subject to its orders. In defending "states' rights," Justice Grice said: ". . . as time rolled on, the very stars in their courses seemed arrayed against the plan of the founding fathers."

"One is sometimes led to wonder if the states, once sovereign, have not become from a practical standpoint — under the expanding powers of the federal government, the exercise of which has been sanctioned by the Supreme court of the United States—little more than geographical subdivisions of a consolidated government."

Inject Scottsboro Case

Continuing its tirade against the U.S. Supreme court's rulings establishing equal rights and privileges, the Georgia court brought in the Scottsboro (Ala.) decision on the jury question made by the nation's highest tribunal.

The state high court held that its decision did not contravene the U.S. Supreme court's ruling in the Scottsboro case granting a new trial to the nine Negro boys railroaded to death sentences on charges of rape against Victoria Price and Ruby Bates, two white women hoboes in the early 30's.

Continuing, it (the Georgia court) remarked:

"Any attempt by this court to disregard the plain and oft repeated adjudications of the Supreme court of the United States upon the subject (unless and until that tribunal at some future day shall itself repudiate and overrule) would be as powerless as the voice of King Canute when he commanded the waves not to come near his throne.

"When the power to effectually resist is lacking, it is no use to kick."

The Georgia high court's ruling is believed by many to be in direct violation of a decision of the U.S. Supreme court several years ago in a case appealed from Louisiana, in which it was held that mere token representation of Negroes on jury rolls did not meet the requirements of law. The particular case involved was remanded for new trial on that point.

Author

S.-SGT. SPENCER LOGAN Whose new book, "Democracy Needs the Negro," will be published by the MacMillan company in May. Sgt. Logan is in the First Quartermaster Training Group at Camp Lee, Virginia, and is from New Jersey. His book is a frank appraisal of what the Negro thinks of America.

Purge Senators Against Wallace: Voters' League

The National Non-Partisan league this week announced its intention of fighting unrelentlessly the men who oppose Henry A. Wallace's appointment as Secretary of Commerce.

"We construe any vote cast against Mr. Wallace as a vote against America and the Negro," said John Sengstacke, league president and publisher of the Chicago Defender.

"It will be our purpose to fight those who attempt to sell America short," he warned.

Declaring that former Vice-President Wallace is going down the line unswerving for the liberal cause, the league head asserted that his organization stands unswervingly behind Wallace. He charged that Wallace's opponents are "of the same stripe as those who fought President Roosevelt and who wail because Wallace dares to speak out for the common man in his demands that plans be made to provide sixty million post-war jobs.

"They need not expect to wail themselves into power, however. Nor can anything they say or do destroy the stature of former Vice-President Wallace as a great leader," Sengstacke declared.

Forces of reaction represented by the Senators who are against Wallace will be strongly opposed by Negroes, the leagues spokesman threatened. "No man may ever expect to receive the Negro's vote by continuously opposing the best interests of our nation," Sengstacke said.

"Just as more than 70 per cent of the Negro vote was cast for President Roosevelt in the last election, Negroes will continue to vote in the same manner against Americans who bottleneck progress," said the Non-Partisan league head.

Also up for Senate confirmation is another liberal, Aubrey Williams, former National Youth Administration director noted for his fair policies in dealing with Negro workers in his agencies. Williams has been named director of the Rural Electrification Administration and awaits Senate approval before taking over.

Negro voters all over the country were urged by Sengstacke to bombard their Senators with telegrams and letters demanding immediate confirmation of the appointments of Wallace and Williams.

Dixie Jury Convicts White Youth In Rape Case

C Defender Feb 24, 45

By ED. RUTLEDGE
(Defender Staff Correspondent)

NEWPORT, Tenn. — Another Dixie town struck a staggering blow at white supremacy this week.

A Cocke county's circuit court jury shattered its lily-white ties to convict a white youth for assaulting a Negro woman.

Blasting traditional Jim Crow justice, the court convicted white Charles Gilland here for attempting to rape Mrs. Hazel Rice Albritton, a Negro teacher of Tanner high school.

The conviction, which stunned the town's white supremacy fanatics, came after a packed, tense court heard the first Negro lawyer to be seen in action here as a prosecutor.

Into this mountain valley town, noted for illicit stills and corn-liquor, Attorney Webster L. Porl ter came from Knoxville to prosecute the case for the state, faced the lean, hard villagers and said:

"Don't consider this case from the angle of a woman of the Negro racial group having been attacked by a white man, but a criminally-inclined man has attacked a woman of our community, and he should be punished as the law prescribes."

Earlier in the day-long, hard-fought trial, Mrs. Albritton had told her simple but convincing story to the Tennesseeans despite denials and counter-denials from the defendant.

The court, presided over by Judge George R. Shepherd, heard Mrs. Albritton testify that Gilland had approached her at the post-office shortly after she left the town's show house one night in October, 1944.

"How'd you like the show?" Gilland was reported to have said and followed the frightened teacher as she hurried down the dark streets.

Screams For Help

Mrs. Albritton stated that Gilland was a man she had seen on the streets of Newport several times. She testified that she did not know him and had never had conversation with him.

As she turned the corner n[illegible] her home, about a mile from t[illegible] postoffice, she stated that Gilland stepped from a dark alley, grabbed her by the arm and slung her into the alley.

Her screams attracted white residents nearby and Gilland soon took to his heels. Mrs. Daisy Washburn, an aged white woman whose home is close to the place of the assault, testified that she heard the young woman scream three times for help, and Chief of Police I. L. Johnson, who arrested Gilland in his home a short while later, testified that he saw evidence of a struggle in the alley.

"Women are not safe on our streets with vicious criminals op[illegible] the manner as in this case," [illegible] told the Tennesseans.

[illegible] be-
[illegible] ve
[illegible] that [illegible] tal been subject [illegible] suf-treatment that [illegible] fered."

Taking the stand before the townspeople, many of whom knew him personally, the white youth weakly denied that he had assaulted Mrs. Albritton, although he admitted having been to the show. He produced James Holbert, another white man and a neighbor, both of whom claimed that they had accompanied Gilland to his home.

Gilland's father also took the stand and swore that his son came home at an hour which would have made it impossible for him to have committed the assault.

But the hard-faced jury of white villagers sat stoically throughout Gilland's denials and promptly returned a verdict of guilty.

Attorney Porter later filed a $10,000 damage suit against Gilland on behalf of Mrs. Albritton because of the assault. The damage suit will be heard at the May term of the circuit court.

Meanwhile the defendants entered a motion for a new trial by Attorney Hurd, who represented Gilland. Judge Shepherd ordered the motion filed within 10 days.

Attorney General J. W. Wolfenbarger offered vigorous support in prosecuting the case. Negro organizations here congratulated the fair and impartial manner exhibited by the judge, attorney general, sheriff and police officers of the first case of its kind in the community.

New Hate Party Formed in Georgia

CONYERS, Ga.—(ANP)—A new hate group, called the Commoner party, has come into existence here, with the avowed purpose of "maintaining white supremacy, restricting the advancement of Negroes and protecting white Gentiles from the abuses of Jews."

Pittsburgh Courier 3/3/45

Pittsburgh Courier 3/3/45

CIO Union Asks End Of Biased Texas Contract

WASHINGTON.—(ANP) — The CIO United Steelworkers of America has filed a petition with the National War Labor Board asking elimination from the union's contract with the Hughes Tool company of Houston of provisions which discriminate against Negro workers.

The action was taken under the provisions of the labor war disputes act, better known as the Smith-Connally act, and is the first instance wherein the law, often scored as a blow at organized labor, has been used against discrimination.

The Hughes Tool company is currently being operated by the army which took over the plant last October following refusal of the company to comply with a National Labor Relations board ruling and consequently the war department is expected to influence NWLB's decision on the petition.

The specific provisions protested by the union establish wage differences for white and Negro workers and, according to the petition "the highest limit of the colored (pay) range is less than the lowest limit of the white (pay)

Dixie Liberal Urges Negroes Accept Jim Crow

Pittsburgh Courier 3/3/45

Negroes should accept segregation in the South in order to make other needed advances, insists John Temple Graves, noted white liberal editor of the Birmingham Age-Herald.

Writing in a round table on the subject, "Should Negroes Accept Segregation in the South" in the March issue of Negro Digest, Graves declares, "Right or wrong, segregation is not going to be abolished in the South nor apparently in many other parts of the country where it exists informally but definitely."

Meanwhile, he insists that demanding its abolishment is robbing the Negro of other advances of which he cares more and needs more.

Replying to Graves are Roscoe Dunjee, editor of the Oklahoma Black Dispatch and Ira De A. Reid, editor of Phylon magazine.

Dunjee declares, "We take the position that segregation is discriminatory, that is why sometime ago we considered it unseemly when certain Negro leaders rationalized upon the idea that attempt should be made to extract or eliminate discrimination from segregation." "We will, of course, be able to perform this miracle when rabbits conquer the principles of birth control."

Reid states, "Negroes should never accept segregation; they should be eternally alert to devising techniques and strategies for getting rid of it. I have yet to see a legally, racially segregated institution that was not discriminatory."

Accept S Journalis

CHICAGO —(SNS)—"Negroes should accept segregation in the South in order to make other needed advances, "insists John Temple Graves. noted white liberal editor of the Birmingham Age-Herald, writing in a round table on the subject , "Should Negroes Accept Segregation in the South, "in the March issue of Negro Digest.

Graves declares, "right or wrong, segregation is not going to be abolished in the South nor apparently in many other parts of the country where it exists informally but definitely.'

Meanwhile he insists that demanding its abolishment is robbing the Negro of other advances of which he cares more and needs more.

Replying to Graves are Roscoe Dunjee, editor of the Oklahama Black Dispatch and Ira De A. Reid, editor of Phylon magazine.

Dunjee declares, "We take a position that segregation is descriminatory, that is why sometimes ago we considered it unseemly when certain Negro leaders rationalized upon the idea that attempt should be made to extract or eliminate discrimination from segregation." "We will, of course be able to perform this miracle when rabbits conquer the principles of birth control."

Reid states, "Negroes should never accept segregation; they should be eternally alert to devising techniques and strategies for getting rid of it. I have yet to see a legally, racially segregated institution that was not discriminatory."

The Pittsburgh Courier

SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1945

White Officer Pleads For Racial Equality

ATLANTA (ANP)—Declaring that it has been his experience as an officer that Negroes make first rate soldiers, Lieut. Jerome Chaiken, just returned from combat duty and now assigned to Fort Benning, in a letter to the Atlanta Journal asks, "Why don't we treat them as first rate citizens?"

"Despite what cynics say, I like to feel we are at death grips with the Nazis and Japanese because they tried to deny man his fundamental right to be free. Yet there are those among us, soldiers and civilians, supposedly at odds with the enemy, who unconsciously or intentionally refuse to grant certain segments of this Nation their inalienable right to be free.

"If we allow justice and reason to govern our thinking," the letter continued, "the day will come when the spirit of Lincoln will not be just a dream, but a reality. On that day the seeds of peace will transplant those of war. For then men will prove they can live together in harmony, regardless of race, color or creed."

Jim Crow In Industry Hurts War Work Through Manpower Shortage

Atlanta World March 25, 45

Dodge Report Emphasizes Abandonment Of Racism

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Jimcrow in industry hurts war production by adding to the manpower shortage.

That was the report of Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, FEPC regional director, before the Institute of Race relations meeting here last week. It is "both patriotic and sound business practice" to disregard race, creed or color in utilizing manpower for the successful prosecution of business, Dr. Dodge said.

"Integration of Negro skilled workers along with whites in the south in spite of the dire need for such workers to expedite the production of materials for winning the war, has been very near the zero point" he declared.

LESS THAN HIGHEST SKILL

While Negroes were employed in some southern industries, he remarked, in many instances they were working at less than their highest skill. The most dangerous aspect of such discrimination is its conformity with the Nazi pattern, Dr. Dodge said.

The passage of a permanent FEPC bill was urged by Father George Higgins, assistant director of the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare conference. He warned that the Negro should not agitate against trade union discrimination for fear that it will wean other Negroes away from the labor movement.

The Catholic doctrine on the question of racial discrimination is that discrimination against a man because of color or race is a violation of God's law of justice, Father Higgins said.

Journal & Guide 3/10/45

From The Palmetto State

COLUMBIA, S. C. — In a dynamic speech which caused many mixed emotions, Bishop Reveredy C. Ransome delivered the Founders' Day address at Allen University last week.

Among other things the venerable prelate said: "Communism has done the best job that has been done for the common man. In Russia they consider all children God's children, and all share alike" . . . "The practice and knowledge of politics are just as necessary to the final, total liberation of Negroes as are any and all of the other talents and virtues advocated by our leaders."

McKAINE

Once, turning to the platform guests, index finger punching holes into the air the Bishop advised: 'We leaders have in many instances neglected and failed to make the proper and wiser alliances in our fight for equality; the poor white man, whom we often reject, and the other oppressed minority groups are and should be our natural allies." Sometimes he was applauded and sometimes not.

In the field of education there have been many significant developments during the week: The legislature established a Board of Regents to coordinate budgets and curricula of all of the State-supported schools for higher education. This Board will be composed of the heads of all colleges, plus two trustees from each school and of five members to be appointed by the governor.

The Negroes will be represented by President M. F. Whittaker of State A&M College. This is the first time that a Negro has been appointed to serve as an equal on any mixed state board.

$150,000 A YEAR FOR STATE COLLEGE

Protesting against the derisory sum allotted to State College by the legislature (2% of total appropriation), Representative Weeks of Orangeburg, (location of the college), stated: "The appropriation for State College at Orangeburg is mighty low. I speak in behalf of the Negroes at that college. This bill calls for $7,700,000 and they get only 2% of the amount. How did the committee arrive at $150,000 for State College?

The college asked for $1,233,000 because they need dormitories badly. We've got to do something for the Negro soldiers coming back after the war, and we should make an adequate appropriation for the Negroes. $150,000 is too small. Remember 43% of our population is Negro."

Mrs. E. R. Johnson, new Representative from York and only woman member of the legislature, strongly supported Rep. Weeks and insisted that "our colored college should get more consideration." The appropriation was finally increased to $250,000 but while the Negro college was receiving this amount the State-supported white colleges were getting: Slemson $2,000,000; Winthrop (for women) $1,750,000; University of South Carolina $3,000,000. Even the School for the Deaf and Blind received $500,000 and the State Training School $1,000,000.

There is only one school for the higher education of Negroes within the State; the whites have five. Dr. A. C. Flora, superintendent of Columbia City Schools, has requested the dismissal of the suit brought by Albert N. Thompson for the equalization of teachers' salaries. Dr. Flora contends that the new plan for teacher certification is nondiscriminatory. The Doctory is in error as will be proved.

"NEW HORIZONS"

The very enterprising Professor Paul Weber of State College brought a representative group of students to Columbia to view the magnificent USO-sponsored exhibition called "New Horizons," which showed new fields of employment for returning veterans. After the visit was terminated the group listened attentively to a short talk by O. E. McKaine concerning the importance to the Negro of the Dumbarton Oaks and Bretton Woods conferences.

The second Negro post of the F. F. W. to be organized elected the Rev. L. C. Jenkins as commander. The American Legion still refuses to issue charters to Negroes.

Los Angeles Tribune March 12, 1945

Monday, March 12, 1945

Text book slandering Race fought

OKLAHOMA CITY—The Oklahoma State Legislature has been asked by the Negro weekly, the Black Dispatch, to outlaw use of the sociological text, "Social Problems," by Charles A. Ellwood, in the white schools of the State.

The author, a professor at Duke Uinversity, Durham, N.C., the book "is the vilest sort of slander of dark people," according to the Dispatch.

In the text, the author asserts that the tropical climate of Africa and the near-tropical climate of the South has developed socially undesirable traits in the masses of the American Negro today . . . Nature fixed in the Negro strong sex tendencies.

"The influence of slavery upon the Negro was both beneficent and malfeasant," the book elsewhere declares. "The Negro learned little of family morality . . . the Negro could not be taught properly to appreciate the rights of property . . . Finally slavery failed to develop in the slave the self-mastery and self-control which are necessary for free social life . . . Admirable as slavery was . . ."

On racial mixtures, Author Ellwood said: "The pure Negro, without intermixture of blood, has hitherto seemed incapable of leadership . . . It is not surprising therefore, to find among the mulattoes a great amount of constitutional disease and a tendency to crime and immorality . . . and for this reason Negro women of mixed blood are apt to be immoral . . . So we see that while the mixed bloods have furnished the leaders of their race, they have also furnished an undue proportion of its vice and crime."

The book contains 27 pages of slander of the Negro, according to the Dispatch.

White Man Admits Attack, Freed; Colored Gets Death

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (ANP)—While a 23-year-old colored man was given a death sentence here Tuesday by an all-white jury on a criminal attack charge, a white sailor who admitted a similar charge was acquitted Friday by a DeKalk County (Ga.) jury in six minutes.

The colored man, Johnny B. Smith of Abernant, Ala., accused of criminally attacking a Tuscaloosa County white woman, was given the death sentence, while Howard L. Morgan, white sailor, indicted in two counties on charges of rape as well as assault with intent to murder, was acquitted.

Beat Girl's Escort, Took His Gun

The State charged that Morgan, Ralph New and Ralph Gaza, after beating a colored girl's companion, Walter Berry, Jr, attacked the girl in Dakalb County, took Berry's auto, carried the girl into Gwinnot County, took turns in attacking her and then forced her to commit sodomy.

The defendants were scheduled to be given separate trials, Morgan's being first. Trials of the other two men are scheduled for the next term of court in June, while during the same month, all three are to face trial in Gwinnot Superior Court.

Afro American 3/31/45

The Birmingham Weekly Review
March 31, 1945

No Academic Freedom In Texas

NEW YORK — Charging that the ability, qualification and training of a Jewish, Negro or foreign-born scholar must be of "superhuman proportions" to break through the racial and religious discriminatory policies in admission and faculty selection of most American colleges, educators meeting here yesterday (SUNDAY), under the auspices of the Academic Council of the National Federation for Constitutional Liberties took action to "force the question of discrimination into open discussion, to combat its application and to assist administrators who are striving to eradicate it."

"Quota systems" for choice of students and faculty members should be outlawed without further delay, Al Deutsch of PM newspaper told a round table of Council members and guests. Only 22 of the 800 universities have accomodations for Jewish students who want specialist training. Dr. Adele Sicular, chairman of the Citizens Committee of the West Side reported.

Dr. Gene Weltfish, co-author of "Races of Mankind" disputed the basis for discrimination by presentation of anthropological data and urged a reexamination of the purpose of education with a view to eliminating "unscientific theories and practices."

At the same time, disciplinary action against the University of Texas for the ousting of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as president and for curtailment of academic freedom in the university was recommended in a vote after an address by Dr. Rainey in which he stated that "the fight to restore academic freedom has moved into the larger political field and is going to have to be fought there.

In a four-fold program of action the meeting voted for continued support of the university faculty, which must act next week on the request of the Board of Regents to take part in naming a new permanent president to replace Dr. Rainey; for communication to the citizens' groups in Texas urging the mto carry on the fight against forces in the state behind the Rainey ousting; and for request to American Association of University Professors and the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools to take disciplinary action against the university. At the same time, more than 2,000 educators and community leaders who have joined the NFCL in protesting curtailment of academic freedom there will be asked to take action parallel to that of the NFCL.

Describing those who seek control of the educational system in Texas as the "same forces that tried to steal the state's electoral vote in the last election." Dr. Rainey told the morning session of the conference, "There is literally no academic freedom in education in Texas today."

Tracing the appointment of interlocking boards of educational institutions by "Pappy" O'Daniels and Gov. Coke Stevenson, Dr. Rainey said, "The move of the Board of Regents of the University of Texas has been a restrictive one—against tenure of faculty, against academic freedom and against higher education itself."

Support of his fight by labor, civic, religious and professional groups has "shown awareness of the fact that the situation in Texas is only a phase of a much deeper issue facing the country today." Dr. Rainey said.

Chaired by Dr. Lyman R. Bradley of New York University, secretary of the Council, the conference also heard report by George Marshall, chairman of the NFCL, and Frances M. Williams, executive secretary on current- campaigns of the Federation.

Isaac Writes Green On Jim Crow

NEW YORK, March 10 — Determined that the fight to eliminate jim crow auxiliaries from the American Federation of Labor continue although the Executive Council adjourned without action, the National Negro Congress has written the more than 150 signers of the appeal to the council, urging their continued individual and organizational action.

The first such action has been taken by New York City Councilman StanleyM. Issac, who has written to William Green, AFL President, as follows:

"I was one of a very important group who joined in the statement recently made to the AFL, urging that jim crow auxiliaries be banned. I want to reinforce that general statement by a request that you urge every international which is part of your great organization to eliminate jim crow locals, wherever they exist.

"In New York State we have just adopted an anti-discrimination statute that I hope will be followed in other parts of the country. In any event, its substance and spirit certainly demand the immediate elimination of any racial or religious discrimination in labor unins operating within the State of New York. I am sure you will want your locals here to comply with the law; but I hope you will go further and urge the elimination of racial and religious discrimination from every union, wherever it exists and in any form.

Afro-American 3/31/45

22 States Outlaw Public Segregation

By THURGOOD MARSHALL
(From NAACP Bulletin)

Twenty-two States have enacted laws outlawing discrimination in various forms. These include:

California, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Utah, Washington and Wisconsin.

Two Types

Generally there are two types of civil rights statutes. Some refer to specific types of places to which they are applicable. These contain clauses and mention such establishments as places of public accommodation; amusement, resort, entertainment, or assemblage; public places conducted for hire, gain, or reward. etc.

The other type does not list places to which it applies, but, as in the case of Washington, forbids one to keep a person, because of race, color, or creed, from enjoying accommodations, advantages, facilities or privileges of any place of public resort, accommodation, assemblage or amusement.

Both Criticized

This latter type of civil rights law is criticized because the court often decides that one place, such as a theatre, comes under the law, and that another, such as a soda fountain, does not.

The former type is criticized because the court may not include under the statute any form of public place which is not listed.

Several lawyers conclude that a model bill need not enumerate each particular place to be covered; yet they have definitely gone beyond the general type of statute such as is found in Washington State.

The term "civil rights" is generally defined as those rights which appertain to the person by virtue of his citizenship in a State or community.

Woman Admits Her Attack Tale False

Chicago Defender

WASHINGTON , D. C.—(NNPA) — Three days of diligent search by police here for a Negro "between 20 and 30 years of age, brownskin' ended last week when the woman complainant confessed her "attack story" was all a lie.

Mrs. Regan Darnold, 22 years old, had complained to police that she had been robbed and slashed with a knife in Rock Creek Park's zoo grounds after she had asked a Negro for directions. She was cut on her wrists and forehead.

Now, she has admitted her wounds were self-inflicted. She had an argument with her husband, who had threatened to send her home to her mother. She was hunting for sympathy from her hubby.

In the process, she was increasing race tensions, subjecting hundreds of Negroes "between 20 and 30 years of age, brownskin" to loss of personal liberty and questioning by police, but also disproving the theories of race-superiority.

Detroit Moves To Bar Coming Of More Negroes

War Manpower Commission Asked To Stem Flow

By ROBERT CRUMP

DETROIT — (ANP) — The city fathers, who seem to be lost in the fog of confusion over the acute housing situation here and steadfastly refuse to do anything about it, now register a new law in un-Americanism by trying to devise some means of preventing more people from coming into Detroit, particularly job hunters. They have appealed to the state director of WMC for help.

It is estimated that new arrivals reach the total of 10,000 a month which is about 5,000 less than six months ago. Just how any city can stop people from coming in has not yet been determined but the aid that is being sought through the WMC would be to discourage immigration thru its regional boards throughout the country by refusing to refer workers to this city which is now being taken out of the critical area bracket.

A meeting of labor and industrial representatives with the director of the WMC has failed so far to arrive at anything definite that will relieve the job situation. It is true that many factories are laying off workers and there is sufficient manpower to take care of all available work.

Poll Reveals What Leaders Believe To Be 'Un-American'

Daily Word apr 74

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The revived Dies Committee on Un-American Activities, given new life by Rep. John Rankin's parliamentary maneuvering on the opening day of the 79th Congress, was told by the Brookings Institute last week what many leaders consider as un-American.

First on its list as a concensus is the Institute's assertion that "It is un-American for any individual or group by force, intimidation, deceit, fraud or bribery to prevent or seek to prevent any person from exercising any right or privilege which cannot constitutionally be denied to him either by the Federal Government or by the State Government."

REPORT TO MUNDT

Observers here interpret this statement to cover denials to Negroes of the right to vote, edcational opportunities, equal justice under the law, equal value for their money in housing, transportation, and taxes, and practically every other injustice prepetrated upon them.

The Institute made the report to Rep. Mundt (R. of S. D.), a member of the new committee. In it, it stated that the committee should be mainly concerned with the rights of individuals assured by the Constitution.

Rep. Mundt had requested the private research organization to prepare an analysis of replies he received from scores of prominent Americans asked to define "Un-American Activities". Mrs. Roosevelt was among those who replied, but her views were not made public.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

Other un-American activities were listed as (a) conspiring, advocating or attempting to bring about a change in the form of government in the U. S. without following the processes prescribed by the Constitution; (b) secretly conspiring to overthrow a government of law and substitute a government vested with complete discretionary power; (c) advancing the interests of a foreign nation or association against the interests o the United States; and (d) acting in time of war or threatened war with intent to interfere with the successful preparation for or prosecution of war.

This last opinion is believed to cover employers and labor unions which refuse to abide by the President's Executive Order against discrimination in employment, hiring, working conditions and union membership because of race, creed, color or national origin.

About Segregation

Editor, The Journal: I would like to point out to the undoubtedly sincere Mr. Crenshaw that he begs the question when he admits that segregation occasionally works to the disadvantage of persons so relegated to a position of inferiority.

It is an established fact that segregation it at the root of the lack of equal educational opportunity for the Negro. I would also like to bring to the attention of that gentleman the fact that the school situation here in Atlanta is most abominable. There is only one high school, no kindergartens, no clerks in any of the Negro elementary schools, no adequate rest rooms for the teachers, in fact, very little of anything conducive to that state of proficiency which is most desirable in any school system in a cosmopolitan city such as Atlanta.

Segregation may be good; it may be bad; it may be benevolent; it may be malignant and vicious, but when it gets to the point where the object of such practices loses that to which he is entitled, then means should be found to assure the segregated peoples that they will at least receive equal if separate accommodations, whether it is in a school, train, in the Army, in the Navy, in the employ of industry or the Government, state or federal, or in any other undertaking in which the Negro is bound to participate.

T-5 WILLIAM A. TINNEY JR.
Fort McPherson.

Tampa Bulletin 5/5-/45

Says Race Prejudice Being Breached In South

MACON, Ga.—(ANP)—Race prejudice, which has been kept alive thru generations of artificial barriers is being breached here in the south, through the courageous and intelligent cooperation of both whites and Negroes, according to the Macon News, liberal white daily.

"Georgia," said the News editorially Tuesday, "which a few short years ago had no organized agencies to combat this century-old cancer, now has many, all working toward a common goal. Neither race wants the idea of so-called "social equality" injected into the present pressing issue which is basically the economic and civil rights of a large segment of our population.

"If the white people of the south want to do the honest thing by all of its citizens, of all colors, of all races, of all religious and political faiths, they will join in this fight for common decency.

"Inherited prejudices of the white people of the south are giving way to logic, to decency and to the humanitarian cause of a minority of our population that too long has been held in virtual economic peonage, victims of unscrupulous landlords and money-lenders.

"War's close is going to bring a test of courage to both races. The ignorant, vicious Negro, grown arrogant through suddenly acquired ability to earn more than ever earned before, and working far removed from his former surroundings in the south, will be difficult to handle. The vicious and ignorant white man on the other hand, who claims only a white skin as evidence of his superiority, will attempt, as he has in the past, to abuse and discriminate against the Negro.

"It is going to take the best efforts of both races to keep down these elements that would destroy both. It is going to take increasing patience, work and study to achieve a unity that we must have between the races to advance the best interests of all of us.

Says Race Prejudice Being Breached In South

The Weekly Review 4/28/45

MACON, Ga. — (ANP) — Race prejudice, which has been kept alive through generations of artificial barriers is being breached here in the South, through the courageous and intelligent cooperation of both white and Negroes, according to the Macon News liberal white daily.

"Georgia," said the News editorially Tuesday, "which a few short years ago had no organized agencies to combat this century-old cancer, now has many, all working toward a common goal. Neither race wants the idea of so-called 'social equality' injected into the present pressing issue of which is basically the economic and civil rights of a large segment of our population.

"If the white people of the South want to do the honest thing by all of its citizens, of all colors, of all races, of all religions and political faiths, they will join in the fight for common decency.

"Inherited prejudice of the white people of the South are giving way to logic, to decency and to the humanitarian cause of a minoriyt of our population that too long has been held in virtual economic peonage, victims of unscrupulous landlords and money-lenders.

"War's close is going to bring a test of courage to both races. The ignorant, vicious Negro, grown arrogant through suddenly acquired ability to earn more than ever before, and working far removed from his former surroundings in the South, will be difficult to handle. The vicious and ignorant white man on the other hand, who claims only a white skin as evidence of his superiority, will attempt, as he has in the past to abuse and discriminate against the Negro.

"It is going to take the best efforts of both races to keep down these elements that would destroy both. It is going to take increasing patience, work and study to achieve a unity that we must have between the races to advance the best interests of all of us."

Graves Lists Seven Changes The South Must Make

BIRMINGHHAM, Ala. (SNS John Temple Graves, II, in his column May 19, Birmingham Age-Herald listed the "seven changes" the South will have to take.

One of them was "advancement" for the Negro 'on his side of a reasserted line." He did not elaborated on his "reasserted line," but it is in line with the general advocacy of stricted segregation and whiter "white supremacy."

Here are Graves' "seven changes":

1. On itself, on the light in Southern people, the merit in Southern goods, the South as its own great market.
2. On Southern investment for Southern money.
3. On cotton to face the world with its own merit and economy, no matter what dislocations come.
4. On science, finding it and doing what it says.
5. On Uncle Sam, watching him but accepting his help, especially educational.
6. On the Negro, encouraging advancement on his side of a reasserted line.
7. On a two-party political system in which Southerners misguided enough to feel Republican will have the courage, honestly and opportunity to vote that way.

Tropical Dispatch 5/26/45

Alabama Weekly Review May 19/45

Chicago YMCA College President Quits; Charges Y Board Of Fostring Race Prejudice

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Race hatred is being fostered and fomented by local white YMCA officials.

That charge was made last week by Dr. Edward J. Sparling, liberal white educator, when he resigned the presidency of the Central YMCA college following a series of violent clashes with Board Members about the school's liberal policy toward Negro students.

Most conspicuous among the known Negro haters and race baiters sitting on the YMCA board of directors is Newton C. Farr, local real estate tycoon, who led the various attacks against Negro enrollment at the Y college. Farr, who openly admits his deep antagonism for Negroes and leads a restrictive covenant crusade against them, demanded that Dr. Sparling reveal the number of Negro students to the board on Nov. 11, as a prelude to setting up a racial quota system.

"At this same meeting another director asked for the number of Jewish students in the college, which question I ignored," Dr. Sparling said. "When demanded by complete board action to reveal these figures, I said that I would have to resign if they were used in discrimination against any students because of race or creed."

BATTLES NEGRO HATERS

Dr. Sparling pointed out specific instances of racial discrimination and how he had to battle the evil. The most outstanding instance was his discontinuation of physical at the college as a means to maintain his policy of racial equality among the students.

Negroes are not allowed to swim at the Central YMCA, yet each student Negro and white alike, was taxed $2.50 for gym privileges, something Negro students could not enjoy. Dr. Sparling eliminated that jimcrow evil by merely refusing the fee to his Negro students and banishing the physical educational program.

"If Negro students can't swim," he said, "no one will swim."

Here are the four reasons why Dr. Sparling resigned:

1. His pro-labor stand in the Montgomery Ward fight.
2. His refusal to permit racial quotas for students in the college.
3. His opposition to all interference with academic freedom.
4. His part in the publication of the A. B. C.'s of Scapegoating," prepared under the direction of two professors of psychology at Harvard Universlyt.

SEGREGATION — A STEEL TRAP

The present global war has centered attention upon the principle and practice of segregation, as it relates to the Negro people, in the United States, as it has never been in the history of the nation. This pattern of living had its beginning in slavery days. In the reconstruction era which followed our Civil War it had a renewed emphasis and a somewhat different application.

The 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments not only liberated the enslaved Negroes, but they bestowed upon him all of the rights and privileges of any other citizen. The white people living in the seceded states facing the problem of restoration to the Union and forced to make a semblance of complying with the law, invoked the principle of segregation.

They insisted upon residential segregation; they forced the enactment of laws for separate schools for Negro and white people, and they placed upon the statutes books laws for separate traveling accommodations. Whenever they were able to operate movie houses without Negro patronage, they refused the admittance to Negroes; when they could not operate without Negro patronage, they maintained separate entrances and seats for Negro people. In all public meetings where both races assembled together, either directly or indirectly, arrangements were provided so that the Negro people were separated from all other people.

In a large majority of the cases of segregation, the persons who insist upon the practice and promote it with all of their energies, claim that provisions are equal, in an effort to salve their own consciences. However, the one outstanding characteristic about this segregation is the fact that the situations are never equal. Moreover, the situations disparage, debase, and exploit the Negro people.

Such is the outrageous and hellish spirit of segregation that our white enemies taken prisoners of war are accorded greater respect than Negro soldiers who have offered all for country and for freedom throughout the world.

Segregation carries the assumption that discrimination is not only the social custom, but is the law of the land. So that many persons who repudiate this pattern of behavior, find themselves in the clutches of a tradition which holds them like traps of steel and they do not know how to extricate themselves.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS PROPERTY RESTRICTIONS

St. Louis Argus June 1/45

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29—(Special)—A 24-year-old ruling legalizing contracts in which neighbors agree not to sell property to Negroes was upheld by the United States Supreme Court Tuesday.

The Court refused to disturb the rule and, in effect, re-emphasized the principal Monday by refusing to review an appeal filed by Miss Clara I. Mays, whose deed to property in a so-called "white neighborhood" here was ordered set aside by the District of Columbia. Whites involved sued on the basis of a covenant entered into in 1925.

The high court first ruled that such restrictive agreements were valid private contracts in another District of Columbia case in 1921.

Counselors for Miss Mays contended that enforcement of the covenants is repugnant to the Constitution and laws of the United States and deprives Negroes of adequate and fit housing.

College Of Surgeons Bars Negro Doctors

Atlanta Daily World June 2/45

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Negro doctors are officially barred from the American College of Surgeons.

That fact became known here last week when Dr. George Thorne received a relpy from the ACS in regard to a letter he sent last month in request of membership application blank. His letter read:

Please send application blank for American college or surgeons. Thanking you for your attention . ."

INVESTIGATES RACE OF APPLICANT

Dr. Thorne, a native of New York and a graduate of Howard's medical school made no mention of his race in his brief letter to the ACS but their reply a few days later proved they investigate the race of all applicants.

"Dear Dr. Thorne:

"This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 3.

"Pursuant to resolution of the board of regents, fellowship in the college is not being conferred on members of the Negro race at the present time. However, the board has a committee now charged with the task of making a complete study of the situation for future consideration by the board.

"Very truly your,
"M. T. Farrow,
Executive secretary"

The executive secretary, Mrs. Miram T. Farrow, is not a physician but had been informed by regents of the ACS to discourage all Negro applicants. Dr. Henry W. Cave, a local medic, went on record of being difinitely anti-Negro. Here is his comment:

STUDYING QUESTION

"All I can say is at the present time there is a committee studying the whole question of the relationship of colored surgeons with the American College of Surgeons. They are considering the whole question as to whether they are going to take in a lot of Negroes in the college."

When Dr. Malcolm P. MacEachron of Chicago, associate director and chairman of the administrative board of the ACS, was informed about Mrs. Farrow's letter, he said:

"There is nothing in the regulations to disqualify any doctor from becoming a fellow on account of his race, creed or religion. I will have to look into it."

Dr. Thorne interned at Harlem hospital and served there for ten years. He was assistant visiting surgeon when he resigned to accept appointment to the surgical staff of Lincoln hospital. He is a member of the Manhattan Central Medical society, the New York County Medical society, and serves on the Sydenham hospital surgical staff.

White Georgian Urges Elimination Of Prejudice

Tampa Bulletin June 2

ATLANTA—(ANP) — Warning against racial, religious and class prejudices in America after the war, Dr. Willis A. Sutton, former superintendent of Atlanta public schools and now on the staff of Reader's Digest, believes it will be "tragic" if the Negroes and Jews now fighting for freedom return to be discriminated against.

Pointing out that prejudices are deep in America, but the power to eradicate them is stronger, Dr. Sutton pleaded for greater tolerance and democracy at a meeting of Atlanta Rotarians Tuesday in the Ansley hotel.

The white-haired educator, whose name as defendant is still on the position for equal pay filed by Atlanta teachers, characterized the struggle for true democracy in this country as the "battle for America." The institution of family, church and school, he said, are those which will help in the winning of this battle.

Declaring that the church had never been given the credit that it is due in America Dr. Sutton expressed the opinion that "the Hebrew-Christian ethic with its theory of one God and one people is the true basis of democracy."

Los Angeles Tribune June 8/45

Patterns of discrimination in other countries revealed

WASHINGTON — An abstract of a report on racial discrimination and governmental policy in foreign countries, prepared at the behest of Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, for the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, was inserted in the Congressional Record last week on the motion of Senator Thomas.

"Interest in the subject in our own nation made it desirable that we explore the experience of other nations which face similar problems," the Senator said in announcing the report which was prepared by Legislative Reference service. The full report is on file in the office of the Senate comittee.

"In many countries racial distinctions have been synonomous with special privileges," the report stated in its introduction. "Groups which have been discriminated against . . .are often associated with disliked occupations as well as different racial traits. Discriminations have been somewhat ameliorated in the last century due to revolutions and the voluntary action of the governments," the report asserted, continuing:

"In imperial Russia there were many different groups who were discriminated against in the interest of the russification policy of the czars. Under the Soviet regime a different policy has been adopted toward minority groups and this has led to the maintenance of these cultural differences of minorities which did not conflict with Communist ideology.

"In South Africa the trend of events has been toward the strict residential segregation of the colored races and toward their restruction to particular occupational pursuits and very limited political activity. The discriminations here are maintained by a minority, the whites, against a majority, the colored peoples.

"In India the chief divisions are the accepted Hindus who constitute a majority and the two very large minorities of Moslems and untouchables. Discriminations within the Hindus group proper have been largely removed by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act but the larger problem of customary discriminations against untouchables remains. The chief of these are residential segregations, occupational restrictions and all barring from use of public conveniences and facilities. Many of these restraints have been abolished in recent years.

"Discriminations against minority races are not marked under the legal rights of citizenship in Hawaii. In New Zealand the Maori minority were granted rights of education and health instruction which have led to a rehabilitation of self respect and progress on the part of that race. In Australia the native policy of the different States has been directed to the preservation of the aborigines while giving them the advantages of European culture. The policy has been criticized as in adequate and marked by decline of full bloods and the rise of maladjusted half-castes. In Japan the Eta minority have been discrimiated against for centuries in schools, the army, temples, and in everyday community life, being forced to live in segregated quarters. Some attempt to improve their condition has been made in recent years. In Brazil the abolition of slavery removed the last legal handicap on the Negroes of that country. Since the emancipation they have made progress but are still in an inferior position. In Arabia discriminations have been maintained against Negroes as in the United States and Brazil but on a different basis."

Council Meeting Hears Racial Slurs On Hospital Issue

Courier

COLUMBIA, S. C.---(SNS) What might have been an inspiring meeting of Columbia City Council Tuesday, at which were present members of the county delegation, the Columbia Medical Society and of the boards of trustees of the Columbia and Good Samaritan Hospitals, developed into a dismal disclosure that certain insulting names had been applied to Negro patients at the Columbia Hospital and a few crept out in the hearing.

Negro representatives of the Good Samaritan Waverly Hospital reported after the meeting, held to consider a petition for a $10,000 city gift to the hospitals' building fund that the chairman of the Board of the Columbia Hospital used freely the term "darkies" during the meeting in such phrases as, "we have out there for the darkies" and "I can't say the darkies wont use the hospital (Columbia) fully."

It was brought earlier in the meeting that the terms "black wench" and "aunty" had been used in referrng to Negro patients in the city hospital's Negro wing and that student nurses had been ordered to omit proper titles of address when referring to either supervising Negro Nurses or patients.

Mrs. A. W. Simkins, director of the $1000,000 Good Samaritan Waverly building fund, said on the situation that the drive was undertaken to relieve Negro patients of these conditions and there is now ample evidence that the new hospital building will be obtained, regardless of the outcome of Tuesday council meeting.

stify

Terror' Case Federal Jury

Tribune Courier June 6, 1945

ER T. DUNCAN to The Courier)

famous New Iberia (La.) "reign of Negroes were brutally beaten, their and many of them exiled from the 18, was reviewed here last week by a Federal grand jury which contained one colored member

In the hearing, the findings of which have been withheld from the Press, many of the New Iberia victims furnished testimony. Summoned here for hearings were J. Leo Hardy, former president of the New Iberia NAACP, from California, and Dr. Luis Williams, from Colorado, as well as Dr. H. C. Scoggins, who fled from New Iberia and set up a new practice here after the outrages.

VOLCANIC REACTIONS

In the debacle, which caused volcanic reactions throughout the State, Mr. Hardy, Dr. Williams, Principal L. L. Paulk, of the New Iberia school and one of the town's leading dentists, and Dr. Ima Pearson were severely beaten, while Dr. Scoggins and H. Dorsey were forced to flee the city, leaving properties and practices valued at more than $250,000. The parish was left without a colored physician or dentist.

The co-operation of the Negro press and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People ultimately brought the outrages before justice officials as publication of the mob case in Southern white newspapers was

(Continued on Page 4, Col. 3)

VV

Launch Ship Named for Merchant Seaman

BRUNSWICK, Ga. — The S.S. William Cox, a Liberty ship of approximately 10,000 tons, was christened here Sunday night by the widow of the veteran colored seaman, for whom the ship was named.

Cox, a fireman, died when the S.S. David Atwater was shelled and sunk in April, 1942. His widow is Mrs. Arlee Cox of Savannah, Ga.

Mob Victims Testify

New Iberia 'Terror' Case Reviewed By Federal Jury

Pittsburgh Courier June 6, 1945

By JASPER T. DUNCAN
(Exclusive to The Courier)

NEW ORLEANS, La.—The famous New Iberia (La.) "reign of terror," during which leading Negroes were brutally beaten, their homes and property damaged, and many of them exiled from the parish by irate whites May 17-18, was reviewed here last week by a Federal grand jury which contained one colored member.

In the hearing, the findings of which have been withheld from the Press, many of the New Iberia victims furnished testimony. Summoned here for hearings were J. Leo Hardy, former president of the New Iberia NAACP, from California, and Dr. Luis Williams, from Colorado, as well as Dr. H. C. Scoggins, who fled from New Iberia and set up a new practice here after the outrages.

VOLCANIC REACTIONS

In the debacle, which caused volcanic reactions throughout the State, Mr. Hardy, Dr. Williams, Principal L. L. Paulk, of the New Iberia school and one of the town's leading dentists, and Dr. Ima Pearson were severely beaten, while Dr. Scoggins and H. Dorsey were forced to flee the city, leaving properties and practices valued at more than $250,000. The parish was left without a colored physician or dentist.

The co-operation of the Negro press and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People ultimately brought the outrages before justice officials as publication of the mob case in Southern white newspapers was

(Continued on Page 4, Col. 3)

VV

Launch Ship Named for Merchant Seaman

BRUNSWICK, Ga. — The S.S. William Cox, a Liberty ship of approximately 10,000 tons, was christened here Sunday night by the widow of the veteran colored seaman, for whom the ship was named.

Cox, a fireman, died when the S.S. David Atwater was shelled and sunk in April, 1942. His widow is Mrs. Arlee Cox of Savannah, Ga.

ORLEANS PORT HAS 25-YR. DISCRIMINATION RECORD

Tampa Bulletin June 9/45

NEW ORLEANS.—(By Lucius Jones for ANP) — Negroes are not only victims of race bias now, but have been the victims of almost unparalleled discrimination, based on race and color, at the New Orleans Port of Embarkation for 25 years, the branch NAACP here has just disclosed in a startling expose of "evils behind the scenes."

Probing allegedly racial discrimination at the port in the case of Charles A. Gordon, the NAACP, through its militant executive secretary, Daniel E. Byrd, now reveals the fact that Gordon, who has been at the port since March, 1920, and holds two citations for meritorious service, is still in a work category under 11 men he assisted in gromoing and "grounding" for their jobs when they came to the Port less than five years ago.

Gordon, now in his 26th year at the port, was classified and paid as a laborer as far back as 1928, but, at that time, he was checker, storekeeper's foreman, packer and warehouseman. This claim is substantiated by signed letters of seven former commanders of the port and two civilian employes. Gordon's rating is CAF-4.

The 11 white men elevated over Gordon, though far behind him in seniority, are listed as Rboert Floyd, who has moved from classified laborer to spervisor of labor; Alonzo Emerson, who hiked from laborer to superintendent of labor of the entire port; Stanley Busing, stepped up from checker to junior administrator; U. J. Haley, lifted from packed to warehouseman; Messrs. D'Quin, J. Thuer, Vegas, Naquin, Heray and Schiro, all of whom advanced from checkers to storekeepers. The entire list of men are rated CAF 5 or better.

The maximum yearly pay scales are CAF-4, $2,220; CAF-5, $2,800; CAF-6, $2,900; CAF-7, $3,200, and CAF-8, $3.500.

The U. S. War Department civilian handbook reads: "There will be no discrimination against employes on the grounds of race, sex, color, religion, creed, national origin, or political or other affiliation. All appointments will be made in accordance with civil service laws, which provide for the selection of applicants on the basis of merit and approved qaulifications" . It also reads, "Equal pay for equal work is a fixed program of the department and will be adhered to wherever possible." . . . The handbook further reads, "An employe who has given efficient service over a period of time and whose conduct is subsequently reported as satisfactory by proper administrative authority is promoted to the next salary step in the grade to which his position is allocated. These promotions are geared to the periodic efficiency ratings given to all classified employes in the federal civil service.

However, despite these federal provisions and despite his two citations for meritorious service, 25 years' of executive responsibility, and nine superlative letters of commendation from seven port comamnders and two civilian employes, Charles A. Gordon, today, because he is a Negro, is only helfway up the pay schedule, though, from the standpoint of seniority and qualifications, he ranks at the top. It is generally conceded that he knows more about port administration than probably any other man in the setup. Of him, Col. M. J. Gilmore wrote that "under me, Gordon's knowledge of quartermaster nomenclature helped me in a great manner with a complete re-warehousing job."

The letters of commendation for Gordon were from: Cols. David I. Dodenhoff, J. R. Pourie, James Sproule, M. J. Gilmore and H. B. Smith, Capt. John W. Llufrie, Senior Traffic Manager, Charles Fuca and Junior Administrative Assistant L. J. Deskey.

The army service forces' citations, signed by Lt. Gen. Brehen Sommerville, were for 10 and 25 years meritorious service respectively.

But Gordon, like other qualified Negroes, is the victim of a "vicious circle" in which the most pernicious type of racial discrimination is practiced. Gordon's case, of course, makes all the others pale in significance. His case is the paradoz of paradozes!

South Leads In Distribution of Seedling

ATLANTA.—The South led all regions and South Carolina all states in distribution of seedling trees for forest planting stock during 1944 under the Clark-McNary and Norris-Doxey Acts, Regional Forester Joseph C. Kircher reports.

Figures compiled by the Washington Office of the U. S. Forest Service showed other southern states well up in the list of distributors, with Florida ranking in fifth place and Georgia sixth. Immediately behind the Palmetto State were Wisconsin, New York and Pennsylvania, all states in which scientific forestry has been practiced generally far longer than in the South.

The Congressional Acts under which the distribution of seedlings is made at cost provide for a cooperative agreement between State Departments of Forestry and the U. S. Forest Service by which the former maintain the nurseries and distribute the seedlings to private woodland owners at cost, with the Federal agency paying part of the nursery expense. Under the system, 11,900,000 seedlings were distributed in eleven southern states during 1944, with the cost to the purchasers usually runnings about $$1.75 per thousand

The Letter But Not The Spirit

In a 6 to 3 decision at Washington last Monday, the United States Supreme Court upheld a death sentence penalty for a Texas Negro, L. C. Atkins, who appealed to that court on the ground of racial discrimination. Atkins had charged that the jury commissioners of Dallas County, Texas had "deliberately, intentionally, and purposely limited the number of Negroes on the jury to one." The high court's majority opinion, delivered by Justice Stanley Reed said: "Fairness in the selection of a jury has never been held to require proportionate representation or races upon a jury. Justice Reed explained that the Court's past anti-discrimination ruling was based on the theory that exclusion of Negroes from jury lists in communities where many Negroes lived indicated discrimination and "not on the theory that racial groups must be recognized."

While we must admit that this decision meets the requirements of the 14th amendment to the Constitution, it is, in effect, a bad precedent to set for anti-Negro communities. It tells them how they may comply with the 14th amendment to the Constitution, which forbids discrimination based on race, creed, and color, and yet pursue their undemocratic course of trying Negroes without giving effect and meaning to the spirit of the law. One of the Commissioners, when questioned about the lone Negro, said: "We had no intention of placing more than one Negro on the panel. When we did that we had finished." Another commissioner said: "We three did not go to see any other Negroes. Yes, sir, there were other Negroes' names mentioned besides the one we selected, but we did not talk to them, and our intentions were to get just one Negro on the grand jury."

Atlanta Daily World June 13/53

NE

CIO trying to streamline election laws

AUSTIN, Tex.—With 14 Negro delegates helping to formulate its program, the state CIO legislative conference meeting here last weekend, voted unanimous backing to all policies adopted by the 1944 national CIO convention.

The policies include a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee, abolition of the poll tax, and the outlawing of religious and racial discrimination.

One demand of the 12-point program adopted unanimously by the 152 CIO delegates, officials and staff representatives was repeal by the legislature of the Texas poll tax. As further amendments to antedated Texas election laws, the CIO is asking for a secret ballot, instead of the present numbered ballot; and a state registration law which would permit voters to qualify up to three days before an election.

The delegates voted to set up a state-wide educational fund of $25,000 for paid radio time and newspaper advertising, exposing the Christian Americans and other organizations now sponsoring Senator Pappy W. Lee O'Daniels "right to work amendment" which would outlaw the closed shop in Texas.

The vote came on this proposal after a Negro delegate, Frank Ward, representing Local 254 of the Oil Workers International Union in Pt. Arthur, had taken the floor and said:

"When we entered the war, our country had no preparations to face this crisis. But we mobilized men.

"On the other side of labor, we are in the same fix. Large sums are being spent for enacting anti-labor legislation. We've got to mobilize dollars. We've got to run our hands into our pockets to enact pro-labor legislation. Twenty-five thousand dollars is a mighty small sum for this big state. Let's go back home and raise it."

SOUTHERN WHITE EDITOR SPEAKS OUT LOUD

6/27/45

The Courier

CHICAGO (Atlas News Service) The South must take seven chances, one of which is on the Negro, decalres John Temple Graves, noted writer for the Birmingham News and the Age-Herald. "For decency's sake, for economy's and society's, the 10,000,000 Negroes who live there must be not only permitted but encouraged to continue advancements which have carried them far since the first World War." In this article Mr. Graves goes out on a limb in expressing his views on the Southern situation.

This penetrating analysis of the South appears in the July issue of New Vistas Magazine, a [redacted] tion which stresses a positive approach to interracial relationships, published at 366 East 47th Street, Chicago.

Appearing in the same issue is a timely and enlightening article about the "White Primary and the Supreme Court" by one of Chicago's outstanding young Negro lawyers, Attorney Sidney A. Jones, Jr. This article gives an account of the history and significance of the Texas white primary. The decision given by the supreme court in the case of Smith vs. Allwright, states Mr. Jones, might well go down in history as one of the greatest decisions ever made by the court.

V.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from Columbia, S. C., State
June 27, 1945

[illegible] Small craft warnings were posted from Atlantic City to Block Island and Northeast storm warnings from Block Island to Portsmouth, N. H.

Arnall Favors EconomicEquality For Negroes

Louisville, Ky., June 26—(AP)—Gov. Ellis Arnall of Georgia said in an interview here today economic equality for the Negro is a right which should not be denied him and is much more important to him than social equality.

"What the hell difference does it make if you sit down and eat with Negroes. Visit with them in their homes, talk with them?" He asked. "That just means that they have something to eat, that they have a home, that they have had enough education to carry on a conversation.

The important thing for the Negro is not social quality but economic equality—the right to work and earn a decent living so that he will have enough to eat. A good home and a good education."

The governor insisted he did not favor "breaking down any of the customs set up in the South" but did believe that equal economic opportunities for the Negro in Georgia would be necessary to assure the well-being of the state as a whole.

The discussion was touched off at a city hall press conference at which a Negro reporter asked Arnall what opportunities there were for Negroes in his state.

South will follow lead of the South, educator says

DURHAM, N. C.—Opportunities for Negroes to develop individual and racial self-respect, along with equality of economic opportunity, and extensive social planning for returning servicemen, were among postwar objectives listed by Dr. James E. Shepard, president of the North Carolina College for Negroes and Grand Master of the State Masons, here in his third annual State-wide radio broadcast in which he urged North Carolina to continue its leadership in interracial matters because the South will more easily follow the South.

The North Carolina educator who has discussed race issues on two national broadcasts in recent months spoke on the topic, "Interracial Progress in North Carolina."

While North Carolina can point with pride to the abolition of all the poll tax, equalizing Negro public school teachers' salaries, and advances in a State-wide health program, the State cannot afford to become complacent about interracial progress, the educator said asserting that a great deal more will need to be done afetr the war.

NORTH CAROLINA LEADS

North Carolina's example must continue to encourage the citizenry of other States in this section, the educaotr pointed out. He made it plain, however, that he felt North Carolina's present position of leadership in interracial progress should spur this State on to even greater achievements. This is important, he said, because other Southern States will be inclined to follow North Carolina's lead.

Southerners, traditionally hostile to outside influences, will follow another Southern State, Dr. Shepard said. "These people are unwilling to follow the leadership of any outside group, but if another Southern State can abolish the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting, if it can let down the bars of party primaries, if it can equalize teachers' salaries, and do all of these things without any friction or strife and without undesirable results, then the arguments of opposers in other States are destroyed, and the courage of those who favor these just measures is strengthened by the example of North Carolina."

Speaking during a period when the North Carolina Legislature is in session, the president and founder of the nation's only State-supported liberal arts college, warned his fellow citizens of the inevitable penalty that follows when men and women of any race are degraded and robbed of their self-respect. Enlightened self-interest, Dr. Shepard said, should operate to prevent any "moral retrogression" in his State's race relations program.

USE THE GREMLINS

And while he cited injustices often confronting Negroes, he said that Negroes, like others who have "a goal, a God and a gremlin," should use their "gremlins," which he identified as obstacles, to excel in areas where discrimination is often sharpest.

"If the Negro faces the obstacle of being the last to be hired and the first to be fired, he should strive to become so efficient in his work, so punctual, so careful, so skillful, that such an unfair employment practice would be definitely harmful to the self-interest of his employer.

Rumors that returning Negro GI's would bring new hatreds with them were termed "harmful." "Our returning soldiers will have a large measure of self-respect born of the pride of wearing the military uniform of the greatest nation on earth and born of the consciousness of their personal sacrifices in a great struggle for freedom and democracy.

"Our attitude toward justice for all men, and fairness of our laws and their administration can go a long way toward preserving this self-respect. Almost next to food and drink the nature of man requires that he be able to respect himself among his fellows, and when a people are denied a healthy and legitimate form of self-respect, they will seek unhealthy and socially hurtful forms born of resentment and disgust."

The Greensboro Daily News, influential North Carolina daily newspaper, referred to Dr. Shepard's broadcast "as one of the most statesmanly and Christian presentations of a problem affecting the entire citizenship to which we have ever listened."

The editorial went on to say that Dr. Shepard "made the same kind of speech he makes at home and abroad, recognizing the imperfections of the present social structure hereabouts but devoutly returning thanks for the desire of the citizens of both races for improvement and noting the encouraging signs of progress.

"So evident is his pride in his State that one cannot fail to rejoice with him; so obviously his sincerity that his white listeners cannot fail to regret that they have not extended to him and those of his race more opportunities for self-advancement."

Sept. 7 / 45

EDITORI

The Woolworth Jim Crow Lunch Counter, A Threat to F[illegible]dom

As long as the state of Kansas permits t[illegible] [illegible]oolworth Store and the Kresge Store on Minnesota Avenue to practice segregation and jim crowism against Negro citizens, it is a threat to "FREEDOM." The jim crow counters set aside for Negroes is a threat to democracy and freedom. . . . It is a violation of Kansas' civil rights law. The Attorney General could enforce the laws. The Woolworth and Kresge stores are violating a state law just as much as a tavern owner who would sell whiskey.

How long will the State allow this injustice to be heaped upon citizens just because they are BLACK? When our boys went over to fight the Germans, there were no jim crow battlefields . . . bullets and bombs knew no color line or discrimination . . . the colored boys were not told to stay behind the firing line or stuck in a corner like mice. . . . No. No. They were on the firing line, fighting and dying for freedom. . . . Fighting and dying in order that Woolworth and Kresge could keep their doors open and operate a business free of enemy destruction. . . . The only thanks from these places of business offered people of color is to insult them by segregating and jim crowing them like animals. This is a threat to free people of the world. The Governor of Kansas should call upon the Attorney General to stop this disgrace. . . . "If Negro men are good enough to die for this country, they are good enough to be treated like men."—(Payne Ratner, former Kansas Governor).

The masses of white people are not concerned about who eats a meal beside them. . . . They never think about jim crowism and segregation until some signs are put up by some company manager. . . . They never think about jim crow counters or Negroes being herded off until they see a setup like what exists at Woolworth and Kresge. . . .

It is embarrassing for Negro churches or other organizations to bring conventions or big meetings to this city, because such patterns as laid down by the above mentioned stores wouldn't speak well for the city and state. . . . After all is said and done, Kansas is supposed to be a free state. . . . It has a tradition to be proud of and those who are in power should keep that heritage sacred for the cause of freedom and free people of the world. . . . The Merchants' Association should denounce such a practice. . . . The City Commissioners, the County Attorney and all law enforcers should look into this matter. The jim crow counters are threatening FREEDOM in Kansas and hindering the cause of Democracy in the world.

Groundwork For Elimination Of Bias Essential

Atlanta Daily World
Sept. 23, 1945

Says Segregation Stops Teamwork In Racial Amity

WASHINGTON—(ANP)— A war department publication says that "the ultimate in teamwork cannot accrue where lines (of segregation) are drawn" and proceeds to say although segregation in some communities must be recognized as a fact and its adoption represents "wiser long-run policy,' certainly "through the educational process," groundwork for its eventual elimination should be laid.

In the pamphlet titled "Civilian Personnel Officer's Employee Relations Manual," the army service forces has attempted to convey to its representatives in industrial installations operating under army jurisdiction sound principles of personnel management.

In June, 1944, there were some 118,527 Negroes, or 13.5 percent of the total force, employed by the war department, the largest employer in the country.

The ASF publication discusses courteous and equitable treatment of employes, calls attention to the presidential order establishing the government's non - discriminatory policy, recommends procedures for maintaining high production thru utilization of all available workers, and considers at length the question for segregation.

"Where some measures of segregation must be adopted because the community pattern demands it," the manual says, "it should never be attended by any form of discrimination in opportunity, working conditions, facilities, pay or the like. Neither should exactions, placed on individuals in the minority group, be any greater or less than those placed on other employes, nor should promotional opportunities be withheld from them."

The unusual tact of endorsing the work of a private organization is taken in the booklet where it points out the readiness of representatives of the National Urban league to assist in coping with problems.

SOUTHERN
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
ORDER NUMBER
This Clipping from Miami Herald
November 27, 1945

Fight For Segregation

I/10

Miami Springs council Monday night came to support of property owners protesting recent decision of Circuit Judge Stanley Milledge outlawing segregation of negro residences.

At the request of the Northwest Property Owners League, the council agreed to address a letter supporting the league and requesting a further hearing on the matter by a higher court.

Formal passage of the new town zoning ordinance, and appointment of an arbitration board, were postponed due to the absence of Town Clerk J. A. Michael. He is in Jackson hospital, recovering from a heart attack suffered last Wednesday.

NEW TEEN-AGE HOME

Construction of a room in the town garage for teen-agers was approved. The move was to permit residence occupation of the teen-agers present quarters over city hall by Police Chief George Krouskroup.

A bill for $5,000 from W. Carroll Wilson, for a recent reassessment survey, was approved.

At suggestion of Councilman Olaf Hanson, a special meeting was scheduled Thursday night, to discuss possible sources of funds to provide for three full-time men on the police desk to answer fire calls.

War Department Publication Hits Race Segregation

By The Associated Negro Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A war department publication says that "the ultimate in teamwork cannot accrue where lines (of segregation) are drawn" and proceeds to say that although segregation in some communities must be recognized as a fact and its adoption represents "wiser long-run policy," certainly "through the educational process," groundwork for its eventual elimination should be laid.

In the pamphlet titled "Civilian Personnel Officer's Employee Relations Manual," the army service forces has attempted to convey to its representatives in industrial installations operating under army jurisdiction sound principles of personnel management.

In June, 1944, there were some 118,527 Negroes, or 13.5 per cent of the total force, employed by the war department—the largest employer in the country.

The ASF publication discusses courteous and equitable treatment of employees, calls attention to the presidential order establishing the government's non-discriminatory policy, recommends procedures for maintaining high production through utilization of all available workers, and considers at [illegible] the question of segregation.

"Where some measure of segregation must be adopted because the community pattern demands it," the manual says, "it should never be attended by any form of discrimination in opportunity, working conditions, facilities, pay, or the like. Neither should exactions, placed on individuals in the minority group, be any greater or less than those placed on other employees, nor should promotional opportunities be withheld from them."

The unusual tack of indorsing the work of a private organization is taken in the booklet where it points out the readiness of representatives of the National Urban league to assist in coping with problems.

Atlanta Daily Rights Sept. 28/45

The Birmingham Weekly Review Sept. 29, 1945

Negro Congress Reopens Washington Bureau; To Fight D. C. Jim Crow

NEW YORK — Sept. 21 — Demanding an immediate end to the practice of arresting Negroes who protest jim crow conditions in the nation's capitol, and pledging a fight to the finish against segregation in Washington, Dr. Max Yergan, President of the National Negro Congress announced today the immediate reopening of NNC Legislative Bureau, under the directorship of Dorothy K. Funn, the Congress' Labor-Legislative Secretary.

Miss Funn has stated her conviction that the first objective of the fighters for Negro rights in America must be to abolish discrimination and jim crow in all do the job himself."
phases of Washington life. "If the nation's capitol is permitted to continue operation on a jim crow basis," Miss Funn said, "it excuses segregation anywhere else. the city which sets policy for the country and houses its government must be washed clean of discriminatory mud.

The Legislative Bureau will renew the campaign to remove Senator Bilbo as "Mayor" of the District of Columbia, and will, in the words of Miss Funn, "fight for all legislation in the interests of labor and the Negro people."

SOUTHERN PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
ATLANTA, GEORGIA
ORDER NUMBER
Clipping from Montgomery Ala. Standard
December 6, 1945

imparted something
Those fortunate individu
the richer for it.

210

Railroads Ordered To Segregate Negro Passengers

MONTGOMERY—The State Public Service Commission has ordered railroads operating in Alabama to segregate white and Negro passengers by partitions and curtains if they can not provide separate cars.

A recent investigation showed, the commission said, that some railroads have no official policy regarding segregation, others issue verbal instructions to train crew members, and others have printed rules designed to "generally conform" with various state laws

The investigation resulted from complaints of non-segregation in Alabama, the commission added.

The order, promulgating strict rules and regulations as to handling of the different races, cited two sections of the Alabama code which require:

1. Separate accommodations for white and Negro races either in different cars or by partitions.

2. Conductors to assign each passenger to the car or division of the car designated for respective races.

The investigation resulted from complaints of non-segregation in Alabama, the commission added.

The order, promulgating strict rules and regulations as to handling of the different races, cited two sections of the Alabama code which require:

1. Separate accommodations for white and Negro races either in different cars or by partitions.

2. Conductors to assign each passenger to the car or division of the car designated for respective races.

The latter, however, is not applicable to Negroes or whites "entering this state upon railroads under contracts for their transportation made in another state where like laws to this do not prevail."

In that event, the commission's order said, "such persons shall not be required to be moved, but partitions must be in place and curtains drawn at all times."

This is how the order applies:

Day Coaches—Separate cars for white and Negro races or at least one car on each train with separate compartments divided by "permanent" petitions. Separate toilet and washroom facilities must be provided for each race.

Dining and Club Cars—Curtains which permit the dining room to be divided into separate compartments must be drawn before each meal and tables for Negro passengers must be marked "reserved." "On request, colored passengers may have meals served in the space they occupy in Pullmans or coaches without additional charge."

Other types, including Pullman, observation and club cars—"wherever possible" at least one car on each train shall provide rooms, roomettes, bedrooms, compartments or drawing rooms, to be assigned to Negroes upon request if available.

Those asking berths or seat space shall be assigned to such enclosed accommodations, if available at regular rates.

If rooms or other closed accommodations are not available, Negroes can be given seat space, "in which case the partitions must be in place and curtains drawn at all times."

The commission directed that a copy of the order be posted "in a conspicuous place" in each car on every train.

The order does not apply, the commission said, to members of the armed forces in uniform and traveling on official business.

A hearing will be held in Montgomery Dec. 17 for railroads desiring it, the APSC added.

Fired Worker Ruling Expected Today

The State Merit Council is scheduled to announce a decision today on an appeal of C. R. Key, Atlanta Negro, recently dismissed by the Fulton county public welfare department on charges of neglect of duty.

He appealed to the state council, and a hearing was held Wednesday. Testimony was restricted to the question of efficiency, and part of the testimony the defendant sought to bring up was not allowed.

For White Press

Urges News Of Negro Soldiers

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(ANP)—The white press of this State was recently urged by a resolution adopted by the South Carolina Interracial Committee to tell the true story of the Negro soldier's valor on the battlefront as a constructive contribution to better race relations in South Carolina.

The resolution adopted by the committee read:

"Resolved that it is the concensus of this meeting that the publication by the white press of South Carolina of new stories, articles and pictures, fairly presenting the achievements of Negro members of the armed forces of the United States, would be a distinct contribution to the cause of improvement of race relations in this State, and the white press is, therefore, urged to give appropriate publicity to such accomplishments.

Bar Birmingham Woman From Mail Clerk Job

CHICAGO, —(ANP) — Welfare officials of the National Alliance of Postal employes disclosed this week that Mrs. LaVerne J. Holland of Birmingham, who was certified by the United States Civil Service Commission for appointment to a position in the Birmingham terminal of the railway mail service, has been denied the job because there is no rest room for Negro women on the premises.

The matter is now being investigated by the post office department at Washington, and it was learned that Sidney M. Jackson, assistant chief clerk at large of the railway mail service, has been sent to the Alabama city to look into the situation.

Alliance executives also revealed that the organization is making special effort to have Negroes appointed to clerkships in the Selma, Ala., post office where it is reported are being "by-passed" in favor of white eligibles despite high ratings of Negroes.

Says Library Jim Crow Is Justifiable

By CHARLES B. FREEMAN

RICHMOND, Va. — Attorney John Henry Lewin, defending the Enoch Pratt Free Public Library in Baltimore, Md., said in his argument before the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, "The Negro cannot be seen in the dark but a white man can." He gave this illustration, attempting to prove that the action of the Enoch Pratt Library against Miss Louise Kerr was justifiable.

Miss Kerr is a Negro who has been trained to fill a vacancy in a public library of Baltimore. However there is only one branch where there is a preponderance of Negro patrons. Her father, who is a druggist and pays a considerable large property tax has filed a suit for the expenditure of tax payers money by a private institution.

FURTHER ARGUMENT

Attorney Lewin argued that Miss Kerr could not be employed for the white patrons would refuse to receive books from the hands of a Negro. Yet, she was trained to fill a vacancy, but when a vacancy appears, she is refused because of her color. He further maintained that this action was not discriminatory and that it is reasonable under the Fourteenth Amendment.

"It was not discrimination," he said "because it was done for a business reason, it was done in good faith, the jobs in the Negro branch were filled and there were enough trainees to keep them filled for some years to come and that this was a good policy."

When Attorney Lewin said that some men are just for some situations and are not just for others, he gave the illustration of the Negro and white traffic cop at night. He said that a Negro cop cannot be seen whereas a white can. Judge Dobie commented, "That's a question of visability. Apparently Attorney Lewin has only seen deep technicolor Negroes.

TAKES ANOTHER CAUSE

Attorney Lewin apparently expected defeat of his first contention for his second was if this act were discriminatory, the library is a private institution not performing a governmental function. The library, he continued, merely made a voluntary agreement with the state for money for the procurement of its needs.

Attorney Charles H. Houston retaliated by showing that the city pays all of the library disbursements through voluntary argeement. The city cannot hold property and discriminate. "What is the status of the whites?" he asked. "Constitutional rights," he added, "are individual rights and should be regarded as such."

White Students Stage Hate Strike Against Negroes

THREE GARY HIGH SCHOOLS INVOLVED

Students Return After Five Days From Class

Gary, Ind. (ANP) — For the second time in a score of years, a hate strike is being staged by white students in this steel mill city on the edge of Chicago to stop mixed attendance in local high schools. Approximately 1,000 white students from Froebel high, which was a mixed student body, and from Tolletson and Horace Mann Highs, the latter all-white, are taking part in the anti-Negro demonstration which has strong backing from parents, many of whom participated in the similar strike of nearly 20 years ago. It is also believed that some organization similar to the Ku Klux Klan may be involved.

STUDENTS VOTE TO RETURN

Garey, Ind., Sept. 24— The white high school students who have been on strike for the past five days, protesting the presence of Negro students in their schools, voted in a mass meeting today to return to class rooms.

The situation has become so tense and serious that a meeting was scheduled for Tuesday night between a committee representing striking students and parents and the board of education. The demand has been made on the board that either the 850 Negroes be removed from Froebel or the 1,600 whites there be transferred to other schools.

Charles D. Lutz, school superintendent, and Richard Nuzum, Frobel principal, have refused to accede to these demands. Lutz would not meet with a committee from the strikers and issued a statement saying, "Gary schools will be open to all students wishing to attend them."

This committee was appointed at a mass meeting of pupils and parents at nearby Tyler park a week ago Tuesday, the day after

Continued on Page 8

Supreme Court Upholds Strange Texas Decision

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 5 —(Special) Although the jury commissioners of Dallas County, Tex., admitted that they purposely admitted only one Negro to the jury to satisfy the Constitution, the Supreme Court, Monday passed on this as all right.. By a 6-3 decision the court upheld a death sentence penalty for L. C. Atkins who had appealed on the ground that the Negroes on the jury had been purposely limited to one.

The decision in effect indicated that while no Negro on a jury won't satisfy the 14th Amendment, one will be all right.

Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone and Justices Hugo L. Black and Frank Murphy dessented. Justice Murphy pointed out that "Racial limitation no less than racial exclusion in the formation of juries is an evil condemned by the equal protection clause."

Prior to Hill vs Texas, no Negroes ever served on a grand jury in Dallas. The commissioner admitted they were careful to appoint one to a 16-member grand jury here in an attempt to meet the Constitution.

5 Wacs Shun Unpleasant Task; Put in Guard House

Afro American

CAMP BRECKENRIDGE, Ky. (ANP)—When five colored Wacs refused to repair bed springs in a damp and cold barracks here last week, white MP's led them away from the detachment center into the guardhouse at the camp hospital, charging them with insubordination.

Although the barracks had been declared unfit to work in since there was no heat, orders were given to place the women in the guard house where they must remain pending further notice.

The Wacs are Pfcs. Eleanor Brown and Edith Youth and Pvts. Ruth Sanders, DaVetta Butler and Geneva Pipkin.

A lieutenant immediately reported them to the commander when they refused to obey orders, and while two of these Wacs apparently had been guilty of other offenses this was the first for the other three, who feel that the order is being unfairly handed down to them as an example to other Wacs.

Mrs. Bethune Hails WAC Sentence Quash

NEW YORK — (S N S) — The Army's quashing of the sentences of four Negro Wacs, convicted at Fort Devens, Mass., of refusing to obey a direct order to return to work, is regarded by progressives and Negro leaders as further indication that the Army and the Navy are beginning to realize that all is not well with their policy on Negro service men and women. Earlier this week Major General Sherman Miles, chief of the First Service Command, voided the girls' court-martial sentence which would have interned them for a year and expelled them from the Army with dishonorable dicharges.

DR. BETHUNE PROTESTS

A leader in the protest was Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, president of the National Council of Negro Women, and also the only Negro member of the National Advisory Committee of the Wacs.

On learning of the voiding decision, Dr. Bethune told newspapermen that "the outcome of the Fort Devens case has greatly stimulated the morale of our people all over the country, particularly of the the women in the armed forces."

CORRECTIVE STEP

"We feel," she went on, "that the action shows a decided trend toward more definite attempts to correct unbalances which have been going on in the service in regard to Negro men and women."

The woman leader said, however, that her organization still was concerned as to why Col. Walter H. Crandall , commandant of Lovell Hospital, at which the WACs worked, talked as he did to the Negro WACs. She said the War Department has been asked to inquire into the attitude and fitness of Crandall.

CRANDALL 'QUOTED"

At the trial it was brought out that Crandall had told the WACs that he wanted no "black" WACs in his hospital's motor pool or assisting as medical technicians. Crandall has been on leave since shortly after the trouble at Lovell. Col. Brown at Boston said, as far as he knew, Crandall's status at Fort Devens was unchanged.

Congressman Celler, (D-NY), active in the campaign to obtain justice for the WACs said he thought the reversal of the sentences indicated that the Army and the Navy were "becoming alive to the fact that the public always will react against injustice." The Fort Devens episode stirred widespread indignation. It was felt that the general attitude of the Army toward Negroes was basically at fault.

● A major talk dealing with Biblical bases which make racial segregation untenable

Segregation and Bible Teachings

By ALBERT C. WINN

God's chosen people must be a separate people. They cannot bless the world if they become indistinguishable from the world.

OUR Confession of Faith states in chapter I, section 10: "The Supreme Judge, by which all controversies of religion are to be determined, and all decrees of councils, opinions of ancient writers, doctrines of men, and private spirits are to be examined, and in whose sentence we are to rest, can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture."

The matter of desegregation is tremendously complex; yet the basic question before this court is not how may it practically be done, nor yet, is it acceptable to the majority of our people, but, what does the Word of God teach?

The real secret of Billy Graham's power, many of us think, lies in his oft-repeated phrase, "The Bible says." Surely this court is preeminently concerned with the question: What does the Bible say? Now, brethren, we will differ, even as the Westminster Divines differed, as to what the Bible does say. But I am under a tremendous constraint to say to you as simply and as earnestly as I can what the Scriptures say to me on this subject.

Called and Separated

One of the most characteristic doctrines of the Bible, as all Presbyterians assuredly recognize, is the doctrine of election, and particularly that phase of it which holds that God has a chosen people, a people who, in a special sense, are his peculiar people. They are chosen, not because they are deserving above other men, but out of God's sheer grace. They are not chosen to be God's pets, but to be his servants, through whom all men are to be blessed.

In the great transaction at Sinai, God chose Israel as his people. And when Israel did not fulfill her mission as God's servant, he sent her into captivity but chose from among her a remnant. And out of that remnant the Jewish commonwealth arose. To that commonwealth, hardened and deadened as it was, God in the fulness of time sent his son, the Messiah, to gather out a new remnant, the disciples, and a new Israel, the Christian Church.

Now all the way through this process: Israel-remnant-Messiah-disciples-church, there was a kind of segregation, ordained of God as his will.

MR. WINN was chairman of the standing committee on Christian Relations at the 1955 Presbyterian, U.S., Assembly. He was interrupted on the basis of a technicality and was unable to complete this talk in support of the action later taken by the Assembly condemning racial segregation.

Now, if we believe in racial segregation, we may seize upon many of these passages to buttress our views. But we need to examine what kind of segregation is here intended. Let us start in the Old Testament, where the segregation of God's people is demanded in terms that are blunt and unmistakable. Here are the dietary laws concerning meats not to be eaten, the laws of ceremonial purity, the law of circumcision—all designed to set Israel apart, to prevent any easy social intercourse with the surrounding peoples. Here is even the solemn herem, the ban, the order to destroy the Canaanites, rather than to permit intermarriage with them. I read from Deuteronomy 7:

> "When the Lord thy God shall deliver (all these nations) before thee; thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them; neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son."

That is plain enough. But why? That thou mayest preserve the racial strain in purity? Because a mongrelized people are an abomination unto me? No! "For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods."

No Mixed Religion

There's the reason. This was a religious segregation. Its purpose was to avoid the assimilation of pagan and execrable idolatries into the pure faith given on the mount. God's pure religion must not be mixed. That is why Israel had to be separate from the heathen, why the remnant had to be separated from apostate Israel, why the disciples had to be separate from the multitude, why the church must be separate from the world.

Not one of these chosen groups was a pure racial group. Certainly Israel was not. The Bible explicitly records in the 12th chapter of Exodus that a mixed multitude accompanied the descendants of Jacob as they left Egypt. The powerful tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh were descended from Joseph and his Egyptian wife. Moses had a wife who may have been a Negro, and certainly was not an Israelite; and when Miriam rebuked him about it, the Lord did not reward this feminine champion of racial purity; he struck her with leprosy.

No, the thing which made Israel a nation was not a pure racial strain, but the fact that at Sinai God chose Israel and entered into a covenant with her.

It is marriage and mingling outside the covenant which is condemned by the Bible, not marriage and mingling across racial lines. There was a small but steady influx of peoples of other races into the covenant fellowship all through the Old Testament. Slaves were bought, circumcised, and admitted to Israel. Wives were married who embraced the God of Israel and became Israelites. Our Lord's human ancestry was mixed racially. In his line were Tamar and Rahab, Canaanites; and Ruth, a Moabite. The prophets looked forward to a great influx of other races into the covenant nation Israel. In Isaiah 19:24-25 we read:

> "In that day shall Israel be a third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land: Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance."

Over in the 56th chapter, the prophet calls the temple the house of prayer for all people. And in the 66th chapter he goes so far as to say that the Lord will make of these foreign peoples priests and Levites.

Now where in all of this is there one word about a superior race, or a pure race, or a mongrel race?

The years between the Testaments were hard years for the Jews. Under foreign dominion, facing rulers who tried to Hellenize them and rob them of all their distinctive customs, they emphasized more and more the external differences between themselves and the Gentiles: flesh-descent from Abraham, observance of the Sabbath, circumcision—these became of prime importance. Gentiles were called dogs.

A wall of partition was erected in the temple itself, beyond which no Gentile, however devoted to the faith of Israel, could go.

Jesus came. He confined his ministry to the chosen people, for that was why he was sent. But he praised the faith of Gentiles, saying he had not found the like in Israel. He lived for days among the despised Samaritans, a mixed breed of folk. He said many would come from the east and the west to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom. He declared if he were lifted up he would draw all men to himself. And after his resurrection, when all authority was his, he commissioned his disciples to preach the gospel to all men everywhere.

(OVER)

It was as they carried out that commission that the disciples confronted the precise problem we confront today. We all believe that the Negro people are precious in God's sight, that Christ died for them, that they may be saved through faith, even as we. And the early church soon saw, through the vision of Peter and the work of Philip, that God is no respecter of persons: the Ethiopian eunuch, the Samaritans, the Gentiles, could all be saved by faith in Christ. That was agreed and settled by the Council at Jerusalem. But, did that mean they were a part of the Christian fellowship without restraint and discrimination? Did that mean that Jewish Christians and Gentile Christians should eat together? Should they commune together? Should they be members of the same local church?

Paul's Clear Word

This is the major issue in the letter to the Galatians. This was the dispute between Peter and Paul at Antioch. This was the problem to which Paul devoted large portions of most of his letters, over which he spent untold labors and agonies, for which he was finally arrested and sent to Rome.

The conclusions Paul reached, under the Holy Spirit, are plain to any who will read them. If you will not admit into full fellowship a man for whom Christ died, if you require in addition that he be circumsized, then you make the cross of Christ of none effect. This is why he was so passionate about this matter. Insistence on the cross plus something else, plus anything else, is an insult to the very death and passion of our Lord.

I might remark parenthetically that Paul's enemies were more reasonable than we. They would eat with the Gentile, if he was circumcized, and he could go get himself circumsized. We will hold full fellowship with a Negro Christian if he changes the color of his skin. There is no way he can go and do that.

This struggle led Paul to those great assertions, of which we can only offer a sample here. Galatians 3:28: "There is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

Romans 10:12: "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him."

Colossians 3:11: "There is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all."

And the great second chapter of Ephesians, where Paul declares: "He is our peace"—not here, our peace with God, though he is that, but in this context, our peace across customary lines of segregation. "He is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us."

When Christ died, the curtain of the temple was rent in twain, that curtain which separated men from God. But also the middle wall of partition was torn down, that wall that separates man from man, group from group, within the church of the living God. This matter, brethren, is a part of the sacrificial death of the Lord.

How can we preach part of what the cross did and adopt an action denying the rest of what it did?

Personal Experience

Fathers and brethren, believe me, it is not that I for some reason was opposed to segregation and have sought texts to support me in that position. I was raised in a segregated society. It was natural to me in South Carolina. As an infant, I imbibed it from my environment and many of you did. In the same unconscious way that I learned to be courteous to ladies, I was taught that the Negro has his place.

It was the Word of God which convicted me. It was the Word of God which persuaded me that our mores are wrong here, that our customs are contrary to God's will.

If you rescind this action, plead the fears that are in our hearts, white and Negro alike. Plead the unreadiness of many of our people, for they are not ready. But do not plead the Bible. I beseech you, do not dishonor the Word of God.

Reprinted from
The Presbyterian Outlook

Additional copies of this article may be secured at the rate of 5¢; 25 for 50¢; $1.50 per 100.

Subscription, $5.00 per year.

The Presbyterian Outlook

1 North 6th Street, Richmond 19, Va.

15,000,000 Americans

Communists Got Orders In 1928 To Exploit Negroes; Some Drift Into Red Ranks, But Few Remain

Blade's Reporter Finds Negro Resentment Strong Against Efforts To Weaken America

For three months, William Brower, a general assignment reporter for The Blade, toured the United States making an objective study of the so-called "Negro problem." In his introductory article yesterday Mr. Brower told of visiting 27 states and twice as many cities and returned reassured and hopeful.

12-6-51

Second Of A Series Of Articles By

WILLIAM BROWER

Blade Staff Writer

IN 1928 orders went out from Moscow for the American Communists to capture the allegiance of Negroes. Ever since that time the Reds have been carrying on a determined campaign to gain Negro converts through the exploitation of misery and poverty.

What I heard and saw on my trip through the nation convinces me that the Communists have failed miserably.

I found, beyond any question, that Moscow was right in its conclusion that the Negro masses have poorer jobs, the worst housing, are often short-changed in educational and recreational facilities and segregated and discriminated against in public places.

Thus, often downtrodden and sometimes skeptical about their share of the good things of our democracy, they are considered by Moscow-sponsored subversives as easy prey for Communist cajolery.

William Brower

But I saw no evidence that Negroes leaned any more toward communism than any other group. Negro leaders told me that they regarded Communists as monumental fakes. They insist that Communists actually want to hinder, rather than help, racial progress. They want no part of the regimentation and the type of thought control imposed by the Politburo.

THE ECONOMIC and social position of the Negro in this country was a controversial issue long before the Communists were spawned in America. The Reds, perhaps, have given new urgency to the problem. Their ceaseless drumfire for Negro support may force other Americans to do some of the things now that they would like to postpone 20 years.

It would be useless to deny that the persistence of racial discrimination and other manifestations of prejudice in this country have given the Communists abroad great aid in the cold war between this country and Soviet Russia.

Once the Negro problem was viewed as strictly regional—discrimination and racial prejudice were confined largely to southern or border states. But migration north and west, especially in the last three decades, has made it national in scope—discrimination and prejudice against Negroes have spread to most of the 48 states.

Now the problem is a part of international politics—a formidable weapon in the Communist propaganda arsenal. Nearly two-thirds of the world's population is colored. Communist harping on the theme of injustices toward Negroes in this country, if nothing else, is avidly devoured not only behind the iron curtain, but by millions of Asiatics and Africans.

NEGROES, of course, have drifted in and out of the Communist Party for years. A few of them have risen to high positions. Two of them—Benjamin Davis, the former New York councilman, and Henry Winston, the erstwhile national organizational secretary of the party—were convicted along with nine other prominent Reds on the charge of sedition to southern or border states. But migration north and west, especially in the last three decades, has made it national in scope—discrimination and prejudice against Negroes have spread to most of the 48 states.

Now the problem is a part of international politics—a formidable weapon in the Communist propaganda arsenal. Nearly two-thirds of the world's population is colored. Communist harping on the theme of injustices toward Negroes in this country, if nothing else, is avidly devoured not only behind the iron curtain, but by millions of Asiatics and Africans.

NEGROES, of course, have drifted in and out of the Communist Party for years. A few of them have risen to high positions. Two of them—Benjamin Davis, the former New York councilman, and Henry Winston, the erstwhile national organizational secretary of the party—were convicted along with nine other prominent Reds on the charge of sedition.

In only a few cities like New York, San Francisco, Detroit, Philadelphia and Cleveland did I discover any semblance of a Negro Communist cell. Reds were especially active in labor front groups in Detroit and in Harry Bridges' powerful longshoremen's union in San Francisco.

Communists' greatest effectiveness in their appeal to Negroes should be in the South. It is there that more Negroes are browbeaten and kept at the lowest rung of the nation's economic ladder. Paradoxically, it is in the South where the Reds have had the least success with Negroes.

I spent five weeks in southern cities and rural areas. On only two of three occasions was communism, in connection with Negroes, voluntarily broached to me. It is no exaggeration to say that many Negroes who are helpless victims of cruel plantation peonage have never heard of Karl Marx. Possibly, they have never heard of Josef Stalin, either. I doubt, too, whether they want to exchange a semi-police state for an absolute one.

In Winston-Salem, N.C., a personnel official of a large tobacco products manufacturing concern told me of the bitter lesson his firm had learned about communism and the Negro. Principally through the votes of Negro workers, the Communist-ruled Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers won bargaining rights for the company's employees.

Had the firm the foresight, the personnel official admitted, to give Negroes better jobs and promotions on merit, they would have been less susceptible to the overtures of the Communists to join the union. As events showed, Negroes lost their enthusiasm for the union when its leadership began to show its true color—Red. Eventually, another election was held. This time the union lost.

The personnel official assured me Communists will not get another chance, Negroes will have greater employment opportunities and security.

Reverse Red Action

I was told of other instances in which Communist propaganda for civil rights had been turned into an advantage for the Negro. A former Negro federal government official in New York told me:

"Even in World War II the only way I could get some of the bigots in Washington to do something about Negroes in housing or in jobs was to hold the threat of communism over their heads."

In Oklahoma City, a Negro leader told me how he frequently used Communists to investigate acts of Negro persecution in backward communities. The task was too risky for Negroes. Very few whites were willing or interested. On several occasions, when the Reds ran into trouble, it was necessary for the Negro leader to call on a lawyer to get them out of jail.

I found both uneasiness and resentment among Negroes about the spread of McCarthyism in this country. Negroes were alarmed at the tendency to smear their own and allied groups with the Red label simply because they were working for legitimate racial progress and understanding. Too often, they said, they have encountered public officials who scream Red every time a Negro speaks up for his rights.

American Insistence

Negroes, I found on my tour, intend to keep on insisting on better jobs, more decent housing, better schools, the right to eat in public places, etc. But they will do this insisting, not as Communists or Communist sympathizers, but as solid American citizens.

To deny that Communists have infiltrated some Negro organizations would be hypocritical. As a newspaperman, I have seen something of the party's machinations. Several years ago in Philadelphia I witnessed a left-wing election coup seize control of the Philadelphia Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The resultant internal strife almost wrecked the organization. On a recent visit to Philadelphia, I learned that the Communist clique had been ousted, but that the branch was still suffering wounds of the struggle.

Turn to Page 4, Col. 5

Negro Survey

Continued from First Page

The NAACP will not touch any case involving Negro civil rights or racial persecution as long as the Reds have anything to do with it.

I have heard it asked many times: "What do Negroes think of Paul Robeson?"

Robeson And Robinson

Negroes don't relish the fact, I have been told by many, that Mr. Robeson demonstrates such slavish obedience to the Kremlin. He can talk about police brutality in Harlem, streetcar Jim Crow in Atlanta, lynching in Mississippi, job discrimination in Detroit or racial violence in Chicago and few Negroes will dissent. They know these things happen.

But when Mr. Robeson talks about Negroes not willing to fight the Communists in event of a war between this country and Russia, he has few adherents. If there is one thing certain, it is the fact that most Negroes are intensely loyal to their homeland.

I think Jackie Robinson, the baseball star, had the most intelligent answer to this question of Negroes' attitude toward Mr. Robeson. Called to testify before the House Committee on Un-American activities, Mr. Robinson said:

"The white public should start toward real understanding by appreciating that every single Negro who is worth his salt is going to resent any kind of slurs and discrimination because of his race, and he's going to use every bit of intelligence, such as he has, to stop it. This has got nothing to do with what the Communists may or may not be trying to do."

(Copyright, 1951, by Toledo Blade Co.)

Tomorrow: In the capital of the United States.

Talmadge Hits 'Undermining' Foundations

State Times (11/10/53)

Carnegie, Ford Groups Labeled Anti-American

By WILLIAM E. KEITH
State Times Staff Writer

American businessmen are "subsidizing their own doom" by permitting "the unopposed emergence of tax exempt foundations financed by the profits of business and industry and dominated by enemies of the American form of government and the free enterprise system," former Georgia Gov. Herman Talmadge said in Jackson today.

He gave his statement at a press conference in Robert E. Lee hotel this morning prior to a talk to a National Affairs Forum at Central high school this afternoon, sponsored by the Mississippi Economic council.

Asked to identify some of the foundations to which he referred, the former governor mentioned the Carnegie foundation and the Ford foundation.

He said the Carnegie foundation supported the project which produced the book, "The American Dilemma," by Gunnar Myrdal, a Swedish sociologist, which influenced the U.S. Supreme Court in its anti-segregation decision of 1954, according to many southern spokesmen.

He added that the Ford foundation is supporting the Southern Regional council, which he charged is "working to destroy segregation" and that the Ford Foundation also has made a $240,000 grant to the Fund of the Republic, "which is going around decorating known Communists."

Asked about Democratic presidential prospects, the Atlanta attorney said that in his opinion the south is more Democratic now than it has been in many recent years and added:

"Georgia would vote for any reasonable Democrat on any reasonable platform by an overwhelming majority."

He said he supported Georgia Sen. Richard Russell for the presidential nomination in 1948 and 1952 and would do it again next year if he is a candidate.

(Sen. Russell has indicated he will not enter the presidential arena at the next nominating convention.)

Former Gov. Talmadge, who voted for Adlai Stevenson in the last election, expressed no preference at this time for any other possible party nominee.

HERMAN TALMADGE

Talmadge . . .

Talmadge, widely considered a sure candidate for the U.S. senate next year, has not yet officially announced his candidacy and declined to do so at the morning press conference. Sen. Walter George, the incumbent, has made no announcement either.

... pickup a-matter-talmadge, kill-

Talmadge was interviewed at the Robert E. Lee hotel between his arrival at the Jackson airport and his address this afternoon to the fifth statewide national affairs forum at the auditorium of Central high school.

Gerard H. Brandon, Natchez, presided at the forum as president of the Mississppi Economic Council, the sponsoring organization.

Fred B. Smith, Ripley attorney and vice-president of the MEC, moderated a question-and-answer session following Talmadge's talk, with members of the Mississippi Congressional delegation serving as members of a panel answering the questions.

A luncheon honoring the Congressmen, held at noon at the Robert E. Lee hotel, was addressed by Judge Ben Cameron, of Meridian. Gov. Hugh White, Gov-elect J. P. Coleman and a large number of state officials and MEC members attended.

Oscar O. Wolfe Jr., of Duncan, was chairman of the MEC committee in charge of the program.

Atl Const

Millions Granted State From Ford Foundation

Georgia's privately supported colleges, universities and hospitals will receive almost $5,000,000 from the nationally spread half-billion-dollar grant announced yesterday by the Ford Foundation. The exact figure is $4,679,900.

The half billion dollars to the nation's private universities, colleges and hospitals is a sum roughly equal to $3 for every man, woman and child in the United States.

The privately supported colleges in the state which receive substantial grants, in alphabetical order, are: Agnes Scott College, Bessie Tift College, Brenau College, Clark, Emory University, LaGrange College, Mercer University, Morehouse College, Morris Brown College, Oglethorpe University, Paine College, Shorter College, Spellman College and Wesleyan College. Smallest grant is $64,200. Most are well over $100,000. The largest is to Emory, $1,220,100. Second largest is to Agnes Scott, $285,300.

The larger sums represent an extra grant to those colleges which had already, on their own efforts, raised teacher salaries. These were Agnes Scott, Emory, Morehouse, Oglethorpe and Spellman.

The 35 Georgia hospitals listed as eligible were selected on the basis of their reports to the American Medical Association. The committee will check the present standings of eligibility before giving final grants of almost $2,000,000.

The survey which led to this nationwide grant by the Ford Foundation has been under study for more than a year.

* * *

The foundation previously had given away $330,000,000 in five years, as follows: $130,000,000 to education, $89,000,000 for aid abroad, $52,000,000 for public affairs in the United States, $14,000,000 for economic studies, $15,000,000 for college psychological and social science studies, $15,000,000 for mental health research and another $15,000,000 in miscellaneous programs.

The foundation, which has been subjected to ignorant and unfounded attacks by racist fanatics and the McCarthy fringe in politics, has been and is one of the most valuable philanthropic foundations in our history, despite its relatively brief existence. Its main contributions have been and will be to education. Aid abroad, spent largely in underdeveloped countries for fellowships, development of resources and promotion of new technical and scientific ideas, has been next in interest. The foundation sought to give free enterprise type aid rather than government grants.

It has been and is an increasing asset to the American way of life. The present grant of half a billion dollars will be a major stimulus to U.S. private education, which cannot obtain state support, and to the hospitals of the nation.

The Ford Foundation will grow increasingly in the public stature as the nation learns more of its devotion to building its education, its economy and its institutions.

INSPIRING BENEFACTION

All accredited, privately owned four-year colleges in the country and many privately supported hospitals receive grants from the Ford Foundation in the greatest gift in the history of philanthropy. A half-billion dollars constitutes this stupendous spreading of encouragement to so many worthy institutions.

The University of Chattanooga will receive $159,200; Sewanee, $287,500; the Southern Missionary College at Collegedale, $68,300; Maryville College, $148,000; Fisk University, $365,000; Vanderbilt, $1,249,000. And so it goes all across the state as in all states. Better faculty salaries is one of the goals of this great gift, although much can be used for other needed purposes.

We are interested in seeing that Tusculum College of Greeneville, Tennessee, receives $47,600. It's a little college but there are those who love it, as Daniel Webster said of Dartmouth. Tusculum was founded in 1818 by the Rev. Samuel Doak, after Doak had resigned as president of Washington College near Jonesboro, which he founded in 1795 and which was the first college to be established in this country west of the Alleghenies.

Chatt. Times 12/13/55

Washington College is now of high school status but Tusculum has continued its fine role of a liberal arts institution for 137 years and now it is receiving a welcome gift from the Ford Foundation.

In this mechanical age it is a great thing that liberal arts institutions should receive this fine encouragement. If they should die out, the best of American culture would die with them. Naturally, The Chattanooga Times shares the rejoicing of the institutions near here which we have named.

Grants to hospitals were nationwide also and included privately supported institutions throughout The Chattanooga Times circulating area. Chattanooga Memorial Hospital is eligible for $81,000; Pine Breeze Sanatorium, $86,700; Alexian Brothers Hospital on Signal Mountain, $51,800.

Heads of the American Medical Association and the American Hospital Association rightly termed the benefactions to hospitals "inspiring." Their need is no less pressing than that of the colleges.

Concerning this great contribution to American learning and health, a familiar phrase needs to be quoted; this time with resounding emphasis—it could only have happened in America!

Ford Foundation

* * *

Ford Foundation Out-Santas Santa

St. Louis, Mo.—The Ford Foundation's granting of a half-billion dollars to schools and hospitals may cause that foundation to become as popular as a short named automobile.

It was a wonderful Christmas-time gesture and it was enough to make any budget committee believe in Santa Claus again.

It's good to know that such a big organization as the Ford Foundation exists and is endeavoring to promote good in our land.

The Ford Foundation has set a pretty fast pace in giving for old Santa, however, with Santa's long experience he may top the foundation's generosity.

FRED WEAVER.

* * *

9 Hospitals Sharing Ford Grant

NEW YORK—The nation's foremost private Negro hospitals shared in the half-billion-dollar grant donated by the Ford Foundation to the tune of more than $300,000.

The largest individual grant was allocated to Chicago's Provident Hospital. Training center for many of the country's physicians, the sum of $107,500 was given to the historic home of internes. Ida Mae Scott Hospital, also of Chicago, received $10,000.

Other donations were listed as follows: in Texas—Houston Negro Hospital, $10,000; St. Elizabeth Hospital and G. L. Prince Hospital, both of Crockett, $37,500 and $10,800, respectively.

Flint-Goodridge, of New Orleans, received $35,000; in Philadelphia, Mercy-Douglas, $37,300, and Florence Crittenden Home, $10,000. The Brewster Hospital, a Jacksonville, Fla., landmark, received an undisclosed sum.

Ford Grants Welcomed

Seen as One of Greatest Educational Developments of Century

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The Ford Foundation's pioneering grants to our nation's voluntary institutions represent one of the greatest educational developments of the century. They are more than a shot in the arm to education, but an incentive and added inspiration to the men and women at the grass roots of education and health.

The grants represent a devastating blow to communism and a bold stroke for democracy and our way of life in a free society, for they support free enterprise on the American campus.

Institutions concerned with education and medical matters will continue to fulfill their responsibilities in direct proportion to the encouragement they receive from the country as a whole. The Ford grants are but an example—bold trail-blazing models—for other corporations, businesses and industries to follow. It would be an act of gratitude for the Ford leadership were more enlightened people in the business and industrial world to follow the Ford Foundation's pattern.

The traditional friends of our colleges and universities, however, should be stimulated by what the Ford Foundation has done and increase their help to these institutions. Every college and university graduate must bear in mind that while industrial and business grants are of immeasurable help, colleges and universities will continue to move forward, will fulfill their functions completely only when the graduates of these institutions continue to strengthen their link with Alma Mater and give both moral and financial support on a larger scale than heretofore.

NILS Y. WESSELL,
President, Tufts University.
Medford, Mass., Dec. 13, 1955.

DANGEROUS FOUNDATIONS

It is a fact beyond cavil or dispute that the Ford Foundation, which recently gave $50,000 to the NAACP with which to wage legal battles for integration in schools and colleges is now conducting "Workshops" in our schools and colleges to teach "Human Relations," which means it is paying for propaganda to teach the one world and one race taken from the Communist racial program.

The Ford Foundation financed the propaganda of Professor Milton Mayer. He had been associated with Robert Hutchins and with Ford money framed what they called a world constitution. The Syracuse, New York, Post-Standard, on February 17, 1947 reported that Mayer in a speech made the following statement:

"We must haul down the American flag. And if I wanted to be vulgar and shocking, I would go even further and say haul it down, stamp on it and spit on it."

Things got mighty hot for Mayer after that and he was sent on Ford Foundation money on a special project to Frankfurt University in Germany.

The Ford Foundation has on its payroll Earl Browder, one of the most notorious and dangerous Communists in the nation.

On October 28, 1955, Thurgood Marshall, the Negro head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, announced that the Ford Foundation had granted the NAACP, a fifty thousand-dollar gift. This money will be used to fight the white man and to force a mixing of the races in the public schools. It is the largest gift that the NAACP has received since the CIO gave them seventy-five thousand dollars last year. The Ford Foundation has joined hands with the CIO in an all-effort to destroy the white people.

To date, the Ford Foundation has not denied one charge brought against it.

Every bit of Ford Foundation propaganda proposes to do one of the following things:

1. To destroy the American patriotic spirit.
2. To destroy the American system of free enterprise and the right to own and possess private property
3. To bring about the mixing of the races and the creation in America of one grand mulatto race.

The Reese Congressional committee reports that its investigation showed that the Ford Foundation and other giant foundations contribute millions of dollars each year to get a monopoly or control over all social science research and control of all the funds spent by the federal government in this manner.

This grand conspiracy now controls an invisible government in Washington and with their millions they are able to control and direct the thinking of those who run the United States Government, even including most of the members of Congress.

These foundations are a menace to freedom and the time has come when they should be controlled.

HIS SPIRIT STILL LIVES

Clarion Ledger 1/1/56

Citizens of the all-Negro town of Mound Bayou, in Bolivar county, were almost unanimous in applauding the decision of Dr. T. R. M. Howard to sell off his property and leave that community.

First and foremost, Mound Bayou citizens are glad to see Howard leave because he was a dangerous agitator, hell-bent on stirring up strife between the races and that is the last thing the self-respecting and law-abiding citizens of Mound Bayou want to see in their community or anywhere else.

The town of Mound Bayou was founded by the late Isaiah T. Montgomery, Mississippi's most famous Negro. Montgomery was a body servant of the president of the Southern Confederacy, Jefferson Davis, during the era of reconstruction and was the wisest counsellor of his race.

It seems that the spirit of Isaiah T. Montgomery still lives at Mound Bayou.

The impression has gotten out, of late, that Mound Bayou, the all-Negro town in Bolivar County, is the seat of much of the race agitation that goes on in Mississippi. In case you don't know about Mound Bayou, it is a town where no white man lives. The Negroes there have voluntarily segregated themselves. They have their own government, including mayor and commissioners . . .

Because they are there, in their own town, apart from other people of other races, there are individuals and organizations that take it for granted that Mound Bayou is full of crack pots, pinks and extremists, on the race question, especially.

So it seems that some town leaders have gotten disturbed at the impression that has grown abroad that they furnish a ready audience for rabble rousers, and are making it known that hereafter they will cull the speakers who come to lecture them, and will act in the public interest, as they see it, to keep their community from being taken for "a ride."—Laurel LEADER-CALL.

Southern opinion

Affairs of State

Southern Opinion

By CHARLES M. HILLS

Pictures of Negroes seated in the stands among the whites, which appear in the papers today, prompt us to suggest that a new monicker be adopted for the so-called Sugar Bowl.

Howsabout "Dusk Bowl?"

When an Oregon Congress-woman came through Jackson recently, she added to our accident toll by wrecking her car just outside the city.

Not content with that, she has also set out to wreck Jackson and Mississippi in the eyes of the rest of the world.

We know that it is irkful to be a principal in a car wreck, but after all, no one from Jackson or Mississippi was driving the Congresswoman's car. She was.

So, why tell a pack of lies about it?

A member of the legislature, Gene Caldwell, of Hinds, thinks there ought to be something done about people, including newsmen, who come to Mississippi, then go back home and tell dirty and mean stories about this state.

He would muzzle the out-of-state press when they come into Mississippi.

That is a happy thought with a sorry ending.

Much as this writer sympathizes with Mr. Caldwell, and much as we deplore the rough publicity Mississippi gets from all sides because of its colored population, there is no effective way to shut up the Yankee press, or even some of our own not-so-kind Mississippi writers.

Laws to that effect could only silence or perhaps embarrass newsmen who write for papers in Mississippi. There is not one thing any legislator in this state can do about a man writing for a publication outside this state. Our laws won't work in New York, and who is to tell who is a New York newsman in Mississippi?

All such an act would accomplish is more ridicule for our state, even the introduction of it, whether it is adopted or not.

The only way we can counteract such propaganda as a Congresswoman has just spread about Mississippi is to have some of our prominent people visit her state or other Yankee states and write about their treatment of the Chinese, Mexicans and the Jews. We might even tell of the squalors of Harlem and South Chicago, and other places up North.

This writer has worked in and visited in many states, and, in every one we have ever entered, there have been slums the equal of which Mississippi has never seen.

Let us censure our enemes for awhile and see how the monkey feels on their backs.

(1956)

JANUARY 12, 1
THE CLARION-LEDGER
SECTION ONE

Mississippi Notebook

by TOM ETHRIDGE

POST ARTICLE ON RACIAL UNREST HELPS THE SOUTH

Hodding Carter, stormy petrel of Mississippi journalism, has been both praised and damned for his recent Saturday Evening Post Article, "Racial Crisis in the Deep South."

For one thing, the Greenville editor-author has caused at least one influential Northern newspaper to adopt a friendlier attitude toward the South's problems—but more about that in a moment.

RADICAL NEGRO newspapers, on the other hand, have been prompt to denounce Mr. Carter. The colored press of New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other big cities has fiercely resented his Post feature.

Typical of this resentment is the following editorial blast from the bombastic Cleveland (Ohio) Call-Post, a leading Negro newspaper. .

"HODDING CARTER, the shining knight in pure white robes, so-called liberal defender of white supremacy, has broken into print again. . .again he is sustaining his position as the voice and defender of the most backward states in the Union and the most backward people in them.

"In his rear guard fight against the U. S. Constitution, Hodding and his white followers are trying to make it appear that the courts, the NAACP and the Northern press are just trying to pick on Mississippi. . ."

ANOTHER VOLLEY is fired at our Greenville editor by the militant Houston, Texas (Negro) Informer. This sheet brands the Post article as "a statement in defense and justification of Mississippi's defiance of the Constitution, Supreme Court and of Mississippi's brutal murdering, heartless economic pressures and general deterioration. . .

"Mr. Carter forgets that the Supreme Court has said states cannot separate races because of color. When he says that Negroes and whites will remain segregated in Mississippi, is he saying that Mississippi is going to secede from the are just trying to pick on Mississippi. . ."

ANOTHER VOLLEY is fired at our Greenville editor by the militant Houston, Texas (Negro) Informer. This sheet brands the Post article as "a statement in defense and justification of Mississippi's defiance of the Constitution, Supreme Court and of Mississippi's brutal murdering, heartless economic pressures and general deterioration. . .

"Mr. Carter forgets that the Supreme Court has said states cannot separate races because of color. When he says that Negroes and whites will remain segregated in Mississippi, is he saying that Mississippi is going to secede from the Union?"

Other Negro editors have commented in similar vein.

CONVERSELY, a most favorable editorial on the Post feature has appeared in the widely-circulated Boston Herald, a staid Yankee daily not generally friendly toward the South. Entitled "The Other Mississippi," this editorial itemizes five recent acts of racial violence here.

Commenting on this violence, the Boston Herald remarks: "That could be Mississippi, the Mississippi that stirs a sense of moral outrage in the North. Yet there is another Mississippi too. The other Mississippi you have to take partly on faith, because the other Mississippi doesn't get the publicity."

THE BOSTON HERALD then quotes extensively from the Saturday Evening Post story, listing Mr. Carter's account of favorable racial relations in Mississippi. These include a white girl's rescuing a Negro from the river in which Emmett Till's (?) body was found and white contributions toward a fund to send the Greenville Negro High band to a colored convention in New York.

The Boston Herald further offers Mr. Carter's comments on expanded Negro school facilities, a new New assistant county agent, Negro doctors on the staff of our mental hospital and prosperity of a Negro sharecropper working with his own mechanical cotton picker and grossing $200 a day.

PRAISING THESE examples of good race relations in Mississippi, the Boston editorial goes on to say, "Except for the separate schools, do not these things give a different impression of Mississippi than we have had up here? But what are we doing to encourage THIS Mississippi? Do we encourage it by sitting in terrible judgment of Mississippi crimes? Or can we serve the good cause by a sensible appreciation of what is good in Mississippi?

"Carter leaves no doubt," the Boston editorial emphasizes. "Integration forced from the outside will not work in the Deep South. It isn't going to work at all until the white people of those states change their minds—which isn't likely for a long time. Our passionate denunciation will not hasten the day; rather it will delay it." (End quote.)

WHILE FEW Mississippians will care for the Boston Herald's patronizing attitude, it is obvious that Hodding Carter's Post article made a deep impression. Nor is this likely the only newspaper that has been favorably impressed.

The day after Mr. Carter's Post article reached our desk, "Mississippi Notebook" opined that it would be helpful to the South by promoting better outside understanding of our situation. Naturally we are happy to offer this evidence that our judgment has been vindicated.

THE CLARION-LEDGER,
JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING,
JANUARY 16, 1956

southern opinion

Mississippi Notebook

by TOM ETHRIDGE

EDITH NEEDS VOTES

It's always a good idea to look for bugs under the chips when a vote-hungry politician takes occasion to "view with alarm."

Judging from mail and comments, many Mississippians still do not realize that cheap politics has inspired the vicious attack on our state by Oregon's Congresswoman Edith Green.

EDITH GREEN is up for re-election this year. Her recent smear of our state, after a two-day Jackson visit, was merely a painfully obvious attempt to curry favor with malcontent minorities in her district.

Rep. Green is one of those radical Democrats who capitalize on class hatred for personal gain. She is a political comrade to the likes of Eleanor Roosevelt, Hubert Humphrey, Estes Kefauver and other professional bleeding hearts.

OUR POINT in bringing up this distasteful subject is that Edith is at it again. As the darling of a militant pressure group out there, she contributes to a little weekly sheet of radical leanings. Its current editorial page shrilly proclaims, "Congresswoman Green Will Be Re-Elected."

This publication carries a special column written by our demagogic critic. Her current article is titled, "Edith Green Tells of Racial Terror in South." Needless to say, this diatribe merely repeats absurd and outrageous statements which have gained her a fleeting place in national headlines.

Flattering indeed is the portion of Rep. Green's article denouncing The Clarion-Ledger and this newspaper's part in the fight to preserve racial integrity in Mississippi. It is a compliment that she angrily resents our news stories, to the present crisis.

Rep. Green also sneers "The Clarion-Ledger is factually correct in its lament that AFL-CIO will join NAACP in fighting for fullest Negro citizenship." However she goes on to say, "the fact is an occasion for rejoicing not lamentation."

HER ARTICLE is so filled with crude distortions and intemperate statements as to make it unwor-

southern opinion (1956)

This publication carries a special column written by our demagogic critic. Her current article is titled, "Edith Green Tells of Racial Terror in South." Needless to say, this diatribe merely repeats absurd and outrageous statements which have gained her a fleeting place in national headlines.

Flattering indeed is the portion of Rep. Green's article denouncing The Clarion-Ledger and this newspaper's part in the fight to preserve racial integrity in Mississippi. It is a compliment that she angrily resents our news stories, to the present crisis.

Rep. Green also sneers "The Clarion-Ledger is factually correct in its lament that AFL-CIO will join NAACP in fighting for fullest Negro citizenship." However she goes on to say, "the fact is an occasion for rejoicing not lamentation."

HER ARTICLE is so filled with crude distortions and intemperate statements as to make it unworthy of serious notice. We mention her venomous screed merely to illustrate just how far a political nonenity will go in pursuit of publicity and votes.

Rep. Green's latest tirade has been routed to us by Hon. Robert K Yandell, prominent Jackson attorney who formerly resided on the Pacific Coast. He in turn was furnished the article by a lawyer friend in Portland who says, "Edith is an 18-caret phoney."

ATTORNEY YANDELL, it will be remembered, penned a masterly answer to Rep. Green's original attack on our state. His letter attracted much favorable comment from Clarion-Ledger readers when it appeared in these pages recently. It is nice having a former Oregonian taking up for us.

By a coincidence, Attorney Yandell's same letter was published in the Portland Oregonian, that state's leading daily newspaper, on January 6 — the same day Rep. Green's article came out in the labor publication. His eloquent answer may have neutralized her cheap slanders.

THERE IS EVERY reason to hope that intelligent Oregonians, having an opportunity to read both sides on the same day, have readily perceived in which direction the truth lies. In fact, word from that state indicates that Rep. Green's tirade has already been correctly appraised as a brazen bid for ballots.

We also understand that the Oregon Congressman faces rugged opposition and might easily be defeated.

Southern Opinion (1956)

North Side News

The South's Greatest Community Newspaper

Established as a weekly on August 18, 1943.
Matt G. Perkins, Editor and Publisher

ALL OFFICES:——3167 ROSWELL ROAD, N. W., ATLANTA, GA
TELEPHONES: ALL DEPARTMENTS ———— CH. 117

Published every Wednesday, by North Side Publishing Company
Subscription Rates: $2.50 for six months; $4.00 for one year; single copies 10c each.

Frying The Political Fat

So appeal

By LAMAR Q. BALL

Did You See That TV Political Wedding Sunday?

Did you of the North Side stay home from the public golf course Sunday and follow those two hours of rewritten Mozart on Channel Two, Governor Cox's television channel?

There was politics in the Magic Flute Sunday, cultural politics! It showed how we are off to a new start on Governor Cox's television channel to get these races integrated in the backward South, or else.

Did you see that white prince go so sex-crazy over the picture of a black princess that he went through fire and water and other ordeals to woo and marry her?

The Magic Flute originally, back in the days of Hapsburg Germany, was one of Mozart's best. It has been produced at the Met in New York but the princess at the Met has usually been Lily Pons, a white woman who has had pin-up rating for years. But this was new pin-up. This white prince Sunday, before the eyes of North Side children who sat in front of television, fell head over heels in love with a loose-mouth, vast-bosomed, very black Negro woman who had not one ounce of pin-up appeal in all of her 160 or 170 pounds.

She was a good singer. But the picture of her that knocked the prince sexually irresponsible, was not a sound picture. Her white mother didn't give the prince one of the princess's platter recordings. She gave this mixed-up prince just a silent picture. The kids on the floor in front of the television were shown how a nice-looking white boy can go for a middle-aged Negro woman and marry her to the acclaim of the multitudes.

Those two hours Sunday, on which a lot of dollars were spent for promotion, were evidence that while Governor Cox's Atlanta newspapers might be agreeing that racial integration is not at all possible, he has his TV in Atlanta at work proving to the white child just how weak the white man can be when he's hunting a mother for his children.

It was good singing. The warm embraces and kissing of the original Mozart were deleted. The lovers stayed at arm's distance. But they were married.

It's interesting staying home from the Negro-captured golf courses these Sunday afternoons. You can see that TV's approach is going to be more subtle than Eleanor Roosevelt's approach was when her Negro traveling companion was not admitted to that Birmingham hotel.

Theyre really spending the dollars to force integration, even if it takes as long as the next generation of Southern whites.

Southern Opinion

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Thursday, January 26, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

Good For Mr. Hoover

J. EDGAR HOOVER blew the whistle last week on some of the most vehement anti-South diatribes that have been circulated yet. He did not only the South, but the cause of justice, a good turn by his criticism of Dr. T. R. M. Howard.

Dr. Howard made the error of blaming the hard-working FBI agents for lack of action on several crimes which had aspects of racial unrest; he even suggested that the FBI agents were betraying Negro informers. Mr. Hoover demanded evidence that any of these charges were true and blasted Dr. Howard's looseness with the truth.

There have been terrible crimes and injustices within the past year which should make us all thoughtful, but wild attacks on the federal agents who do their very best within the limitations of law and authority is not going to bring about a solution to our tragic and delicate problem.

Southern Opinion (1956)

Greenville News 2/6/56

Race Problem And Equality

Supreme Court Decision Endeavored To Solve Sociological Issue In Modern Society

Editor, The News:

I would appreciate the opportunity to present a few comments in regard to your series of editorials concerning the United States Supreme Court antisegregation decision.

In complete fairness to the Supreme Court, it should be pointed out that although the doctrine which permitted segregation according to race appeared in 1896—the separate but equal principle of Plessy V. Ferguson—earlier opinions of the Court appear to have construed the equal protection clause as proscribing all state imposed discrimination against the Negro. In cases decided as early as 1873 and 1879 (Slaughter House cases; Stander v. West Virginia) the Court has said:

"It (the Fourteenth Amendment) ordains that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without the due process of law, or deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

"What is this but declaring that the law in the states shall be the same for the black as well as the white; that all persons, whether colored or white, shall stand equal before the laws of the states and, in regard to the colored race, for whose protection the amendment was primarily designed, that no discrimination shall be made against them by laws because of their color?"

Fundamentally, though, the decision rests on the principle expressed in the Declaration of Independence that "all men are created equal." Secondly, it rests on the principle expressed in the Constitution that certain rights shall be given the protection of law.

IT MUST ALWAYS BE emphasized that these rights are not created by social convention. They are rooted in the very nature of man. These rights, however, have to be fulfilled in a social situation, and the guarantee of rights or judicial decisions about them must always be referred to the actual social situation.

The Constitution clearly grants equal protection of the law to all citizens. But what, in this day and age, does equal protection of the law mean? The question had to be answered in terms of present social conditions. American society places such a high value in educational opportunities, considers it so essential to a full life of the American citizen. Therefore the Court concluded any failure of the law to grant equal opportunity in education would be a failure of the law to provide equal protection of rights.

This still left the question of what is equal opportunity. Here again the Court was faced with a sociological problem. Equal provision of buildings, books, teachers, etc., is only part of the matter. That is equal which, according to the socially defined norms of the time, is considered to be equal by the citizens. And in spite of the South's refusal to acknowledge the fact, the almost universal social and cultural definition of segregation in our society is that it is a mark of inferiority, a lack of equality.

RICHARD A. LAMANNA
15 Perkins Mill Rd.,
Greenville.

Southern Opinion

Children at Play

Opinion

To the Editor of the Journal:

Without mentioning Wordsworth or the observations of Christ on the subject, it is suggested that our statesmen, representatives, and law-makers here in the south, before making a final decision on the segregation question, consider a mixed group of children at play. Surely there are lessons to be learned from them who are closer to God—for when the Negro child and the white child refuse to laugh together, or when their color diminishes their joy, then, and only then, will it behoove us to appoint ourselves their guardians, or to plan their way of life.

—EBEN C. MILLER

Winston-Salem.

Journal 2-7-56

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
311 EAST PEARL STREET
THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1956
JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS

Sunday at the act of March
..... Editor
..... Publishers

SENSELESS CRITICISM

Criticism of the student body of the University of Alabama for staging a mass protest against the attempt to force a Negro woman student into the institution is evasive of the main issue.

The NAACP financed the litigation that resulted in a Federal court order to admit Autherine Lucy as a student. It was a deliberate attempt to enforce integration in that commonwealth.

The NAACP willfully asked for trouble and is getting what it asked for.

Rebellion in the student body against admission of Autherine Lucy was a natural and normal resentment. Any denunciation of what happened on the University of Alabama campus as "uncivilized behaviour" is silly, senseless, and close akin to expression of approval of the NAACP fight for desegregation.

Here's hoping the student body over at Tuscaloosa never loses its determination to fight for preservation of the Southern way of life.

Jackson Daily 2/10/56

President Eisenhower says he expects to reach a decision about running again by March 1st. You still have two guesses. He either will or he won't.

* * *

The NAACP is trying to force the integration issue over in Arkansas, demanding a three-judge Federal tribunal to hear an injunction seeking to force Negro children immediately into the white schools of Little Rock. Write your own comment about that.

* * *

Integration will not work at the University of Alabama. That has been made clear and conclusive. Any new effort to force Negro students into the institution will no doubt provoke much sterner forms of opposition.

* * *

Editorial Opinion

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
311 EAST PEARL STREET
FREDERICK SULLENS ..... Editor
MISSISSIPPI PUBLISHERS CORP. .... Publishers

DR. WARREN'S BELLYACHING

It seems that Dr. Harold C. Warren, president of Tougaloo College from 1947 to 1954, is now biting the hand that fed him. In the January issue of "McCormick Speaking," a magazine published by McCormick Seminary, a little-known theological institution at Chicago, Dr. Warren describes his eight years at Tougaloo. Here is a paragraph from the article:

> Four times while in Mississippi I toured the state in behalf of the United Negro College Fund, in which thirty-one leading accredited, privately supported colleges for Negroes participate. This experience acquainted me with the attitude of the general run of white Mississippians, who feel that education of a Negro only spoils a good servant, and who particularly decry such education for Negroes as is supplied by a college of the liberal arts and sciences.

Here is another paragraph from the article:

> "Progress has been made in the face of criticism and opposition by the white Mississippians who refuse to admit that Negroes have a right to first-class citizenship and a place of dignity in our land."

The statement of Dr. Warren that "the general run of white Mississippians feels that the education of a Negro only spoils a good servant." is a falsehood and Dr. Warren well knew it was a falsehood when he wrote that paragraph.

The truth about Tougaloo College is that it has always received kind and tolerant treatment from citizens of Jackson and Mississippi generally —much kinder and more tolerant than its board of trustees had a right to expect in view of the fact that its faculty is composed of both white and Negro instructors and social equality is both preached and practised within its walls.

Dr. Warren was also a million miles from facts when he said Negroes are denied "first-class citizenship" in Mississippi. Any Negro can become a first-class citizen if he can show proper qualifications. There are many thousands of registered Negro voters in the state. However, a very large majority of the adult Negroes in our state, do not want to vote and they persistently fail or refuse to pay the required poll tax.

If Dr. Warren scored failures when he toured the state four times in behalf of the United Negro College Fund it was largely because of his lack of ability as a money raiser. No matter how worthy the cause, raising money is not an easy task. It requires a persuasive personality. Dr. Warren happens to be much lacking in that respect.

It is a fact that when campaigns for the United Negro College Fund were launched each year they were given liberal support by both Jackson newspapers. Propaganda—most of it poorly prepared—was given free of charge all the space asked for. Surely Dr. Warren is not so dumb that he cannot realize that an educational institution where social equality is preached and practiced can never be popular in Mississippi.

There is one bit of truth in Dr. Warren's article. Here it is:

> One difficulty, of course, is the task of assembling and stabilizing a faculty of requisite caliber. We have maintained generally about an equal number of white and Negro members. Most of the white members must be recruited in the North.

Dr. Warren can say that over again, and with plenty of emphasis. No Southern-born teacher, man or woman, ever sought a place on the social equality faculty at Tougaloo College.

The main support of Tougaloo comes from a Northern organization known as the American Association, a body that has long preached and practiced social equality.

Dr. Warren is entitled to know that his diatribe has dealt a definite damage to Tougaloo College—perhaps more damage than the benefits accrued during his eight years as head of the institution.

MINORITY OF THE MINORITY

The Philadelphia Inquirer complains about "the tiny minority of Negroes in Mississippi qualified to vote."

As a matter of fact only a small minority of that "tiny minority" is not really qualified to vote.

The majority of them don't know what the hell they are voting about or who they are voting for or against.

They are almost as poorly qualified as the voters who are driven like cattle to the polls in Pennsylvania and vote as the bosses tell them how to vote.

(Montgomery Advertiser)
Southern Opinion
2/14/56

★ Tell It ★
To Old Grandma

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request, name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry please ★ Repeat: No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

The Soft Core

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — After hearing Sen. Eastland's staunch defense of home, motherhood and Lister Hill, I am convinced that our politicians, the soft core of the resistance movement, will retreat every step of the way until the last school in Alabama is integrated.

If the Citizens Council is anything more than a carnival sideshow of imported breastbeaters, they can best prove it by drawing up articles of faith to which all pro-segregationists can subscribe, and pledge themselves to oppose actively any candidate for public office who refuses to endorse these articles.

FORD McK. MacELVAIN.

◆

Mob Rule In Lowndes Too

LaFayette, Ala.
Editor, The Advertiser:

Mob rule cannot be condoned. It cannot be condoned in Tuscaloosa any more than it can be condoned in the rural counties of Alabama. We must face the facts. Mob rule was in force at the University last week. Mob rule was also in force in Lowndes County last week.

The Child Welfare Worker of the Department of Public Welfare in Lowndes County was on a routine mission of mercy in an isolated section of the county last week. This lady is a graduate of Agnes Scott College in Decatur, Ga., and a graduate student of the Universities of Mississippi and Alabama. She is a state and federal employe. For eight years she has carried out her assignments giving help to the white and colored unfortunates of Lowndes County.

Alone and unprotected on a rural road, she passed a colored school just dismissing for the day. Two teen-aged Negro boys refused to move from the road as she was passing. When she slowed to a stop, a rock was thrown at her car by a Negro girl and another Negro girl spit on the ground at her feet. She was surrounded by a group of "hostiles." This occasion, as much as the celebrated autherine Lucy case, calls for serious thinking by citizens of all races. These Negro children would not have acted in such a maner if their parents had not been subjected to outside propaganda. The progress for better racial relations which is the work of more than three generations is being nullified by foreign agitators who do not give a fig for the workable status-quo.

This incident in Lowndes County, remote as it may seem, has all the elements of tragedy in its content that the Tuscaloosa incident has. This "happening" however, will most assuredly not reach the public press as its celebrated counterpart did. Why? Because the NAACP will not recognize it for its undertones of Negro violence, and it will never be printed in the Detroit, Chicago, or New York newspapers.

L. J. POWELL.
Lowndesboro, Ala.

◆

Folsom Is Half Right

Editor, The Advertiser:

I agree with Jim Folsom when he says that 98% of the people in Alabama are against "mob rule." In fact, I would say that 99% are against it and that same 99% are also against putting a Negro in a white school.

Pine Level. W. T. BARNETT.

◆

Southern Opinion

CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., WEDNESDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 15, 1956

Voice of the People

Dear Editor:

Here in the Southland of this United States is the greatest stronghold of true Christianity perhaps on earth, which is now enjoyed by both the white and colored people. Satan knows this fact and so the mighty movement now underway in the northern part of this Country under the guyse of NAACP is nothing more nor less than a movement of the anti-christ seeking to destroy this last stronghold of Jesus Christ. They know there is no faster way to do it than through forced integration. So make no mistake about it my friends of both races. If this evil design of the devil is forced upon us we can say good by to Christianity as we know it today. The anti-Christ will replace true Christianity with a false doctrine of religion, the Civil Liberties Union, and other left wing organizations dominated by political demagogues seeking to destroy our blessed heritage of freedom of worship of a true Christ. No true Christian would advocate the mixing of the races because it is contrary to the teaching of God's word.

The leaders of this movement care nothing about the welfare of the colored people or no other people beyond their own selfish political designs.

J. T. Wallace
Forest, Miss.

stop, a rock was thrown at her car by a Negro girl and another Negro girl spit on the ground at her feet. She was surrounded by a group of "hostiles." This occasion, as much as the celebrated autherine Lucy case, calls for serious thinking by citizens of all races. These Negro children would not have acted in such a maner if their parents had not been subjected to outside propaganda. The progress for better racial relations which is the work of more than three generations is being nullified by foreign agitators who do not give a fig for the workable status-quo.

This incident in Lowndes County, remote as it may seem, has all the elements of tragedy in its content that the Tuscaloosa incident has. This "happening" however, will most assuredly not reach the public press as its celebrated counterpart did. Why? Because the NAACP will not recognize it for its undertones of Negro violence, and it will never be printed in the Detroit, Chicago, or New York newspapers.

L. J. POWELL.

Lowndesboro, Ala.

Folsom Is Half Right

Editor, The Advertiser:

I agree with Jim Folsom when he says that 98% of the people in Alabama are against "mob rule." In fact, I would say that 99% are against it and that same 99% are also against putting a Negro in a white school.

Pine Level. W. T. BARNETT.

Blackout Boycott News

Editor, The Advertiser:

Iread Joe Azbell's columns Sunday and Monday. Part of it was amusing and the rest was good horse sense. If let alone, everything would settle down and be as it used to be.

Newspapers and television are giving too much publicity to the disturbing situation. The leaders are eating it up, seeing themselves on television and being on the front page of the newspapers. If all the publicity would stop, they would see that no one cares one way or the other.

Both white and colored people have worked together and been good to each other. Let's see how quick all this disturbance can be stopped. Give less publicity to the agitators, then they will see just how much our people, white and colored, care about them. Peace of mind among our people is all that matters now. ESTHER BROWN.

Montgomery RFD.

THE RUSSIANS' HANDICAP

The Sacramento, Calif., Bee

One trouble with the Russians is that they suspect everybody else of being too much like themselves.

EAT HEARTILY

Charles W. Morton In The Atlantic

At one London club the host is handed a menu which lists each item and its price. His guest is given the same list, only there are no prices on the guest's menu.

Southern Opinion

Montgomery Advertiser

★ Tell It ★

To Old Grandma

Your name and address must be given on letter ★ But upon request name will often be withheld at the Editor's discretion ★ We reserve the right to shorten letters ★ No poetry please ★ Repeat No letter will be printed unless Editor knows who wrote it.

New Suit For Shores

EDITOR, THE ADVERTISER — Lawyer Shores is about the luckiest Negro in Birmingham, now that he has found Miss Lucy and the U. of A. Before Miss Lucy, the law practice of Lawyer Shores, according to my understanding, wasn't so good.

But those days are gone now (that he has Miss Lucy) and it is wonderful to be eating regular again, have a client, and wear new clothes like other folks. And his name is on the front pages of all the papers over the nation. But he must keep busy trying every trick in the bag in order to stay in the news. He must also prove to his colored lawyer friends up North how smart he is, because if he loses his case, his bubble is busted for good.

Should Lawyer Shores win his case, and Miss Lucy returns to classes at the University, what if the other students stage a general strike and refuse to attend the same school with her. Would Lawyer Shores then get a court order ordering the school to remain open for Miss Lucy to be the one and only student at the University?

Frisco City, Ala. ROBERT LAY.

The Court Proposes, Congress Disposes

Editor, The Advertiser:

The writer has read much in the papers about the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States being the law of the land. We have even read statements by some members of the Congress who proclaim that the decision of the court is the law of the land and should be obeyed.

We will have to admit that we are not as well learned, in law, or many other subjects, possibly, as the distinguished gentlemen who have made these statements, and should not be so presumptuous as to take issue with them. But,

The fifth section of the 14th Amendment clearly states as follows: "The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article."

This section of the amendment shows without doubt, that the states in adopting the amendment delegated the power of enforcement to the Congress describing the manner in which Congress should enforce it. (By appropriate laws.)

Therefore, the Supreme Court is without power, in the absence of such appropriate legislation and the violation thereof, to enforce any decision they may hand down concerning the 14th Amendment, or for that matter, any other amendment where enforcement is vested in Congress.

For any member of the Senate or House of Representatives of Congress to contend that such decision or decree of the Supreme Court is the law of the United States, is for such member to contend that the Supreme Court is a superior lawmaking body than that of Congress and has the power to make, adjudge and enforce their own laws in disregard to the provisions of the Constitution. (The law, the judge and the jury.)

Troy, Ala. DAN J. BAKER.

Southern Opinion 2-16-56

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by Tom Ethridge

A STRANGE SILENCE

A Negro school teacher in Georgia has just been deprived of his civil rights. He has been forced to quit his job because of violent threats and pressures by members of his own race. His sole offense has been to exercise his Constitutional right of free speech.

Because this plain-spoken Negro educator urged a sensible attitude toward integration, irate colored folks demanded his resignation and threated to kill him, his wife and two small daughters.

THIS OUTRAGE has been greeted with thunders of silence from left wingers and bleeding hearts allegedly dedicated to free speech and free thought. No crusading parlor pink or sociologist-minded religious leader has mounted a soapbox to defend this Georgia citizen's "right to dissent."

No vote-hungry politician has taken the floor of Congress to denounce this "economic pressure because of personal beliefs." No internationalist has screamed that such incidents give American bad name abroad. LOOK Magazine has sent no special correspondent down to get this ugly story of violence and terrorism in the South.

THE FBI, ever prompt to investigate real or imaginary violations of Negro's Civil rights, seems to be looking the other way just now. The Attorney General shows no official concern nor has the CIO-AFL, the NAACP or the Communist Daily Worker demanded federal action. The National Council of Churches, increasingly anxious about "human rights," expresses no alarm because this Georgia educator has been deprived of his right to work.

Yet the case is amazing similar to some which have caused grave concern among the foregoing and other sources. A Negro citizen has dared to express his honest convictions on a controversial issue. He has lost his job, the lives of his loved ones have been threatended and he has been driven from the community — all because he exercised a right guaranteed by the Constitution. Meanwhile, professional champions of freedom maintaine a strange silence.

LET US EXAMINE the facts in to show a bit of consistency. Let those high priests who worship nonconformity deliver a few sermons on the shameful treatment of Prof. Harrison E. Lee. Let's have some left-wing indignation at mob tactics which have endangered this ing the amendment delegated the power of enforcement to the Congress describing the manner in which Congress should enforce it. (By appropriate laws.)

Southern Opinion

Therefore, the Supreme Court is without power, in the absence of such appropriate legislation and the violation thereof, to enforce any decision they may hand down concerning the 14th Amendment, or for that matter, any other amendment where enforcement is vested in Congress.

For any member of the Senate or House of Representatives of Congress to contend that such decision or decree of the Supreme Court is the law of the United States, is for such member to contend that the Supreme Court is a superior lawmaking body than that of Congress and has the power to make, adjudge and enforce their own laws in disregard to the provisions of the Constitution. (The law, the judge and the jury.)

DAN J. BAKER.
Troy, Ala.

You've Made Your Bed, Now Lie In It

Editor, The Advertiser:

Before you condemn the Negroes, in the "Battle of the University of Alabama," consider the following facts and ask yourself if you and I aren't the ones who should be blamed?

I contributed money and lots of my time to the election of Mr. Eisenhower (approximately 18 months before his election, in a lengthy article in Collier's magazine, Ike stated in no uncertain words, that he believed in states rights), and so did you and millions more support and vote for him.

The President appointed Mr. Warren chief justice of the Supreme Court, a known radical when it comes to socialism and civil rights, in keeping with the times, as a reward for Warren's help in politics, with little regard as to his qualifications. But wait, Democrats, don't laugh. Before Mr. Warren could take office he had to be confirmed. I never heard or read of where Mr. Sparkman, Mr. Hill or any other Southern or Northern senator got up in Congress and raised hell because an unwise or unqualified appointment was going to be made. And remember, too, members of the Senate are far more informed than you or I.

The same situation took place under Truman, yet your Hill and Sparkman played party politics as usual and as usual you good Democrats continued to support the party, come hell or high water. Now, need I mention Mr. Roosevelt and his Supreme Court packing?

Now don't miss the point. The same applies to the Republican Party as well as the Democratic Party: When a party fails to change (when need be), then it's time to change the party.

RALPH ROBERTS,
Member Republican State Executive Committee, Eufaula, Ala.

Southern Opinion

Yet the case is amazing similar to some which have caused grave concern among the foregoing and other sources. A Negro citizen has dared to express his honest convictions on a controversial issue. He has lost his job, the lives of his loved ones have been threatended and he has been driven from the community — all because he exercised a right guaranteed by the Constitution. Meanwhile, professional champions of freedom maintaine a strange silence.

LET US EXAMINE the facts in this sordid case. Prof. Harrison E. Lee is a young Georgia Negro, age 35. He has served ably as principal of the Speight Negro School built last year in Fort Gaines. It is regarded as the community's most modern and best equipped school.

Prof. Lee is an intelligent man, holding a master's degree. His wife has been a teacher in the Negro school at nearby Bluffton, Ga. He and his family are respectable, law-abiding citizens, the kind of colored people the South needs more of today.

UNTIL RECENTLY Prof Lee was a recognized leader among his people, although not the vicious type of rabble-rouser represented in NAACP agitation. All went well until Prof. Lee started reminding his people of certain unpleasant truths. He told them that Negroes have not yet learned completely how to cooperate with whites. Too much emphasis is placed on Negro rights, he believes, and too little on Negro responsibilities.

In recent PTA speeches, Prof. Lee has taken a dim view of overnight integration. "We must remember," he told his people, "that we have not learned as yet how to pool our resources and build so much as a recreation hall for our children.

PROF. Lee has rejected the absurd theory that Negroes are victims of violence only because they are Negroes. "I have noticed," he said, "that everytime something happens to a Negro it is said to happen because of his color. I say that 99 per cent of what happens to Negroes is because they do something to deserve it. We must learn the lesson of cooperation. We still demand things we either do not deserve or that which are not yet ready for."

After several such speeches, Prof. Lee started getting threatening calls and letters. His wife and childern were ostricized. A Negro mass meeting demanded his resignation. Fort Gaines police offered him protection but Prof. Lee was fearful of his family's safety. He was literally hounded into resigning, leaving the community under cover of night.

THIS SHAMEFUL EPISODE and the negligible publicity it has received indicates that our self-appointed watchdogs of constitutional freedoms are asleep at their posts of duty. Nor is this an isolated instance of "liberal" inconsistency and indifference. White Southerners are castigated for applying alplying alleged "economic pressures" against Negroes, yet Negroes can boycott whites without protest from South haters.

Alabama students demonstrating against race-mixing are branded as "hoodlums." Georgia Tech students raising hell in favor of race-mixing receive 'liberal" plaudits. (Laws seem important only when being flouted by segregationists.) What is hideously wrong in Tuscaloosa is right in Atlanta, according to left-wing brain washers.

OUR DO-GOODER clique needs

Did Supreme Court Decision Violate Principle of 'Public Will'?

Sunday Opinion

Wes Sentinel Feb 16, 1956

By Francis C. Anscombe

The Declaration of Independence included the immortal words that "the right to govern is derived from the consent of the governed."

This is true of states which have a form of government which tends to be democratic or republican.

Under absolute monarchs, or totalitarian dictators, or tyrannical obligarchs there is no consent required and little opportunity to resist.

Every worthy work on political science has a chapter devoted to the discussion of "the public will."

Democratic governments give periodic opportunities for the expression of the public will by elections for office holders, and those who by their record violate the public will can be removed from public office.

In the discussion of the present great issue before the Southern states little has been said concerning the public will, yet ultimately it will become the determining factor.

Can't Survive

No government can long survive if it ignores or frustrates the sentiment of a great proportion of the public vitally concerned.

It is no secret that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the public schools is contrary to "the public will." In a democratic community, therefore, the decision cannot stand.

It is futile to argue that the decision is constitutionally proper and socially right. If the opinion of the justices is repugnant to public opinion, it cannot be enforced.

Public opinion may not always be right; it is subject to change, but it is a fact in human history that no institution can survive long after it has become contrary to the public will.

When the acts of George III became offensive to the collective mind of the American colonists, revolution was precipitated; when a sufficient number of citizens came to regard slavery as evil, the institution was abolished; prohibition may have been right, but it was not supported by the public will—therefore, it could not be enforced.

The same principle will apply in the present issue.

Adequate educational facilities should be available for all, but "mixed schooling" was enforced upon the "prostrate South" by the Carpet-baggers and Federal troops and, as a consequence, millions of whites grew up as illiterates.

A colored preacher summed up the situation by telling his congregation: "God made the white birds, and the black birds and the red birds and the yellow birds. They all fly in the same air; they all feed upon the same ground; but they don't all roost in the same nests."

Subject to Change

Decisions of the Supreme Court are subject to change. In fact, it is a matter of record that the federal income tax law was constitutional or not according to the change of mind of a learned justice.

Of course, the court in this instance could render no other decision, because the justices are familiar with the conditions prevailing in our great cities, where daily may be seen peoples of all races and kindreds and languages, and if they are all eligible for citizenship, then they cannot be denied the privileges and rights of citizens. But "the consent of the governed" was not considered when the historic decision was rendered.

If it is the function of the states to train, certificate and appoint the teachers, to provide the schoolhouses, to assess taxes to support the schools, to provide retirement funds for teachers and administrators, to enforce attendance, then it should be the right of the states to respect the public will in regard to separate and equal opportunities.

So. Opinion

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
MISSISSIPPI'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
311 EAST PEARL STREET
FREDERICK SULLENS ..... Editor
MISSISSIPPI PUBLISHERS CORP. .... Publishers

SMEARING JIM EASTLAND

One of the propaganda organizations now engaged in vicious attacks on Senator Jim Eastland, the South's acknowledged leader in the fight for maintenance of segregation, calls itself "Americans for Traditional Liberties." This body sent a telegram to the United States Senate demanding that legal action of some sort be taken against Senator Eastland.

Further investigation shows that "Americans for Traditional Liberties," is a camouflaged front for the NAACP. The telegram to the Senate was also signed by thirty-seven individuals who may be classed as Communist-aiding, Marxists, fellow-travelers with Communism, dupes, dopes, nit-wits, and egg-heads.

Our investigation of the attack on Senator Eastland clearly revealed that the Americans for Traditional Liberties is a dummy front for the NAACP which in turn is a front for the American Jewish Congress. The office at 40 East 40th St., New York, is an almost empty room with a desk, 'phone and chair (phone number: Murray Hill 4-5645) and is a cubby-hole among a group of other offices in one main office (rooms 230-250). The front desk clerk, a woman, has stated the A.T.L. people merely pick up mail there periodically and never occupy the office.

Upon request the front desk clerk gave the name of Ella Baker (from a small address and telephone reminder) as the person who picked up mail and as the official from whom information and copies of the attack could be secured. She gave her home 'phone number (Audabon 3-6527 and Audabon 6-2608, which is the 'phone number of the New York Branch of the NAACP, 165 West 131st Street, New York City. A 'phone call to that number elicited the fact that Ella Baker does work there, and the main NAACP office confirmed this.

So there's the dingy background of the forces now seeking to smear Senator Eastland and discredit him in the eyes of the American people.

The champions of integration may not like the senior Senator from Mississippi but when he visited Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, one night last week he was greeted by 15,000 cheering citizens and 2,000 on the outside were unable to gain seats. Jim stands mighty well with his home folks.

KARL MUNDT'S ADDRESS

Our good friend, Senator Karl Mundt, of South Dakota, told the Mississippi legislature Wednesday that he wants to see the Federal constitution so amended that eight states cannot control Presidential elections, which is now the case.

It was the second time that the genial, pipe-smoking Senator from the Far West had made an address in Jackson in recent years and escaped with his life. Mundt is a Republican—but not a Republican to hurt—and no doubt a lot of his GOP friends in Washington told him he would be taking his life in his own hands, if he visited Mississippi; that he might be shot, hung, blown up with dynamite, or plunged into boiling oil if he ventured into the commonwealth where the people have dared to disagree with a political opinion by nine muddy-minded old men who constitute the United States Supreme Court.

Nevertheless the North Dakota Senator came, was cordially invited to address a joint session of our House and Senate, and an old fashioned Jeffersonian Democrat could not have been given a more courteous hearing. Our lawmakers may not have agreed with all that Senator Mundt said but his address was frequently punctuated with liberal applause, especially when he said that both major political parties ought to be junked and new alignments made for a better two-party system of government.

Gov. Coleman introduced the visiting Senator as "a man who is more like a Southerner than any Republican I know," although the Governor frankly disagreed with several proposals made in the address.

Well, it was nice to again see the chubby figure and smiling face that became so familiar to millions of people during the McCarthy hearings in Washington, even if he did fail to say whether he is for us or against us concerning that Supreme Court decision.

BUG UNDER THE CHIP

One of the members of the clergy to cancel his engagement to take part in the Religious Emphasis Week at the University of Mississippi was Rev. Joseph Fichter, S. J., head of the department of sociology at Loyola University, New Orleans.

Looking under the chip in search of the bug the interesting discovery is made that on January 31st Father Fechter was a member of Citizen's Panel on integration held at the Rabouin school in that city; that the principal speaker at the meeting was Dr. Margaret Buchter, member of the board of education in Washington, and an ardent champion of integration in public schools and colleges. In her address Dr. Buchter said complete integration in the schools of Washington will take place within the next four years "and Negroes will be placed on an intellectual level with the whites."

And more blah-blah to the same effect.

We now know why Father Fichter withdrew from his proposed speaking engagement at Ole Miss It is well that he did.

NIXON IS CLARIFIED

Opinion

complete integration in the schools of Washington will take place within the next four years "and Negroes will be placed on an intellectual level with the whites."

And more blah-blah to the same effect.

We now know why Father Fichter withdrew from his proposed speaking engagement at Ole Miss It is well that he did.

NIXON IS CLARIFIED

The Delta Democrat-Times makes this comment on recent political spoutings of Vice-President Nixon:

> Mississippi's Senator John C. Stennis made quite clear the meaning of Vice President Richard Nixon's Lincoln Day address, in a Senate speech Tuesday afternoon.
>
> Nixon, he pointed out, had verified all the charges that Southern protesters have made against the Supreme Court decision that schools must be desegregated. Nixon labeled the decision as a political one and served notice that the Republican Party intends to capitalize on it as a campaign issue.
>
> This means that the next-to-highest ranking Republican has said that the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court is a Republican first and a judge second, and that the decision was to win GOP voters first and to set a legal precedent second.
>
> Senator Stennis said he regretted that Nixon had referred to the action of the court as a Republican one, but now Nixon has "branded the decision for what it was—a political one."

The "Black Monday" decision of the Supreme Court was born and bred in political chicanery, and it is but natural that Vice-President Nixon should be going around proclaiming that it is the greatest victory for Negroes since the emancipation problem.

The object and purpose of the decision was to get the Negro vote back into the Republican party. The GOP will resort to any method, no matter how desperate.

THEY WANT INTERMARRIAGE

The NAACP has a Negro lawyer on its staff named Albert A. Kennedy. In the New York Evening Post of Sept. 1st, 1955, Kennedy was quoted as saying:

> "Psychologists say that a girl's chances of getting married are governed by the number of her male associates. Integration will result in white girls being associated with Negro boys. Naturally, intermarriage would result. We of the NAACP are committed to a program of full integration."

The late Walter White, for many years secretary of the NAACP, and its ablest leader was quoted in the United States News and World Report of May 28th, 1954, as follows:

> "To prevent interacial marriages is improper, immoral and unChristian. The association of the races in public schools leads to friendship, love and intermarriage."

Those two paragraphs should be printed in indelible letters on the minds of the white citizens of Mississippi who have not yet awakened to the real dangers that will follow if our public schools ever become integrated.

WE STILL DON'T WANT IT

Adlai Stevenson urges integration by degrees. "We ain't buying."

Integration by degrees would be akin to the ancient Chinese way of torture — cutting off a little strip of skin at a time, plus pulling out fingernails and toenails.

Integration is rotten wrong. It cannot be bettered by an installment plan.

Slow doses of arsenic are just as deadly in the end as cobra bite.

We don't want it in any form and we won't have it.

And no thanks to you, Mr. Stevenson, for such a suggestion.

WHAT LINCOLN SAID

On February 12th the Republican party celebrated with much ado the birthday of Abraham Lincoln. No fault to find with that. Abraham Lincoln was one of the nation's foremost Presidents. Had he lived the South would never have been forced to undergo the horrors of reconstruction, and were he alive today the South would not be facing an attempt to have integration of races forced down its throat.

On August 14th, 1862 Abraham addressed a group of free Negroes assembled on the White House lawn. Here is what he said:

> "You and we are different races. We have between us a broader difference than exists between any other two races. Whether it is right or wrong I need not discuss, but this physical difference is a great disadvantage to us both, as I think. If this is admitted, it affords a reason, at least, why we should be separated."

The Republicans should pause in the midst of their Lincoln's birthday celebrations and study what that martyred statesman had to say on the subject of segregation.

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 17, 19

Southern Regionalism

Ledger

Voice of the People

Dear Editor

All people who have studied the Bible book by book and chapter by chapter know that God always warned and foretold of events to come so the people could prepare themselves for whatever was coming.

Many of the prophets named in the Old Testament told the people of the coming of Jesus into the world and how he would be born, rejected and crucified. Many of the people of that time believed the message of the prophets and prepared themselves, I don't find anywhere in the Bible where God has warned us that people of the two distinct colors on earth must integrate and mix their blood before Jesus Christ comes back to earth.

From where then do the supporters of the intergration movement get their reason and authority for their plan of intergration and mongrelization of the races? It has every indication of being a purely political movement and sponsored by Communists and people who know but little and care less about God and his word rather than being based on Christian principles and God's holy word.

We will need the vision and grace of Almighty God if we are to be able to stand against the terrible pressure we must bear from the integration movement.

M. C. Durr
Route No. 3
Brookhaven, Miss.

FRIDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 17, 1956
THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS.

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

LETTERS FROM READERS

(Note: Letters to this column cannot be published unless we know identity of senders. Upon request, name will be withheld and pen nane or initials used. Thanks.)

TAKE IT EASY, BOYS!

As a newcomer to Jackson I like this city and its people very much. Unlike many new arrivals, I always look for things to appreciate and not things to condemn.

But if I may say so, local garbage collectors seem rather tough at times on trash cans. My two comparatively new garbage cans look as if they had been hit by a truck. Bot tops have been bent and no longer fit the cans.

Not complaining, understand, but more careful?

NEWCOMER
Jackson, Miss.

WANTS THIRD PARTY

Those students at Ole Miss who believe in racial integration should pack their bags and go at once to an integrated school. We do not need them in our state. I hope the students at Alabama don't give up the fight. . . .

Laws are made by mere men and I cannot accept them as divine. We do not have to abide by the decree of nine insigificant men. We believe in majority rule here, not in the political whims of nine men. . . those who want to integrate can leave here by bus, auto, train or plane. It is a free country and they can live where they please, provided they do not keep others from living as they please. . . .

We need a third party. . . .The Republican party was once a third party. Our section is not fairly represented and a good third party might kill one of the older parties. Equal taxation should be given to Negroes. If one part is equal, all parts must be equal.

MRS. W. J. SUPINGER
Columbia, Mississippi

STRONG STOMACH NEEDED

Autherine Lucy and her attorney alleged that Alabama authorities permitted certain acts in order to "assimilate" an air of riot and disorder. The University of Alabama may have "assimilated" an air of riot but it has not yet "assimilated" Autherine.

It looks doubtful whether the University's digestive system is strong enough for the job. "Simulate" is what Autherine and her lawyer probably mean. Your column is sound, sensible, well written and enjoyable.

B. L. MOSS
Soso, Mississippi

"CORNPONE DIXIECRATS"

You are very correct in saying that today's "self-styled liberals" are inconsistent. However, please remember it was your own beloved Roosevelt who put the Socialist Liberals into business.

Mennen Williams, Hubert Humphrey, Herbert

pack their bags and go at once to an integrated school. We do not need them in our state. I hope the students at Alabama don't give up the fight. . . .

Laws are made by mere men and I cannot accept them as divine. We do not have to abide by the decree of nine insigificant men. We be-

It looks doubtful whether the University's digestive system is strong enough for the job. "Simulate" is what Autherine and her lawyer probably mean. Your column is sound, sensible, well written and enjoyable.

B. L. MOSS
Soso, Mississippi

"CORNPONE DIXIECRATS"

You are very correct in saying that today's "self-styled liberals" are inconsistent. However, please remember it was your own beloved Roosevelt who put the Socialist Liberals into business.

Mennen Williams, Hubert Humphrey, Harriman or TGA's own Kefauver—which of these champions of conservatism will YOU select to replace Ike? The Democratic Party has done more to champion the cause of Socialism than any other group besides Joe Stalin's gang.

And yet you cornpone Dixiecrats go right on blindly supporting them for no other reason than "Republicans are Yankees" Consistency? Wow!!!

CONSISTENT READER
Goodman, Mississippi

A FATHER'S ADVICE.

Note: Chief Justice Warren of the U. S. Supreme Court once was asked by his young daughter whether she should accept a Negro classmate's request for a date. Judge Warren advised her to "follow your own instincts." This incident, mentioned in Mississippi Notebook not long ago, has inspired the following verse by a Collins reader:

JUNGLE LAW UPHELD
(A Burlesque)

"Chief Justice" Rules Again, Alas
Upholds the Jungle Law:
"Do as thine instincts bid, my lass,
Be true to Nature's Law!"

Observe the freedom of the doe,
When springtime's call is clear!
Unhampered by impending woe,
Or concience-breeding fear.

Seek not my counsel, my sweet lass—
Paternal guidance I withhold.
The Laws of Nature far surpass
All else you may be told.

Her laws are deep within thy breast —
She speaks a language clear;
Whatere the deed at her behest
Is naught that thou should fear.

So, when thou goeth forth to fawn,
Be not troubled by thy plight;
For, in Nature thou has sown.
And in Nature all is right.

—By HORACE G. HILL
Collins, Mississippi.

Complacency In Washington

Birmingham Post Herald (2/18/56) (Southern Opin.)

John Temple Graves, in his column of Thursday, Feb. 16, quotes a question asked by Adlai Stevenson: "How can the Republican Party, which has been complacent about the past, . . . be anything but complacent about the future?" Then Mr. Graves adds on his own behalf: "But this is what the doctor orders."

If I understand Mr. Graves, he says that what the American people want in their national administration is complacency. They want an administration which doesn't worry about things, and doesn't try to anticipate social and economic disaster, and doesn't try to prevent such disaster by taking action in advance.

Well, that is the kind of national administration we have now. And that is the kind of administration we had in the years of Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover. The Coolidge-Hoover prosperity looked as solid to some people as the Eisenhower prosperity looks today.

And the Coolidge-Hoover complacency paid off in the years 1929-1933: starvation, suicide and near-revolution.

If that is what the American people want again, they can vote for it in 1956. But I do not think that is what they want.

The price of complacency is a high one.

RICHARD P. GREENLEAF,
307 College-st, Boaz.

* * *

Our World Is A Divided One

2/18/56 (Birm. Post Herald) (Southern Opin.)

Today's world is a divided one. On every hand there is quarreling, rioting, and division. This world is split wide open.

First the East-West division, then communism vs. democracy. And within both of these factions and splits which threaten a greater gap, such as capital and labor. Every one is seeking to get the other fellow down. Selfishness and greed is on the increase.

The nations of the world are divided religiously today, worse than ever before. Also race hatred is fast coming to the point of explosion not only in the United States but worldwide.

Every newscast, every newspaper brings news of new race troubles in one part of the world or another. Then last, but not least, there is the divided homes. Homes broken by divorce, children left with no mother or father. What mankind is faced with today is the breaking up of the devil's kingdom worldwide.

Then when the last vintage of his works are gone, the Kingdom of God will bring to the peoples of earth its blessings of health and peace; all enemies of man, even death, shall be destroyed.

C. V. JONES,
Goodwater.

Post Herald (Birm.)

Demonstrations May Increase

Serv. Opinion

I don't approve of mobs or violence but I think the demonstrations at the University may have been mild compared to demonstrations that may follow in the South in protest of integration because real Southerners won't take it very calmly.

In states that have integration they have intermarriage. That's one of the things the NAACP wants.

I think any race of people should want to stay among their own race, even animals don't mix. They stay with their own kind. We have politicians in both parties who are trying to force this integration on the South. But Averill Harriman has made the strongest attack against us.

George Meany has made strong attacks on our Southern way of life. I don't think he will improve his union membership much here in the South with his attacks.

CRESS JOINER,
2/18/56 Talladega.

* * *

Let's Use Our Heads

(an editorial)

If ever there was a time when we needed to keep our heads and watch our words and actions it is now.

No thoughtful citizen of the South minimizes the dangers with which we live.

For the problems which plague us there are no ready answers.

How foolish then, at such a time, to permit ourselves to be confused and divided by propaganda deliberately planned to goad us to rashness and to replace reason with blind emotion.

Yet just that is happening in our community.

"Black lists" secretly circulated to spread vicious rumor in time will destroy our unity.

Already "rumors" aimed at a number of outstanding local business concerns are doing them untold harm and they are defenseless.

It is reported that so-and-so has refused to join a certain organization dedicated to the preservation of the South as we know it or that he has contributed to another organization devoted to just the opposite purpose.

Tongues wag openly or behind the backs of hands.

The story grows with the telling.

No one takes the trouble to inquire into the real facts. So a neighbor's reputation is destroyed, his business ruined or his job put in jeopardy.

Such rumors are always hard to track down. The source is vague and elusive. That is what makes them so vicious and dangerous. They are accepted from a friend and passed on without question to another.

How foolish can we get? How careless?

If this program was designed to foster suspicion and breed hate among us it certainly is succeeding. But unless we as individuals want to be a party to it then we should start using our heads.

Let's be quick to demand proof. Let's be careful indeed before we denounce another.

The Birmingham Post- Herald
2-18-56

State Times

The Newspaper Owned by the People

Published Each Evening and Sunday at Jackson, Mississippi, by CITIZENS PUBLISHING

Jackson, Miss., Sunday, February 19, 1956 Vol. 1, No. 35

Free-and-Open-Minded South About the Republicans Seen

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

"The White Elephant South!"

To the New South, the Fighting South, the Advancing South, the South Jonathan Daniels didn't ever discover—add now the White Elephant South.

That would be a South which by contributing numbers of readers, advertisers and letter writers to the national magazines becomes so important in their consciousness and circulation that they dare not ignore or affront it any longer but adjust to it as to a white elephant on their hands.

Of even more moment and requiring even more imagination, it would be a South which by becoming possible for Republicans regularly to win in part or whole is literally a White Elephant, an uninvited, undeserved and immense factor in the party's hope of every four years to be, a South suddenly needing to be cajoled like a minority group in good standing.

There is no suggesiton in this that the South surrender either to the magazines or to the Republicans. But there is suggestion that we write-and-write-and-write to the magazines and that we be totally free-and-open-minded about the Republicans.

GRAVES

This region's mounting prosperity is giving it a self-sufficiency complex, thinks Columnist Holmes Alexander, after a tour. He doesn't mean economic sufficiency alone.

"Food, raiment and shelter are the basic needs of man," he writes. "But give him these things and he demands something else — his privacy of mind, person and property. The American South is pretty nigh at that stage now."

"Privacy of mind, person and property."

That would mean anti-union-bossism, anti-integration, anti-Fair Deal.

It will interest Mr. Holmes Alexander to know of Mr. T. B. Templeton, of Natchez, Miss., who is telling The Charleston News and Courier that the South ought to have labor unions of its own. "We need unions for working people but why not a union that will be governed by people who will see and understand our needs . . ."

And of Mr. V. H. (Van) Baldwin, of Birmingham, who believes in "advancement of colored people" but thinks millions of Southern Negroes would be happier and better served with a "Southern Association for The Advancement of Colored People" within the segregation pattern the South requires.

It isn't only economic prosperity that's making the South do-it-yourself-minded, Mr. Alexander. It's this plus being the South, being a land with a peculiar problem, a bitter memory and a dear one, too, a way, a taste, a sunlight, an economic emergence with decentralizing oil and electricity rather than centralizing steam for bases.

We have reason here to believe the last words on race relations, labor relations, economics, politics, morals, art and religion have not been written.

We think we may be nominated for some writing of our own.

In reaction to desegregation, some are proposing super-segregation. The Alabama women, for example, who declined to attend a Democratic Party Regional Conference in Nashville because two Negro women were attending. Two years ago they wouldn't have felt like that. Negroes are properly and importantly a part of both political parties now.

Especially of the Democratic Party.

One of many tragedies for both South and nation in the Supreme Court's unconstitutional decision is that advancements like this which were coming to the Negro in the South in natural course are being opposed now in a new and bitter race-consciousness.

State Times

The Newspaper Owned by the People

Published Each Evening and Sunday at Jackson, Mississippi, by CITIZENS PUBLISHING COMPANY

R. E. DUMAS MILNER, President

W. P. BRIDGES, Vice-President

LELAND SPEED, Secretary-Treasurer

Board of Directors: W. P. BRIDGES, R. C. BROWN, BRECK CABELL, W. A. CALDWELL, SR., R. L. EZELLE, SR., GEORGE GEAR, BAGBY HALL, HENRY HOLMAN, SR., R. W. HYDE, JR., STUART IRBY, JR., JACK KENNINGTON, ISIDORE LEHMAN, W. B. McCARTY, SR., DR STIRLING S. McNAIR, SAM P. McRAE, JR., R. E. DUMAS MILNER, W. R. NEWMAN, KELLY PATTERSON, DUDLEY PHELPS, JR., ANGELO PRIMOS, DAVE RICE, SIDNEY ROBINSON, JR., THAD J. RYAN, W. D. SEALE, JR., GEORGE E. SHAW, LELAND SPEED, LEON THOMAS, W. F. TURMAN, JR., J. W. UNDERWOOD, TOM E. WRIGHT

ROBERT SCHOONOVER, Business Manager

LLOYD POLEN, Advertising Director

JAMES URBANSKI, Retail Advertising Manager

WARREN T. BRIDGES, Circulation Manager

JOHN W. GRAY, Mechanical Supt.

PAUL TIBLIER, Managing Editor

O. C. McDAVID, City Editor

JACK HAIRSTON, Sports Editor

NORMAN SHAVIN, Feature Editor

PAGE 8A Jackson, Miss., Tuesday, February 21, 1956 Vol. 1, No. 358

Letters From Our

A Southerner in Yankeeland

So Openor

State Times,

Back in December the papers were filled with such headlines as, "Ired Tech Students in Riot," and "Protest Effort To Ban Bowl, 2,000 Riot Over Governor's Act." Lately, the papers, both North and South, have been filled with the incident at the University of Alabama. The riot at Tech was commended by all Northern papers. Even Ed Sullivan, on his TV show commended them. But the riot on the University of Alabama campus has been treated quite differently everywhere. Why? Because that first campus riot was for what the Yankees want. The other was against the Yankee's drive to integrate our Southern whites with Negroes.

Every Southerner who says one word against what took place in Tuscaloosa is helping to destroy our Southern mores. Even those who took part in the riot don't want blood shed, but our very country was built on the principle that it is better to fight than to take anything that is forced on us.

If we really believe in segregation, it is the duty of every Southern state to encourage Alabama in her attempt to keep the state's segregation laws. If we are going to take sides with every Yankee newspaper and condemn Alabama, then let us give up our struggle for segregation. We've either got to be for segregation and stick together, come what may, or we are going to make fools of ourselves. Are we going to let this thing drag along, taking sides first with Southerners, and then with Yankees, until the Yankee gets his way? We should have sense enough to know that you can't win a fight by half the time saying you are wrong. If we are wrong in this struggle against integration, then let's stop the struggle right now. If we are right, then let's stick to our guns and go all out to win.

By the way those two campus riots have been treated by Northern newspapers should show Southerners that Yankees aren't against riots, it all depends on what the riot is over. It should also show above the Mason-Dixon Line for Southern whites.

More Southerners should live in the North awhile and see how many segregated schools they have That's why they are trying to put the Negro in the Southern schools, so he won't move North. So many have moved North lately, that too many are getting in their schools. That, and only that, is the reason for the Supreme Court's decision.

Yours truly,
Mrs. B. L. Carter
600 W. Elm St.
Carbondale, Illinois

W.S

The Way of the South

To the Editor of the Journal:

I have been reading your fine newspapers for years and think they are the best.

Only one thing troubles me about them. Couldn't you write some articles on how we people are very much against the mixing of our schools? Write a nice article on our great governor and his fight to save our schools. I'm sure that you will agree that Luther H. Hodges is the most able governor that this state has ever had. Ever time I read one of your articles about your one sided stand on segregation, it makes boil, why can't you write for the way of the South. I would suggest that you take a poll and then maybe you would agree that the people will never stand for the mixing of the schools, so please write for us some time.

—CALVIN B. WHITE

Winston-Salem.

Afro American 2/25/56

Southern Opin

South is sick, says professor at Hopkins

"Most white and colored people are to be congratulated for the manner in which they are conducting themselves in the midst of the disturbances and soreheadedness concerning desegregating the public schools."

This opinion was expressed by Dr. Carl B. Swisher, chairman of the political science department at the Johns Hopkins University, as he spoke last Friday at Morgan State College during the installation of the college's new chapter of Pi Gamma Mu, national social science honor society.

"Twenty-one students and teachers who became charter members of the seventh national scholastic society to be established on the Morgan campus heard Dr. Swisher say:

"The Deep South is psychotic and sick and will not get over this condition soon."

* * *

THE AUTHORITY on American Constitutional law said that he expects segregation to disappear from the border states, "from Maryland to Missouri in the next 20 years," but he had no such high hopes for the Deep South.

He admitted, however, that segregation as a public policy is on the way out, "and has been on the way out since the 1930's in the face of consistent opinions from the Supreme Court."

As colored Americans move upward, he warned against their "turning against your rootage, forgetting those who have not had your opportunities, and giving up every aspect of your cultural heritage."

Dr. Swisher said that he, himself, had suffered because he had not kept enough rootage with his people in the mountains of West Virginia, where he was born.

* * *

ESTABLISHMENT OF the new chapter and the initiation ceremonies were conducted by Dr. Daniel Spencer, professor of economics at American University, Washington D.C., and vice chancellor of Pi Gamma Mu for the Atlantic Region.

He was assisted by Drs. Clifton R. Jones, professor of sociology, and G. James Fleming, associate professor of political science, of Morgan, members of the University of Iowa and the University of Pennsylvania chapters of the society, respectively.

Speaking briefly in addition to Dr. Swisher were Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, president of the college; Dr. George C. Grant, dean; Robert Sutton, president of the American University chapter; Dr. Alexander Walker, adviser of the new chapter; Miss Mary J. Humes, "Miss Morgan of 1955-56"; and George T. James, chief justice of the Student Court.

* * *

TO BECOME a member of Pi Gamma Mu, the student must hold an average of "B" or better in 20 or more hours of history, political science sociology, economics or geography, and must not have failed in any college subject.

The 13 students initiated into the Morgan chapter are John Bland, Baltimore; Lucile Cephas, Hurlock, Md.; Albert Dixon, Baltimore; Herbert O. Edwards, Cleveland, Ohio; Viola Graves, Salisbury, N.C.; Ulrica Greenidge, Atlantic City, N.J.; Walter Griffin, Swedesboro, N.J.; Mary J. Humes, Rocheester, N.Y.; George T. James, Paul Lee, Dewey Robinson, Elaine Matthews, all of Baltimore; and Rossie Wills, Aquasco, Md.

Faculty members initiated are Drs. Donald G. Brandon, Robert L. Gill, Frederic A. Jackson, Roland C. McConnell, Alexander J. Walker, and Messrs. Lawrence H. Middleton, Arthur H. Reagin Jr., and Isaiah A. Woodward.

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

Op Opinion 2-28-57

Publisher Blasts At Southern Editor

"You can't go home again..."

* * *

My generally enlightened friend, John S. Knight, the great Chicago and Detroit publisher, seems to have bought The Charlotte Observer without comprehending what he bought.

With amazing intemperance and unwisdom he lets himself go against much-loved Editor Waring, of The Charleston News and Courier. "People like Tom Waring," he writes in his column, "who wrap themselves in the folds of the Stars and Bars and mutter imprecations against their fellow citizens above the Mason-Dixon line should put aside their venomous, slimy pens and decide to join the union."

* * *

YOU CAN'T SAY that about Tom Waring—in the South or nation—and be followed.

The Charleston editor has won a name everywhere for high-calibred championship of the constitutional cause which the desegregation decision makes intense.

Even left-of-center Harper's picked him for the first break in the paper curtain against the actual Southern point of view. Temperate but nonetheless fearless and free of hems and haws, Mr. Waring is the South's best editorial foot foremost on this now national theme.

Mr. Knight will find many readers of his newspapers looking upon such words as "venomous" and "slimy" against such a man a reflection not upon Mr. Waring but upon Mr. Knight.

WHAT WITH HIS Charlotte editor, C. A. McKnight, making that crack about the South's "crumpled culture," which was as offensive to North Carolinians as to other Southerners — John Knight is off to such a bad start in the South that he ought to sit down and think things over, it seems to me.

I don't believe there's prejudice here against outside ownership as such. But there is certainly prejudice where the effect is out of tune, especially when the tune is one in which so much of the nation begins to join.

John tells us that even though he was born in West Virginia his father was a Georgian and his ancestors fought for the Confederacy.

With such forebears it ought to be easy for him to go home again but right now, unhappily, he can't. He shows further his unawareness by quoting Time against Tom Waring—as if you could prove anything about the South from those notoriously hostile, unfair and uncomprehending pages.

* * *

NOW HEAR THIS! Since I characterized William Bradford Huie's Look story on the Till case as "imagined" he has convinced me it was based on his investigations.

I was incorrect, therefore, when I said it was imagined. The only honorable thing is to say so.

* * *

IT IS A GOOD START for the proposed bi-racial commission in Alabama that it prefers this word to "interracial."

The latter is a good word, too, but has come to be identified with people who interpret it as the exercise of good will en route to integration.

The commission will serve best, it seems to me, if it takes care never to deny the epochal importance of the struggle in the South and equal care not to think it can be settled with peaceful words among Southerners. Peace is only one of two indispensables.

* * *

SENATOR BYRD, the South's great man calls for "massive resistance."

The massive resistance is here.

What is needed is magnificent leadership and the senator is nominated, Leadership in resistance and equally in light against Ku Kluxery and inevitably increasing fascism. Every discredited hate-monger in the country is beginning to think himself paged.

* * *

WE HAVE GOT TO WIN this fight in the light, not in the dark.

And our real enemies don't live here.

All over the nation, in spite of what John Knight presumes, lights of sympathy for the South are coming on — if we can just keep our own lights on. To keep them involves the twice-doubled job of (1) organizing for law and order while not forgetting resistance, and (2) fighting off the swarming fascists with one hand while holding the torch with the other. Since that is what most of us want it should be simpler than it seems.

* * *

"SILENCE AND SEPARATION . . ."

To keep silent, day after day, may be a good solution for things which are static. But never for things on the move, which are growing deeper and more fatal every day.

You can die holding your peace—or cause others to die. It is a thought for Mississippi's Gov. Coleman who thinks we should keep silent and separated. The NAACP isn't going to be silent and neither are the fascists.

INEZ ROBB—

Southern Opinion

The Delta Democrat-Times

HODDING CARTER
Editor and Publisher

JOHN T. GIBSON
General Manager

Greenville, Miss., Tuesday, February 28, 1956

Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. —Thomas Jefferson.

Two Mellow Notes

OF all the statements of various Negro leaders in the South and elsewhere, two made Sunday stood out as reflecting some maturity of thought.

First a Mississipi Negro lawyer braved possible denunciation at Charleston, S. C. to tell a regional conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that "all of the white people and 99 per cent of the Negroes believe that desegregation there (in Mississippi) is impossible," and that he was "not too sure that many of the Negroes in Mississippi want to be desegregated at this time."

Whatever else lawyer C. A. Hall said, he gave the NAACP a glance at the truth here.

Secondly, the leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott told his church congregation that the protest action there, started not because bus seats were segregated but because there was not a large enough "for colored" section reserved on the buses, should not be exploited "like the Emmett Till case in Mississippi was." He said he did not intend to "get rich" filling speaking invitations all over the country when "our job is here in Montgomery."

Here was another look at reality — the reality that people shamelessly profited from a tragedy that did both the Negro and the white tremendous damage in Mississippi and in the South.

Southern Opinion

Mississippi's Leading New
Clarion Ledger
Y Jackson, Mississippi, Tu

Campbell Says Racial Barriers' Elimination Must Come Gradually

2/28/56

PASADENA, Calif., Feb. 27. — (INS) — A. Boyd Campbell, Mississippi businessman and president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, said today that the elimination of racial barriers in the South must be done gradually.

Campbell said in Pasadena that solution to the segregation question in the South lies in the "enlightened leadership of men and women of good will from both races."

The Jackson, Miss., business executive declared that wages for white and Negro workers are equal in the South, but he added:

"A big problem is that young Negroes finish their schooling in their home states, then go north or to California, leaving us with only the elderly."

He said northern capital and labor is now developing southern resources and "we are getting along splendidly with no friction."

Campbell is in Pasadena to address the local Chamber of Commerce."

Southern Opinion

Southern Star

Coleman Says Integration Impossible In Mississippi

2/29/56 Atl World

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — "It is impossible to get a Negro into a white school in Mississippi."

That's the opinion of Gov. J. P. Coleman, an avowed foe of public school integration, who told a press conference last week that Mississippi would close its institutions of higher learning if they were forced to accept Negro students.

"The people would not support integrated schools," Coleman said, speaking for his state 1,600,000 citizens, half of whom are Negroes.

He told reporters that state colleges must be operated "with a decent regard for the people who support them."

"Right or wrong," he added, "It's an inescapable fact. To allow integration is to destroy schools."

The Mississippi Constitution already permits the legislature to close public elementary or high schools faced with accepted Negro students, Coleman said the legislature also would close any college faced with integration. Apprprations would be cut off, he added.

The governor charged the press with "making matters worse" by "continued agitation of the segregation) question."

He established a new press conference rule:

"We will not discuss segregation unless there is a new development to justify it, because the more you agitate this old sore the worse it gets."

Then he announced that he had signed two more bills to prevent the mixing of the Negro and white races in Mississippi. They would permit the choice of customers or clients and would require railroad and bus companies to provide separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers traveling within the Mississippi.

Earlier in the week, Coleman vetoed one of the bills he had originally sponsored -- a measure aimed at restricting civil rights investigations by the FBI.

He said in a veto message that "conditions most happily have changed for the better," since he had proposed the measure last September to the Legal Education Advisory Committee.

Coleman's original recommendation was made shortly after the justice department had asked for investigations in alleged civil rights violations during the 1955 Democratic primaries.

"Since that time, nowever, the U. S. Department of Justice declined to intervent in a case the occurrence of which we deeply regret, but which simply presented no ground for federal interference," he added.

This was an obvious reference to the Emmett Till murder case which the FBI had refuse to investigate after a state trial jury acquitted two white men of the slaying of the 14-year-old Negro youth.

---

its findings to the large committee. The larger committee will then make plans for combining provisions proposed by the Administration with those set forth in pending bills to bring out a measure which will be satisfactory to both political parties.

It will then move as rapidly as possible to get the bill through the committee and before the House for action, according to Cong. Hugh Scott.

Southern Opinion

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 1, 1956

Voice of the People

Letters to the Editor must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Dear Editor:

What is "Religious Emphasis Week"? Has it to do with segregation or integration, or racial opinions? Or has it to do with the feeding of human souls? How can a man belive he is "called of God to preach the Gospel — then refuse to refresh men's souls? Have these Priests and preachers gone on their knees and asked for God's guidance in this, and if so, was their refusal to participate in R.E.W. a result... did God actually say to them "Under the circumstances better forget men's souls". Who believes God guided them to forego His teachings?

To me it looks like a case of "follew the leader" ... right or wrong. Aren't these renegers doing just the thing that they take a stand against, in forcing their opinions on others?

It has often been said "gas and liquor" and "religion and politics" don't mix... well do they? Webster says "Religion is a system of faith and worship; piety; devotion; fidelity". Does this definition correspond with a broken promise to participate in Godly worship? Then can there possibly be right in students preparation for the R.E.W. where there will be those men of God opening with a plea for His blessings on this, or these meetings... read a text from His Holy Word... sing a hymn of praises to Him and then change from the atmosphere of peace and quit, prior to worshiping Him to a debate on the "Affairs of State?"

We should seek God's aid and guidance in all we do — yes! but when we come to His House (be that church, chapel or improvised space) to worship, let us worship!

If you have been blessed with the power of speech and intelligence of leadership in this Field, Men of God (if you are truly, 'Men of God') haven't you passed up a wonderful opportunity? Think it over and then pray over it.

Yours very truly
Li'gon F. Gardner
Jackson, Miss.

Faulkner Advises NAACP, Others To Slow Drive for Mixed Schools

Chr 3/1/56

Southern Opinion

NEW YORK, Feb. 29 (AP)—William Faulkner, Southern writer who was against compulsory segregation, says integration backers should slow up in their current campaign for immediate establishment of mixed schools in the South.

Writing in Life magazine, he says:

"I would say to the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) and all the organizations who would compel immediate and unconstitutional integration:

" 'Go slow now. Stop now for a time, a moment. You have the power now. You can afford to withhold for a moment the use of it as a force. You have done a good job, you have jolted your opponent off-balance and he is now vulnerable. But stop there for a moment; don't give him the advantage of a chance to cloud the issue by that purely automatic sentimental appeal to that same universal human instinct for automatic sympathy for the underdog simply because he is under.' "

Faulkner, a member of an old Mississippi family, says the Civil War failed to prove to the North "that the South will go to any length, even that fatal and already doomed one, before it will accept alteration of its racial condition by mere force of law or economic threat."

His article says swift integration and possible resulting violence might make the whole matter "one of the race," compelling the white minority like himself "to join the white segregation majority no matter how much we oppose the principle of inequality" and might force the Negro minority who want peace to join the Negro majority who advocate force.

"So the Northerner, the liberal, does not know the South," he writes. "He can't know it from his distance. He assumes that he is dealing with a simple legal theory and a simple moral idea. He is not. He is dealing with a fact: the fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity as to scorn the fact that it is a minority and which will go at any length and against any odds at this moment to justify and, if necessary, defend that condition and its right to it.

"So I would say to all the organizations and groups which would force integration on the South by legal process:

" 'Stop now for a moment. You have shown the Southerner what you can do and what you will do if necessary; give him a space in which to get his breath and assimilate that knowledge; to look about and see that (1) nobody is going to force integration on him from the outside; (2) that he himself faces an obsolescence in his own land which he cannot cure; a moral condition which not only must be cured but a physical condition which has got

Southern opinion

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, MARCH 2, 1956

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

The persistent old crone still barred his path. "Then buy a flower to celebrate your good fortune," she suggested.

WHY NOT TRY IT HERE?

There has been considerable publicity about the Crusade For Freedom and the importance of spreading the truth about America behind the Communist Iron Curtain. This project is worthwhile, deserving of public support, yet it is also needed here in the United States.

Our pet project is to have the Crusade For Freedom release a few "Truth Balloons" over non-Southern states, to penetrate the Time - Life - NAACP Iron Curtain. How can we expect foreigners to disbelieve Communist propaganda when so many Americans swallow Red-tinted lies about the South?

TOURIST ATTRACTIONS

Arrival of the 1956 tourist season reminds us that some Mississippi cities and towns need to make themselves more appealing to visitors. One practical way to do this is through tree-planting projects by clubs, groups and individual property owners. We hate to say it but some places in our state look ilke the hind side of Hades-drab, barren and quite depressing.

A bit of coordinated spadework can easily change all that. The planting of dogwood, magnolia, live oak, pear, peach and other typically-Southern trees can do wonders toward improving the looks of any community. The Highway Department is doing an excellent job in landscaping our roads but more local cooperation is needed.

SOME FINE EXAMPLES

Offhand, we think of quite a few places in Mississippi that are memorable to visitors because of stately tree-lined thoroughfares. Bolton, here in Hinds County, is a good example. So is Greenwood, Greenville, Hazlehurst, Brookhaven and Magnolia—just to name a few. Their beauty is not accidental but a result of planning.

Conversely, far too many towns have approaches littered with junk yards, juke joints, ramshackle cabins and plain-jane streets utterly devoid of trees or shrubbery. These offer little inducement to tourists. As a result, such communities fail to obtain a fair slice of the Mississippi tourist melon—now estimated at more than a quarter of a billion dollars annually.

TIME AND THE MAJOR

A reader of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser suggests that Time Magazine show a bit more courage in trying to tell Major Frederick Sullens how to run "Mississippi's Greatest Newspaper." As Aesop once said, it is easy to be brave from a safe distance.

Via the Montgomery daily, Leo B. Yelverton ends an open letter to Time by asking its editor to visit Jackson and low-rate Major Sullens to his face. "And when you do," Mr. Yelverton suggests, "be sure to have your shoes off. You will need a fast get-away."

AID FOR BUS COMPANY

Speaking of Montgomery, many white persons are quietly but effectively offering moral and financial support to the bus company now being boycotted by colored patrons in the Alabama capital.

Citizens have been dropping a dollar or more each week in bus company token boxes, although they don't ride the buses. These people board the buses, drop in their contributions and get off. Too bad this laudable movement can't be conducted on a Southwide basis.

Southern Opinion

THE CHATTANOOGA TIMES: CHATTANOOGA, TENN., SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1956.

LINCOLN IN ERROR, JUDGE DARR SAYS

Emancipation Proclamation Was Illegal at Time It Was Made, He Claims

President Abraham Lincoln's famous Emancipation Proclamation attempting to declare American slaves free men was a legal nullity, U.S. District Judge Leslie R. Darr declared yesterday in a speech before the Chattanooga Civitan Club.

The federal judge received national attention a short time ago in a speech here in which he contended that the states lost the rights they had reserved to themselves in the Constitution, when the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified. He also said that the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified at a time when Southern states were without representation in their own legislatures, much less in the Congress.

Following that speech Judge Darr has been receiving mail from throughout the country from persons taking one side or the other on the issues he raised. He delivered the speech as a "private citizen," the same role he assumed yesterday. He insisted that he was discussing the "legal aspects" of the issues and "I am not taking sides."

Rights Annulled

It is Judge Darr's position that the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment annulled the rights the states had reserved to themselves under the original Constitution. He said yesterday that every single amendment that has been added to the constitution, in a measure, has been an encroachment upon the rights the states reserved to themselves originally.

Discussing the Emancipation Proclamation, Judge Darr said that at the time President Lincoln published the proclamation —Jan. 1, 1863—slaves were private property. It took the Thirteenth Amendment, Judge Darr said, to remove slaves from the status of private property and give them citizenship. There was another time in history, Judge Darr recalled, when an effort was made to seize private property by presidential proclamation. That was during recent years when President Harry Truman sought to seize the steel mills of the country when a strike threatened to close them. The Supreme Court held that the President could not seize and confiscate property, even temporarily, by proclamation, Judge Darr said.

Discussing the right of freedom of speech Judge Darr declared that "in this country it is recognized that the dignity of one's right to freedom of speech must be assured" and added that actually the constitutional amendment making that guaranty "forbids the congress from doing anything that will inhibit that right." But explained that the inhibition is not absolute and quoted the famous legal principle announced by the late Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the Supreme Court, as bearing out that contention. Justice Holmes said, Judge Darr recalled, that "Freedom of speech gives no person the right to shout fire in a crowded theater."

FUGITIVE SENDS WORD

Winston, Top Red, Says He Will Surrender Monday

NEW YORK, March 2 (AP)—Henry Winston, last of the fugitive top leaders of American communism, announced last night that he will surrender for imprisonment next Monday.

He followed the same formula used by Gilbert Green who surrendered last Monday—addressing his notice in a letter to newspapers.

Green and Winston, both under sentences of five years in prison for revolutionary conspiracy, were among four top Reds who fled in 1951 rather than go to prison.

The other two, Gus Hall and Robert G. Thompson, later were seized by the FBI.

C3/4/56 Clarion Ledger Jackson Daily News

Our Mississippi lawmakers have asked for the restoration of the Democratic rule requiring a majority of two-thirds for the nomination of a candidate for President, but it is akin to a bald man asking for the restoration of hair on his head. When that rule was abandoned the South lost a power that may never be regained.

* * *

When the congregation of Jackson's super-sized First Baptist church wants a revival it is not necessary to send elsewhere for an evangelist, its beloved pastor, Dr. Douglas Hudgins, being one of the top-flight evangelists of the nation. Dr. Hudgins starts a series of evangelistic meetings this morning, to continue throughout the current week and he will no doubt be greeted by large congregations.

* * *

The shallow reasoning of Senator Wayne Morse, who opposed Senator Eastland's promotion to the chairmanship of the Senate judiciary committee, was strikingly shown when he contended that the Senate owes an obligation to the Supreme Court to have a judiciary chairman "without bias or partiality." The Senate owes nothing whatever to the Supreme Court except contempt for that integration decision.

* * *

"Dixie Demagogue: The story of Senator Eastland," is the screaming headline in the February 13th issue of the New York Post. Jim ought to accept as a fulsome compliment any criticism from the New York Post. That paper is a notorious NAACP and Communist sympathizer.

* * *

Proof that the NAACP is being used as a front for Communist activities can no longer be doubted. Eighteen members of the NAACP are known Communists. The NAACP is allowing itself to become part and parcel of the Communist conspiracy to overthrow the democratic governments of this nation and its sovereign states. Through its activities, the NAACP is fomenting strife and discord between the white and negro races in the South and is disrupting relations between these races, which heretofore have been—and at present are—harmonious and friendly in every respect. These activities, carried to their ultimate conclusion, can only result in conflict, bloodshed and internal revolution, delivering this nation into the hands of international Communism.

* * *

Let this be said in behalf of an overwhelming majority of more than 900,000 Negroes in Mississippi: They are not being swayed to any serious extent by the mouthings of NAACP leaders, and it is still a fact that they prefer their own schools to any plan of integration. There are bonds of lasting friendship between white people and the best type of Negroes in Mississippi that cannot be broken.

* * *

Southern opinion

CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., TUESDAY MORNING, MARCH 6, 1956

Voice of the People

Dear Editor:

While spending a delightful weekend in your city I was happy to read a copy of your fine paper.

Along with numerous other good features I read a letter from Mr. A. S. Coody of your city.

Since I teach during part of the year in the schools of Moss Branch, Arkansas, in the general field of history I was most interested in what Mr. Coody said. You know we are having some integration in Arkansas. I am dettrmined to resist the undermining of my pure, white Southern blood to the last ditch. Because of this fact and the fact that I am in a position to teach so many young, pliable minds in my life work which truly I consider a mission of the Lord, I would like amplification of Mr. Coody's remarks. I should like to be able to tell my children what reputable historians they can quote on the matter Mr. Coody mentioned. That is the fact that "no nation and no people have ever survived mongrelization." As he so truthfully says, "We can call the roll of all the states whose bones bleach upon the sands of time, and the fatal blow was mongrelization. Whether it be Sumeria, Assyria, Egypt, Greece, Rome, or Carthage, the answer is the same." Besides being good writing this is, of course, true. But my point is I have some smart students who expect me to prove everything I say. Therefore Mr. Coody, come to my rescue and give me aid in this segregation battle! Let me know what historians you consulted to give you these great truths.

Yours truly,
Lillie Belle Hartfield

Dear Miss Hartfield:

You present two questions; one, what historians you may quote that no nation may survive mongrelization; and, two, what historians I have consulted. As a history teacher, you know that historians say they seek facts only, and do not express opinion, nor state conclusion or causes for what has happened.

Until recently there has been little clarity about race, and the issue is still much clouded. Writers confuse race with nationality, or language, or general culture. We may begin with some facts. A people who can create a civilization can maintain it. When a civilization perishes, it is evident that its creators also perished. A people who cannot create a civilization cannot maintain it. A people will find the cultural level to which they are adapted. This may be seen in many places in the world today.

You will find the History of Herodotus helpful in learning the races in the world around Greece, about 450 B. C., the date of the history. The history of England by Greene is excellent, especially the first hundred pages, where we learn of the origin of the jury system, parliaments, and representative government. Beowolf is recorded as saying: "Fifty winters have I ruled this people, and no folk king dare meet me in the sword strife; never have I defrauded a kinsman; never wronged a fellow man; never sware I falsely; and I have repaid friend and foe more than I owed." (Quote from memory) Will Durant in (Caesar and Christ) tells of the motley horde which came into Rome. He says what would have been the result "if" Rome had done about a dozen things FOR these comers. But it was not done and the fertile slaves took the sterile master's house.

An indispensible book is The Color Line by Dr. W. B. Smith (deceased) of Tulane University. Henry George in Progress and Poverty has a chapter entitled, How Modern Civilization May Decline. Gibbon's Rome and Seven Great Monarchies by Rawlinson are good.

Some other books are Dickens' A Child's History of England, The Cult of Equality by Stuart O. Landry, The Passing of a Great Race by Madison Grant and the Reforging of America by Lothrop Stoddard. If obtainable, Races of Mankind by Louis Agazziz is fine.

We can see the evidence of mongrelization in all parts of the world today. Just drive across the Rio Grande, or visit Cuba or Puerto Rico. Of course Haiti is the classic example of a colored race taking over a ready-made civilization. And I think we can see the process well under way in New York city, Chicago, Washington and some other large American cities.

With best wishes, I am,
Cordially and sincerely,
A. S. Coody.

CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 8, 1956

Voice of the People

U.S. Senator Herbert Lehman
Washington
District of Columbia
My dear Senator Lehman:

The people of Mississippi have worthily bestowed upon Senator James O. Eastland the greatest honours within their power to confer. No doubt, still further and greater honours await him in the future. Many compliments have been paid this gentleman for his outstanding ability, his integrity, and his loyalty to the United States of America; and to his zeal in the fight to save the people of the United States from complete mongrelization; and which blight now obtains t oa shameful degree in the Empire State.

But the greatest compliment which has ever been, or which can ever be, paid to this distinguished Senator from Mississippi, is the fact that you judged him unworthy of the Chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee; and that you, Senator Lehman, urged his defeat and voted accordingly. In the estimation of Mississippians a vote for him by you would have cast a real suspicion and a grave doubt upon his character and leadership. Yea, it would have been a withering blight in the estimation of my fellow-Mississippians and who hold him in such high esteem.

You are quoted as saying, in speaking of our distinguished Senator Eastland, that he is "a symbol of defiance of the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court." Senator, in that statement you are so damned right, tho it was not your intention so to be. Any interpretation given by that bunch of misfits anytime, anywhere and on any subject is likely to be far from a correct one. When a bunch of would-be-judges resort to citing for their authority Sears - Roebuck Catalogues and Communist negro authors on works relating to races instead of citing decided cases, then it is high-time we resist with every legal power we have. Mississippians back Senator Eastland to the hilt; and they give not a tinkers dam what you and your numerous negro cohorts and associations may think about it.

As long as there are any Mississippians left to raise a hand or a voice your black Africans will never enter the white schools of the State of Mississippi. And you can put that in your blow-pipe and smoke it.

Senator, you are apparently hell-bent on ramming your negroes down the throats of Mississippians. And to this end you apparently advocate the appeal to force. Well, if that is what you want, Senator, and if nothing else will satiate this wild desire of yours, bundle up your negro cohorts, constitute your self as their leader, and come on down to the hospitable State of Mississippi, and try to impose your will upon us. You know, you damned yankees tried that in 1861. And we received you warmly and with such hospitality as you deserved. So much so that many of you have remained with us; and are now peacefully pushing up the daisies on many a sun-kist hill and battle field. It would probably embarrass you if I mentioned them all.

Senator, you run things as you like in your New York State. If you want your State further mongrelized than it now is, Mississippians will not desire to do any thing to prevent you from having the full fruition of your taste in this regard. I assure you, my dear sir, you have damned little influence in Mississippi, and, so it seems, on the Judiciary Committee.

Truly,
Dick C. McCool
Canton, Miss.

Southern Opinion

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, MARCH 9, 1956

Voice of the People

Dear Editor:

Why this feeling of relief and joy in the hearts of Mississippians because "Ike" has decided to run again for the high office which he holds? From the way I see it, any Mississippian that votes for "Ike" after the last four years of his administration is nothing more than a Scalawag. And a "scalawag" is not a nice word in our language, or rather did not formerly have a good connotation.

I noticed in Friday's issue in Purser Hewitt's column a reference to a club called "Citizens for Eisenhower." Now, ain't that just for the birds? Those Northern, no-good, rabble-rousing, carpet-bagging, cotton-picking Yankees have even come down here in Mississippi and started a club, and they have the audacity to think that honest, hardworking Mississippians are going to fall for their bunk. Baloney!

And I say "baloney" because every red-blooded, pure-thinking, self-respecting, honorable Southerner and Mississippian, knows that Dwight D. Eisenhower was the responsible one behind the "Black Monday" decision of May 8, 1954. It takes little gumption to know who is responsible for the decision when you remember that it was "Ike" who appointed that pseudo-judiciary Chief Justice (justice?) Earl Warren to the court, and what his vote-getting stand was.

We broke with the Democratic party because of the stand that they took on State's Rights and Civil Rights—but the Democratic party ouly talked about "reform." It was the Republicans, "Ike" and his horde of Vote-sekers that not only talked about "reform," but actually tried to do something about it.

All you "Citizens for Ike" had better stay away from my door! And you had better not approach any true Southerners with your "Ike" proposals, either.

Miss. State College Student

Dear Editor:

Oberlin College is preparing for its twenty-third Mock Political Convention to be held in May. This year, for the second time in its ninety-six-year history, the convention will be Democratic, a decision acclaimed by Stevenson, Harriman, Kefauver, and Butler. This convention, covered in previous years by radio, television, newspapers, and national magazines, will be as realistic as possible with the usual nominations, party platform debate (with pressure groups to influence it), favorite son candidates, and the usual festivities that accompany a convention. Robert Meyner, Governor of New Jersey, will keynote and Neuburger will be permanent chairman.

In the interest of realism and to inform a campus predominantly Northern in background, of the South's potentials, problems, and point of view, we of the Mississippi State Delegation are seeking information as to Mississippi's political complexion. There is only one Mississippian on campus; therefore, although she is a member of our delegation, our first-hand information is rather limited. In order that we can give Mississippi's stand an accurate representation, we need current information. What do Mississippians's think now, about the policies which the Democratic party should include in its platform? For example, how do they feel about nullification of the Supreme Court's segregation decision, relegation of the Supreme Court to its historic position, or flexible price supports? Any suggestions of persons we might contact, literature we might read, or speakers we might invite to our campus would be helpful. The more information we can obtain the more effectively we can impress this predominantly Northern campus with the South's point of view.

Extensive publicity will be required to acquaint the students with the South's position. Publicity such as printed and mimeographed literature, posters, and if financial support is sufficient, a Southern speaker. A speaker, we feel, would be by far the most effective publicity, but the committee's extremely limited personal resources can not come close to financing one. By work the committee can make a little money go a long way, but it can do little to spread the South's point of view without any money.

We thank you very much for whatever information or assistance you can provide us.

Sincerely yours,
Stanley I. Richards
Secretary
Mississippi State Delegation
Oberlin College
Oberlin, Ohio

CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., THURSDAY MORNING MAY 10, 1956

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by Tom Ethridge

UNDERGROUND — The State College Reflector, student newspaper, quotes Negro agitator T. R. M. Howard who recently told a state audience of alleged colored leaders here, "If they outlaw the NAACP, let's go underground."

Then the college editor jokingly comments, "Keep up your trouble-making, Dr. Howard, and you'll wind up underground, all right — about 6 feet to be exact."

He won't of course. Any agitator, however inflamatory or asinine his utterances may be, and must enjoy the rights of free speech with full protection of the law here in Mississippi.

A Southern Editor on Integration

In Which Hodding Carter Discusses His Homeland

AUSTIN

Hodding Carter is one of those fellows the newspaper leads identify as "Pulitzer-prize winning." What he says would be listened to, therefore, regardless of what it was. Since he is also a leader of a field of moderate liberals in the South, and since he has stood his ground where it is hardest to do so, in the Mississippi Delta, he was listened to even more than might have been customary as he made more specific the meaning of the "gradualism" he advocates on a recent swing through Texas.

3/14/56 Dallas Observer

In a speech before a gathering of University of Texas students and faculty, he said it would have been allright with him if the Supreme Court had waited 20 years before it handed down its integration ruling.

"It's not what I think about what it should have been, but when it should have been and if it should have been," he told a questioner. "I would have liked to see the decision not come for even another 20 years of the progress we were having."

The decision, he believes, has brought to a halt at least two decades of racial progress. It had "abstract morality" on its side, and there was "an international need." "I can't quarrel with the morals of the decision," he said. But now Southerners should stop arguing the point, accept the remoteness of integration in the Deep South, and work for better schools and a sounder economy, he advised.

The Deep South states will resist integration "for a long, long time," he said. "Very few Negroes will be in the white schools in the South when and if it does happen."

CARTER is a short, pudgy man, light on his feet, and very serious, though he is given to an occasional anecdote with a serious point. He was introduced simply as "the South's fighting editor."

When the Mississippi Legislature, by a heavy vote, had called him a liar, he called them all liars back. "That's Mississippi," he said.

He said that from his vantage point of 20 years as editor and publisher of a small city daily, he had watched "a warm and hopeful and heartening transition in the South," but that since the Supreme Court's integration decision, especially in the Deep South where Negroes are in a majority, there has been "a tragic and accelerating deterioration in race relations."

Since he moved to Mississippi, he said, there has been a revolution of mechanization on the farm and industrialization of the city, along with other changes, some social, some political, some moral: "a growing awareness of man's responsibility for his fellow man, a growing if grudging willingness to share human rights with another." He conceded some of this progress has been with prodding and by appeals to "something other than our morality," but by and large the changes were accepted willingly "until the Supreme Court handed down its historic decision."

What brought the South—the Deep South, the "black belt"—to its present pass? he asked. What are its legacies, both good and bad? He suggested some areas of cultural contradiction, with "the presence, in considerable numbers, about one out of three, and under long established and resented patterns, of the Negro in the Deep South" as the key to each of them.

First, he said, the South was one of the earliest cultures in the U.S., cosmopolitan, urbane, but it was at the same time "a frontier society for good and bad." This was because of its overdependence on a primitive, one-crop economy which rested "on the backs of Negroes, slave and free."

Second, the South has the most homogeneous group in the U. S., with common occupations and long citizenship, yet it still has "the largest unassimilated and unassimilatable, in the ascertainable future, racial group in the country." The Southern Negro has remained "a person apart," he said. (In a question period, he alluded to a "historical tendency" of "lights" to voluntarily "herd" with others likewise "light.")

Third, the people of the South love land and the home place more than those of other areas, yet in this region there are more landless people and land waste than in any other. This again is ascribed to the one-crop system resting on cheap Negro labor.

FOURTH, while they are "a kindly folk to the stranger," Southerners are "the most suspicious of any Americans of outsiders who come to challenge their economic, social, or political patterns." "We pride ourselves on our gentility. In Mississippi it's said a man will be polite to you until he kills you. Yet we have the most violence statistically in the country." The South has developed a "dual system of justice" under which economic and social conditions breed crime among Negroes and the white group is indifferent to crimes committed by Negroes against Negroes. In Mississippi in 1955, for example, 20 white persons were killed by white persons, but 186 Negroes were killed by Negroes.

Fifth, Southerners have been patriotic Americans except for the four years of the civil war, "a patriotic, martial people," and yet they are "most defiant of the national authority"—but only when the racial systems have been threatened.

Seventh, Southerners take politics more seriously, intensely, and personally, and yet they have set more obstacles in the way of voters than other states — residence requirements, requirements for interpretations of the Constitution, and the like.

Finally, Southern individualism is strong, a concept of personal honor persists, yet in political and social thinking Southerners have permitted themselves to become "the most regimented" people in the country by the promiscuous use of the accusation, "Subversive!"

Carter ranged over a wide area on this last point—from condemnation of the McCarran Act to assertion of the fact that by 1948 either law or the Republican and Democratic platforms embodied many of the proposals of a leading "subversive" of the twenties, Norman Thomas. Carter said he was told he could not address the faculty at Mississippi State because of his convictions about integration "gradualism," and he pled for a lowering of the "barriers we have put up among ourselves against any intelligent discussion of the (racial) problem in the South."

Southern Opinion

Southern Opinion

LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, MARCH 16, 1956

Voice of the People

Dear Editor:

Since the Supreme Court ruling on racial segregation we are being subjected to all kinds of arguments concerning race superiority. And it is generally admitted that the Bible, our only source of divine authority, throws but little light on the subject, other than to say that all men were made of the same life giving blood, and were given equal standing in the sight of God. However, we do find a clear statement recorded in Acts 17, 26; to the affect that men of all nations were not only created of one blood, but that the bounds of their habitation were also determined by God even before their appointed time. And elsewhere it is stated that they were authorized to bring forth each after their own kind, which would indicate that the different races comprising the nations of earth were intended to be segregated in the beginning. And if this be true, it would be reasonable to conclude that any subsequent attempt to mongrelize would be in violation of God's natural laws.

It would seem that the Negroes of this Country would be proud of the natural color of their race, and of their equal standing before God, and would want to keep it that way, instead of trying to make themselves look and act more like the white race. Examine any Negro publication and you will find it filled with advertising for all kinds of preparations for making hair straight and skin light. Ebony, Tan, Brown and similar names are being used to glamourize the lighter shades, and many are working day and night in an effort to bring about, through legislation or otherwise, a closer mixing of the races, while the genuine black man, the only true representative of his race, looks on in disgust.

We are taught that to be found guilty of willfully or purposely violating any of God's natural laws, could prove to be a serious thing, and if it is being done in this case, it would be well for those who are responsible to take heed.

W. D. M.
Jackson, Miss.

Dear "Student":

In your letter to The Clarion Ledger, you certainly hung the correct tag on the citizens for Eisenhower, whether they be the imported or home grown variety of scalawag.

The tag shall soon be placed on their big toe, politically speaking, because the republican party is soon to be confined to the political morgue. The republican party may win this election on the "fools gold" glitter of Eisenhower, but it will tax the last of their strength and will be their final death rattle and struggle.

However, with the three "highbrows" running for the nomination on the democratic ticket, it makes little difference which party wins the election this year, for the now temporarily degraded office of the presidency.

This, the most exalted office in the world, being degraded, because the candidates are "crawling 'on their belly's," through the mud, begging for the negro vote.

One of them a traitor to the principles of his own Southland. He would sell out the white people of the South, in fact the whole nation, by catering and kowtowing to the demands of special privileges from the minority group of negroes, as against the CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS of the majority.

We can depend on the Democratic party keeping control of the Congress, so the South can keep control of the Senate, thereby keeping control of unconstitutional legislature, aimed primarily against the South, but actually against the entire nation.

This is a case, of what hurts the South, will hurt the nation. After 1960.

That will be the death knell of the Democratic party as such, as now controlled by the ADA and other left wing, communistic elements.

Then we will have a Congress, controlled by men who are ALL WHITE.

Then we will have a President elected by coalition of southern democrats, and a new party in the north, pulling white people out of both the Republican party and the communistic ridden northern wing of the Democratic party.

"Student", please write and give me your name and address. Write c-o The Clarion — Ledger — to D.M.C.

Atl Jnl.

DNESDAY, MARCH 21, 1956 23

Many Negroes Oppose School Integration Now

Editor's Note: This is another dispatch by the United Press Atlanta Bureau chief, who is making a tour of the South to report the desegregation controversy.

By AL KUETTNER

JACKSON, Miss. (UP)—Does the Negro in the segregated states want to intermix with the whites? Is he ready for integration? Will it help his race?

During a 2,500-mile tour of Dixie, I have talked with dozens of Negroes about just that. They ranged from NAACP leaders to cotton field hands, from bankers to a barber whose customers earn 30 cents an hour.

There is a big division of opinion among the South's Negroes. By no means all of them want integration, even in the schools.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People represents one element. It wants immediate integration.

There is another huge segment of Negro population that still can't comprehend all the controversy. This is the uneducated element. And if they have any views on desegregation, they are afraid to speak out.

In still another group are Negroes, including many responsible leaders, who confess the belief that integration would be a mistake.

Spokesmen for the NAACP admit privately that lethargy and outright opposition from their own race are among their most formidable problems. White Southerners are trying to capitalize on it in their determined campaign to keep up the racial barriers.

Whether for or against integration, Negroes have it better today than ever in their history. Largely because of pressure, they have secured some fine schools, even in rural areas, and won notable civil rights victories. Their wages are far below the white average, but they are rising steadily.

Naturally the least agitation for integration comes from areas that have done the most for Negroes. Here in Jackson, for example, the head of the NAACP, Medgar Evars, says there is no big drive for integration "because emotions are too high."

But actually the big factor is that Jackson, under Mayor Allen C. Thompson, past president of the American Municipal Assn., has given Negroes a Midas treasure of schools and recreation facilities compared to what they had a fey years ago.

In some areas Negroes backing integration have been rejected by their own people. There's an example of that in Vicksburg, Miss., the famous old "Gibraltar of the Confederacy," where three out of every five residents are Negroes.

One of the most outspoken Southern Negro critics of integration is J. W. Jones, a New Albany, Miss., newspaper publisher.

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING, MARCH 26,

Mississippi Notebook

by TOM ETHRIDGE

CONVERSATION PIECE

The celebrated Autherine Lucy case is still a favorite topic of conversation here in Mississippi. The Brookhaven Leader-Times reports a local drug store discussion of Autherine's statement when she arrived in New York — "I am calm on the outside but all messed up on the inside."

Which prompted a member of the Brookhaven discussion group to remark: "If Autherine had returned to the University of Alabama, she'd have been all messed up on the outside too."

MEDALS FOR REBELS ?

Instead of expelling Alabama campus rebels, the Winston County Journal at Louisville believes the kids should have a medal. "Had it not been for Leonard Wilson and other pro-segregation students," the Journal points out, "Autherine Lucy would be going to [illegible] with them right now."

The Louisville weekly further observes, "too many of our leaders and so-called brilliant men have lost the sap in their spines and are letting the ranting of the NAACP, civil rights organizations and the Supreme Court scare them."

AN HONEST WOMAN

While quoting from the Winston County Journal, consider the sad plight of a game warden's wife, as reported in the Louisville newspaper. Game Warden Lester Hamill caught a man with 150 white perch and catfish and immediately confiscated same.

His good wife looked at all those fish and her mouth watered mightily. Realizing that she couldn't legally have even one teeny-weeny fish, she opened two cans of sardines for family dinner — and eating them made her dreadfully sick. The big batch of fish was turned over to the county home.

In other words, the reward for honesty in this case was violent nausea.

CAMPUS COMRADES

Evangelist Billy Graham says that Communism is making gains among young intellectuals, particularly college students, in Asia.

Don't look now Billy, but this also seems true right here in the United States.

opinion
southern

Page 8 Delta Democrat-Times
Greenville, Miss. March 25, 1956

Letter To Editor

Southern Opinion

Reader Submits Creed For 'The New South'

To the Editor:

May I submit this "Creed For The New South?"

I BELIEVE - that in this, God's world, all races of men share equally in His love;

- in the universal brotherhood of men, as children of God:
- in the United States of America and in the equality, under law of her individual citizens of whatever race:
- that all races of men CAN live together in peace, with mutual respect and in growing harmony, if we do not succumb to fear, hysteria and panic:
- that it is the duty of all thinking Christians, of whatever race, to take a positive stand now, that we may preserve the gains toward racial harmony which have marred the past decades:

AND SO BELIEVING-

I RESOLVE - to be thoughtful in my use of words and phrases, that I give no needless hurt; to omit racial jokes; to discuss no tensions or incidents in the presence of children, and thus add fuel to the growing flames of intolerance:

to respect every man for his character, ability and achievement and to judge no man by race or color:

to be as courteous in my daily contacts as I would wish to be treated with courtesy, remembering that those repeatedly faced with discourtesy become sensitive and resentful.

IF I AM A NEGRO, I FURTHER RESOLVE-to be proud of my race for its many accomplishments, but to realize that I must, by my own life, earn the respect of my fellowman to be willing to be judged as an individual, accepting personal honors without racial arrogance and censure without blaming my failure on racial prejudice:

to realize that intolerance is a double-faced curved mirror which distorts the truth from whichever side it is viewed.

Mrs. C. M. Chauncey
Apalachicola, Florida

At Courts
3/27/56

Racial Ills Blamed on Do-Gooders

WASHINGTON, March 26 (AP) — Sen. Stennis (D-Miss) said tonight that "carpet baggers and do-gooders" are causing rapid deterioriation of relations between whites and Negroes in the South.

"I have never heard any responsible leader of the colored or white race in the South say that the ultimate goal of their social relations or their race relations was to have integration educationally, socially or otherwise," he said.

COURT OPENED WAY

Stennis said the impact of the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools opened the way for "outsiders and do-gooders" to try to convert the South to their way of thinking. He added:

"They will see the futility of their effort and then the leaders of the white and colored races will return to the scene of their labors and start building again from those smouldering ruins, and they will rebuild."

Stennis, interviewed on a radio program (Mutual — Reporter's Roundup), said, "we insist that the only pattern that can be successful is a pattern that we have a part in making."

MUCH INTERESTED

"The colored people are very much interested in a continuation of their greatly improved school programs, their better teachers pay, better transportation and better schools," he said.

"...they are not pressing for this so-called recognition or the technical right to go in the other schools."

Clarion Ledger
March 27-56
Southern Spirit

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

"LIMBER-TAIL MULES"

You ever hear of a "Limber-Tail Mule"?

If so, you're really from the country. Personally, it's a new term to us.

A writer in the Georgia Tribune employs that picturesque phrase in comparing the "limber-tail mule" with Southerners opposed to resisting integration.

"NO GOOD TO ANYBODY"

"The majority of older brethren knows what a 'limber-tail mule' used to be," the Georgia editor remarks. "When a mule trader could take a mule's tail and bend it back—without difficulty or resistance—he knew then and there that the mule was no good to anybody."

Humm. Is your tail good and stiff today, podner?

"STINKING ALBATROSS"

Speaking of name-calling, the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier of March 6 offered this timely editorial comment:

"At the Civil Rights assembly in Washington, NAACP leader Clarence Mitchell called Mississippi's Senator Eastland a 'stinking albatross'. . . .

"The 'liberal' Northern press probably will not deplore Mitchell's bad manners. But we tremble to think how the mighty New York Times would thunder if Eastland should describe Mitchell as a 'stinking black bird.'"

MODERN PARADOX

Further quoting the Charleston editorial: "No race on earth has ever been so sensitive about being called names as are the 'new Negroes' of today. They are so sensitive that they object to spirituals in which Negroes are called 'darkies.'

'They have tabooed such bedtime stories as 'Little Black Sambo'. And when a colored fighter appears in a boxing bout, it is considered bad manners for the announcer to refer to him as a Negro. . .

STILL QUOTING—

"The truth is that Negroes do not even like to be called Negroes. . . .In view of all this, it seems paradoxical that Clarence Mitchell himself emerges as a rude name-caller.

"An albatross," the Charleston editorial concludes, "is a white bird—however 'stinking.' Does part of Mitchell's hate for Senator Eastland stem from the fact that Eastland too is white?"

LOGICAL VIEWPOINT

Here's a letter from Hon. Garvie Walker of Savage, Maryland, offering a simple but penetrating observation on Interposition, — reduced to its simplest terms. And we quote:

"As I see it, the only difference between the 5th and 10th amendments is that one protects the rights of individuals and the other protects the rights of states.

"If subversives, Communists, fellow travelers and various criminals can protect themselves by invoking the 5th Amendment, why can't the states—whose great majority consists of patriotic citizens—be protected from illegal and compulsory racial decay by invoking the 10th amendment?"

It's a fair question, Mr. Walker, one to which Southern states are seeking an answer through acts of Interposition.

ALABAMA IN DOGHOUSE

During the awful Till mess, we complained privately to a leading Mississippi editor that other Southern states were powerfully well-behaved—when some distraction was sorely needed to take the spotlight off Mississippi.

Times have changed. Comes now the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser to register a similar complaint, as follows. . . .

"A NEW SCAPEGOAT"

Remember back in the good old days when Mississippi was the target for all attacks on the Deep South and we all were thankful for our sister state to the West?

Times have changed, as witness the following from The New York Times:

..Phoenix, Ariz.,—The Giants and the Indians, aware of the tense racial situation, have cancelled their exhibition baseball game on April 10 at Meridian, Miss. Both teams have Negro players.

"Too close to Alabama," a spokesman for the New York club said

Southern Courier

Gradually

Item

To the Editor: 2-29-56

The Davidson County School Board (Nashville, Tenn.) is considering a plan to desegregate public schools a year at a time beginning with the first grade.

Under this plan it would take 12 years to desegregate the school system, but it might be accelerated if there were no incidents during the early years.

I had this same idea and was hoping someone in New Orleans would suggest such a plan. Young children don't have the prejudices that the older students acquire from their parents.

Desegregation appears to be a moral problem. Let's make an effort to solve it ourselves.

A JEFFERSON PARISH HOUSEWIFE.

Unmoved

To the Editor:

Our honorable Archbishop's letter on segregation leaves us unmoved!

He is unrealistic and he and the Editor of Catholic Action are adding to the turmoil in no real spiritual way. The Church is to save souls, not put them beyond the pale by ex-communication. . . . In theory only are all men created equal. . . . How can racial segregation be morally wrong, all of a sudden, when it has been with us since the first boatload came over from Africa?

* * *

SEGREGATION has always been practiced. People of wealth or distinction do not send their children to common schools. . . . In Catholic hospitals one gets what one pays for — different care, different wards, different floors. No one objects. It makes sense.

However it is, in principle, segregation.

One does not knock at exclusive private clubs and demand admission, even though one does have a white face, and the background. Clubs reserve their right to choose their membership. We do the same with our friends, our schools. The white race built their Catholic schools and colleges long before the Archbishop of New Orleans and Mr. Everett arrived on the scene.

NEW ORLEANS ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Major Sullens' Mail

Comment from Readers

(Please Sign Your Name. Keep Letters Brief)

A Salty Letter To Digest Editor

E. F. Stubblefield, prominnent citizen of Indianola, has sent the following salty letter to the editors of the Readers Digest:

Indianola, Miss.
March 23, 1956.

Editors, Dewitt Wallace &
Lila A. Wallace,
The Readers Digest
Pleasantville, N. Y.

Dear Mr. & Mrs. Wallace:

"Approved Killing in Mississippi," was just what you were seeking, I am sure. It placed you in a group with Life, Time, and Look, sensational. All of you have a printing Metropolis that you use to throw your slurs southward never realizing that, "Learning, without thought is useless."

Thurgood Marshall, the $15,000.00 per year counsellor, has also sold the Wallaces a bill of goods for the NAACP. Don't be ashamed, he has sold others: the Carters and Faulkners in Mississippi, the Orgills, Clements, Kefauvers, Khrushchevs, Malenkovs, Bunches, and others of like nature and ilk.

The NAACP is growing large and has everyone running, doesn't it, Mr. Wallace? We who do protest are hotheads, aren't we? The $10,000,000.00 program of "Free By 63" should be enough to make us run. We are hard-headed, for they even show us that only when whites and negroes mingle freely in school, church, social activities and marriage will they not tend to keep to themselves.

Charles Diggs, son of a crooked politician, commands the FBI to see about us. Adam Clayton Powell tells us that nations throughout the world look to them for leadership, but still we run not. In the end we will run, though, run the same as we ran at Richmond, at Vicksburg, and Gettysburg.

Mr. Wallace, what would you do do if rape came into your family? Would you run? How is the population arranged in Pleasantville? If you were in Newark, Washington, or Chicago would you send a loved one out at night? We still do, and we wish to maintain that way of life. Any other way is racial suicide.

Emmett Till was out for rape that night; he grabbed a wife belonging to a white person; he was not an innocent child, and he forgot, "When in Rome do as Romans do." In justice to us, did you ever stop to think that had that been a white man attacking a Negro man's wife that we would all have felt that he, the Negro, would have a perfect right to defend his home; even if it meant killing?

We do not believe in integration, we feel that Polly Ann Hudson and Autheine Lucy should seek out their own people. As for our schools, churches, homes and socials, we do not intend to integrate at all. Trouble will have to seek us out, as we aren't looking for it. We are "At Home" and bothering no-one. On the other hand, should an undesirable — be he black, red, or green—move next door, I seriously doubt that the whole neighborhood would move fifteen blocks over and leave him with that many blocks to Africanize.

The NAACP brags of growing and state they collected $634,756.00 in 1955 and that they have 80,104 members in Virginia, Louisiana, North Carolina, Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, (where is Texas?) and Tennessee. Now let's say these same states (still waiting for Texas) have a population of 25,000,000 people. Politicians should look at these figures, because if we have skimmed off the skum then that leaves us 24,919,896 good, white and black Southerners. It could be that Senator Lehman needs to see these figures, being a politician he likes to look at numbers. It could dawn on him now useless his demands are in this direction.

Now Mr. Wallace, if you have enough of quoting William Brad- [illegible] That man is a General in every sense of the word. He knows when he is out-maneuvered. He won't take it lying down. He is parrying for time, changing tactics, bringing up new and more potent reserves, along with his big guns for the coup de grace.

Billy Graham did not visit the White House to get a golf game His visit preceeded the good feelings and understandings the president found for us. Then too, the unholy, Morse, Humphries and Lehman didn't stop having verbal hemorages for nothing.

We of this good Bible belt have based our stand on the segregation issue on what we believe to be righteous principals, godly traditions. The enemy knows that.

If we do have "niggers-in-the-woodpile", strange latent murderers lurking in the darkness of our understanding, just waiting and sweating out the time when they may plunge a dagger in our backs here at home, we might be in more danger than we think.

How would we react to great inter-racial revivals in the name of Christ right here in our Southland? Would it not be good generalship to attack us in our most vulnerable spot? Are there preachers low enough down to cooperate with great preachers like Graham in such subversion? It would be subversion wouldn't it?

I live away up right at the Tennessee line, and we get your paper a day late. I am just mentioning what I had on my mind. My neighbors don't think it can happen to us. I don't trust anything north of the Mississippi line. If there is such a danger, I hope you or some one will do something about it.

Most Respectfully,
C. C. Smith,
Dumas, Miss.

'Frisco Paper Makes Him Mad

San Francisco, Calif.

Editor, Daily News: I am sure you know Mr. Hearst, editor of the Examiner here in San Francisco. I take his paper, also I get my Jackson Daily News.

I get mad every day I can hardly go to work. Every body here is Negro crazy. I have to ride with them and eat with them.

I am enclosing a picture of Kefauver who was here last week.

He is shown in the middle of Fillimore street, the same as Farish street in Jackson.

I am a very close friend of Jim Eastland.

I have read your paper for 30 years and always [illegible] and direct its subversive activities. This is why various organizations not officially cited as "subversive" consistently "follow the Communist line." The above-named organizations all have top personnel with Red records.

There are at least 25 other pro-integration organizations (mostly with "Negro" leaders) of which 21 have been officially cited as "Communist" or "Communist - front" which are believed effective units of the pro - negro segment of the Red Revolution against America.

The Communist aims are: 1—To stir up dissension and sectional strife between races and in churches, education and communities. 2—To promote racial mixing to mongrelize the white race and weaken the U. S.

To prevent this insidious Red drive from destroying our free Republic patriotic citizens must organize for immediate militant action and broadcast the true facts throughout the nation.

Stanley F. Morse.
Charleston, S. C.,
March 26, 1956

Race Relations Not For Courts

Editor, Daily News:

In the eyes of man all his ways are right, but the Lord weighth the spirit United in groups people signify their oneness of belief or spirit and only God can judge their spirit. Surely man can weigh the teachings and judge the actions of these groups to decide who is American and what is Christian.

No nation of people have ever kept their freedom or religion; religious sects or political groups, who seek not truth or understanding, but power, make themselves tools to ambitious political or religious leaders, who gain power only to forget their religion and politics or the group, who by their loyalty gave them power.

Ever seeking to prove by might the meaning of right, those who use force shall perish by force. Is forced integration less dangercus or more desirable than forced segregation of race? If a law is unjust it may be changed, but more unjust than a faulty law is the abuse of power to change that law. Neither a Supreme Court decision to abolish segregation or a State Interposition to maintain segregation will long help the black or white Americans and Christians of Mississippi. There can be no progress for one race or two without understanding and unity of purpose among the people and between the races.

Our disagreement about race merely makes more plain our disagreement about religion and government. Who decides when "liberty under the law" becomes "Subjection by the Law"? If the purpose of the American Government is security and freedom, not only who, but how does it make secure and free?

Race-relationship is a problem not only in America, but the world. In Mississippi let us seek not pride of race, but love of race. If we can love our own race we can love another. If we are proud of our own we can only hate or look with shame upon another.

When Americans and Christians speak to each other to seek understanding not of their own christian sect, but the purpose of Christianity, the purpose not of the Supreme Court, but the American Government; when we realize our need for races, states, and nations, who seek unity to protect and help each other not dominate, change, or destroy other races, other states, or other nations, we will be ready then for progress.

Mrs. Lucian Wadlington,
Belzoni, Miss.

South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, (where is Texas?) and Tennessee. Now let's say these same states (still waiting for Texas) have a population of 25,000,000 people. Politicians should look at these figures, because if we have skimmed off the skum then that leaves us 24,919,896 good, white and black Southerners. It could be that Senator Lehman needs to see these figures, being a politician he likes to look at numbers. It could dawn on him now useless his demands are in this direction.

Now Mr. Wallace, if you have enough of quoting William Bradford Hule, you could follow exactly the same trend again. Ebony had an article in which it was stated that Adam C. Powell and his wife ran around their home, in the nude, and in front of their son. Why not visit there, and again seek your lowest in jornalism.?

A southern editor has stated that if the whites numbered fifteen million and the negroes 150 million, the whites would then be even more insistent on segregation. Whites don't want their race mongrelized.

Why did I write you in this manner? Because, Mr. & Mrs. Wallace, the Readers Digest has been my friend over a long period of years. I admire it greatly; and hope I won't be forced to stop any time soon. It is too fine to seek out material of any tabloid status. I have long admired and approved its editors for their wisdom and discretion in choosing from the leading magazines of our nation the articles of high caliber, literary merit, and authoritative origin.

The wisdom of Confucius is as applicable today as it was thousands of years ago- "Learning, without thought is useless."

Very sincerely yours,
.E. F. Stubblefield

Has No Faith With Yankees

Dumas, Mississippi

Editor Daily-News, I am not a politician, not a leader in any of the Isms or Ites, just a country man away back in the North East Mississippi hills. I do belong to the Citizens Council, but have not been prompted to write you or any one else. But I am very much concerned about things I believe even I can see approaching.

Knowing you by reputation only, which is an honor, and thinking perhaps some of our great men may not be able to see the forest for the trees, I am appealing to you for consideration. I believe it's important. If it isn't, well, just chunk it in the waste-basket and forget it.

There is no question about it, Thus far we have proven to be a very great thorn in the side of those who would intergrate us. We may not be exactly solid, or as nearly so as we would like to be, but we have certainly caused concern among the top-brass in Washington. I believe they know what our position is, and that we will not stop until we feel safe. Our goodness spilling over in other states has also grieved them to no end, and if we think just because Mr. Eisenhower has shown a word or two of kindness and understanding for us, that they may relent more, we're natural born idiots.

Editor, Daily News: I am sure you know Mr. Hearst, editor of the Examiner here in San Francisco. I take his paper, also I get my Jackson Daily News.

I get mad every day I can hardly go to work. Every body here is Negro crazy. I have to ride with them and eat with them.

I am enclosing a picture of Kefauver who was here last week.

He is shown in the middle of Fillimore street, the same as Farish street in Jackson.

I am a very close friend of Jim Eastland.

I have read your paper for 30 years and always admire you.

Joe Hassnall
1504 Irving Street
San Francisco, Calif.

Negro Commie Now In Jail

Editor, Daily News:

The surrender to the FBI of Henry Winston, Negro Communist, as reported in AP dispatches of March 1 and 5 published in the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier and other papers, omitted the vital fact that Winston is a Negro.

Winston not only is one of the 11 top U. S. Communists and former Party organization secretary but also was one of a large number of Negro Reds sent to Russia where they were trained in political warfare and the strategy and tactics of rebellion and civil war.

These Negroes were trained for the Red Revolution against the U. S. by order of Stalin. This information is from Manning Johnson, reformed ex - Communist, Negro leader, in sworn testimony and articles in 1954 and 1955.

It is most important that the general public be given the facts about the Red planning behind the pro-Negro drive so that the true significance of the anti-segregation campaign by the NAACP, National Urban League, Southern Regional Council and similar organizations may be fully revealed.

Citizens should remember that one or two trained, disciplined Reds holding key positions in an organization can effectively plan loyalty gave them power.

Ever seeking to prove by might the meaning of right, those who use force shall perish by force. Is forced integration less dangercus or more desirable than forced segregation of race? If a law is unjust it may be changed, but more unjust than a faulty law is the abuse of power to change that law. Neither a Supreme Court decision to abolish segregation or a State Interposition to maintain segregation will long help the black or white Americans and Christians of Mississippi. There

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 6, 1956

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

AN ODD ATTITUDE

A special committee for the American Association of University Professors has just recommended that five anti - Communist colleges be "censured". These schools have fired faculty members refusing to take loyalty oaths or for not cooperating with congressional investigations of subversion.

Moveover, the AAUP committee is on record as opposing the firing of professors who are known to be Communists, just because they are Reds. "Professional fitness," says the committee, "is the only question which should be considered when a teacher is challenged."

THE COMMITTEE recommendations must still be approved by the annual convention of the American Association of University Professors to be held later this year. The group has considerable membership through the United States.

Schools which the AAUP committee wants to have "censured" are Ohio State University, University of California, Temple University, Rutgers and Jefferson Medical College. Each has fired teachers for not cooperating with anti-Red investigations, or refusing to take required loyalty oaths.

ODDLY ENOUGH, the same committee has praised schools which refuse to dismiss faculty members who have defied the U.S. Government or who refuse to take loyalty oaths. These include Harvard, Chicago University, Cornell, John Hopkins, Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Sarah Lawrence. Some of these schools, it is claimed, are heavily infested with pinkos, pro-Reds and bona fide Communists.

To the South's credit, no college below the Mason and Dixon line is singled out for praise by the leftist-minded AAUP committee. Also, it seems unfortunate that no Southern school has been marked for "censure" by this group. Any knock from Red sympathizers or appeasers is a boost in the eyes of many Americans.

IT IS NOT TOO surprising that the AAUP committee failed to recommend "censure" for the American University in Washington, D.C. That school has fired a professor because he cooperated with Congress and testified against subversives.

This victim of "academic freedom," Herbert Fuchs, lost his job as a law professor at American University after he gave aid and comfort to the U.S. government. He named 34 persons he knew to be members of the Communist Party while holding sensitive federal jobs.

FREELY ADMITTING his own

Southern Opinion

it is claimed, are heavily infested with pinkos, pro-Reds and bona fide Communists.

To the South's credit, no college below the Mason and Dixon line is singled out for praise by the leftist-minded AAUP committee. Also, it seems unfortunate that no Southern school has been marked for "censure" by this group. Any knock from Red sympathizers or appeasers is a boost in the eyes of many Americans.

IT IS NOT TOO surprising that the AAUP committee failed to recommend "censure" for the American University in Washington, D.C. That school has fired a professor because he cooperated with Congress and testified against subversives.

This victim of "academic freedom," Herbert Fuchs, lost his job as a law professor at American University after he gave aid and comfort to the U.S. government. He named 34 persons he knew to be members of the Communist Party while holding sensitive federal jobs.

FREELY ADMITTING his own past membership in the Party, from 1934 to 1946, he said he had quit after becoming sickened with Red subversion and espionage. The government praised his services, describing his information as among the most valuable since the infamous Alger Hiss case.

After Prof. Fuchs was fired by American University, House committee chairman Francis Walter denounced his dismissal as "reprehensible." However, professional defenders of "academic freedom" have maintained a deep, dark silence. Militant "liberals" shed no tears over his plight.

GETTING BACK TO the committee purporting to represent the American Association of University Professors, its failure to recommend censure for American University, or to condemn the firing of Prof. Fuchs, indicates an unusual and highly questionable attitude. Apparently the committee favors "censure" only for those schools which act against suspected subversives. Its sympathies seem reserved only for teachers fired for playing footsie with Communism.

Because of this implied attitude, the AAUP committee itself deserves vigorous censure instead of those pro-American colleges which have incurred its displeasure. Certainly the committee's recommendations merit and probably will receive a swift, merciless death at the coming AAUP convention.

INSOFAR AS IS known, Mississippi was not represented on the AAUP committee. Certainly there is no reason to believe our own splendid institutions would hesitate to fire a suspected subversive, whether the AAUP committee liked it or not. Nor has there been the vaguest suspicion that there are any subversive teachers in our state schools.

However, since the foregoing matter involves "academic freedom"—a controversial issue in this state recently — the AAUP committee's recommendations should interest Mississippians. For one thing, these recommendations illustrate some of the inconsistent, hypocritical thinking now masquerading under the cloak of "liberalism" in these United States today.

Southern Opinion

Don't clip Southern Opinion See other page also never understand; but when a magazine, as in the case of Life, goes out to besmirch and murder the ideals of the South, that magazine is guilty of a crime that is not found in the lexicon of man—but is subject to the laws of Divine Creation. What I wanted to say to you is this: I do not want Life magazine!"

J. B. MILLS

Ozark, Ala.

Best Day

SIRS: My copy of SOUTH usually arrives on Friday morning, and it goes a long way toward making Friday the best day of the work week for me. I wouldn't be without your weekly reports on "Southern Affairs," and your editorial page ranks with the very best. . . .

THOMAS J. MALLORY

New Orleans

Shoddy

SIRS: Time held up Emmett Till's father as a hero, and it backfired. The NAACP promenaded Pollie Hudson as one of its prize exhibits and the backfire was really something when your publication laid the real facts on the line. Look trotted out Joe Foster as a hero, and your story this week (April 2) about the Albany Herald's exposure of his criminal record keeps the backfire going. It seems that the anti-South agitators would select their "heroes" and prize exhibits with more care. Their performance to date has been shoddy and terrible.

WALTER CHAMBERS

New Orleans

Court Critic

SIRS: I have just read your editorial (April 2) taking issue with the contention of Senator Kefauver and Governor Stevenson that the Supreme Court is above and beyond criticism, and hasten to congratulate you. I believe you are right in saying that few liberty-loving American citizens will agree with their contention. You pointed out that Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt had been unsparing in their criticisms of the court, but didn't you forget one Hugo L. Black? I seem to recall that he was a senator from Alabama before he went on the court, and that he, too, was quite critical of the court along about the time he was supporting the Roosevelt court-packing program.

L. M. BULLARD

Chattanooga

TIME's Laxness

SIRS: . . . At the time our Feb. 20 story, "Alabama Scandal," went to press on Feb. 11, TIME did not know that the reasons for the University of Alabama's rejection of . . . (Pollie Anner Myers) Hudson were more compelling than was indicated in its official statement: "The evidence before the board is that her conduct and marital record have been such that she does not meet the admission standards of the university." Our reporter made considerable effort to get behind this official statement, but, as you know, the University did not amplify the basis of its decision.

Since the ramifications of the case became known to us, we have had no occasion to report on . . . Hudson because, when her action against the University was dropped, she too dropped out of the news. Attention has been focused on Autherine Lucy and we hope you have not missed our subsequent stories on her and the NAACP. You will note that in our March 12 Education story, TIME says: "The NAACP was fighting a united and determined opposition in Alabama, and it could ill afford either the tactlessness or the impatience it has shown in some of its recent actions."

FRANK SHEA

Assistant to Publisher,
TIME
New York

➤ TIME ought to read SOUTH to keep abreast of developments. SOUTH printed facts on Pollie Anner Myers Hudson in its Feb. 13 issue, available Feb. 9.—ED.

Illegal, Illogical

SIRS: The right of a state to interpose its sovereignty by appropriate action in the Integration decision of May 1954 is based on the unconstitutional usurpation of authority by the Supreme Court. The court did not hold that the law it overruled was bad law but that it was bad sociology. The Constitution does not give to judges the authority to pass on sociological matters. That is for the Legislative branch whose members are constantly going before the people with platforms to change, amend or repeal existing laws and create new ones. The court said in referring to the intent of the framers of the 14th Amendment it "cannot be determined with any degree of certainty." The court knew that the same Congress which promulgated the 14th Amendment passed two bills providing for segregated schools in the District of Columbia. Therefore the court did not base its decision on anything in the Constitution and cited as its authority books on sociology which were not introduced in evidence and contained in the record. The court said in Pinkus v. Reilly (1949) that non-legal material offered in evidence was illegal, illogical and unfair. If it was illogical, illegal and unfair in 1949 how did it happen to be legal, logical and fair in 1954, particularly when not introduced in evidence and the other side given an opportunity to cross examine the authority? The Constitution had not changed. The integration decision was more unconstitutional than any of the many decisions where interposition worked. The South should stand firm for her rights.

JOHN ALTMAN

Carrollton, Ala.

Up to South

SIRS: . . . The ultimate goal of the South must be, as you will note in the declaration of constitutional principles which has been signed by 18 or more Southern senators. . . ., to gain the cooperation of all areas

LONG-LEWIS
HARDWARE ESTABLISHED IN 1887 COMPANY

For 69 Years
Dependable Distributors

Hardware
Paints Housewares Industrial and Automotive Supplies

BESSEMER, ALA.
Wholesale and Retail
2000 to 2026 2nd Ave., N.
Phone 5-2431
FORD DEALERSHIP

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
Wholesale Only
5th Ave. at 9th St.
Phone 4-2561
MAJOR APPLIANCE DIVISION

MANUFACTURERS
"MOUNT VERNON"
BRAND OAK FLOORING
MOBILE RIVER
saw mill co., inc.
MOUNT VERNON, ALA.
• BAND-SAWN HARDWOOD
• CYPRESS LUMBER

Real Delight

FRESH
RED DIAMOND COFFEE

Connecting 28
Growing Markets with the world

Regular Scheduled Daily Flights
Credit Cards For Your Convenience
Charter Plane Flights On Request

Call Southern Airways
For Reservations and Information

It Pays Always to Specify Clancy—

Clancy's integrated operation assures you of the best in lumber. From forest to finished boards and dimension, the quality of Clancy lumber is carefully guarded. That's why retailers who specify Clancy pine and hardwood know they're stocking up on "satisfaction" when they order big mill lumber from one of the South's foremost manufacturers.

Manufacturers of Southern Yellow Pine • Hardwoods • Pulp Chips

CLANCY LUMBER CO., • GRAYSON, ALABAMA
CLANCY FOREST PRODUCTS CO., • DECATUR, ALABAMA

Manufacturers of QUALITY PIG IRON
WOODWARD IRON COMPANY
Woodward, Ala.
Phone 8-1241 Bessemer

Backfire

of the nation which are interested in preserving our dual form of government and the preservation of the rights of the states and the people thereof. Whenever enough members of the Senate indicate to us a willingness to support congressional action we can then bring to the floor of the Senate a resolution along the lines I have indicated which will in effect declare that schools that are separate but equal are constitutional. We, of course, can't get such a majority this year but the chances of ultimately doing so are no more remote than those of states like New York and New Jersey to bring about the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to which they so seriously objected from the very start. You may recall that in the campaign of 1928 the Democratic convention meeting in Houston nominated Al Smith but refused to put in the platform a plank calling for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. In accepting the nomination, Al Smith said that if elected President he would do all he could to bring about the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. The Republican nominee, Mr. Hoover, said that the Eighteenth Amendment was "an experiment noble in purpose." And between prohibition on the one side and Catholicism on the other Hoover won a tremendous victory. But the end result of that so-called noble experiment became so distasteful to law-abiding citizens that in the end about as many states voted to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment as had previously voted to ratify it.

Naturally, I hope that states in which there is no school issue will not refuse to give aid to the Southern states on the broad constitutional principles involved until after the school system in many of them has been wrecked and racial animosities developed which will be lasting in effect. But, as indicated above, the South will never get a legal remedy for our deplorable situation unless we of the South make such an effort.

A. WILLIS ROBERTSON
U. S. Senator,
Virginia
Washington

Not For Him

SIRS: I have received the last three copies of your publication, though I haven't subscribed to it. I shall appreciate your removing my name from your mailing list.

JOHN ALLEN ADAMS
Arkadelphia, Ark.

Delighted

SIRS: Our folks were so delighted with your fine article on the work of our agricultural and forestry department that we made up a little folder for use of that department. Reprints were distributed at the annual meeting of the American Railway Development Association at Memphis in February. . . .

C. G. MASSOTH
Editor Illinois Central Magazine
Chicago

Lulu's Buch ...

Pulse of the Public

Const 4/13/56

Amending Constitution Suggested To Nullify Controversial High Court Integration Verdict

Rome—Instead of constant complaining by Griffin and Cook and officials in other states, including the North, against the Supreme Court's ruling on integration, why don't they take advantage of the Constitution and the remedy provided by it?

This is the second method defined by the Constitution of amending the document, all-important to the states because it conveys to them absolute sovereignty and the final word in any federal vs. state struggle. There is nothing complex about this remedy. It is simply that 32 state legislatures can force Congress to call a constitutional convention for any stated purpose.

Once assembled the state delegates would consider, approve and pass on to the several legislatures the proposed amendment or amendments and should 36 state legislatures approve the proposed amendment it would become the law of the land.

Every amendment that has been added to the Constitution has had the effect of nullifying previous Supreme Court rulings.

PARKER ARNOLD.

* * *

perience or may be inferred with certainty."

O. M.

Southern Spectator

Southern Opinion

THE CLARION-LEDGER, JACKSON, MISS., FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 20, 1956

Voice of the People

Dear Editor:

In your paper of last Wednesday, you published an article signed by 28 Southern Baptist leaders. May I as a lifelong Baptist, make a few remarks about this article, and what seems to be the purpose of it. The article urges the Baptist to be quite, calm, and to restudy their faith for another solution to the racial problem. The article picks up the propaganda of the NAACP that there is great friction and feelings between the races of the South that must be stopped. This they suggest can be done only by the white and colored Baptists of the South.

As much as I would like to be loyal to our leaders, I cannot agree with them about the friction. There is no friction to speak of between the races of the South. The friction is between the NAACP and some of our statesmen, and religious leaders. The trouble is communism, propagated by subversive organizations, and individuals, against Democracy that allows for freedom of choice, and a wide range of differences.

The people of the South have been made the victims of Communism, that had its origin in Russia, has infiltrated America, and American institutions. Today, it has been given a new shot in the arm, by the UN, the Supreme Court, and some denominational organizations, and leaders. Now, I am not going to accuse these worthy leaders, and they are worthy, of being for the destruction of segregation. However, from their writings, and from their voting, I sincerely believe that they are. I believe that they are for the UN, the decision of the Supreme Court, and for mixing the races in our denominational colleges and seminaries. If they are not, and will say so, I will most humbly apologize.

A majority of our people in the South, both colored and white do not want desegregation. They know that the problems of desegregation would be greater than the problems of segregation. The doctrine of desegregation is not the product of Democracy, the teachings of the Bible, nor Christianity. It cannot be derived from the laws governing God's creation, nor from the laws of Christianity that warns against the weaknesses, and destruction of the flesh. Redeemed people must fear, and have no confidence in the flesh; they must hate even the garments spotted by the flesh, and crucify their own flesh daily. Segregation is not perfect, neither is any other law. However, it has worked wonders, and let us not exchange it for a mere theory, that will put greater friction, and feelings, between the races of the South.

Rev. Chas. C. Jones
Mendenhall, Miss.

The Clarion-Ledger
JACKSON DAILY NEWS

ALL THREE MAJOR WIRE SERVICES — Associated Press, United Press, International News Service

Jackson, Mississippi, Sunday, April 22, 1956 — Six Sec

THE MAYFLOWER
Washington

Strikingly illustrative of conditions in Washington is a report of the superintendent of the District of Columbia juvenile reformatory showing 38 white boys and 218 Negroes are inmates of the institution. Washington is rapidly becoming a Negro city but the juvenile criminal percentage shoud not show such a wide difference in any city.

* * *

The deplorable effect of the Supreme Court integration decision is to lower the level of instruction in both elementary and high schools to the pace of which Negro children are capable. All educators are aware of the fact that after they reach the fifth grade Negro pupils learn much more slowly than white pupils and at the high school age their slowness is much more in evidence.

* * *

"God is on our side in this problem," yells an NAACP leader. God is not on anybody's side in the solution of any controversial matter. God put us here to solve our own problems and work out our own destinies with whatever we may have available in the way of brains. It is typical of the times that weaklings try to place all the responsibility on a God who is quite too busy making other worlds to be bothered with the petty personal troubles of human beings on one small planet.

* * *

Major Sullens' Mail

Comment from Readers

(Please Sign Your Name. Keep Letters Brief)

Ike Favors Integration

Editor Daily News: The Mixiecrats and mongrelizers, along with other propagandists, are having their troubles. After the Black Monday ukase of the not so Supreme Court, it was felt that the South would immediately begin to mix the white and black in schools, golf links and swimming pools. But a considerable amount of opposition has sprung up, and the mixing has not gone so steadily forward as the vote seekers thought.

So President Eisenhower has decided, or it has been decided for him, that he must fling himself personally into the fray, and support the Ukase, or edict, of his "Republican Chief Justice," as boastfully proclaimed by Vice-Pres. Nixon. The procedure of "Ike" is typically child-like. One day he comes out with a statement that we must be "calm," and "moderate", and other insane expressions. The next he is out with a message to Congress, which stripped of its political color, means this: The damned South is showing signs of resisting my Court Edict, and I want the Congress to come to our aid, and "pass a law" and give us the men and money to force the un-willing whites to bow the knee, and acknowledge the sovereignty of this administration and proceed to obey the Wkase of My Court.

The message, like others from the same source, seeks to conceal the person, by saying: "The Eisenhower administration today asked Congress to enact a broad civil rights program." The message then proceeds to list the things desired. Among the things is a Federal Commission, appointed by Eisenhower of course, to investigate cases of personal grievances, a separate division of the Attorney General's office, in effect, to prosecute white people of the South who are charged by any negro or the NAACP of infringing any of the "rights" of negroes.

Threatened with such as this the President has the monumental effrontery to ask us to be "calm" and "moderate," and other like honeyed words. What does he think we are? A race of fools? He wants us to sit quiet, and calm, and speak softly, while he disrupts our entire economic and social structure. It is a little rough, but the story fits "Ike". A Negro had a nice big catfish, stretched on the table ready to skin. The fish persisted in flopping off the table Finally, in exasperation, (same as Ike) he said, "What fo' de matter wid you ole fish; I aint gonna do nuthin but gut you and skin yu' "

No, "Ike" we won't lay still and let you work your will on us.

Those southern Governors, like Clement of Tennessee, had best review their position before it is too late This is election year, and it is clear that the Mixiecrats and Mongrelizers will stop at nothing, lawful or unlawful, to implement the Ukase of the Court. It is time for those "Citizens for Ike" to look over their hand. Will they stand for orderly government or for the spoils office?

George Washington, in his Farewell Address, spoke of the changes that must come, and he added, "But let there be no change by usurpation."

We stand against usurpation; the usurpation of the law making.

Power of Congress, assumed and exercised by the Court in May 1954. Our freedom depends on the separation of the powers of government between the sharply defined powers of the Federal Government, the powers of the States and the powers reserved to the people themselves. And then upon to cease the farce of pretending he is a minister of the gospel? He says he intends to clean up the South's backyard. He would be wiser to preach to his people to clean up their front yards and quit killing, raping and other criminal practices. Congressman Williams' speech giving statistics on major crime in New York should clearly show this fat head that he has plenty of distance to go before his race is in a position to demand equality, Meanwhile the innocent Negro is being confused by this promise of Heaven on Earth.

You have already ruled out Little Ave Harriman's bid for the Democratic nomination so what do you say we give him to Powell as a candidate for the Negro party? Let us suggest that they prevail upon the deserving members of the Supreme Court to serve as cabinet members in case the country goes really insane and elects the ticket.

Bob Varner
P. O. Box 545
Mobile, Alabama

planted in every section of the USA. Let us dig out the roots and dump them where they belong. They belong in the ashes of time.

I wish you and your papers the best that you can wish for.

Sincerely,
Harry W. Mutimer.
Hayward 2, Wis.

Indiana Man Sends Invite

Editor Daily News:

A retired lawyer, I haven't much else to do, and I find a lot of fun in needling the editor of the Chicago TRIBUNE, which has become the outstanding propaganda machine for NAACP. Another such propaganda machine is Headquarters, UAW, Detroit, Mich., where anti-segregation script is prepared for broadcast over station WCFL in Chicago. But that editor never publishes MY letters. Perhaps my needle is either too sharp or too dull. H. L. Mencken once said of his own writing, in substance: they supply relief of tension and achievement of function, as enjoyed by the cow when she gives milk. Perhaps that is why I write to the TRIBUNE.

If you find it desirable you may publish, over my signature, the following:

Invitation: Anxious and frustrated white people of the South never have the glass replaced. They have garbage littering the front of the house (thrown from windows). They have either nothing, or dirty rags where there should be curtains. They cluster on the front steps in stinking lumps, oggling, laughing, pulling one another around, smoking, spitting and cutting up in general. They have a new car one week, and the next week it is already filthy, dented and neglected. They fill so many posts in the civil service jobs, that they outnumber the whites in the unemployment offices, the post-offices, and now they are appearing more and more often in police uniforms. The income tax offices are creeping with Negroes, and their slow movements and crass ignorance makes it difficult to understand how tthey ever passed the necessary examinations to get those jobs.

Damn Yankee
Mrs. Will Heinrick
New York, City

New Yorker Likes South

Editor, Daily News:

I am a frequent reader of the Daily News and am 100 per cent behind your segregation policy in the South. The Negroes, the NAACP and the Supreme Court and all the rest of their crummy gange are out to destroy the white race. Our hopes are the South will keep up the good work and I want you to know you have friends here.

Sincerely Yours,
Jamesh Burns
New York, N. Y.

review their position before it is too late This is election year, and it is clear that the Mixiecrats and Mongrelizers will stop at nothing, lawful or unlawful, to implement the Ukase of the Court. It is time for those "Citizens for Ike" to look over their hand. Will they stand for orderly government or for the spoils office?

George Washington, in his Farewell Address, spoke of the changes that must come, and he added, "But let there be no change by usurpation."

We stand against usurpation; the usurpation of the law making. Power of Congress, assumed and exercised by the Court in May 1954. Our freedom depends on the separation of the powers of government between the sharply defined powers of the Federal Government, the powers of the States and the powers reserved to the people themselves. And then upon the absolute and strict separation of the powers of the Legislative the Executive and the Judiciary.

We have kept that division fairly well since 1887. We have kept separate institutions for the white and colored races since 1865. We have kept separate institutions for the white and colored races since 1865. The carpetbaggers set up separate schools for white and black when they had control of Mississippi; and Congress provided for separate schools in the District of Columbia. We have built our economic and social life on those things. They are our life, our very existence.

The South has been gaining in wealth and economic power, and as we have been able we have provided schools and hospitals for our colored bretheren. There is no quarrel and no emmity between white and black. We ask nothing except to be let alone. One of our colored teachers here in Jackson, Prot. Gooden, had a splendid statement in a local paper two weeks ago. But now comes Eisenhower and his gang of modern carpetbaggers, with the same hate and malice and the same hunger for votes and plunder, and proposes, overnight, to scramble the whole works. Our answer is an emphatic, Hell, NO!

A. S. Coody
776 North West St.
Jackson, Miss.

Cites Prospects For Negro Party

Editor, Daily News—Wouldn't it be ironical if after all the mad efforts of the two major parties to gather in the Negro vote, Adam Powell could carry out the threat to form a new party with his race.

Imagine the frustration it would bring to the leaders of some of those sharpies in Washington. Also consider the misery and disillusionment it would bring to the decent people of both races in this country. Powell says he is considering resigning from Congress to carry on his demogogrey, Wouldn't it be more proper for him

Eastland For President

Editor, Daily News: I agree with you in every way when you say there is not a man yet mentioned for President who is acceptable to us Southerners even though we may have to accept one of them. I have talked to many travelers or tourists and I have had many to say that our own Sen. J. O. Eastland would be more acceptable. I have not had one out of more tahn 100 who I have talked with who is any different than us on integration and al lsay Jim is a fine and capable man. So I am suggesting that his name be put on the list as possible candidates for President. His record is a much better one politically than some of the recent past. So why not give him a boost?

Yours respectfully,
K. V. Bell
RFD 2, Box 160
Vicksburg, Miss.

Yank Defends Southern Way

Editor, Daily News:

I am in receipt of many clippings from your Newspapers. I agree 100 per cent with your views even if I am a Yankee. Up in the north we don't want you to tell us how to shovel snow, therefore why should misguided northerners try to tell you how to handle the south.

Live and let live is my religion. However, in religion there are problems. It is not for me to tell any one how to vote, yet in the great era of the New Deal and the Fair Deal the south has been given the roots of the controversy that today has come to a boiling point. Communisism is the heat that has brought the water to a boil.

If this menace is not dug out things will go from bad to worse. In the 20 years from 1932 to 1952 the seeds of communism were

A retired lawyer, I haven't much else to do, and I find a lot of fun in needling the editor of the Chicago TRIBUNE, which has become the outstanding propaganda machine for NAACP. Another such propaganda machine is Headquarters, UAW, Detroit, Mich., where anti-segregation script is prepared for broadcast over station WCFL in Chicago. But that editor never publishes MY letters. Perhaps my needle is either too sharp or too dull. H. L. Mencken once said of his own writing, in substance: they supply relief of tension and achievement of function, as enjoyed by the cow when she gives milk. Perhaps that is why I write to the TRIBUNE.

If you find it desirable you may publish, over my signature, the following:

Invitation: Anxious and frustrated white people of the South are respectfully invited to move to Chicago or other northern cities, where segregation still is practiced — with subtlety but never the less effectually; where Negro children are burned to death in century — old tenements.

Valparaiso is a small city which boasts publicly that it has not a single Negro resident. Many people in this area find repugnant the President's plan to interfere in the internal affairs of the several states. They will cast protest ballots against him this year.

Sincerely,
S. G. Evans,
Valparaiso, Ind.

New Yorker On Race Question

Editor Daily News: You have no idea how far-reaching this issue has been felt thus far. Even in the chain grocery stores, the colored women flaunt their "equality" to a point where it is "supremacy". Of course I do not tolerate their insolence when it is directed toward me. But I see many white women afraid to defend their rights because of some towering darkey, bedecked in cannibal earrings, spindle heels and equipped with a loud, vulgar voice. These newly rich wenches ride rough-shod over many white women shoppers, usurping their places on the checking-out lines, and pushing their way along, banging metal carrier baskets into other shoppers' legs and feet. You can understand that a well-bred woman is unaccustomed to such unnecessary beligerance, and is quite unprepared for senseless quarrelling and bickering.

I certainly admire you and your Southern Brothers for their brave fight against being wiped out by sheer numbers; and we feel that your voting should be protected against the mass Negro votes that would most certainly stamp out the thinking white man in the South. You would be amazed, Major, if you were to see a map of New York City, showing the inroads that have been made by the black race here. They have our widest, most beautiful avenues. Not only do they have them, but they wreck them. As soon as they take over a neighborhood, the window panes are broken, and they stuff cardboard or rags or any old thing in, and

May 2, 1958

Southern Opinion

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

EASTLAND SLIGHTED?

The possibility that state political leaders are ignoring Senator Jim Eastland is suggested by our good friend Erle Johnston, editor of the Scott County Times at Forest.

One of the most astute political observers in these parts, he offers some interesting speculations to which devote our entire space today, as follows. And we quote:

"THERE ARE FEARS among the politicos that the selection of Senator John Stennis to make the keynote address at the State Democratic Convention July 16, instead of Senator Jim Eastland, will be interpreted up North as an indication that Mississippi is not solidly behind Eastland's campaign against integration.

"This is no reflection on the capable Senator from DeKalb, but recent articles in magazines and Yankee newspapers have hinted occasion that Eastland's voice is not as vigorously backed as he indicates...

"ANY INCIDENT which might support this theory is exploited by the integrationists, and the fact that Eastland was passed over for the most important state convention of the year may start a curl of smoke.

"Actually," the Forest editor continues, "the nod went to Stennis because of the influence of Governor J. P. Coleman, who is expected to head the state's delegation to the national Democratic convention. Tom Tubb of West Point, chairman of the state Democratic Executive Committee, was a Coleman man last summer. He will serve as temporary chairman...

"ANNOUNCEMENTS TO THE PRESS from Chairman Tubb make about plans for the convention no mention of Senator Eastland—although the senior Senator is in more demand as a speager than at any time since he took office in 1942.

"Some observers see the maneuver as a means of propelling Senator Stennis — who is a strong segregationist but not as vigorous as his colleague — into a more favorable position on the segregation issue...

"STENNIS IS CERTAIN to declare firmly that Mississippi will not accept a platform which supports the desegregation decree of the U.S. Supreme Court. An able speaker, he can strengthen his political support by impressing such an important audience as the Democratic delegates rom every county in the state.

"To Governor Coleman," the Forest editor opines, "it is far more important to his own political future to keep Stennis in the limelight and Eastland in the shadows — when possible...

"THERE IS MORE talk than ever that Stennis, who comes up for reelection in a short time, may have opposition in Congressman John Bell Williams, who is almost as vigorous as Eastland on segregation. (End quote)

Plan To Reduce

Southern Opinion

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Manager
T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

Another Threat To Freedom

Apparently guided by the callous philosophy that might makes right, a House majority in Congress has indicated a determination to force President Eisenhower's so-called "civil rights" program down Southern throats. This means that the Senate is virtually certain to be the scene of a showdown battle on this issue in the near future.

Stripped of glib phraseology, this "civil rights" program is merely another step in an overall campaign designed to strip the states of more powers and vest increased authority in the federal government. Even worse, this program will if enacted strike a serious blow at the citizen's traditional right to trial by jury.

Through this program, the administration seeks legislation which would enable anyone to go into a federal court and seek an injunction against any person or persons accused of trying to "intimidate" a voter from going to the polls. Such legislation would to all effects and purposes nullify the accused's right to request a jury trial by his peers.

Instead, if a federal injunction were granted and if election officials or anyone else "defied" it, the accused party or parties could be prosecuted for contempt of federal court and heavily fined or even sent to prison if found guilty. Thus, the federal government would in effect be trampling on the civil rights of some persons in upholding the civil rights of others.

It is impossible to understand how fair-minded persons dedicated to accepted American principles could endorse legislation having the obvious purpose of circumventing traditional procedures of justice. However, fairness has never been a characteristic of those who seek to employ steamroller tactics in crushing states' rights and establishing a federal hierachy controlled by NAACP agitators and unsavory radical elements.

The President's so-called "civil rights" program is the most damaging threat to democracy and individual freedom since the infamous Force Bill of Reconstruction days. It is a deliberate, dangerous and diabolical effort to emasculate the Bill of Rights and inaugurate a reign of terror in Southern states. For this reason, the administration's politically-inspired power grab should and must be defeated.

Editorial Opinion

Gazette 5-18-56 NC-5

The Right Spirit

The trying problem left by the decision of the United States Supreme Court against segregation is one that challenges men of good will who would hold to their convictions but act with calmness and charity, with respect for order and good relations and for the good name of their communities and their state.

This was the spirit of the words used by Governor Faubus in addressing more than a hundred citizens from all over the state in a meeting that considered two proposed measures. The governor said the purpose of the proposals is to maintain, in an orderly and peaceful manner, "what is the will of the people at the present time."

The two parts of the quoted line are equally significant. So. Opinion

So. Opinion

So Opinion

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by

Tom Ethridge

FAULKNER'S LATEST

Mississippi's one and only William Faulkner seems obsessed with the notion that white races are doomed to be enslaved by the world's colored hordes. Our Oxford literary genius, whose specialty is morbid fiction, has stressed this "white slavery" theme quite frequently in anti-segregation writings and utterances.

Mr. Faulkner's latest emphasis on the subject is the current issue of Harper's Magazine, a leftist organ which consistently plays pinkish tunes. In fact, one astute commentator has branded Harper's as "a slick paper edition of the Daily Worker."

HIS NEW ARTICLE is entitled, "On Fear, The South Is In Labor." Mississippi's foremost man of letters sees very little hope for the white race, unless we abandon segregation and clasp colored brethren tightly to our loving bosom. It is the same old fear motive which integrationists love to stress.

The fact that Mr. Faulkner himself does not hobnob with state colored folks — or very many Mississippi white folks for that matter — is entirely beside the point. Like the joke about that worldly old Negro preacher, Mr. Faulkner's moralizing suggests, "Don't do as I do. Do as I say do." Here is the general thesis of his Harper's article. And we quote —

"SOON NOW ALL of us —not just Southerners not even just Americans, but all people who are still free and want to remain so — are going to have to make a choice, lest the next (and last) confrontation we face will be, not Communists against anti-Communists but simply the remaining handful of white people against the massed myraids of all the people on earth who are not white.

"We will have to choose not between color nor race nor religion, nor between East and West either, but simply between being slaves and being free."

IT SEEMS TO US that Mr. Faulkner sadly underestimates the intelligence of both Americans and Russians, not to mention his omitting the minor detail of how the world's mongrel, backward colored hordes could enslave the white world even if so inclined. Certainly Russia has no intention of permitting Asia and Africa to become so powerful, nor will Americans, if we have any sense at all. Unless by our own effort, colored nations can never achieve naval, air or bomb power necessary for world conquest. Mere numbers cannot [illegible] petted in exchange for services rendered.

Unlike witless sheep, Mississippians and Southerners in general can readily recognize any attempt to lead them into the slaughterhouse of racial suicide. The "Judas Ram" is a fairly common creature neareabouts but, happily, they have few followers.

FOR THAT REASON, Mr. Faulkner would be wise to confine his time to writing of helpless virgins being raped by corncob-wielding sex degenerates, village idiots making love to cows, or corpses decaying in the family guest room. Home folks can too easily see the fat wallet bulging under the robes of this self-appointed prophet.

So Opinion 6/7

"SOON NOW HERE ...
just Southerners not even just Americans, but all people who are still free and want to remain so — are going to have to make a choice, lest the next (and last) confrontation we face will be, not Communists against anti-Communists but simply the remaining handful of white people against the massed myraids of all the people on earth who are not white.

"We will have to choose not between color nor race nor religion, nor between East and West either, but simply between being slaves and being free."

IT SEEMS TO US that Mr. Faulkner sadly underestimates the intelligence of both Americans and Russians, not to mention his omitting the minor detail of how the world's mongrel, backward colored hordes could enslave the white world even if so inclined. Certainly Russia has no intention of permitting Asia and Africa to become so powerful, nor will Americans, if we have any sense at all. Unless by our own effort, colored nations can never achieve naval, air or bomb power necessary for world conquest. Mere numbers cannot surmount thermonuclear superiority.

Moreover, this question arises: what will be gained if, to avoid conquest by colored races, we whites meekly submit to slavery here at home? What is freedom worth if we must embrace Communism and tyranny to preserve it? And speaking of slavery, has Mr. Faulkner forgotten the unsuccessful attempt to enslave the South after the Civil War? Would he have his fellow Mississippians voluntarily to put their heads in that same noose again, immediately, rather than escape fancied or improbable enslavement in the distant future?

THERE IS MORE in Mr. Faulkner's latest article. He brings out the fact that Southern public officials technically violate their oath of office by not complying with the federal government's desegration decrees. In this connection, it is a matter of record that Mr. Faulkner's own illustrious grandfather committed "treason" against the United States by fighting gallantly as a commander of Southern troops in the Great Rebellion.

Unlike his courageous ancestor, our Nobel-Pulitzer prize winner chooses to side with Mississippi's enemies. It is, of course, a mere coincidence that those enemies can offer material recognition and rewards which Mr. Faulkner cannot find in his homeland. We keenly suspect that old Colonel Faulkner would turn over in his grave if he but knew that his family had produced a Southern renegade of the first water.

IT IS RECALLED that Mr. Faulkner made a foreign tour under sponsorship of the U. S. State Department last summer. During this time he enjoyed the international spotlight and made racial statements which were hailed by radical, anti-Southern elements including the malodorous NAACP. They were exactly the type of statements gratifying to One World zealots, including those of the State Department, who have donated Mississippi cotton markets to foreign lands.

Those statements served to enlarge the climate of fear so necessary to a continuation of global meddling, foreign giveaways and rampant internationalism sponsored by Mr. Faulkner's sponsors. This seems more than a coincidence. It strongly suggests that our Oxford genius is being deliberately used as a "Judas Ram" by his benefactors.

A "JUDAS RAM", in case you didn't know, is the animal trained by butchers to lead trusting sheep to slaughter. Fancying himself a leader, the Judas Ram actually is just a dupe. This unwittingly-treacherous animal is well-fed and

A Opinion C/1

So opinion

.1 DAILY NEWS, SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 1, 1956

OUR

The Clarion-Ledger
Jackson Daily News
311 E. Pearl St.

Frederick Sullens — Editor Jackson Daily News
T. M. Hederman — Editor The Clarion-Ledger
R. M. Hederman — Publisher

Cider From The Mississippi Press

Both white and colored are getting a taste of integration up at Knoxville, Tenn. Some 1500 of them battled with rocks and clubs the other day over the use of the city-owned play ground. This is not happening just in Knoxville, it is happening in all of the cities and will continue. The temperament of the two races is too far apart to ever expect them to mix and mingle without trouble.—WINSTON COUNTY JOURNAL, Louisville

* * *

Often Demagogic Fires Rage Out of Control

Atlanta—Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook at a news conference re-

[illegible] the banner for vealed he had called on members of the General Assembly to adopt legislation which would subject the NAACP to heavy taxes and possible criminal prosecution.

My husband is with the armed forces and we spent 3½ years in Germany. One of our aims is to teach those people our way of democracy.

How can we expect to accomplish this when our leaders come up with such proposals as this one of Cook's?

MRS. A. D. R.

* * *

So Opinion (1956)

Opinions of Readers

July 27 1956 Journal

Letters should be brief and must be accompanied by the names and addresses of their writers. The editors reserve the right to condense any letter. Spelling, grammar and punctuation are the writers'.

'Starvation or Integration?'

To the Editor of the Journal:

I have read your lead editorial of July 27 with consuming interest. However, there is no need to fuss about it, but it is very obvious now that the Pearsall Plan was made public just on the eve of the convening of the Special Session of the General Assembly so there would not be time for selling any other plan to the people or even familiarizing the members of the General Assembly with any other plan. The Pearsall Plan could have been made public ten weeks ago as easily as ten days ago.

After all any plan that has for its purpose evading the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation fiat or merely delaying compliance therewith is just as good as any other, for the end result will be integration.

No one knows whether the people of the state want integrated schools or not to the extent that they are willing to sacrifice to avoid integration. The Pearsall plan does not give them the opportunity to express themselves on the subject in the only way their vote will acount—withholding public moneys from the support of integrated schools, voluntary or involuntary. Anything short of a state-wide policy of withholding moneys from support of integrated schools will surely meet defeat in the Federal Courts. The Washington court desegregated the schools by naked force and awkwardness, and it will sustain its fiat in the same way.

No one knows how many schools would be closed by starvation under a constitutional provision prohibiting public support of integrated schools. I do not believe it would require the closing of many in order to persuade the Negroes here and their pseudo outside friends that a Negro child is not "hurt" very much by limiting his schooling to classes of his own race.

In any event, how does one figure that we can have local option and comply with the Carpetbagger constitution of 1868, which our Court holds is still valid, that requires a uniform state-wide public school system? Can we have schools financed from the treasury at Raleigh and local option too? If our schools were financed at the local school board level as well as administered at that level, we might have a chance of maintaining a local option system. A local option system and a constitutional mandate for a state-wide system are mutually exclusive concepts. We can't have half of one and half of the other.

We are up against a Court at Washington that is obsessed with the notion that a Negro child is hurt in mind and heart by having to associate with its own race as it obtains an education; and you can't reason with an obsession; you have to await the death of those so afflicted before you can get anywhere.

Therefore, we have our choice of closing some schools by starvation or submitting to integration. There is no other alternative.

—JOHN W. HESTER

Pittsboro.

Tyranny and the South

To the Editor of the Journal:

If I were Mark Twain (the temerity of such a suggestion:), I'd put it like this:

The Governor speaks of tyranny. He tells us that Nine Men have actually usurped power in our land, that they want to force integration upon an unwilling South—at least upon an unwilling 'white' South. I keep forgetting, somehow, that the white South is not all of the South . . and then I forget that some Southern white folks aren't as color-minded and race blinded as others.

He says these tyrannical Judges upset a doctrine laid down by some other old Judges 60 years ago. Wonder if our country hasn't changed any since then? (Oh, I forgot again: in the South it is impossible to change. At least, pocket change is few and far between . . especially in North Carolina where we rank 46th or 48th or—well, we're in a good place to hold the ladder up. And I do mean hold up.)

What I mean is this: has it taken us 60 years to learn that there is no such thing as "separate but equal"? If equal, why separate?

Well, those tyrant Judges have to recognize the world is watching us.

But the Governor and his nice planter friends down east want to keep things old-timey and cosy-like with our high wages and fair representation for all our citizens. And how can things be old-timey if colored and white children start going to school together? Why, they might learn one another to be human beings. Lord help us, then we'd have the Golden Age, and that would contradict Prophecy, and mustn't contradict Prophecy. Better do WITHOUT schools. A generation of ignorance might make us more humble. The Governor was SPEAKING of tyranny.

So you nice colored people (I would say 'Nigras' but you all don't appreciate a Southern accent, and my tongue isn't acrobatic enough to pronounce Neegrow correctly, although I am perfectly able to say "knee" and "grow.") . . you nice colored folks should recognize we are the best friends you have, so stay off to yourselves (except when we need you for friendship), and don't come around us except to nurse our babies and prepare our meals and clean our homes and build our houses and work in some of our factories and . . well, you know what I mean.

Above all, don't go to church with us. If we find out we have segregated inspiration all these years UNJUSTLY . . well, we might lose our reason. And that would be tyranny, indeed.

I did hear that launderies wash white people's clothes in one water and colored people's clothes in another. That's all right. But diaper companies, they say, don't wash colored babies' diapers. Well, they segregate everything else, even graveyards, so . . . The Governor was speaking of Tyranny.

Mark Twain once said rumors of his death were much exaggerated. But how exaggerated are the rumors of tyranny . . and in which direction?

—W. A. McGIRT, JR.

Winston-Salem.

'Height Of Bad Taste'

8/31/56 Delta Democrat Times Ed. Opinion

HAZEL BRANNON SMITH, who might qualify for the title "The Most Lied About Editor In Mississippi," takes issue this week in her Lexington weekly newspaper with those "Mississippi—The Most Lied About State" car tags.

In her usual outspoken manner, which has caused many who wear the well-fitted shoes she describes to cast stones, Mrs. Smith declares in her front page column:

"To us they (the tags) represent the height of bad taste and poor judgment, for if Mississippi is, as some believe, the most lied about state it certainly doesn't help any to go around with a sign proclaiming it on your automobile.

"The signs seem to represent a kind of chip on one's shoulder — and a dare to knock it off. They are diametrically opposed to what we all should be trying to do—build good will and make friends for Mississippi.

". . . An open, friendly, positive approach is needed — not that the world doesn't understand and is down on us negative attitude which appeals to no intelligent individual or group."

THE CLARION-LEDGER—JACKSON (MISS.) DAILY NEWS, SUNDAY MORNING, AUGUST 5, 1956

A PUNK DISCOVERER

The Chicago Tribune, chief South-hating newspaper of the nation, has sent another staff writer to tour the South and write some articles on "the progress of integration."

This time the naive quidnunc chosen for the task of gathering misinformation is Walter Trohan, and here is a sample of his writing, dated from Jackson:

> Any visitor to the state — which is undoubtedly the farthest from integration of the white and Negro races in any degree — cannot help but be astonished by the violence of conversation on the social revolution occasioned by the Supreme court's decisions outlawing segregation in schools and public facilities.
>
> What starts out as a pleasant dinner party winds up with angry shouting, table pounding, red faces, strained throat muscles and not a little hysteria. Curiously enough, the diners are not angry at one another or at Negroes.
>
> It seems that they have to talk loud, and with conviction, perhaps to convince themselves. One cannot help but wonder if man isn't always at his loudest when he is at his wrongest.
>
> Mississippi is a curious blend of tensions and frustrations. These are coupled with fanatical fervor that there shall be no mixing of the races.
>
> What strikes the northern visitor is that Mississippians are not angry at Negroes individually. They don't hate Negroes as Adolph Hitler hated the Jews. Rather they are angry at the Supreme court, the federal government, the new crop of northern "abolitionists," and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Negro group fighting to advance Negro rights.

It would be interesting to know where and among whom Trohan heard any loud and violent conversation on any phase of the race question. The odds are about 100 to 1 that he didn't hear any such talk unless he was visiting with a group of members of the NAACP, the usual company sought by Northern writers when sent South to do stories on the race question.

Trohan did tell the truth, however, when he said that "Mississippians are not angry at Negroes individually," and that we don't hate Negroes. He would have been much more surprised if he had done some real investigating that would have led him to the discovery that 95 per cent of the Negroes in Mississippi do not want integration in schools nor do they desire any other form of social equality. They are content with existing conditions and their most earnest desire is to dwell in peace and harmony with white people. Northern writers, however, never discover that fact because they really don't want bona fide information.

So Opinion

So Opinion - 1956

Southern Opinion 8-16-56

SECTION ONE

MISSISSIPPI NOTEBOOK

by Tom Ethridge

SAME DIFFERENCE

Above the sound and fury of the current Democratic Convention, one basic fact seems painfully clear. Regardless of whether a Democrat or a Republican wins in November, our federal government still will be dominated by radicals, reformers, negrophiles, bleeding hearts, global meddlers and tax-and-spend bureaucrats.

Despite high-sounding talk of "moderation" by Democrats, and "dynamic conservatism" by Republicans, both parties are captives of leftwingers and pinkos who will continue running things, no matter who gains the White House. It's the same difference, either way.

THIS FACT is readily apparent to all who even casually examine the remarkably-similar philosophies of the three leading presidential contenders — Eisenhower, Stevenson and Harriman. Each staunchly advocates a welfare state, in one form or another, and each favors an all powerful central government at the expense of states' rights.

Each is immensely popular with the tax-hungry Washington hierarchy. Each is a "fair-haired boy" with bipartisian internationalists, on Capitol Hill, and in the United Nations tower of babble in New York. All three leading contenders (at this writing) enthusiastically embrace the concept of rampant socialism.

THE PRESIDENT, of course, is plainly on record as sympathizing with the same old leftist aspirations. Landslided into office on a solemn pledge to "clean up the mess in Washington", Eisenhower speedily proved to be a wolf in sheep's clothing. Far from liquidating the Truman bureaucratic dictatorship as promised in 1952, the President has largely retained the Fair Deal in essence.

Yet he could not do so without the cooperation of Congress, where Democrats hold the whip hand and have supported many of his pinkish programs. Certainly our "liberal" Democrats see eye to eye with Ike on "civil rights" and are just as eager to promote integration as Republicans. Six of the nine justices who outlawed segregation are Democrats, appointed by Democrats, please remember.

MISSISSIPPIANS who consider Adlai Stevenson as a knight in shining armor, merely because he promises not to sic federal troops on us, are closing their eyes to his radical tendencies in other directions. For example, he has indicated firm opposition to "Right to Work" laws — a stand obviously taken to appease Walter Reuther and other CIO extremists. Nor has Eleanor Roosevelt and Estes Kefauver endorsed him for nothing.

Unlike Harriman and Eisenhower, Stevenson also is quoted as favoring recognition of Red China. Such a step, obviously, means recognition of that bloody-handed regime by the U. S. Government. Mr. Stevenson believes that excluding Red China from the U. N. is (and we quote) "keeping the Chinese people from legitimate recognition in the world organization."

IT IS DOUBTFUL if many Americans who lost loved ones in Korea share Stevenson's tender concern for the "rights" of a bandit people who constantly menace world peace and who try to shoot their way into the United Nations. Whatever faults Eisenhower and Harriman possess, they have declared vigorous opposition to admitting Red China, which at least is a point in their favor. (As Major Frederick Sullens says, it's hard to understand how a nice fellow like Stevenson can be such a damfool politically.)

These "Big Three" see eye to eye in other important issues however. All favor lowering our immigration barriers to admit hordes of aliens who will compete with Americans for jobs and housing. All three favor continued handouts to ungrateful foreign nations at the expense of overburdened American taxpayers. Each is a high priest of high taxes world government and UNESCO meddling. Each is, at heart, a rank socialist.

THERE ARE MILLIONS of Americans who reject the pinko concepts of Eisenhower, Stevenson and Harriman. These millions favor a return to constitutional government on an "America First" principal. They want federal powers restricted to those authorized in the Constitution. They want taxes reduced. They think Uncle Sam should quit wet-nursing the world. They do not believe Communism can be conquered by imitating it. They believe that Reds are just as dangerous in this country as in Europe or Asia.

These conservative Americans should but do not have a proper influence in shaping platforms and policies which rule our destinies. They never will have proper influence so long as our government remains of, by and for selfish minority pressure groups — and so long as both major political parties remain captives of small but enormously influential cliques of internationalists.

As a Shakespearian character once cried in disgust, "A plague on both your houses!"

Democratic or Republican President — it's six of one and half a dozen of the other.

8-21-56

Southern Opinion

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Manager
T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

8-21-56

Force Can't Solve Problem

It is surprising how many Americans believe their principal racial problem is confined to the South, observes the Christian Science Monitor in a thoughtful editorial on this compelling topic. The fact is that nearly one-third of our colored population now resides in Northern states, the Monitor points out.

"Two often it is assumed that segregation is a wholly artificial pattern enforced by unworthy prejudices," the editorial continues, "but much of segregation comes about naturally through the same processes of selection which cause individuals to choose like-minded associate or families to seek congenial neighborhoods.

"All of us can deal with this situation (Segregation)," the Boston religious daily adds, "if we recognize that two rights are in conflict. One is the right of equal opportunity. The other is the right of the individual to choose his associates."

It is this very basic American right which so many well-meaning persons overlook in their zeal to promote integration. They do not, unfortunately, possess the Christian Science Monitor's objectivity in appraising America's racial dilemma. Typical of these are extremist elements which have sought to adopt an anti-Southern Democratic plank in Chicago.

Sponsors of the so-called civil rights program during the recent Congress afford a typical example of one-sidedness. They sought to destroy many basic rights of the great majority t oinsure what is mistakenly regarded as the supreme rights of minorities. The right to equal opportunity is no less precious than the right of individuals to associate with persons of their choice.

Both are closely related to the Democratic ideal, as the Monitor wisely notes. To enforce the former by law destroys the latter. It is here that a glaring weakness presents itself in the muchly-agitated Fair Employment Practices which radicals so hotly demand. There is the same woeful weakness in forced integration of schools.

Again quoting the Monitor, public officials who are trying to compel race-mixing, in the face of such forces as "natural selection," should be able better to understand why desegregation moves slowly in the South. So too should Northern whites who object to their pattern of life being changed either by racial migration, by industrialization or be any social force causing deterioration.

STATE TIMES, JACKSON, MISSISSIPPI, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1956

LETTERS FROM READERS

Cooperation

State Times,

On behalf of the Jackson League of Women Voters I take pleasure in this opportunity to thank you for the excellent cooperation we have received from you and the members of your staff, during our fund drive for our educational project.

Your excellent editorial and the front page space that the State Times gave for the opening of the campaign. The "Salute to the president" written by your capable editor of the society department and pictures by her assistant.

We are proud of the State Times and the contribution it makes to all Mississippians. Congratulations to you.

Yours sincerely,
Velma J. Rodgers (Mrs. Robert)
President
3417 North State Street

★ ★ ★

Omit Arrington

I do not profess to being a critic nor wish to imply to being a crank but for the past week the expressions of Mr. Arrington could have served the paper better by having been omitted by appearing blank.

L.E.P.

★ ★ ★

Mixing Of Races

State Times,

I read in the State Times Friday about the trouble Mr. John H. Sanders had with his wife in the aisle of the segregated waiting room at University Hospital.

The spokesman stated that the hospital policy is to keep them segregated by this aisle even if some of one race must stand while empty seats are available for the other race.

As a white tax payer of Mississippi I want you to know that this is certainly against our principle and our laws are not for the mixing of races, and since we the white tax paying public is paying for this hospital we expect this to be enforced. If it is not enforced we will try to get other tax payers to have some changes made.

Your prompt attention to this urgent matter will be greatly appreciated by all of the people of Mississippi.

Yours very truly,
Calmes Grocery Co.
W. M. Prince, Jr.
Brooksville, Miss.

★ ★ ★

Boys' Town Story

State Times,

Please do me a big favor by thanking the responsible person for the very commendable editorial published August 22, 1956.

Our progress continues beyond our highest expectations. We are now receiving endorsements and help from sources and persons heretofore we did not have.

Next Friday, August 31, we are publishing an eight page insert in the LAUREL LEADER CALL, giving the "Magnolia Boys' Town Story" and a pictorial progress review.

Of all the things I might have been charged, I have never been charged with being an ingrate. Please know that we are conscious of your warm friendship and your continued interest, cooperation, and help which is so vital in building our own home for neglected, unwanted boys on Boguehouma Lake.

Very sincerely
Rev. Henry Bucklew
Magnolia Boys Town
Laurel, Miss.

9/1/56

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Leters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters end to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Dear Editor:

I noticed in your good paper that the A.D.A. and NAACP have held their convention, the ADA nominated their man for president and the NAACP man for vice president, they also let the Democrats (Southern delegates) sit in this convention as observers only. Now four years ago they did not even want them to sit in as observers. Could it be because all of the votes this party received four years ago were from the south, they wanted them to sit in on this convention, hoping to get our vote this time?

Two things that happened at this convention made me feel good. First the great Harry lost every battle and lost them badly. Second was when the great Governor from Georgia raised up on his hind legs and got both the DA and NAACP delegates "told." He reminded them that they did not carry one of their states last time and that he bet they would not carry one of their States this time for the party. We need more men like him.

I wonder if the Democrats (Southern Democrats) will hold a convention this year and nominate some men who we can vote for with a clear conscience, or will they do like they did four years ago and ask us to vote for one of the Republicans or ADA and NAACP candidates. Wayne Morse left the Republican party because he said that the ADA and NAACP party had morel iberals in it. He was one of those who tried to make the civil rights plank stronger.

Now if some would-be dictator tells you that you will be kicked out of the Democrat party for voting for one of those candidates, you know that this threat has been made in the past, you tell them this cannot be done. Our leaders foresaw this a few years ago and passed a law giving us the right to vote for anyone without having our party affiliations jeopardized. I hope no one uses this as a club to keep us in line.

What are we going to do, vote for Ike and hope and pray that he will live four more years? Or vote for Adlai and hope that both of them will die before they can take office? With Ike and Nick, if Ike the Republicans or ADA and NAACP candidates. Wayne Morse left the Republican party because he said that the ADA and NAACP party had morel iberals in it. He was one of those who tried to make the civil rights plank stronger.

Now if some would-be dictator tells you that you will be kicked out of the Democrat party for voting for one of those candidates, you know that this threat has been made in the past, you tell them this cannot be done. Our leaders foresaw this a few years ago and passed a law giving us the right to vote for anyone without having our party affiliations jeopardized. I hope no one uses this as a club to keep us in line.

What are we going to do, vote for Ike and hope and pray that he will live four more years? Or vote for Adlai and hope that both of them will die before they can take office? With Ike and Nick, if Ike should die we would be in a bad fix, and with Adlai and Estes we would be in a mess, so there you are. You pay your money and you may take your pick but any way you choose you will be in a bad fix. As for me I am joining the "POGO for President" club.

J. C. Grubbs
Mendenhall, Miss

Dear Editor:

In these troubled times of American History it is but natural for every citizen who loves God, family and country to want to contribute something of help to others so that we all may continue to enjoy the freedom to choose the best things that God has to offer a free people.

We are now confronted by a choice of two people who want to be supreme leaders of our nation for the next four years. There is but little difference in the opinions of aspirants to the supreme office with regard to civil rights and absolute control of our thinking and actions as free citizens.

With these conditions before us I have chosen to support the Democratic party as the best course for every American to pursue. I have been a Democrat and believer in Jesus Christ as God's son and man's only hope of Eternal life for forty-four years, and I believe our future for every American citizen is dependent on the awakening to the truth of the falsity of the new ideas of Integration and civil rights proposed to us. The TRUTH is the LIGHT and will shine into the darkest hours of life.

As good American citizens we should have no fear to march on with our Democratic party trusting to the truth to guide us out of the many falsehoods that present to us as the true and better way of life.

Jesus Christ was certainly a Democrat. His teaching and work prove that. Maybe you can find space for these honest remarks.

Sincerely,
M. C. Durr, Natchez, Miss

Dear Editor:

I enclose a clipping from your Mr. Hills' column.

Surely you have a poor staff if they do not know that the Negro vote has been Democrat since 1936!

As a matter of fact the Negro vote was the only group vote not to break to Eisenhower in 1952. It saved South Carolina from going Republican then.

As one who has lived in both North and South, I think separate schools might be justified to many people in the North. But the case will have to be presented by honest informed people, not the self-deceived like Mr. Hills.

Logan R. Crouch
Box 554
Jackson, Miss.

'Clarion Call' To Return To Fundamental Things

9-1-56

Editor, Journal and Guide:

I liked your editorial, "Fiddling While Rome Burns." It is a clarion call to some important people to set their minds upon the serious problems of the present critical times, when both money and thoughtful action is needed to save the social and economic gains we have made in the past 50 years. There is a move on in the South to destroy the public schools, and this move is aimed at the Negro. You can bet your life that the politicians will find a way to funnel public funds into private channels for the education of white children, unless there is eternal vigilence and the exercise of statesmanship.

PHILLIP BARKIS
Richmond, Va.

We Should Not Take The Path Of Least Resistance

Editor, Journal and Guide:

The article "Fiddling While Rome Burns" was very timely and impressive. I was impressed with it to the extent of discussing same with our County Wide Steering committee. It was the feeling of the committee that this article should be expanded upon and made an issue in order to make our people more fully aware of assuming their rightful responsibility as citizens.

We, along with many others, would like to improve the standards of living in this vicinity, which includes Petersburg-Hopewell and surrounding counties. But it seems that the steps toward growth and progress (that have been used successfully by nations and other groups in the past) is being discouraged and intimidated (through fear) by the very people that mold our vision of thinking.

We are not satisfied standing by seeing our people seemingly following the path of least resistance, which in most cases encompass the destructive, degrading, humiliating activities of our modern society. We believe that your paper can help us find the basic truth in such a manner that we will be able to sell it to our people.

THEODORE O. THWEATT, chairman
Disputanta, Va.

Civil Rights Planks Of Both Parties

Editor, Journal and Guide:

It does seem that the two major political parties do spend a lot of valuable time, energy, and effort on cutting and shaving to get just the right type of planks to fit into the cracks of the fence to help keep poor and unfortunate Negroes in their segregated places and on the right sides of the tracks. But, despite all the barriers or handicaps, the Negroes, much like Old Man River, just keeps rolling along progressively, here and there, in spots. Their progress has been much more and increasingly general than their retrogression. Democracy is supposed to be based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people and the Negroes come into that category.

GEORGE WESLEY BLOUNT
Chester, Pa.

"Fiddling While Rome Burns"

Editor Journal and Guide:

Mrs. Guerry and I enjoy your paper constantly, but I happen to have kept out your editorial on "Fiddling While Rome Burns," to mention with special appreciation.

(Rev.) MOULTRIE GUERRY
Norfolk.

Southern opinion

9/1/56 Journal & Guide

Attorney Says South Is Misunderstood

So Opinion Delta Dem. Times 9/13/56

By MARIE HEMPHILL
Staff Correspondent

INDIANOLA—Forrest G. Cooper Indianola attorney, speaking at the local Rotary Club said the South is "misunderstood by other sections of the country."

"Our friends in the North and West have been so brainwashed by left-wing propaganda through television, radio, the press, and from the platform and pulpit", he said, "that they believe no one has a right to question the pronouncements of the Supreme Court They call us narrow, bigoted, and even traitorous because we refuse to slavishly bow to the whims of the nine appointed judges. However, I have great faith in the American people when they know the truth, and we must continue to get the truth to them."

Reviewing the background of the formation of the Constitution, the speaker said this plan of government would never have been ratified unless the people had been assured that "all powers not expressly delegated to the aforesaid Constitution are reserved to the states." Seven states held back on ratification until this matter was definitely settled by the Bill of Rights. Cooper also delved into the history of the 14th Amendment upon which the high courts claims to have based its anti-segregation decision, declaring that the validity of this amendment is doubtful since it was "never legally adopted by a three-fourths majority of the states."

Denouncing what he called the "dangerous tendency of the Court in ignoring the Constitution and the legal precedent set by some of the world's greatest jurists," he declared that the power of this judicial body must be curbed.

"People of the North and West must realize that the school issue is merely an outward sore which indicates a malignant disease within. The shoe pinches our foot now, but tomorow it may pinch the other fellow's foot. In their wild lust for power, the nine judges will undoubtedly invade other fields to usurp states' rights interfering with election of officials, taxation, and the right of the individual to run his own business and hire his own employees," he said.

"As an attorney I have sworn to uphold the Constitution, but I owe no loyalty to any decree of the Supreme Court which tries to read into the document something that is not there. The Constitution is not a fluid instrument meaning one thing yesterday, another today, and still something else tomorrow. It is not merely what nine men think it is, to be changed every time the Court changes. It is patriotic to interpose state sovereignity when any one, President, Congress or the Supreme Court, deals unlawfully with the Constitution," Cooper said.

Teacher Important To Dixie's Youth

Dear Editor:

I am neither a teacher or parent but I often wonder if the public realizes the value and importance of our teachers. Christ, the greatest of all teachers was the trailblazer for those to follow. Even to understand His teachings the child must first be preprepared by our teachers of today. Every minister, public official, judge, doctor, scientist, lawmaker and statesman owe their position in life to our teachers and few there be among them that have actually contributed as much to the good of our country as has the first grade teacher, yet it seems to me that the teacher is ignored in about the same manner as the humble household servant.

I have heard and read all sorts of opinions on the hot political school integration subject. Undoubtedly political because the Vice President claimed the Supreme Court decision as an accomplishment of the Republican Party. Teachers have been subjected to the embarrassment of performing their duties under orders of U. S. Courts. Mobs have paraded on the school grounds. Violence and bloodshed has resulted.

Citizens have been jailed because they attempted to preserve their time-honored way of life as one of the priceless freedoms of a free people. But in no single instance have I heard or read of the teacher being called upon for his or her advice in the interest of the children. No the teacher has been entirely ignored.

The teacher, the most important of all public servants, for his or her own best interest and for that of the children of the South, the State and the Nation, should organize into a Dixie Teachers Union. Every craft and profession from the Farmer to the employees of the Government are organized and they get results.

If they were now so organized and would take similar actions to the other big unions, mobs, strife, and bloodshed would become a matter of history over night. There would be no soldiers on the school grounds, neither would there be any picket lines or strike breakers. They could lay down their terms and they would be quickly recognized by every court of the land and School integration would soon lose it's political standing in both national parties.

Both races fully realize that integration of the races will bring crossing of their blood. Both also realize that by every applicable law of nature such a crossing of the blood is a violation of God's laws.

Right carries the power of might and will eventually prevail. May God inspire our teachers to think and act for the good of themselves, the children and our great country.

Joe T. Teaver
Canton, Miss.
(Box 58)

Clarion Ledger 9/14/56

So Opinion

1956 - Sou. opinion

Hitlerism Seen In Forced Integration

Dear Editor: SO Opinion

Since the State of Mississippi is short, of teachers, may I suggest we offer jobs to those teachers who have had the courage to walk out of integrated schools in the face of threats of losing their jobs if they did. It is a sorry state of affairs when a teacher so near the end of his career has to accept intergration or jeopardize his retirement. He has no alternative., which is Hitlerism.

Mr. Eisenhower has told us in plain English that he realizes we don't want integration, but that we can be whipped into accepting it. Stevenson has made his stand clear without whitewashing it. There is no such thing as the lesser of two evils. Evil is evil in any mans language.

To stay away from the polls election day would indicate we have not been whipped into making even a poor choice. It would show our dislike for either of the two. Good points that either would have in favor of the South would be dragged into the dust by integration, so we still wouldn't have anything, so why cut our own throats. The least we can do is band together and fight back. We can rest assured no one else is going to do it for us.

"DAILY READER"
(Name withheld by request)
Wiggins, Miss.

Clarion Ledger
9/20/56

Lady Offers Views On Segregation cl edit pag monday Voice of the

Dear Editor:

Since schools are starting every where in the South at this time, I would like to say a word or so in defense of segregation and its importance for the good of this and future generations.

We have only to look around us at the schools where integration has been forced and see the havoc that has been incurred. Schools where this has happened have slowed down from three to four years. Those in Washington, D. C., are good examples and near riots have broken out in the case of Clinton, Tenn., and Sturgis, Ky.

The way I see to solve this problem is for each school in the community, county and district to vote on whether they will have integration or not. I venture the assertion that there would be no integrated schools in our Southern states. If our government is still a democracy by, of and for the people, then integration should be settled by a direct vote rather than by the Supreme Court. Federal troops would have nothing to say about our schools. Even our colleges would vote against it.

The Southern states deplore actions of the National Democratic Convention in the nomination of Adlai Stevens and Estes Kefauver but there is nothing we can do about it now. Neither candidate is in sympathy with the South in any of its ideals and problems. We may expect integration to be rammed down our throats sooner or later, unless the Southern states can ward it off by the use of interposition or other lawful means. The same is true in the case of Eisenhower and Nixon. We can expect nothing of them. Either way the election goes, it will be hazardous to the South and to the nation. SO Opinion

Mrs. Clayton Mitchell
Silver Creek, Miss.

Clarion Ledger 9/19/56

Leters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters end to limit the number of letters on any one subject. SO Opinion

Sherman's Spirit Is On The March Again

Dear Editor:

In 1952 Ike, our beloved Republican President, spoke of unleashing Chiang Kai-shek's forces and freeing the people behind the Iron Curtain so they could vote in free elections. This promise has not yet been fulfilled, but give him plenty of time.

No doubt, for the present, he is more interested in integration and a free vote for colored people in every nook and cranny of the South. Our Republican philosophy is equal voting rights; equal pay; equal moral, social, spiritual, economic and financial rights of all white and colored people.

So let's all campaign for Ike's reelection with all the vigor of Gen. Sherman's glorious march from Atlanta to the Sea.

Henry K. Wallace
The Mall
Washington, D. C.

Going Fishing Won't Help Southern Fight

Dear Editor:

I agree one hundred per cent with the Rev. Charles C. Jones' letter in The Clarion-Ledger. That would be very effective if the teachers of the schools would just walk out and refuse to teach mixed classes. If they are not Mixiecrats, they will do so.

And may I add that we, the white people of the South, have voted ourselves into this mess by going along with the party for too long. Come Nov. 6th, let's vote ourselves out of the mess by voting against any man that advocates integration of the races in any form regardless of what our leaders may say. We the people hold the key with our vote. Let the world know that Mississippi doesn't intend to have integration by any party, now or ever.

Just remember a vote for Adlai and Estes won't only be a vote to integrate our schools, but also our public offices throughout the South. When a man says he is opposed to integration of the races but still he's supporting Adlai and Estes, I have my doubts of that man. I just don't trust such a man to be my leader.

Going fishing won't help the cause any. It's better to vote, but be careful with it, or we will find ourselves in a worse mess than ever.

An independent States' Righter,
John M. Lee
Rt. B
Poplarville, Miss

Clarion Ledger
9/20/56

Clarion Ledger 9-28-56

Brotherhood And Understanding Can't Be Forced With Bayonets

Southerners have been disturbed and all other thinking Americans are pained at recent developments in Tennessse and Kentucky, where bayonets and tanks have been used in an effort to force racial integration among school students.

No one questions the need for maintaining law and order, or that domestic disturbances are unbecoming. Nevertheless, authorities in both states seem to have shown a callous disregard for due legal processes, in an obvious desire to impress outsiders with their "liberalism."

The U. S. Supreme Court, in decreeing enforcement to federal courts and federal integration, have specifically delegated its enforcement to federal courts and federal marshalls, not to the armed forces of the Southern states. Moreover, gubernatorial action has circumvented the right of local school boards to act in local cases. In Kentucky, particularly, state law requires that local boards must take action in such cases before Negro students can enroll.

Studied disregard for legal processes and the use of Hitler Storm Trooper tactics have perhaps doomed the future political chances of both Governor Chandler and Governor Clement. Their clumsy efforts have served to increase rather than lessen tensions caused by the racial crisis. Certainly neither governor has made any effort whatsoever to exhaust existing legal recourses before knuckling under to the mixiologists.

There has been much pious talk of "brotherhood and understanding" in the grave race problem created by the unfortunate Black Monday decree. Needless to remark, brotherhood and understanding cannot be established through arbitrary use of bayonets, tanks and machines, to intimidate those who protest radical overnight changes in the customs and habits of a century.

These observations are in no way intended to condone "mob violence," which seems to us as having been greatly exaggerated. It is not mob violence for citizens and taxpayers to assemble and present their grievances. In fact, the rights of free assembly and free speech are guaranteed by the Constitution, although these rights have been trampled in both Tennessee and Kentucky.

If there is any lesson to be learned from what has happened, it should be the inexorable fact that brute force cannot win the South, nor can compulsory integration ever succeed. Those who entertain such an asinine belief merely deceive themselves and further complicate an already deplorable situation. Nor can hypocritical moralizing serve any useful purpose, until those who vilify the South set their own houses in order.

As for law and order, it must and shall be maintained. However, orderly processes cannot be circumvented by those demagogues and political adventurers who would use military force to destroy the constitutional right of citizens to choose their own associates, customs and social companions. If and when those rights are abrogated, democracy will indeed have reached its twilight and the Constitution itself will have become meaningless.

So Opinion

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Letters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Confusion Created Our Race Problems

With regard to the presidential election, it has been a common expression that we have nowhere to go except to Stevenson. This sounds a rather doleful note in our political life It is a plain admission that we have little voice in the selection of our national leadership. Be it Democrat or Republican, it is out of the politics of this leadership that we have derived the race problem.

It is a recent thing that the Negro race has pressed forward as an associate of the white race. A comparatively small Negro vote outside of the South has both parties all up in the air, bucking each other by making concessions to get this vote. While the chances are most remote that this vote would swing a presidential election, it has more weight in national politics than millions of white votes in the South.

Despite the fact that the race problem is a direct consequence of the present political situation there is a looking back and clinging on to the long fixed way of being in the bag. And despite the fact that the Democratic nominee at the Chicago convention expressed "unequivocal support" of the Supreme Court ruling, top state officials continue to be counted in the bag. "Game in the bag" is the prey of the enemy.

It is of much importance at this time to have a ticket that supports our way of living. Why the dilemma between the "devil and the witch", when we have the States Rights Ticket? Should what is right be doomed to everlasting failure, because it did not meet with immediate success? Success often falls short of what is right. There is failure by not supporting what is right.

Why support candidates who are fatal to our cause? It is time for our talk and our ballots to mean the same thing. The States Rights ticket is an answer to the political mass of confusion and to its attendant, the race problem.

J. C. Whatley,
Morton, Miss.

Inconsistent Stand Of South's Critics

Dear Editor:

The NAACP has charged persecution of Texas Negroes because the Assistant Attorney General was accompanied by armed officers while they checked their records. They lost no time in accusing the incident as being "coercive" and "intimidating."

The same charge could have been made by the white citizens of Tennessee and Kentucky of their own National Guard who stood with bayonets and machine guns in their sides as they attempted to defend their schools from the onynx plague. But that was a horse of another color. When the NAACP is in Rome they don't believe in shooting roman candles.

Evidently the maggot ridden odor from Mr. Eisenhowers "example" of integration in the Washington schools hasn't reached his nose as yet. If said "example," to set the pace for the South was so highly succesful why oh why are the Negroes screaming their heads off for him to stop the investigation of said "example" now being conducted in Washington.

When the wind changes, Mr. Eisenhower will find his foot in his mouth. Then I am going to "rock 'n 'roll."

A Daily Reader
Wiggins, Miss.

So Opinion

Clarion Ledger
9/26/56

Opinion

South Right Upheld To Run Its Business

Nationally Known Speaker Regrets Some Things Magazines Are Carrying

By EDWINA DAVIS

One of America's most popular speakers Friday told Southern civic leaders and students here that "the rest of the country isn't trying to run your business."

Referring to the racial issue, Dr. J. Kenneth McFarland, educational consultant for General Motors, said "some things being written today would indicate this."

Then he added:

"It's too bad some of the national magazines are not published in the South so we could get this idea across."

Dr. McFarland made the keynote address at the Georgia Leadership Training Institute Friday morning at Georgia State College of Business Administration. Some 400 civic leaders from towns in Georgia and Alabama and high school and college students from the Atlanta area are attending the institute.

* * *

AFTER HIS reference to the racial issue, Dr. McFarland turned to other matters—the need for leaders with organized, usable information and freedom.

He said people in the United States today have more facts in their heads than at any time in history. But this information must be organized and used intelligently, he stressed.

Dr. McFarland defined freedom as "the right for as many people as possible to be as happy as they can."

He broke this down into five "rights"—the right to look around, to be consulted, to be uncommon, to look ahead and to look up.

By looking up, he meant the right to worship God, and he placed the greatest emphasis on this right.

* * *

IN PASSING, he debunked conventional courses on speech making, overemphasis on group learning and committees.

"If you have something to tell people, you'll make a good speech," he said, indicating that the mechanics of speech making were of far less importance.

He said he felt many so-called group learning activities were merely group activities and that little learning was involved.

"People today are afraid of being lonely when man, because he is the only animal overbuilt for this world, can never be pletely fulfilled on this e he said.

He lashed at committees nothing groups.

Dr. McFarland's speech blend of inspiration, inform and humor. The handsome mer school superintendent on a 140-acre ranch at To Kansas.

Frank Graham Asks South To Obey Law of the Land

"Now is the time for the people of good will in all Southern communities," Frank P. Graham told a New York audience last month, as he has said on platforms in the South, "to make clear their support of two basic propositions: obedience to the law of the land as interpreted by the Supreme Court and preservation of the public schools."

Dr. Graham, United Nations Mediator, former U.S. Senator from North Carolina and president of the University of North Carolina from 1930 to 1949, addressed a meeting held by the Roger N. Baldwin Civil Liberties Foundation. His subject was "The Heritage and Hopes of Freedom in the Atomic Age."

Opinion

Tracing the concept of human liberty from earliest to present times, Dr. Graham said that the world now looks westward in "both fear and hope" as to whether the American people will "repudiate their own great revolution and in fear of freedom renounce the very freedom which gave them their birth and made them great."

Arrangements for the publication of Dr. Graham's lecture are now under way.

Carol Liberty June 1950

1956

Mrs. Roosevelt Called Prodder of Integration

9/2/56 Const

Atlanta—I note that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt says that President Eisenhower should have set up a racial conference. I personally feel that had Mrs. FDR conducted herself as our past two charming first ladies, namely Mrs. Truman and Mrs. Eisenhower, that we would have no racial problems. This situation arose in the Roosevelt administration and she certainly added kindling to the fire.

I believe in every American having his rights, but I cannot see that we will ever accept our colored friends socially, especially in

So Opinion

Primary Victory Qualified Support

our schools. I feel that the colored students will receive far more snubs and hurt feelings if they are ever put in our schools, as they will never be invited to the school parties, etc., so why not let them stay in their own schools? It will be best for all concerned.

GEORGIAN.

Leo Aikman

Flossy Sl

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS: Kiwanis leaders get the point of a remark from Former Governor-Secretary Of State-Supreme Court Justice Byrnes. From left, Fulton B. Creech, Mr. Byrnes, B. C. Preslar, I. D. Elmore. (Staff Photo by Crowson).

Byrnes Says South Won't Surrender

Sumter D. Item 10/6/56

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Blames Both Parties For Developments In Kiwani s Club Address

Neither the Democratic nor the Republican party should receive credit or blame for the U. S. Supreme Court ruling asking for the end of segregation of races in the public schools, James F. Byrnes, former governor of South Carolina, declared here yesterday in an address delivered at the American Legion Hut. The occasion was a meeting of the Sumter Kiwanis Club attended by 240 members and guests.

The elder statesman traced the developments leading to the Supreme Court decision handed down May 17, 1954 and pointed out that it was a unanimous decision made by seven Democrats, one Republican appointed by former President Harry S. Truman and Republican Chief Justice Earl Warren who was appointed to his post by President Dwight D. Eisenhower. The latter read the court's opinion.

"While it is not fair to criticize either political party for the decision," Mr. Byrnes declared, "every American is free to criticize the Supreme Court." He added: "The Supreme Court did not create the people; the people created the court."

He termed the decision one which "interferes with the rights of parents in the education of their children." The investigation conducted by a House of Representatives Committee of the integrated school system in Washington, D. C., "dramatically proves the great harm" done to the white children attending these schools. He expressed the belief that the findings of the investigating group will make the people of the South more determined than ever not to mix the races in the schools.

Mr. Byrnes, a former member of the highest court in the land, was interrupted by applause when he declared: "My hope is that the people of the South will not surrender."

"I have supreme confidence that we will find ways to lawfully maintain segregation" in the schools," he continued. He hoped further that "innocent Negro children" will not be made to suffer and denied an education because "of the actions of the N.A.A.C.P. directed from New York."

Mr. Byrnes, who was introduced by Fulton B. Creech, outlined steps he had taken while governor of this state to improve race relations. Among these he listed the outlawing of the Klu Klux Klan, the imposition of the three per cent sales tax for school building purposes, the appropriation of "greatly increased funds" for the operation of the State College for Negroes, the hospital for mentally-deficent Negroes, and the domitory for Negro women at the State Tuberculosis Hospital.

(Continued on Page 9.)

Byrnes

(Continued from Page 1.)

"I know that the deterioration of race relations is a source of sorrow to you - as it is to me," Mr. Byrnes stated. "I know you are disappointed - you are distressed. To me, the increased tension is tragic." The usurpation of power by the Supreme Court, by its abuse of the injunction, is now a matter of concern to the South, but "in time" will be a matter of apprehension to the entire country, he predicted.

COMMENTING ON election trends, Mr. Byrnes said there is "overwhelming evidence in South Carolina" of block voting on the part of Negroes, and cited specific examples in Columbia and in Darlington. In 1952, 90 per cent of Negroes voting in the state cast their ballots for Adlai Stevenson, he said. "Block voting is always unfortunate," Mr. Byrnes said. It shows "no thinking" and "acting under instructions, from somebody, somewhere." Furthermore, it is forcing white voters, who usually consider foreign and domestic issues when voting, "to vote as a block against the Negro-supported candidates." For 75 years South Carolina has been supporting the Democratic candidates and for this the people of the state "have a right to expect some consideration."

"You and I must continue to do what is right," Mr. Byrnes concluded. "We must continue to stand by our decision to maintain segregated schools in South Carolina."

The speaker, who has been a member of Kiwanis for 25 years, being affiliated in that time with the Aiken and Spartanburg clubs, was presented a country-cured ham to take to Mrs. Byrnes. "I didn't think there was one in existence," he quipped. He said he couldn't promise to keep it as long as he has kept the robe given to him by Sumter which he still insists on wearing in academic processions. It is the same black robe he wore when he was a member of the Supreme Court.

BYRNES ASSAILS INTEGRATIONISTS

Chat Times 10/6/56

Ex-Governor Says South to Get No Help From Either Party

SUMTER, S.C., Oct. 5 (AP)—Former South Carolina Gov. James F. Byrnes declared today that the South "need look to neither the national Democratic nor Republican party for assistance" on the race issue.

Byrnes, a former justice of the United States Supreme Court, asserted, however, he has "supreme confidence that we will find ways to lawfully maintain segregation" in public schools despite the attitude of the parties and federal court pressure.

"Even if the court decisions shall force the closing of public schools," he said, "we will find ways to educate our children."

In a speech to the Sumter Kiwanis Club, Byrnes said:

"This feeling of determination is due to no petty prejudice. It is an instinctive desire for the preservation of our races. It is useless to argue whether the racial instinct is right or wrong —it exists."

Investigation Cited

Byrnes said the current congressional investigation of racially integrated public schools in Washington "proves the great harm done to the white children of that city by the mixing of the races.

"The facts disclosed in that investigation make the South more determined to resist integration in every way that it can be lawfully done."

Byrnes added that he is "still hopeful that notwithstanding the efforts of the NAACP, the Negroes of South Carolina will voluntarily continue to attend their own schools. Whatever may be said of conditions in other states, Negroes know they now have equal school facilities in this state."

Indian Editor Visits Greenville

Clarion Ledger, 10-19-56

GREENVILLE —The success or failure of India's efforts to raise its living standards under Democratic processes will probably determine whether non Communist Asia can survive, a noted Indian newspaper editor, now visiting Greenville, said Tuesday. The reason is that Communist China is also attempting an economic revolution through dictatorial methods, and if these succeed and India fails, Communism will prevail.

Dr. Sachin Sen, editor of the "Indian Nation", an English language daily in Patna, India, believes that the United States has a vital stake in India's effort, and that enlighted self interest dictates continued assistance from this country in India's drive for self sufficiency.

FIVE BOOKS

The studious and observant 53 year old journalist and author is in the United States as a participant in the state department's foreign leader exchange program. During his three months stay, he will tour every section of the country, but Greenville is his only small city to visit. Holder of a Master of Arts and Ph. D. degree from Calcutta University, Dr. Sen has been since 1946 the editor of the "Indian Nation," the largest provincial publication in India. He is also president of the All Indian Newspaper Editors' Conference, comparable to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, and has published five books in English, and others, including three works of fiction, in his native tongue, Bengali.

Since Dr. Sen's principal interests are political, he has been following the presidential campaign closely, and says that he has been particularly impressed with Adlai Stevenson's views on matters of international importance.

PEOPLE FRIENDLY

While Dr. Sen marvels at the extent of mechanization in American agriculture — he visited Delta and Pine Land Company Tuesday as the guest of Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Syre — such techniques would presently worsen India's underemployment problem, he says. He has been almost as impressed with American "self service" devices in the home and in business enterprises.

As for the American people, they are much more communicative and friendly then he imagined them to be, and he has been especially impressed with Greenville because of its progressive atmosphere and because he does not have here the cramped, closed-in feeling that he experiences in larger cities.

A similarity exists between India's now outlawed subjection of its "untouchable" caste, the lowest economic and social group in the country, and the race problem in the United States, he says. In each country, there is still a great gap between the legal status of these groups and public acceptance of legal decisions.

~~Letters to~~ the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Says Both Parties Ignore Real Issues

Dear Editor:

This presidential campaign is surely unusual, if not amazing. The four men who are candidates for President and vice president, assert that the opponent refuses to discuss the "great issues" of the campaign; but neither has as yet discussed any important issue, not to say "great." Incidentally, that word "great" is over-worked. It goes with any noun. "Great" Congressman, from a "great" state, and our Great Republican Chief Justice.

The latest is that "great" mongrel from New York City, who lists himself as "of the Negro race." He seems to have changed from a "great" Democrat to a "Great" Republican. In reply to a charge that "pressure" was brought, News Secretary Hagerty, says that a "new low has been reached", his favorite word. So he lets out a "blast" at the Democrats. Hagerty used that "new low", when it was mentioned that Eisenhower sends his grandchildren to a private white school, or to a white school in Virginia. Now, Ike says Nixon is a "great American", and Nixon says that the Negro is his equal. So why is it a "new low" to mention that the "great" Republicans do not send their children to mixed schools? And why do they all, Democrats and Republicans, insist that southern white children and black children be mixed?

CLEMENT'S ACTION

The NAACP is clearly supporting the Democrats. In line with that policy is the mixing efforts tried in Texas, Tennessee and Kentucky, all states in the doubtful column. In Tennessee the Governor orders out the militia, with machine guns and seven tanks, to control a few hundred women, children and men, and force about eight Negro children into an all white school. Clement was out in full battle regalia, with steel helmet. One correspondent wrote that the action of Gov. Clement assured that the Negro vote would go to the Democrats. Truly a "great" issue!

There are great issues, but there seems to be agreement that each of the Parties will not bring up the subject; a conspiracy of silence. All the writers, magazines and commentators agree that there is no difference between the platforms of the parties. One national magazine says that the two major parties "offers to the American people only a frivolous choice between Socialism with a broad grin and Socialism with a psuedo-intellectual stare."

Both parties are for the United Nations, which costs us many hundres of millions a year, we paying two-thirds of the cost and the other 60 or 70 nations paying one-third. Lord Beaverbrook of England said in response to a question: "You Americans are a strange contradiction. You spend huge sums of money fighting the fifth column in your country, but at the same time you've erected the biggest fifth column headquarters in the world—the United Nations."

ARMS FOR ISRAEL

Both parties favor arms and money to Israeli, which means war with 40,000,000 Moslems, and their eternal enmity. Both favor the "give away program" as permanent, which means that we continue to send our substance to the ends of the earth, at the expense of the American tax-payer, much of it to people too proud to work and too lazy to steal. If that five billion a year was stopped, it would mean reduction in personal income taxes of 15 percent. But no one favors the American tax-payer.

Neither party dares to endorse the views of Jefferson, Jackson or Lincoln on the Supreme Court, nor their views on the race problem. Mr. Lincoln said that he was not in favor of making "voters or jurors of Neroes."

Neither Party dares to oppose the flood of alien, anti-Christian immigrants poised to come, as soon as our barriers are lowered. Neither dares to oppose the acts of violence practiced by the Big Labor Unions. In the Kohler strike, the press reports that more than 800 acts of violence have been committed, ranging from beatings of strikers and their wives and children to actual killings. Walter Reuther is reported to have spent six million dollars to force the factory to bow to the Union bosses. The strike has lasted two years and eight months. If the Ku Klux had committed one percent of the crimes committed in the strike at Kohler's, how the Northern press would have raged and raved!

And neither candidate for President will pledge himself to appoint only outstanding Constitutional lawyers to the Federal bench.

Yes, there are "great issues," but none of the four candidates will dare state his position, and attack the other side. Reason, — all are controlled by the same pressure groups. The rivalry is which can practice the most abject cowardice.

A. S. Coody
776 North West Street
Jackson, Miss.

Clarion Ledger
10-17-56

So Jackson

Clarion-Ledger
10-18-56

AFFAIRS OF STATE

By Charles M. Hills

BRITON SEES OUR SIDE

We have heard a great deal from outside sources that the segregation practiced in the South horrifies the rest of the world.

So it is with considerable interest this morning that we read a page from the Middlesex Independent and W. London Star, England, Sept. 21 issue, which carries as one of its stories the following discussion of our Southern way of life. . . . .

"Sir, History records that grave crises arise in the life of every nation, often created by the Government, when the people are forced in defense of their freedom and rights to demand redress.

"The demands of the people of England through the Barons at Runnymede, which resulted in the granting of Magna Carta is an historical case in point. Today the American nation is confronted with a parallel instance of the deprivation of its judicial rights.

COURT TRANSGRESSOR

"The Supreme Court of the United States is responsible to the people, and if through its acts it transgresses the law and wrongs the people, they have a right to redress. The ruling of the Supreme Court on racial integration may be regarded as America's Runnymede.

"The N.A.A.P.C. (National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peoples) is conducting an intensive campaign throughout the States for the implementation of the Supreme Court's ruling. Behind the N.A.A.C.P. are pressure groups, Communists and unscrupulous politicians.

"The N.A.A.C.P. has been responsible for the recent race riots in the Southern States. The Negro's worst enemy today is the N.A.A.C.P. which tells him that he is a second-class citizen that he must assert himself and demand his "rights."

"~~In doing~~ this, the Negro becomes troublesome, discourteous and arrogant, and generally behaves like a second-class citizen.

OPPOSITION

"There is strong evidence that the Negroes themselves are as opposed to integration as the whites.

"At the African Methodist Episcoapl Conference in Pittsburgh, a Negro church leader said that the Negro people must retain their separate entity. The Negro must maintain his individuality as a Christian.

"Integration can be accomplished only by the abuse and eventual destruction of constitutional government and States' rights.

"The South is determined to defeat the attempt to mix the races, regarding it as an attempt at complete domination of the South by radical forces beyond its borders. For the South 1956 is a year of decision.—Yours faithfully,

(Mrs) M. GARSIDE
Chepstow Road,
W.2."

ENGLAND AWARE

This story from a London newspaper is dealing directly with the South section of the United States.

Yet, on the same page there are others, too lengthy to reprint here, that deal with the sordidness and "vice on Harrow Road," a Negro settlement in London.

"Why should people with self respect be forced to live alongside the drunks and prostitutes of Harrow Road?" questions another writer.

"We are entitled to something better and more civilized," he continues.

These revelations in the London Star certainly refute the stories we have heard in the past that the English welcomed the blacks into the British Isles as fellows.

And, we are delighted to learn that the English are not so bitter toward the South and segregation as are some of our own Yankee brethren, a few of whom came down here last week to see if they couldn't help us integrate.

Letters to the Editor

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Letters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the the right to reduce lengthy letters and to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Sorry Spectacle Is Disgrace To Nation

Dear Editor:

The Eyes of the World are on America and its integration issue, thus say the People of Distinction. The eyes of the world really have a grand view of it now, through the Washington School Report.

What is the matter with white parents in the city of Washington that they allow their children to be subjected to such low moral treatment and indignities that are thrust on them by the Negro students?

What a disgrace to the nation for such a report to come from its national capital!

Are some folks' faces red? Well, they should be. Anyone, no matter what rank they hold, of what social, political or financial prestige, who still upholds racial integration as right, and still sponsors and defends integrated schools after reading or hearing this report, should be classed as contributing to juvenile delinquency. The vileness of it is sickening to think about. And may the Good Lord have mercy on our little Southern children, especially little girls, if treachery whould ever condemn them to such conditions.

Intergration columnists in my estimation, are rattles on the tail of the N.A.A.C.P. serpent, rave that Citizens' Councils should be outlawed and federal funds denied to states that refuse to integrate. They should be set straight a little, if it is possible to do so. It is a real pity that people of one section of the country should feel compelled to organize against tyranny and unjust enforcement and roughshod riding over by people of another section, who have no more consideration of individual rights, states' rights or morals of children than a rattlesnake.

Too, if Citizens' Councils are illegal, what about Labor Unions? Aren't they organized for safety and justice to laborers against impositions? What about N.A.A.C.P.? Aren't they organized against white people of the South and aim to overthrow the Southern way of life? What about the Communist Party, whose aim is to overthrow the entire government? So—Mr. Columnist, who is who?

Federal funds should be refused? What about the 278 million dollars that Mississippi paid in federal taxes last year? What if that fund should be refused to federal government by the state of Mississippi? Seems to me that the state has as much right in that matter as the federal government.

It shouldn't be forgotten that those states whose leaders howl loudest for our Southern scalps still have plenty of segregation within their borders, and that the tops of both major political parties don't give a hang about our school children or what happens to them. All they want is to occupy the White House in Washington and the President's chair.

Yours for Segregation,
Mrs J H. O'Kelley,
Purvis, Miss.

P. S. It seems to me that segregation is an institution of the Creator, and who are mere men to go beyond the jurisdiction of the Creator? What happens in the long run to men who play God?

May I say all Hail to the men who have shown spunk enough to carry on this school investigation. Down South should be proud of their native sons. Those Yankees who gave up the ghost seemed to have shown a "yaller" streak.

Clarion Ledger
10-1-56 — So Opinion

"Miss. Notebook" Ethridge Claim Letter

WE'LL TAKE SPINACH

9-25-56

Southerners hear a lot about the wisdom of "working out our differences within the party". Considerable progress seems to have been made in this direction, if developments along the Southern educational front are an accurate indication. So Opin Democratic governors in Kentucky and Tennessee apparently have found a solution to the integration problem without any help from Republican mixiologists. They are outlawing segregation with Southern bayonets rather than with the Yankee variety, but the end result will be exactly the same.

If this is a sample of "working out our differences within the party", will somebody please pass the spinach?

"QUOTES"

Let's Be Consistent

Too many people talk against socialism and expanding governmental power while at the same time demanding more services from the government. The only way to keep this so-called creeping socialism from expanding is for private citizens and counties to take the responsibility for certain operations and resolve to bear the cost without running to state or national government for assistance.

If we want individual and states' rights we must be prepared to pay the cost to keep them. — NATCHEZ TIMES

Clarion Ledger
10/20/56 So Opinion

"Ike on Integration"

May I speak to the defense of the "good people" of the South to whom President Eisenhower referred and whom reader James E. Lee contends do not exist?

These "good people" exist all right—perhaps not in the majority but certainly in sizable numbers. They exist among ordinary people like my parents in Alabama, who, even if they spoke, would never be quoted in a newspaper. More than 60,000 of them voted in Alabama recently against an amendment to permit use of public money for private schools to prevent integration. They exist among the clergy and church laymen, many of whom have spoken out and gotten only a line in the newspapers, and many others of whom fear the wrath of their congregations. They exist among teachers and educators who are afraid to speak out for fear of losing their jobs. They exist among Congressmen and lawmakers who say one thing in private and another in public because they fear being defeated in the next election.

Now, why don't these "good people" speak out? It's from fear, and from the lack of having respected and influential people backing them up. And who is the most respected and influential person in the country? The President himself. And does he back up these "good people"? He does not!

In June of this year 125 "good people"—Southern educators attending a Southern Regional Conference on Human Relations Education—met at the University of Oklahoma. The stated purpose of this meeting was "to provide an opportunity for Southern educators to come together to discuss human-relations problems which Southern public schools will have to face in the desegregation process ordered by the United States Supreme Court." President Eisenhower sent a greeting to this conference. The conference caused a letter to be written to President Eisenhower on July 26 and from which I quote:

"... Your message, however, brought forth expressions that those who are seeking peaceful and constructive means of conforming with the law would be immeasurably strengthened by moral support from the White House.

"There was general agreement among those present that a conference of representative groups of Southern leaders brought together at the request of the President would help immeasurably in dealing with a situation so fraught with complexities and possible serious disruption of law and order. Such a conference, they felt, might be limited to educators and school administrators. It was felt, too, that only the prestige of the Presidency could provide the necessary stimulus for such a full-range conference."

Where are the "good people" of the South? Too many of them are silent, and their silence will be broken only by the strongest leadership and support.

MELBA RUTH WILLIAMS.
Chevy Chase, Md.

Clarion Ledger - 10-22-56

(Tom Ethridge)

So Opinion

Dr. James W. Silver, head of the history department at Ole Miss, managed to get his name in the papers recently with some exhibitionist remarks at the expense of our state. The Associated Press quoted Dr. Silver as saying: "The South including Mississippi will probably join the United States in a few years."

This statement, made before a civic group in Tennessee, somehow suggests that Mississippians are un-American. Perhaps our University should apologize to the state for an asinine inference by a member of its faculty, if he spoke in an official capacity.

STATE UNDER FIRE

Elmer Davis, professional "liberal" and leftwing commentator, heads a committee of the American Civil Liberties Union raising funds to promote racial agitation and unrest. Our state is a target of this odious extrovert and his campaign.

He has circulated an appeal on the A. C. L. U. letterhead, asking $10 donation "to protect the Bill of Rights." Since his letter takes some nasty digs at Mississippi and mentions the Till case, it should reap a rich harvest from soft-headed suckers. . .

FOX IN THE HEN HOUSE

Commenting on the Elmer Davis plea, The Southern Conservative says, "It is not quite clear just what Davis proposes to do about the (Till) criminal case, which legal authorities in the soverign state of Mississippi have officially closed. We greatly fear that leaving Elmer Davi to protect the Bill of Rights would be like letting a fox guard the henhouse."

The official letter head of Elmer Davis and his American Civil Liberties Union racket lists 108 "prominent leaders" whose hearts bleed for oppressed minorities. Of those 107 meddlers and do-gooders, 59 (or more than half) have official citations as having belonged to one or more Communists fronts dedicated to overthrowing the U. S. Government.

As for Elmer Davis, he has savagely opposed anti-Communist investigations. Any knock from his kind is a boost for patriotic Americans.

So Opinion

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS

FIAT LUX SINCE 1888

Thomas L. Robinson ---- President and Publisher
Brodie S. Griffith ---- General Manager
Robert H. Lampee ---- Advertising Director
Cecil Prince ---- Associate Editor
R. L. Young Jr. ---- Managing Editor
Huey Stinson ---- Circulation Manager

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1956

The South Today: Death Of A Cliche

THE first man to type-cast Dixie as a land of magnolias and molasses may have been Ponce de Leon or it may have been Uncle Remus.

But for roughly 443 years, ever since the South was discovered by a band of Spanish badmen, our reputation has been one big julepy cliche.

No region, with the possible exception of the Wild West, has been such a stereotype in the popular mind.

Millions think the South hasn't changed since Scarlett bussed Rhett in the moonlight on the veranda of old massa's plantation. Others wish it hadn't.

At least a newly published book of selections from the writings of the late Anne O'Hare McCormick (THE WORLD AT HOME) adds a new variation to the well-worn theme. Says she:

"It is easy to understand why European intellectuals, discovering the South in increasing numbers, find themselves more at home there than in other parts of the country. The oldest and the most native America is nearer and more intelligible to Europe than is the wild ethnic mixture of the newer America, made out of so many Europes that it is strange to any as rayon must be to a silk worm—a chemical reaction rather than a race. The South conforms to an order the European recognizes. It is individualist, traditional, stratified, leisurely, homogeneous, as nations are."

Even though written some years ago, it fits the popular stereotype to the last crossed "t." The new variation is the part about European intellectuals being drawn to us.

We suspect that European intellectuals were drawn more to the gothic South as pictured in the novels of William Faulkner than to the real South of yesterday or today.

A Sartre or a Hesse or Mann would be about as comfortable and "at home" in the real South as Samuel Johnson would have been on Robinson Crusoe's island.

The South is no longer individualist to the extent that its "way of life" differs in every important detail from other regions. Furthermore, its traditions are being dissolved in the wake of an astounding industrialization and a population influx from other regions. The same goes for a southern society that was allegedly "stratified, leisurely, homogeneous."

If the South was rural, agrarian, easy-going, poor and proud at one time in its history, it is fast becoming urban, industrial, hard-working and prosperous today.

In time, even the stereotype may break down. As James Street wrote shortly before he died, some people already can't agree whether ours is a land of "moonlight or moonshine, Tobacco Road or tobacco factories, Texas Cadillacs or ox carts, Uncle Remus or George Washington Carver, Supreme Court Justice Hugo Black or Senator Claghorn, hydrogen plants or hot air, RFD or TVA, hospitality or hostility, violence or tranquility, Miami or mud, Li'l Abner, Prince Valiant or Pogo."

There is, of course, no longer one South. There are many Souths today. The region has simply outgrown its odd adolescence and is finally maturing as a part of the United States, not simply "Uncle Sam's other province," as Allen Tate once called it.

A part of this maturity is an enormous diversity, perhaps best illustrated by the words of W. J. Cash, whose wisdom once graced this editorial page: "Anyone may see . . . it . . . simply by riding along any of the great new motor roads which spread across it—through brisk towns with tall white buildings in Nebraska Gothic; through smart suburbs, with their faces newly washed; through industrial and Negro slums, medieval in dirt and squalor and wretchedness, in all but redeeming beauty; past sleepy old hamlets and wide fields and black men singing their sad songs in the cotton, past log cabin and high grave houses and swamp and plain. . ."

The South wears many faces—some of them bright, some of them dark and cadaverous. But its diversity is its new strength. It is no longer a cliche.

"The Mean Old Federal Courts Are Trying to Impose Their Will on Others"

An Open Letter To Governor Coleman

Dear Governor:

In your reply to my letter about the racial issue you said, and I quote, "We know we can expect no help from the Republican Party as presently constituted and operated". At this point I agree with you. However, in reference to the Democratic party you said, and I quote, "As to the Presidential campaign, I am convinced that our best hope of ultimate success lies in the support of the Democratic nominees".

On this point we are not agreed. Furthermore, you stated and I quote again, I likewise repeat the conviction that we can never expect any help from the United States Government on this problem. We will have to save ourselves by our own ingenuity, and this we can do".

Logically this means that if the Democratic Party is elected it will be in power, and constitute the Government from which we can never expect any help. Now, Governor, I am afraid of the policy. I feel that we should desert the Democratic Party until it rids itself of socialistic and communistic programs, that are confusing and deviding the people of our state.

Would not Mississippians look better and feel better fighting for Constitutional law instead of a left-wing part from which we can never expect any help?

Yours very tryly
Chas. C. Jones
Retired Baptist preacher
Mendenhall, Miss.

Clarion Ledger
10-24-56
So Opinion

Clarion Ledger 10-24-54

Editorial Opinion

IKE FAVORS FORCE

Eisenhower forces in Mississippi apparently seek to sell the idea that Ike is a benevolent "moderate", who frowns on the use of force in bringing about integration. Recent development would seem to belie such an inference.

The President has not yet denied or even commented on a sensational announcement by Powell, Negro Democrat who has just bolted to the GOP camp. Ike's silence arouses the natural supposition that Powell, for once, was telling the truth.

POSITIVE STATEMENT

Speaking in Harlem recently, Congressman Powell told his colored audience that Eisenhower had talked to him and had emphatically endorsed the use of force against Southerners who might dare to resist compulsory integration.

Powell quoted the President as prescribing a definite course of action in such cases, as follows: any person defying or resisting a federal court order should be arrested. Then, if found guilty after a hearing, should be sentenced to prison.

JUDGE IS THE JURY

The Negro Congressman further quoted Eisenhower as saying that the federal judge in such cases should have as many marshals and deputies as may be needed to enforce an integration decree.

Incidentally, this method involves contempt of court proceedings and the fact has considerable significance. Judges themselves, rather than juries, determine whether contempt of court is apparent and judges prescribe the punishment for such offense. Their decisions can be appealed, of course, but only to other federal judges.

ROB PETER, PAY PAUL

Thus the President would seem to favor nullifying the white Southerner's constitutional right to a trial by jury, as a means of guaranteeing the alleged right of colored persons to attend white schools. More briefly stated, he seems to consider one part of the Constitution as more important that another.

It is difficult to see how Mississippians opposed to forced integration can vote for Eisenhower, in view of his reported ideas for dealing with Southern resistance.

$64,000 QUESTION

As for the President's alleged plan, it is interesting to speculate on the number of federal marshals and deputies necessary to enforce an integration decree in Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia (just to name a few). In fact, one seriously doubts if that much civilian manpower is available in the Deep South for such a purpose.

In the border state of Kentucky — theoretically willing to accept integration — it took 500 National Guardsmen to put two Negro children in one school, or 250 troops per colored pupil. If this project required 500 armed men just for two students, how many armed men will it take to integrate more than one million colored students of the Deep South?

BIG DISAPPOINTMENT

Aside from his zeal for integration, Eisenhower has otherwise been a tremendous disappointment to conservatives, whose balance of power put him in the White House. Elected as a militant conservative, the President has long ago rejected conservation. Instead, he has surrounded himself with radicals, global meddlers, Negrophiles and other fuzzy-minded architects of an all-powerful bureaucracy.

Southern agriculture, the backbone of our economy, has fared poorly at the hands of his administration. With our own acreage sharply curtailed, foreign competitors have been encouraged to raise more cotton and have been given a lion's share of the world market as a means of winning foreign "friendship."

And now the President seems perfectly willing to emasculate the constitutional rights of Southerns in order to harvest every possible vote from our enemies. If Eisenhower is the winner in November, the South seems certain to be the loser.

Tyranny Creeps In Posing As The Law

Dear Editor:

The preamble to the U. S. Constitution is a statement by the founding fathers stateing the purposes of the Constitution. It should be memorized by every ctizen. It reads:

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, INSURE DOMESTIC TRANQUILITY, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Every U. S. Official, including the Supreme Judges, swear to "support this Constitution." The President must swear to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

No one of the six proposals is to be preferred above another. Some Judges have tended to range far afield under the pretense of promoting the general welfare. By construction, and by means of "leftist" interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment, "General welfare", covers everything.

ACTUAL WORDING

But let us note that the Constituiton says one of the purposes was to "INSURE domestic tranquility", not "promote" it; and another was to "Secure the blessings of liberty."

Since the Ukase of the Court in May 1954, "domestic tranquility" has been thrown to the four winds. Presidents and presidential candidates, insist on "we the people" forgetting "the blessings of liberty", and, subjecting ourselves to the Court-made law, regardless of "liberty" or the Constitution. Because the Court says we must, every one must bow to the decree, and send white and colored children to the same schools. Also they must be mixed in all places, even including golf links. Ever since 1883, we have had no "Civil Rights Laws" and no "Force Bills". There appears no reason why former decisions of our most learned judges should be reversed. There is no law and decision to support it. It is merely government by men and not law. If we submit, we deserve to be slaves.

Let us inquire if this course INSURES domestic tranquility. In Tennessee we have the terrifying spectacle of the Governor ordering out more than five hundred soldiers, armed with machine guns and seven tanks to resist an estimated group of five hundred men, women and children, totally unarmed. All to force twelve Negro students into a white school.

DOMESTIC TRANQUILITY?

In Kentucky we have had similar scenes. In Texas, the situation was handled by two Rangers—just two. In the southern states we have had "mobs" and "riots." In New Jersey, Deleware, West Virginia and Ohio, they were "crowds" and "demonstrations." In New Jersey, reports are that as many as twenty white boys were in the hospitals at one time suffering from knife wounds by Negro boys, and in some cases, Negro girls. Is this "domestic tranquility?"

Candidate Stevenson counsels "moderation", "obedience to the law", "no violence," and no use of force. When Governor of Illinois, he used the State Militia to force Negroes into white housing units. Does that look like "no force"?

The Congressional investigation into race-mixing in schools has revealed conditions that are revolting to every sense of decency. That is the U. S. Court's idea of "domestic tranquility." The President and presidential candidate Stevenson, each deplored the investigation. Why? Because it reveals the falsity of their positions, and the sickening ugliness of race-mixing. They are not interested in "domestic tranquility", or "the blessings of liberty." They only want votes, at any price of shame and degradation.

A. S. Coody
776 Nort West St.
Jackson, Miss.

Clarion Ledger
9-29-56

Editorial Opinion

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Clarion Ledger 10-8-56

Leters to the Editors must be brief, must be signed (though name may be withheld on request) and must avoid defamatory or abusive statements. The Editor reserves the right to reduce lengthy letters end to limit the number of letters on any one subject.

Condemns Violence In Use Of Bayonets

Dear Editor:

It's five minutes to midnight on the clockface of Destiny so far as Mississippi is concerned. An integration act is in the cards for us, before second semester gets a week old. The reason is simple, and this is the way of it:

Ready to commence "force and violance" with naked bayonets, battle gear and tanks against Southern white parents and children disturbed to their hearts core by the mongrelization educational program, The Combat Trained Troops naturally face their own kind, in the current press pictures of beginning of school, in Clinton, Clay and Sturgis, etc. These white parents, bewildered and cowed, with many already brainwashed into the hour of their indecision will succumb to the inevitable, as it is at the present time.

SORRY FOR CHILDREN

I feel sorry for the youngsters, that their memories of "schooldays" shall be that of clanking tanks, troops at the ready, with fixed bayonets, By their own kind mind you; — no INTEGRATED troops in pictures I saw. That will come later, in the long-range plan, as is indicated in the purification crusade of Gen. Eisenhower in Germany, and is part and parcel of changing a Republic into a "democracy."

In short, if weasel words, insipid brotherhood and political cunning don't get the job done, then use ths bayonets and tanks. But use them. Thats the story in Africa, Cyprus, Egypt and Arabia, likewise Formosa, Korea and Japan. In short, have "loving hearts" as a so-called PTA opined nationwide in a recent radio quote, if it has to do with our Southern States. Positively no "equality, fraternity or liberty" for the African native, the Chinese, the Arabs, and above all, the Russians and the Southern white race of the U.S.A. Any fool voter can go Adlai or Ike and the end will be the same, as for me, "I go Pogo," unless or until a so-called "third party" but actually an American Party — comes into the current election picture.

NO "DIGNITY OF MAN"

Likewise personally, I see no "dignity of man" in the photo of the negro youth practically frog-marching in a ring of bayonets being forced into a predominently white school without thought of the days to come. It is the children — both white and black, who are eternally warped, just so that the One-World gentry, can use their accompishments in other sections of the globe. The "Morgantheau Plan" for destroying the German white race, and I quote "the country can be made into a goat pasture, and we'll feed the "natives" from soup kitchens." That Morgantheau plan never was nationally publicized, in fact was semi-censored and down-graded when Gen. Eisenhower and such like began their "Great Crusade", and a dime will get you a dollar, that shortly the word "Crusade" will be a favored slogan or cliche in the coming election.

"BLOODY DEATH"

I suggest it is what I understand communists call "Aesopian language", meaning double talk, which will be acceptable to those not in the know, but to the palace guards and inner circles, has an entirely different meaning, for example, when bayonets are fixed for force and violence, and nasty bloody death.

Each minority race, creed and color in the U. S. has its ethical organization, and an equaly ethical but punitive organization existing along side — viz: the NAACP has its Urban League, the Bnai Brith has its Anti-Defamation League, the Catholic, or so I am told, had its Jesuit Society and what has the ordinary peaceful decent white man got? Answer is NOTHING. He can and in fact, is urged — to vote every four years, either democrat or republican, and in the end, the trap of his ballot-box simply had two openings.

It is a sad day for Mississippi that there is no Fielding Wright, Theodore Bilbo, John Rankin or one of the type of Gen. MacArthur, or Joseph McCarty or even Robert Taft, behind whom the citizens could rally, at the polls, and at least gain time until the One-Worlders bring on World War IV, whereupon the propaganda mills will go into high against a new enemy, and the Southland accomplish its own destiny as its white and black citizens alike have done in the past. Not for nothing did the Jewish prophets of old call for a return to the old paths.

W. L. Hardin, Sr.
1441 Central Street
Jackson, Miss.

So Opinion

AR const
10-30-56

Segregationist Points To Way Things Are

Decatur — The races may generally be classified as white, black, red and yellow. It is not believed that Biblical scholars nor scientific researchers have satisfactorily established the whys and wherefores of the differences in color.

Is it unreasonable to assume that it was the Creator's plan that the races should remain separate and intact and each in its own way contribute to the advance of civilization, the peace of mankind and the glory of God?

JOHN TRIMBLE.

Southern Opinion

Federal Troops Not All From The North

Dear Editor:

I have read the U. S. News and World Report for Sept. 14, 1956. The first thing I see is on page 39 a group of National Guardsmen, fully armed with bayonets and combat helmets with the bayonets pointed into the stomachs of some sightseers who have their arms crossed and are seemingly pretty much unconcerned about the whole thing, but the guardsmen particularly the ones closest the camera, have a scowl on their faces and look, either ready to do battle or scared.

These men are forcing integration — like it or not — they have the gun and the bayonet and they are ready to force integration on the people of Clinton Tennessee and they are enforcing it.

FEDERAL TROOPS

In view of this startling situation a question arises in my mind and has me disturbed no end. Are these guardsmen the same type people as our own beloved 31st Dixie Division? Are they home town boys in the National Guard drawing the bulk of their pay from the U. S. Government and ready for recall into active Service by the United States? Are they home boys who would be eager and willing to defend their country in a war or an emergency? But who are forced to force this integration down the throats of the people of Tennessee? In case of such a disturbance in Mississippi would our 31st Division be called out to bayonet us in the guts?

Frankly I have a terribly hard time telling a National Guardsman from a Federal Soldier. Of course when I think of a federal Soldier I think of a crude individual from the back-woods of Michigan with a three day beard and a dirty blue uniform firing Minie balls instead of a 30-06 or M-1. I wonder if this is the thought of so many of us who wouldn't dream that our Own National Guard, Supported by the United States Government, Paid and Clothed by the Federal Government are FEDERAL TROOPS. Are Tennessee and Kentucky being integrated by the Federal troops under disguise as National Guardsmen. Or are our National Guardsmen really Federal Troops?

ANOTHER QUESTION

Are our men, strong in heart and brave, willing and wanting to protect their country and their people in the National Guard, aware that they may be called on to integrate Mississippi by a Governor who may not be quite so strong against integration as Governor Coleman? Would our men belong to and support this National Guard with the KNOWLEDGE (not thought) that they may someday be ordered to active duty with a bayonet and rifle to force integration on their own children? I am completely ignorant as to the status of the National Guard but having once been a reservist who got called up about the same time as the National Guard, I have a sneaking suspicion that there is more Government control of the National Guard than there is state Government control. I think this is terribly important to every citizen in Mississippi and Alabama.

A DELTA READER
(name withheld by request)
Belzoni, Miss.

Clarion Ledger

9/24/56 Opinion

Atl-Journal-Const-10-14-56
(South. Opinion)

—Alley in The Memphis Commercial Appea

—Without a Paddle

Fundamental Rights In Democracy Cited

Atl-Const-10-2-56
So. Opinion

Atlanta — I have been reading The Constitution all my reading life and I was amazed to see a preacher such as Dr. Charles Allen make an issue of segregation in the pulpit.

I believe Negroes have the right to vote and to compete for jobs for which they are qualified.

ROBERT T. SMITH.

* * *

Back to School

So. Op.
Time 10-1-56

Sir:

I have been reading in the Dutch newspapers about the things that happened in Clinton, Tenn. I say shame on the U.S. and its citizens (white).

P. NOUWENS

Breda, The Netherlands

Sir:

Maybe to you the white patriots in Tennessee and the other Southern states are a mob, but to me and millions of other white Americans the Supreme Court is responsible if any blood is spilled to enforce the unconstitutional Black Monday decision.

JAMES BURTON

Baltimore

Sir:

Re school integration: any law that requires bayonets to enforce it is a bad law. The dictators of Germany, Russia and, in the past, Italy, used bayonets and still use bayonets to enforce their laws. We fought two world wars to correct this situation.

EAVES ALLISON

Sarasota, Fla.

Sir:

The story of man's maltreatment of his fellow man is tragically long, but it is sad to think that some of the most recent chapters are being enacted in the democratic U.S. of 1956. You may be ahead of the rest of the world in many things, but in the matter of human relations your Deep South is on a par with the Neanderthal man.

R. KARUNARAJAH

Geneva, Switzerland

Back to School

So. Op.
Time 9-24-56

Sir:

The latest outbursts of racial violence in the South have filled me with shame and disgust. This mob violence and mass hysteria has no justification and to poison the minds of children with hatred and bigotry is nothing less than atrocious! Instead of hanging effigies, these mobs should hang their heads in shame.

LAURIE LORMÉ

Dallas

Sir:

Now that school is starting again, and little kids all over the world will be studying about our great American democracy, wouldn't it be a kind gesture for Congress to add an asterisk to that phrase about Liberty, Equality and Justice for all saying: "*Except Negroes"? It would do so much to help relieve all the confusion and doubt the world over about our being a nation of hypocrites.

LEWIS J. STOFFER

Cincinnati

Roman Suggests Way To End Racial Strife

So. Opinion
Atl Const 9-8-56

Rome — I sincerely believe that the majority of the Southern people have no spokesman in the segregation issue.

I believe that segregation is best for all concerned in the South, but I do not believe in "white supremacy."

I think that if the people of both races who really want to see the issue settled could get together the South soon would have the respect of all thinking Americans.

An organization, with both races belonging, to carry out the theme of "Segregation Without Discrimination" would be workable and acceptable to the majority.

HAROLD MANN.

* * *

Southern Opinion

Southern opinion — The Charlotte ~~News~~
Nov. 23, 1956

The Law Is To Be Obeyed Regardless Of The Cost

By IRVING CARLYLE

Editors' Note: How the Pearsall plan can blaze a trail out of North Carolina's segregation dilemma was discussed in The News Nov. 9 by Col. William T. Joyner, prominent Tar Heel attorney and vice chairman of the State Advisory Committee on Schools. The ideas were presented during a panel discussion of the North Carolina State Bar. Here is a dissenting view, filed by a leading Winston-Salem lawyer and opponent of the Pearsall Plan.

TO THE great credit of our profession, its members can strongly disagree with each other and remain friends. That knowledge makes my task here today much easier becaus I must speak forthrightly about a difficult and controversial subject and I do not expect general agreement with all that I shall say.

It should first be said that lawyers have a peculiar obligation to speak out at times of crisis when law is on trial before the bar of public opinion. That trial is now in progress, and as it goes on, we need to remember that the law is the cure, as well as the cause, of upheavals. In fact, it is the only cure. The superior knowledge of the lawyer about the law gives to him a unique and privileged role, to be played fearlessly for the public good. His silence at a time like this is a betrayal of his trust. Therefore, this panel discussion is most fitting, and I am happy to speak to the subject from some strong legal convictions.

BACKGROUND

As the background for my remarks. I call attention to a few statements by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Brown case and its implementing opinion. The court said:

". . .in the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently unequal. . .The opinions of May 17, 1954, declaring the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional, are incorporated herein by reference. All provisions of federal, state, or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle."

During the campaign for the adoption of the Pearsall Plan it was referred to by the proponents as safety-valve, stop-gap, and time-buying legislation. From this accurate description, and for other reasons, it seems to me to be obvious that the adoption of the plan has not yet settled the legal problems in the field of school segregation. The solution of those problems has merely been postponed to some future time. Our concern about the constitutionality of the plan is still with us. Hence, one of our functions is to prepare our own and the public mind for the day when the time bought by the plan will have run out.

PROBLEMS AT HAND

There are some things that the lawyer knows better than anybody else, and this knowledge must be brought to bear upon the solution of the problems at hand. For instance, he knows that our whole scheme of life in all parts of America is based upon the supremacy of law. He knows that the source of law is the conscience and reason of man. He knows that the problem of public authority must be based upon law, because we live "under a government of laws and not of men." He believes that the law is no stronger than the integrity of the courts, the law-makers, the lawyers, enforcement officers, and of the people in general. And he also knows that discrimination by government among citizens on account of race, creed or national origin is now under almost complete condemnation by law. He knows full well by now that all citizens are entitled to equal protection under law and to live under laws that fall upon all men equally. He knows that the law is a hard but fair taskmaster whose rewards are reserved solely for its faithful servants and whose penalties are inescapable. And finally, he knows that the law is our ark of the covenant to which every man, woman and child must look for refuge; and, therefore, that more important than what the law does to us is what we do with the law.

EXPEDIENCY

From this, it follows that when expediency rather than principle is the controlling factor in the legal process, the outcome is injustice. We do great injury to ourselves when we seek to bolster our claims to superiority by compelling others to surrender their legal rights. And the damage done is far greater when the surrender is coerced by punitive measures taken under color of law. The use of intimidation by law is a backward step unworthy of a great profession that is committed to improving the administration of justice for all men. And this is so because respect for law should not be predicated upon fear but solely upon a sense of justice, and for the further reason that we profane the law when we use it as a weapon against the legal rights of others.

The High Road And The Low Road

RIGHTS OF MINORITY

The usurpation of law by a majority to deprive a minority of constitutional rights is certain to backfire. That is the verdict of both history and common sense. Temporizing is overlooked in politics and sometimes tolerated in government but it has no place in the law.

The law is always to be obeyed regardless of the cost. The belief that the people are justified in disobeying laws which they do not like and their censure of the courts for unpopular decisions do great harm. That is not the process for changing the law. The test of the law is not, is it popular, but is it in accord with basic principles, and when that test has been met, the attitude of the people and not the law must change.

The thing that will matter the most for all of us in the next 10 or 50 years is that democracy shall win out over communism and that victory will only happen if democracy is stronger than communism in its support of moral principles. And a moral principle of the first order is that men obey the law and that they give to each other equal justice under law. Regardless of what some may think, the spirit of Thomas Jefferson still hovers over this country and his philosophy has gone deeper than we know.

As lawyers we know better than other men that the penalties for not obeying the law are always heavier than were anticipated; and they become increasingly heavy as men grow in mental and moral stature. Frankness requires me to say that one of the penalties inflicted for 58 years of widespread violation of the "separate but equal" doctrine of the Plessy case was the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Brown case. And with equal realism we should remind ourselves now that the penalties we and our children and grandchildren will pay for not obeying the law of the land as laid down in the Brown case will be heavier than we now foresee, and one of them could well be isolation from the rest of the free world and the ultimate destruction of democracy.

There are some lawyers—and I am one of that number — who believe that the Constitution of the United States will not be amended, federal legislation will not be adopted, and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Brown case will not be reversed to permit segregation of the races by law in the United States. If this should happen, we would be completely out of step with the rest of the free and democratic world whose friendship we must have if our nation is to survive.

RESPECT FOR LAW

The highest part of our calling as lawyers is to lead the people toward respect for law and order. In proportion as we meet that obligation do we lift our profession to higher ground. I question seriously that the Pearsall Plan is a step in that direction, although intended so to be by its able and conscientious sponsors.

For the reasons already suggested, a true lawyer is a noble personage and the freest individual in any community with a special mission in times like these. He is always responsive to human need. He stands always upon the same high level of mental and moral integrity. He is as incapable of looking up as he is of looking down; he is equally without reverence and without condescension. He is not afraid to do his own thinking and he does not quaver before the power of wealth or the authority of high places. He is the keeper of his own conscience and the creator of his own convictions. Where the law leads, he will ever follow. From this comes his strength because he stands always on the side of law.

Southern Opinion

WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL

Reed Sarratt, EXECUTIVE EDITOR James B. L. Rush, EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
EDITORIAL PAGE STAFF: H. Clay Ferree, Robert F. Campbell (on leave), Frances B. Griffin
Robert T. Barnard, Howard L. Myers, Rixie E. Hunter

WINSTON-SALEM, NORTH CAROLINA, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1956

A Time for Cool-Headedness

THREE new incidents on the school integration front tend to point up the serious and delicate nature of the problem faced by Southern communities in dealing with the mixed school issue:

1. The action of the U. S. Supreme Court in rejecting the plea of Mansfield, Texas, school authorities for more time "to solve its problems and end segregation" in the high school there. After rioting had occurred at the school when three Negro students sought to enter, they were denied admittance. The school board appealed from an appeals court decision ordering it to proceed with integration in the high school "completely uninfluenced by private and public opinion as to the desirability of desegregation in the community." This ruling was in conformity with the Supreme Court decisions on public school segregation. It means that local opposition to mixed schools cannot be made a basis for delaying the admission of Negro pupils.

2. The plea of the Anderson County, Tenn., school board for federal help in policing court-ordered, racial integration at the Clinton High School. Without federal help, the board said it might have to close the school within a week.

Under federal court order the Clinton High School admitted 12 Negro pupils along with its 700 white pupils last August. No serious incident occurred during the first few days, but violence erupted after the community had been stirred up by an outside agitator. The disorders were put down by local vigilantes and state troopers and National Guardsmen sent to Clinton by Governor Clement. But in recent weeks, new troubling incidents have multiplied at the school and two Negro pupils have quit school. Fanning the flames of racial prejudice is the newly organized Tennessee White Youth organization.

3. The attempt of a 17-year-old white youth, Billy Branham of Detroit, to enroll as a student in the racially integrated Louisville (Kentucky) Male High School after publicly stating that he intended to work against the mixing of races in the schools. Young Branham has been denied admission on the ground that he is a non-resident and a troublemaker.

These three incidents graphically outline some of the major difficulties confronted by community school leadership in connection with the federal court decisions on school segregation. The courts have plainly said that local sentiment or opposition to integration is no justification or excuse for failure to comply with the desegregation decrees. But at Mansfield, Texas, the mere appearance of three Negro youths on the school grounds set off a violent disturbance which was ended only by the appearance of Texas Rangers on the scene. At Clinton the school board, after five years of litigation, was left little choice as to its action. It was firmly and specifically ordered by the district court to integrate its high school. When it proceeded to do so, a situation developed which still threatens law, order and public safety in Clinton.

The action of the Detroit teen-ager in attempting to enter the Louisville schools to agitate against segregation ordinarily might be dismissed as the prank of an immature youngster who craves excitement. But the incident illustrates the appeal of the racial integration issue to propagandists, Ku Kluxers, rabblerousers and fanatics. It gives them an issue to rant over and arouse mass emotion and dormant projudices. Such people are difficult for responsible community leaders to deal with, as the acquittal of the Clinton agitator, Kasper, signifies.

But serious and delicate as the desegregation problem is, it is one to which our educational and political leaders in the South must face up with discretion and courage. It is clear that eventual substantial compliance with the decrees of the courts is inevitable. Whether that compliance can be brought about in a comparatively peaceful manner depends upon the wisdom and cooperative spirit of both races in the South and the degree of patience and understanding shown by the courts and federal authorities toward honest community efforts to work out solutions for the problem.

Daily Mgr. Jackson, 10-28-56

In the battle that is ahead the Citizens Councils of Mississippi deserve the fullest possible measure of support and encouragement. A good way to prove your disapproval of integration and your belief in states rights is to join the Citizens Council in your home community. It means, amon other things, that you will be mighty good company in this fight for preservation of the Southern way of life.

* * *

If you are a man who keeps a mistress—lots of men, both married and unmarried, are guilty of that form of sinning—you can actually claim the aforesaid mistress as a dependent when figuring your Federal income tax. That's the law as it now stands but Congress will be asked at its next session to change the statute.

* * *

The Mississippi branch of the NAACP has sent a telegram to President Eisenhower asking that the Russians sent to this country to study our election methods be "brought to Mississippi where Negroes are not allowed to register for suffrage." That's not a bad idea inasmuch as many NAACP are Communists at heart, if not actual card-carrying members. The Russian visitors would feel very much at home among them.

LETTERS FROM

Ala. Jnl. Southern Operation

St. Times Reviewer

To Be Free, Equal

State Times, Lda 12-9-56

"Everyone is created free and equal" is an impossibility if our country is forced to completely integrate or either to completely segregate.

Any one or any race does not have the right to over run any one or any race. This rule should work forward, backwards and across with the same answers. How can this be?

Our country was founded to be ruled by the majority. The minority says that is not fair, we do not have our rights. How can we fix it so the majority and also the minority have their equal rights?

Why are the rights and wishes of these ten Negroes in Clinton, Tenn. considered to be more important than the rights and wishes of several hundred white children. When the court upholds the rights of the Negroes are they not over riding the equal rights of the white man? Is that fair? Our rule is not working forward, backwards and across.

We must have different ways of life and customs in this country so each person will really and truly have "free and equal rights" to choose their way of life. The segregationists of all races can choose the South, and those who want to integrate can go to the few integrated spots in the North and the rest of the country.

Sincerely
Mrs. Mary Louise Supinger
Columbia, Miss.

DECEMBER 9, 1956

Alabama Editors Are Saying

Picking A Prexy

The Sylacauga News

It is little wonder that the trustees of the University of Alabama are finding it difficult to pick a successor to Dr. Carmichael as president of that institution. To please all the trustees, politicians, factions, and at least make an impression upon the student body he must have the qualifications of a superman. He must be a Democrat, a politician, a Christian, a gentleman and a scholar. He must have an eye for sports and an ear for music. He must be sharp-witted, a good speaker, a poser, a hale-fellow-well-met. He must be able to impress audiences, be affable with the press, kiss babies and pose in all sorts of momentarily appropriate costumes. He must have an over-all knowledge of worldwide events. He must be able to recite prose, poetry and tell jokes on the spur of the moment. He could be single or married—could have children or no children. His denomination is unimportant. He should be well dressed at all times although it would not be detrimental to his cause if one of his shoes needed half soling.

If this is what the trustees want, how about Adlai?

◆

No Easy Way Out

The Lee County Bulletin

This newspaper has no pat solution to suggest for the sort of thing that is happening in Clinton, Tenn. We wish fervently that we did. In considering the Clinton situation, with all its passions, emotions, and bullheadedness, it is dangerous to oversimplify.

The dilemma is not likely to pass quickly. That is impossible in a situation where the law versus people who despise the law, and where people of decent instincts and people of ill will lock arms in bitter struggle.

The need is for everyone to recognize the complications involved. The federal courts have said what is the law. That will not be changed. Nor can it be flaunted. To do so would be to bring anarchy and chaos even worse than that which has gripped Clinton.

But a sizable portion of the community's population does not want school integration, which the court says the U.S. Constitution decrees. There are those so inflamed that they are moved to violence to impose their will. To meet this situation with force would only fan the fires to ever worse displays of hate and passion.

What to do? The law is the law. But where people despise the law, can the law operate?

Easing of Clinton's dilemma is likely to be a long time in coming. The only ingredients we know which will affect the situation favorably are restraint and good will, plus the realization that we are a nation of laws, not men. And let all responsible people who deplore the court decisions which led to the the complications involved. The federal courts have said what is the law. That will not be changed. Nor can it be flaunted. To do so would be to bring anarchy and chaos even worse than that which has gripped Clinton.

But a sizable portion of the community's population does not want school integration, which the court says the U.S. Constitution decrees. There are those so inflamed that they are moved to violence to impose their will. To meet this situation with force would only fan the fires to ever worse displays of hate and passion.

What to do? The law is the law. But where people despise the law, can the law operate?

Easing of Clinton's dilemma is likely to be a long time in coming. The only ingredients we know which will affect the situation favorably are restraint and good will, plus the realization that we are a nation of laws, not men. And let all responsible people who deplore the court decisions which led to the present crisis remember that they are pledged, as even the White Citizens Councils put it, "to do everything within the law," not outside the law, to enforce their will.

◆

Klan Revival

Lucile K. Woodham In The Florala News

I'm no klansman—not interested in their letting women become members but some of the newspapers, especially the dailies, are howling like a pack of wolves about the Ku Klux Klan which is rising again. And if I understand what the Klan's objectives are, I think it has too many irons in the fire. But it is the Supreme Court of the United States that has brought the Klan to life again. Every time the Klan burns a cross it is a reminder that the Supreme Court has burned up the Constitution of these United States, the only fragment of that great document left being the 14th Amendment, the one amendment put into the Constitution by blood soaked fraud and force for the sole purpose of crucifying the South.

◆

Prize Asset

The Opelika Daily News

Felicitations are offered the Alabama Power Company and all its thousands of workers on the occasion of reaching the company's fiftieth birthday. Alabama Power is truly one of this state's prize possessions, and has done more toward attracting new industries than any other concern or unit of interests. Elders in Opelika know this, since the company was a prime influence in bringing the Pepperell Manufacturing Company to this city.

The amazing growth and development by Alabama Power during the fifty years of its existence excites the admiration of all. Chairman Thomas W. Martin told a statewide television audience Tuesday night that the company has doubled its strength and facilities each ten years of the half century. That means a climb of 32 times the size of the first ten years.

And the great power company is by no means through with its expansion. Construction will soon start of two mammoth new river dams at a total cost of several hundred million dollars.

Southern Opinion

TEN

Birmingham Post-Herald

A SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPER — TELEPHONE 53-5381

JAMES E. MILLS ..... Editor JOHN W. FRIERSON ..... President

Owned and published daily (except Sunday) by Birmingham Post Co., 2200 Fourth-av, n, Birmingham 2, Alabama.

Members of United Press, Associated Press, Scripps-Howard Newspaper Alliance, NEA Service, Inc., and Science Service, which organizations retain exclusive rights to all news and features credited to them. Member Audit Bureau of Circulation.

Entered as second-class mail matter at the Postoffice at Birmingham under the act of Congress, March 3, 1879.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES, payable in advance, to The Birmingham News Co. for The Morning Post-Herald, Evening News and Sunday News:
Morning, Evening and Sunday, 1 year, $37.50; 6 months, $18.75; 1 month, $3.25; 1 week, 75c. Morning and Sunday, 1 year, $24.40; 6 months, $11.70; 1 month, $1.95; 1 week, 45c. Evening and Sunday, 1 year, $23.40; 6 months, $11.70; 1 month, $1.95; 1 week, 45c. Morning or Evening only, 1 year $15.60; 6 months, $7.80; 1 month, $1.30; 1 week, 30c. Sunday only, 1 year, $7.80; 6 months, $3.90; per copy, 15c. Rural route rates on request.

"Give Light and the People Will Find Their Own Way"

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1956

Toll the Bells for Hungary

"Let us take to heart the lessons the Hungarian people have written in their blood . . ."

In those words President Eisenhower appealed to the American people to take some time today—Human Rights Day—to give a little thought, say a prayer and contribute money to the sorely oppressed Hungarian people.

The President's proclamation converted Dec. 10, 1956—previously a routine observance of the anniversary of United Nations adoption of a declaration of human rights—into a day of mourning. This year the goal of fundamental and inalienable human rights for all mankind suffered a grevious setback.

The lesson of Hungary is that there is much evil in the world and the struggle for freedom requires eternal vigilance and sacrifice.

The encouraging aspect of the Hungarian tragedy, as the President reminded, is that "those who have once known freedom and the free exercise of human rights value them above life itself."

The Bolsheviks tried to make us believe differently. But the Hungarian people, after 10 years of intolerable slavery imposed on them by the Soviets, proved again that the old truths prevail. Men still will lay down their lives in order to gain freedom—thank God.

We again urge all communities today to toll their church bells, fly their flags at half-staff, to tell and re-tell the story of the struggle for freedom in Hungary in their schools, in the churches and at public meetings. Let us mourn for the Hungarian dead. But let us also pay tribute to the courage of people who preferred death to compromise with evil.

There is little the rest of the free world can do. We watch with horror the agonies of a people being systematically destroyed. But we can do what the closing words of the President's proclamation propose:

"Let us resolve to give generously of our substance that the hardships and suffering of the Hungarian people may be relieved and let us pray that this season of tragedy for them may end in the return of rights and freedom and self-government."

When the bells toll let us vow that the Hungarians shall not have died in vain. If we do not so vow, the bells some day may toll for us.

SOUTHERNER PROTESTS

N.Y. Times - 12/11/56

Brooks of Louisiana Asks F. B. I. End Inquiries There

Southern Opinion?

SHREVEPORT, La., Dec. 10 (UP) —Representative Overton Brooks has sent a telegram to Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. demanding that the Justice Department quit treating the South "like a conquered province."

The Louisiana Democrat said today he had asked the Attorney General to halt investigations of white Citizens Council members in Louisiana's northern parishes by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

He said the Justice Department had not laid "a proper foundation for such activity" and that Federal agents had investigated sheriffs, state legislators, district attorneys and many others "whose records as law-abiding people have never been questioned."

The Justice Department, he told Mr. Brownell, "must quit treating this section of the nation like a conquered province and must treat us like a co-equal state that we are."

38-year-old nonprofit, nonpartisan organ- policies and decisions. So. opinion

12/10/58

Today Is "Human Rights Day"

Bennington Vt

On Dec. 10, 1948, the General Assembly of the United Nations, meeting that year in Paris, adopted and proclaimed an historic "Universal Declaration of Human Rights." The document was conceived "as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations, to the end that every individual and every organ of society, keeping this Declaration constantly in mind, shall strive by teaching and education to promote respect for these rights and freedoms and by progressive measures, national and international, to secure their universal and effective recognition and observance, both among the peoples of member states themselves and among peoples of territories under their jurisdiction." To celebrate its adoption, the General Assembly in 1950 asked that in future years Dec. 10 be set aside as "Human Rights Day."

Like the American Bill of Rights, the Declaration is short, containing a preamble and only 30 brief statements of particulars. It defines in simple language the inherent rights of all human beings. Article 1, for example, declares, "All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act toward one another in a spirit of brotherhood." Article 17 states, "Everyone has the right to own property alone as well as in association with others. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property."

The other 28 articles bear on such matters as freedom of conscience and religion, freedom from slavery and servitude, the right to education, the right to family life and privacy of the home, free elections, freedom of opinion and expression, including the right to "seek, receive, and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontiers."

Universal respect for the freedom and dignity of the individual is far from being achieved. But the Declaration constitutes the first world wide recognition of the inherent rights of man, and as such it can exert great moral influence.

Clarion Ledger - 10-30-56

BY WAY OF REBUTTAL

In The Clarion - Ledger's "Voice of The People" column Monday, a Jackson gentleman raked this writer over the coals, so to speak. He called us "dishonest" because we had written that Eisenhower favored the use of force against the South in bringing about integration. Our comments were based on a reported conversation between the President and Adam Clayton Powell, Negro Congressman from Harlem, in which Ike allegedly prescribed legal methods for punishing anti - integrationists.

Our esteemed and scholarly critic apparently takes the naive position that there has been no teamwork between executive and judicial departments in promoting race - mixing. His letter specified that the President has no authority to interfere with judges or their marshals, which of course is true in theory. . . .

Southern Opinion

WHO'S KIDDING WHO?

By the same token, the President has no official voice in administering public education in Washington. This responsibility rests with Congress. Yet Eisenhower demanded, and got, overnight integration in District of Columbia schools. Many Southern leaders believe Ike engineered the infamous Black Monday decision by appointing the notorious radical, Earl Warren, as Chief Justice.

As for "dishonesty", Eisenhower enthusiasts in Dixie want Southerners to believe that Ike has had little to do with the onward march of integration. Meanwhile, Eisenhower orators in the North assure Negroes in key areas that he has done more to abolish segregation than any President in history. Is not "dishonesty" apparent here? And what about those millions of votes Ike got in 1952, under false pretenses of being a crusading "conservative"? What about the farm votes he got by endorsing "full parity" price supports that ~~somehow~~ have not materialized?

Adam Powell Compels Demo Support

So. Man Opinion

State Times 10-24-56

Every word spoken by Harlem Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, newly-turned "Citizen for Ike," helps the Democratic ticket in the South.

Soon after giving the President his endorsement, for its dubious worth to Republicans, the Negro congressman was telling his district of Ike's intent to enforce integration upon Dixie.

That may help the GOP in Harlem, where Gotham segregates its Negroes, but it strikes a sour Republican note in these parts.

The same may be said of Rep. Powell's latest labelling of Adlai Stevenson as "a captive of the Dixiecrats." To that was added his postscript that "the Negro came out of both conventions with absolutely nothing in the way of civil rights."

At the rate he's going, Adam Powell is perhaps the most compelling voice for support of the Democratic ticket in the South where he claims men like "(Sen. James O.) Eastland and (Herman) Talmadges" are running the party.

Surely Sen. Eastland, as chairman of the Senate judiciary committee, is a power in Democratic circles. Along with Senate Majority leader Lyndon Johnson (Tex.) and House Speaker Sam Rayburn (Tex.), he is perhaps the Democrats' most significant figure in the Congress.

Because radicals like Adam Powell fear Southern Democrats is one reason many Mississippians have doffed their "Citizen for Ike" labels of ~~1952.~~

Racial Bias Is Integral Part of 'Southern Way of Life'

By Bem Price

CHARLESTON, S. C., Dec. 15 (AP) — The South, from Virginia to Texas, focuses much of its thinking on what has come to be called "the Southern way of life."

This insistence on a particular way of life sometimes puzzles the rest of the nation. Boiled down it appears to amount to this:

The white man in the South, who governs the area, owns its biggest farms, runs its biggest banks and businesses, is torn between his often very genuine affection for the Negro as an individual and his belief that Negroes, as a race, should "keep their place."

In effect, this often amounts to political, economic and social subordination for the Negro. The white man explains he believes this is the only way the two races can live together.

Whites' Fears

Some Southerners express concern that if the Negro is "allowed to mix," the result could be racial mongrelization. There is fear that in some areas which are predominately Negro the Negroes could gain political control.

The Southern white man has a long history of defending his relationship with the Negro, first as a slave owner and after the Civil War as a "white supremacist."

By and large he is convinced that no one outside the South really understands his position.

Ask State Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County — 86 per cent Negro — in southern Alabama to explain his conception of the Southern way of life and he says a person would have to live in the South and learn the Negro for at least a year to understand.

He abhors deliberate efforts to inflame racial passions. Nevertheless he is determined to maintain the Southern way of life he has known for 44 years.

Is the Negro innately inferior to the white man?

"Yes," says Engelhardt.

Educated Negro

If you educate the Negro, what are you educating him for?

"Let him have his own society," he replied. "We ought to raise him morally and economically."

Ask Harold A. Petit, vice president and regional manager for the South Carolina Electric and Gas Co., at Charleston, why he stands for the Southern way of life.

"The Negro is irresponsible in every degree," he will say. "I think it is a basic trait, although other conditions — environment, economics and education — contribute to his so-called lethargy."

Asked whether the Southern way of life is not in some measure based on fear, Petit answered:

"Yes. The basic fear is mongrelization of the races. I just can't visualize a South which is predominant mulatto."

In defending their way of life Southerners have re-developed the doctrine of states' rights to protect white surpremacy.

In no other region since the Civil War have state governments taken such steps to circumvent a high court ruling as did the Southern states in the aftermath of the May 17, 1954, Supreme Court decision holding segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

Seven states—Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, North Carolina, Virginia and Louisiana—said in essence they will not abide by that decision.

Editor's Statement

With this attitude on states' rights goes another attitude, one which permits a newspaper editor to say for publication:

"Democracy cannot and will not work indefinitely. Sooner or later in a democracy special interest groups gain control and you have oligarchy. When this occurs there is economic chaos. A strong man —a dictator—emerges, and you start all over again."

This firm belief, that not all people are necessarily qualified to govern themselves, permits Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston News and Courier, to say of himself and his newspaper:

'We have always taken a dim view of small 'd' democracy. We stand by an older form of government, small 'r' republicanism" (under which the vote is restricted to those deemed fit to use it).

Generally speaking, these views, not uncommon in the South, underlie the widespread reluctance in the deep South to give the Negro the vote unfettered by literacy tests, poll taxes and other restrictions.

In Columbia, S. C., a thoughtful, pipe-smoking educator, Dr. E. Ryan Crow, said:

Educator's Statement

"I would say that the average Southerner in his attitude feels that his position is a defense of a civilization. This state—to its great misfortune—started off wrong. The first ship to land here in 1670 brought Negro slaves. They created a peculiar type of civilization.

"The Negro has been a slave-menial. Some think that is his just and rightful place. . . .The large farmer in the state has a strong planter aristocracy tradition. The thought of the labor-menial getting out of that situation and tradition stirs him up."

Crow, chairman of South Carolina's education finance committee, was asked if he thought Southerners believed Negroes to be inherently inferior.

He replied: "The white man feels he belongs to a superior race.

"Of course," he added, "society is weak whenever any considerable segment is held down. There is a need to recognize that the Negro is worth educating and proceed to do it."

Solve Problem?

There is a widely held opinion in the South that the region, if left alone, can solve its race problem and that people in other sections, especially the North, should get their own glass houses in order before casting stones.

This opinion long has been meat for an editorial campaign by Grover Hall, editor of the Montgomery, Ala., Advertiser.

Hall, a dapper, 41-year-old bachelor with a deep sense of tradition, said:

"You have to start with two essential points. You have to start with the disagreeable fact that to have been born a colored man is a misfortune.

"It is the colored man's cross to bear. It is an uneven struggle for him.

"The second thing is that the white people of the South—in their morality, ethics and character—are not different from the Westerner or Easterner.

"To debate that the Southerner is so different in character and ethics as to allow him to brutalize the Negro is preposterous."

Hall was asked if he thought the Southerners' feeling about the Negro amounted to just plain prejudice. "Of course it is prejudice," he said, and added he thought failure to recognize it would be highly irresponsible.

"Dramatic Change"

Hall contends that "if you stand the present generation Negro alongside his grandfather, the present generation has made a dramatic change."

Asked if social segregation wouldn't work as well as legal segregation, Hall replied frankly: "To the white Southerner the idea of surrendering legal segregation is a great point. He has it and is reluctant to give it up."

Georgia's Gov. Marvin Griffin who, with Senator-elect Herman Talmadge, has been one of the South's most adamant segregationists says:

"We believe in Georgia that the Negro has come a long way. His accomplishments are many. He has done it under our way of life and our institutions.

"I don't think any one race is particularly inferior, but let me say I don't think the Negro has made the progress he should have."

Asked "What are you educating the Negro for?" Griffin said:

"We are educating him for leadership in all fields. I don't know how many Negro lawyers and doctors there are in Atlanta. Here there is a Negro newspaper, an all-Negro radio station. There are a Negro-owned chain of theaters. There is more opportunity for them here than in the Northern states."

S. Opinion - 1956

So. opinion

EDITORIAL PAGE

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948 R. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Publisher
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921 T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Editor

Page 4 JACKSON, MISS., MONDAY MORNING, DEC. 31, 1956

Critics Of South Changing Tune Now That Shoe Is On Their Foot

Inasmuch as the Chicago Tribune has been extremely vocal in criticizing Southern handling of delicate racial problems, it is interesting to note that this self-styled "World's Greatest Newspaper" is beginning to learn certain basic facts of interracial life.

In a recent editorial headed "The Welfare State Is Expensive", the Chicago Tribune notes that nearly 150,000 persons are on public relief roles in Cook County. This rather illuminating editorial laments that the state of Illinois has gone far toward acceptance of the welfare state.

"While most welfare programs are taken for granted," the Tribune complains, the state program of aid to dependent children (ADC) is encountering sharp criticism from many persons who feel that cash grants foster illegitimacy and moral degradation." And why is this so? Again quoting the Tribune:

"Cook County Welfare Director Raymond M. Hillard says the ADC burden here has been increased by the migration from the Southern states of many people who do not yet regard illegitimacy as a social disgrace."

Since Mississippians and other Southerners are fully aware of this situation, it is unncessary for us to spell out in plain language just who the Chicago Tribune is talking about. Indeed, people of our state are all too familiar with the fact that there are some here and some migrating to other climes, including Chicago, who "do not yet regard illegitimacy as a social disgrace."

At any rate, the "World's Greatest Newspaper" has given Mississippians some degree of comfort and satisfaction by indicating that Chicagoans, in a small way at least, are beginning to come face to face with problems which the South has wrestled with for many, many years.

As the Richmond News Leader suggests, even Dixie's severest critics are coming to realize that the South's desire for racial separation is not so wholly undesirable after all. And, we might add, those furtherest removed from a problem are usually the most prompt in offering criticism and advice. Better late than never, the Chicago Tribune and like-minded Northerners are receiving a costly education in fact that there are two sides to every question.

12-31-56

GOP Barbs At Integration Surprising

St Times 12-31-56

Americans who honestly favor mass integration would do well to review the House subcommittee report on Washington schools.

Every committeeman who heard testimony in the District hearings signed the report urging re-segregation of schools.

Importantly, the brilliant hero of World War II, Joel T. Broyhill, Republican from the Arlington-Fairfax district of Virginia, endorsed the recommendation. His constituency, more than any other outside Washington, has been affected by the District's school integration.

In droves while families have raced from Washington into Rep. Broyhill's area where schools are segregated. Beyond question his signature to the report echoed sentiment of his district.

Even the subcommittee's two Northern members, Arthur Miller (R-Neb.) and DeWitt Hyde (R-Md.), though not signing the report, conceded all was not well with the integrated school system.

That Republican congressmen would even hint of possible wrongs in the school operation is eye opening. They assuredly must risk censure from party councils which wish to keep intact the support of minorities won in November.

The mess disclosed by the subcommittee probe is well known to Mississippians who heard or read reports by Rep. John Bell Williams, of Raymond, on his return from the hearings. These findings, however, won't move the radical element bent on politically-expedient race mixing at any cost.

It is to be hoped other, less-obstinate Americans give the report a sensible reception.

So. Opinion

Southern Opinion 1956

Ebony Photo-Editorial

Ebony Dec. 58
Opinion

WHO TURNED OUT THE LIGHTS?

FATS DOMINO and his band were playing rock 'n' roll music for the Newport, R. I., enlisted men's club dance. An interracial crowd of nearly a thousand GI's and their dates were having a wonderful time—until somebody turned out the lights. It was then that the beer bottle brawl, which quickly mounted to riot proportions, began.

Reports first put the blame for the ruckus on the nation's Number One whipping boy, integration. Second guessers said rock 'n' roll. Fats, from his under-the-Steinway vantage point, put a piano-plucking finger on quart bottles. "They should have used," he theorized, "paper cups."

An investigation ordered by Rear Admiral Ralph O. Earle, Jr., Base Commander, revealed that it was not integration, not rock 'n' roll nor bottled beer, but the sudden dousing of lights that triggered the bottle-throwing, chair-swinging free-for-all.

After the first outraged reactions following the U. S. Supreme Court's decision to desegregate public schools, there were indications that most of the South would eventually comply. Then someone revived the Ku Klux Klan, organized the White Citizens Councils. When nine Negro students attended classes at Clinton, Tennessee's first integrated high school, all went well until an imported rabble-rouser stung the lethargic little town into a jeering mob. This year, when schools in the nation's capital continued on their desegregated way, Congressional hearings were held to make public testimony attesting to the moral unfitness of Negro youth, and wide distribution was made of a report by a little-known psychologist who reached all the way back to the controversial intelligence tests of World War I in a floundering effort to prove the Negro mentally inferior.

It would seem that every time the Negro takes a giant step toward equality, everywhere desegregation attains a measure of success, somebody turns out the lights. The resultant chaos is no accident. It is part of an elaborate, well-financed plan to gain sympathy for the white South's vanishing way of life; to gain time for the white South to remarshal its forces for a final stand before bowing to the inevitableness of defeat.

Method In Madness

THE ARRIVAL of hireling John Kasper in Canton was a well-calculated move to set off the fall series of anti-desegregation demonstrations (see picture on opposite page) by white parents and white students, for there is method in such seeming madness.

Through patternless cross burnings, threats and economic reprisals, segregationists seek to give the appearance of an impregnable wall of resistance to integration. By rushing hate teams to sure fire "trouble spots," they hope to create with their noisy offensiveness, a smoke screen of predicted terror, thus distracting attention from the increasingly large areas of compliance with the law.

But Negro parents who would not give up and Negro children who would not frighten, again stole the show. That the President of the United States should openly praise an example of painless desegregation was an eventuality not provided for in the master plan. This was especially upsetting since the example is the handiwork of Omar Carmichael, Louisville, Ky., superintendent of schools and a real life cousin of Dr. Oliver C. Carmichael, University of Alabama prexy whose ineffectiveness during the Miss Lucy riot set the stage for subsequent school disorders.

Climate Of Opinion

WHILE less subtle forces of bigotry are at work in the South at the textbook level, in the North a cold war is being fought behind a well-laid barrage of printer's ink. Again and again the South had complained that the North turned a deaf ear to the white man's side of the racial problem. Stung by these accusations of unfairness, the Northern press opened wide its pages. Dixie propaganda boys and their stooges are still flooding the country with literature slanted to create a climate of opinion more sympathetic to segregated schools.

Since South Carolina editor Thomas R. Waring wrote with such disarming helplessness about race mixing, the voice of the Southland has grown loud and demanding. Articulate Uncle Toms, Negro "leaders" without standing or following, are encouraged to declare desegregation is not the will of "their people." Northern whites are recruited to revive the long-debunked myth of white mental and moral supremacy.

Most quoted of the latter group is Villanova professor Frank McGurk, whose recent article sought to prove that "Negroes as a group do not possess as much (capacity for education) as Whites as a group"; that the recent social and economic opportunities afforded Negroes only tended to increase the differences between the groups.

"It would appear," commented consultants to the Chicago Catholic Interracial Council, "that Dr. McGurk has taken facts out of context, ignored the cautions of the researchers who made the studies that he quotes, arrived at conclusions entirely unwarranted by the data he used. We feel that he has misused the work of reputable scholars."

Added Dr. Carl Pfaffmann, speaking for the Rhode Island Psychological Association: "I think that in terms of the evidence that Dr. McGurk's conclusions are unwarranted. This man is taking test differences at face value. Most psychologists are skeptical of taking any test differences at face value."

Delaying Action

WHILE the McGurk report was still on the newsstands, a Congressional committee, admittedly pro-segregationists, began a one-sided hearing on two years of integration in Washington, D. C., schools. Led by Georgia chairman, Rep. James C. Davis, questions were centered on sex—tenderest spot in the fabric of Negro-white relationships.

Said Rep. Roy W. Wier (R-Minn.), "The sole object seems to be to prove that integration has not worked and to prevent it from working in the future." Time magazine accused subcommittee counsel William E. Gerber of digging for headlines, concluded: "If the hearings demonstrated anything in their dreary recitation of well-known facts, it was simply that Negroes have suffered educationally and culturally in comparison with whites, and that the gap must be closed before they can compete on equal terms in the schools."

Coinciding with Dr. McGurk's analysis of the Negro's mental capacity, the sensational hearings were intended to turn out the light on peaceful desegregation and spread panic among white parents. Meanwhile, the best of Dixie brains work overtime creating legal stumbling blocks to integration. And the days of the Black Laws are again with us. All sorts of ridiculous and unconstitutional statutes are being rammed through Deep South legislatures, their sole value being the time required for their repeal. To insure more borrowed time, a delaying action fight is being waged to immobilize the hated NAACP, whose handful of black lawyers with inferior minds have bested the most brilliant legal heads of the entire white South.

Louisiana and Alabama have already outlawed the organization. Texas has obtained a temporary injunction forbidding it from doing business there. South Carolina is working on a plan. Even the Urban League, whose only sin is finding jobs for Negroes, has been denied financial aid by the Jacksonville, Florida, community fund.

Lights Of Progress

NEITHER mob demonstrations, riots, economic reprisals nor flying beer bottles can turn out the lights of progress. Nor can they stop the orderly processes of desegregation, for it is not on trial. Its rightness has already been proved. In the North people of different races and colors have always lived together and sent their children to the same schools. As yet there are no visible signs of mongrelization or evidences of genocide in the ranks of white men or black.

In fact, the Northern Negro soldier has been found to have a higher I.Q. than the white soldier in the South, protected as he is by three centuries of front door segregation. With the advent of desegregated school facilities, it should not take the Southern Negro nearly as long to catch up with his white brother.

Ebony Dec 56

Howard Law Journal (Vol 4) No 1.
Civil Liberties
Jan. 1958

THE REPRESSION OF CIVIL RIGHTS AS AN AFTERMATH OF THE SCHOOL SEGREGATION CASES

ROBERT B. McKAY*

I

INTRODUCTION

WHEN the first Congress of the United States met in 1789, a majority of the delegates from states which had ratified the new Constitution were committed to the addition of a Bill of Rights. High on the list of the demanded guarantees were assurances of the freedom of speech and of assembly.[1] James Madison, reinforced in his own beliefs by the strong urgings and cogent arguments of Thomas Jefferson,[2] took the lead in Congress in proposing nine formal amendments to the Constitution, embracing some nineteen substantive items, including of course guarantees of the freedom of speech and peaceful assemblage.[3]

The importance of these rights, from that time secured by the first amendment against federal intrusion and subsequently against state interference,[4] has been eloquently attested by Alexis de Tocqueville:

> "If men living in democratic countries had no right and no inclination to associate for political purposes, their independence would be in great jeopardy. . . ."[5]

That inclination "to associate for political purposes" has of course remained at the core of the American democratic philosophy. Challenges to that concept have in general been sharply rebuked and set aside. Now, however, these cherished freedoms are being assaulted in new and more subtle ways in many of the Southern states.

These attacks date essentially from the 1954 and 1955 decisions by the United States Supreme Court that the segregated public schools affected by those decisions should be desegregated "with all deliberate speed."[6] With each additional instance of desegregation,

---

This paper, in a somewhat different form, was presented as a part of the program of the American Political Science Association meeting in New York in September 1957.

* Professor of Law, New York University School of Law.

1 Dumbauld, The Bill of Rights 10-33 (1957).

2 See Cahn, The Firstness of the First Amendment, 65 Yale L.J. 464 (1956).

3 Dumbauld, The Bill of Rights 33-38 (1957).

4 Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652 (1925).

5 De Tocqueville, Democracy in America 378 (Oxford University Press ed. 1953).

6 Brown v. Board of Educ., 347 U.S. 483 (1954); Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954); Brown v. Board of Educ., 349 U.S. 294, 301 (1955).

whether voluntary or done in compliance with court orders, further ingenuity is displayed in techniques of resistance.[7] Thus, a number of states have adopted resolutions of so-called interposition[8] and elaborate school-assignment plans which more or less openly seek to preserve segregated school systems.[9] Meanwhile, private groups, often known as White Citizens Councils, have been formed to oppose desegregation at all levels and by all means.[10] A more recent manifestation of this program of resistance has been that which seeks to destroy or at least to frustrate the functioning of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It is this effort, whose outlines are now fairly clear, which is the subject of this paper: the legislative program, the harassment in the courts, and the economic coercion. The central objective seems to be to compel public identification of NAACP members and contributors who can in turn be subjected to other legal and economic pressures, and perhaps even to physical hazard; to force the NAACP and its lawyers to terminate their sponsorship of litigation to enforce racial equality; and to have the NAACP defined as a profit-making organization operating in violation of state revenue laws. Exploration of these topics will here be limited primarily to the constitutional aspects of this onslaught:[11] freedom of speech and assembly, freedom of movement in interstate commerce, due process of law, and equal protection of the laws. Throughout it must be remembered that these issues, important as they undoubtedly are in the context of the present struggle, have wider implications as well. The present measures, while now aimed primarily at the NAACP, are broad enough to be used against other organizations and other groups. If they withstand constitutional challenge now, they will remain important weapons in other contests involving other groups and other principles.

---

[7] For a general review, see McKay, "With All Deliberate Speed"—A Study of School Desegregation, 31 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 991 (1956).

[8] The Doctrine of Interposition: A Round Table, 5 J. Pub. L. 1 (1956); Interposition vs. Judicial Power, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 465 (1956).

[9] Wettach, North Carolina School Legislation—1956, 35 N.C.L. Rev. 1 (1956); Study, Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 561 (1957); Note, Effect of School Assignment Laws on Federal Adjudication of Integration Controversies, 57 Col. L. Rev. 537 (1957).

[10] Fleming, Resistance Movements and Racial Desegregation, 304 Annals 44 (March 1956). See also Martin, The South Says "Never" (1957).

[11] For an effective, popular summary, see American Jewish Congress, Assault Upon Freedom of Association (1957). See also Brief for Petitioner, pp. 12-17, NAACP v. Alabama, No. 91, Sup. Ct. (Oct. Term 1957).

II

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE

Like all organizations which support unpopular causes and challenge existing patterns of society, the NAACP has had a stormy history;[12] and it has been soundly praised and roundly condemned. In one respect, however, and perhaps in that connection only, friends and foes agree: The NAACP is now and has long been the single most effective catalytic agent in breaking down existing patterns of segregated society, in the North as well as in the South. It has been aptly described as "without question the most important agency for the Negroes in their struggle against caste."[13] Its legal record has been truly phenomenal. "The NAACP has won more victories in the Supreme Court than any other single organization."[14] Senator Herman E. Talmadge, no admirer of the NAACP, has conceded its impact. When governor of Georgia he wrote: "The leader, director and field general in the fight to break down all forms of racial segregation is the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."[15] It is small wonder then that much of the current effort to preserve segregation takes the form of attacks, more or less overt, upon the NAACP. It is, indeed, a kind of compliment, grim and unwelcome though it may be.

The Beginnings.[16]—Whatever gains the Negro may have made by virtue of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments and the Civil Rights Acts of the Reconstruction Period, by the end of the nineteenth century these advances had been largely nullified by legislative indifference and judicial hostility. Seeking to recover lost [12] See Jack, History of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (1943); Ovington, The Walls Came Tumbling Down (1947); Rose, The Negro in America 263-67 (Beacon Paperback Ed. 1956); Wynn, The NAACP Versus Negro Revolutionary Protest (1955).

---

[13] Rose, The Negro in America 263 (Beacon Paperback Ed. 1956). To the same effect, see Comment, Private Attorneys-General; Group Action in the Fight for Civil Liberties, 58 Yale L.J. 574, 581 (1949).

[14] Vose, NAACP Strategy in the Covenant Cases, 6 Western Res. L. Rev. 101, 102 (1955).

[15] Talmadge, You and Segregation 26 (1955). One of the few apparent dissenters from this view is Mississippi's Governor J. P. Coleman who denied the necessity of passing legislation outlawing the NAACP in the state because "I personally don't feel that the NAACP is a powerful organization in Mississippi up to this time." Southern School News, Aug. 1957, p. 15, col. 5. It should be noted, however, that Mississippi, like other deep-South states, has in recent years enacted legislation that works to the disadvantage of the NAACP.

[16] Factual data in the historical sketch which follows was largely drawn from Frazier, The Negro in the United States 523-26 (Rev. Ed. 1957). See also the materials cited in note 12 supra.

ground, W. E. B. Dubois, the acknowledged leader of the Negro intelligentsia at that time, called a meeting of Negro leaders at Niagara Falls in 1905. From this came the so-called Niagara Movement. The organization, however, was hampered by a lack of funds; and in 1909 a new organization was formed, made up of Negroes and whites, into which the earlier group merged. The new group took the name National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in that year and by 1911 was incorporated in New York as a nonprofit membership corporation. Its basic aims were then and now the elimination of all racial barriers. The articles of incorporation state the objectives as follows:

> " . . . voluntarily to promote equality of rights and eradicate caste or race prejudice among the citizens of the United States; to advance the interest of colored citizens; to secure for them impartial suffrage; and to increase their opportunities for securing justice in the courts, education for their children, employment according to their ability, and complete equality before the law.
>
> To ascertain and publish all facts bearing upon these subjects and to take any lawful action thereon; together with any kind and all things which may lawfully be done by a membership corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York for the further advancement of these objects."

The sweeping character of these aims, as reinforced by strong leadership, was undoubtedly important in the significant progress of the NAACP from its modest origins in 1909 to the influential position which it holds today. Within ten years of that first meeting there were 310 branches of the NAACP with 91,203 members.[17] By 1956 the organization could report 350,424 members in 1,467 branches, youth councils, and college chapters.[18] During the year 1955, the last year for which a financial statement has been made public, the NAACP reported a gross income of $672,422.48.[19]

Organization.—Since 1939 the NAACP has really consisted of two separate corporations, divided in function, apparently for tax purposes.[20] The NAACP proper continues to devote itself to organizational matters, membership recruitment, and legislative activities. A separate organization, the NAACP Legal Defense and Education

---

[17] Tenth Annual Report of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People 7 (1919).

[18] NAACP Annual Report: 48th Year 11-12 (1957).

[19] NAACP Annual Report: 47th Year 75 (1956). This is in addition to that portion of the membership fees retained by the branches, which amounted to $250,000.00 for the year 1956. N.Y. Times, Jan. 8, 1957, p. 19, col. 3.

[20] Comment, 58 Yale L.J. 574, 581-82 (1949). The Internal Revenue Service announced in September 1957 that investigation was continuing as to the tax-exempt status of the NAACP Legal Defense & Education Fund, Inc. N.Y. Times, Sept. 27, 1957, p. 10, col. 8.

Fund, Inc., is responsible for the planning and conduct of litigation. Policy of a political and a legal nature is thus fixed at the national level; but the principal operating function is at the level of the local branches, youth councils, and college chapters. From an organizational standpoint this is probably a source of strength; but at the same time it may be a source of some legal vulnerability, as will be subsequently noted.

The Constitution of the NAACP authorizes the board of directors to create branches, youth councils, and college chapters which operate under charters granted by the national board of directors.[21] These local organizations function as independent, unincorporated associations which ordinarily operate on a state-wide basis through a state conference of branches. Through this loose confederation the branches are able to act in concert and to pool their strength on issues of state-wide interest. In addition, there are several regional offices staffed by full-time employees.

The principal responsibility for legal action falls on the national organization, headed by Robert L. Carter, General Counsel, and Thurgood Marshall, Special Counsel.[22] In addition, there is a National Legal Committee, composed in 1956 of forty-four lawyers, white and Negro, in twenty-two cities.[23] Members of this group serve both in an advisory capacity and as active counsel in litigation as the need may arise.

At the local level, although the Constitution and By-Laws for Branches calls for a standing legal redress committee in each branch, that committee's action is confined to investigation, consulting with members of the National Legal Committee, and watching over litigation in which the branch is interested. Members of the local legal redress committees are specifically cautioned against giving "general legal advice."[24]

It is this organization, then, and these local units which are now threatened as never before with a serious challenge at least to continued effectiveness and perhaps to continued existence. The balance of this study will be devoted to an analysis of the attacks already made and the counterattack now in preparation; and an estimate will be made of the constitutional merits of the arguments advanced on both sides of the controversy.

---

[21] NAACP Const., art. I, § 1.
[22] NAACP Annual Report: 48th Year 72 (1957).
[23] Id. at 70.
[24] NAACP Const. and By-Laws for Branches, art. III, § 2(d).

III

Foreign Corporations and Interstate Commerce

Even as the course of a battle may be shaped by the outcome of preliminary skirmishes, so important legal principles may depend upon matters essentially procedural. It seems a little thing, and not unreasonable, to require an out-of-state corporation to register with a state official when it wishes to do business in a state other than its place of incorporation. Probably all states have at least a minimal requirement of this nature.[24a] Indeed, in most states where the NAACP is active, it has complied with the formal registration requirement.[25] One exception which resulted in litigation was the refusal to comply with the North Carolina registration statute which requires, in the case of non-stock foreign corporations, payment of a registration fee of $40.00 and a filing fee of $5.00.[26] In addition, the foreign corporation is required to file a copy of its charter, the address of its principal office in North Carolina, the name of the agent in charge thereof, the character of its business, and the names and addresses of officers and directors.

North Carolina also requires, as do many other states, that corporations "principally engaged in the activity of influencing public opinion and/or legislation" shall register with the secretary of state, filing information similar to the above plus a financial statement "itemizing in detail any contributions, donations, gifts or other income and from what source or sources received."[27]

In the belief that neither of these provisions could constitutionally be applied to it, the NAACP filed an action in the superior court of Wake County, North Carolina, seeking a declaratory judgment that it was not bound to comply with either provision.[28] Defendants, North Carolina's secretary of state and attorney general, demurred on the ground that the two causes of action could not be joined in a single proceeding because one involved a civil penalty and the other a criminal sanction and that a declaratory judgment proceeding could not be used to test criminal responsibility.[29] The trial court sustained the demurrer,[30] and that judgment was affirmed

---

[24a] See 17 Fletcher, Cyclopedia of the Law of Private Corporations §§ 8446, 8447 (1933).

[25] E.g., the NAACP has registered as a foreign corporation with the Virginia State Corporation Commission and has been granted a certificate of authority to do business in Virginia. Southern School News, Nov. 1956, p. 5, col. 5.

[26] N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 55-118 (1943), as amended (Supp. 1955).

[27] N.C. Gen. Stat. Ann. §§ 120-48, 120-49 (1943).

[28] NAACP v. Eure, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 405 (1956).

[29] Id. at 410.

[30] Id. at 405.

by the North Carolina Supreme Court for the reasons given by the trial court and because the alleged causes of action did not affect both defendants.[31] Subsequently, the NAACP filed with the North Carolina secretary of state the information required of foreign corporations, but did not comply with the provisions requiring registration of organizations concerned with influencing public opinion, in the belief that it is unconstitutional and need not be complied with.[32] Although no immediate test of the constitutionality of either North Carolina statute is likely, the issues raised but not decided are sufficiently important to justify further discussion. Analysis at this point will be limited to the foreign corporation registration statute, while the problems raised by requiring public-opinion-shaping groups to register will be deferred for later discussion.

The NAACP alleged in its complaint in the North Carolina case that its contacts with the state do not constitute "doing business" in any sense that could constitutionally make it subject to North Carolina's registration requirement. The argument seems not well founded. Although the NAACP is undoubtedly engaged in interstate commerce,[33] this of course does not give it immunity from reasonable regulation to the extent its local activities within a state constitute a doing of business.[34] Of course, "doing business" may be something of a misnomer as applied to a nonprofit organization such as the NAACP, dedicated as it is to the advancement of principles of equality. But there seems to be no good reason for rejecting the now-current test of "traditional conceptions of fair play and substantial justice,"[35] in determining whether the NAACP has had sufficient contacts with a state to warrant an inference of its presence. If so, there could hardly be any doubt that the NAACP is doing business in this sense. After all, its objective is the promotion of racial equality throughout the nation, operating principally through local branches, youth councils, and college chapters. In North Carolina, as in other states, there is a state conference of branches; and local agents and

---

31 245 N.C. 331, 95 S.E.2d 893 (1957).

32 Southern School News, March 1957, p. 11, cols. 3-4.

33 Transactions involving services or intangibles moving across state lines are consistently held to constitute interstate commerce. E.g., Associated Press v. United States, 326 U.S. 1 (1945) (news gathering). United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533 (1944) (insurance); American Medical Ass'n v. United States, 317 U.S. 519 (1943) (medical services).

34 Union Brokerage Co. v. Jensen, 322 U.S. 202 (1944); Natural Gas Pipeline Co. v. Slattery, 302 U.S. 300 (1937); Interstate Amusement Co. v. Albert, 239 U.S. 560 (1916). Cf. Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U.S. 197 (1914).

35 International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320 (1945). See Note, Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations—An Analysis of Due Process, 104 U. of Pa. L. Rev. 381 (1955). Cf. McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 26 U.S.L. Week 4073 (U.S. Dec. 16, 1957).

members solicit new members, investigate cases of alleged discrimination, and generally perform the business of the NAACP. In short, the NAACP can hardly have it both ways: if it is engaged in interstate commerce, as assuredly it is, then it follows almost inevitably that it is "doing business."

On the assumption that the NAACP is thus doing business in each of the states where it has branches, it is of course amenable to reasonable regulation that does not unduly burden interstate commerce. There seems, then, little doubt that the North Carolina requirement for registration, furnishing of reasonable information, and payment of a nonrecurring license fee would violate neither the commerce clause[36] nor the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment.[37]

IV

Membership Lists and Freedom of Speech and Association

The NAACP also alleged in the North Carolina proceeding that the registration requirement amounts to a violation of "freedom of speech and the right to petition for redress of grievances" protected by the first and fourteenth amendments.[38] However, unless such an organization is constitutionally protected against any disclosure of its purposes, officers, and directors—which is surely not the case—there appears to be no first amendment objection to the disclosure of this minimal amount of more or less routine information.

North Carolina's requirement of disclosure of financial information, including sources, by organizations concerned with influencing public opinion is a very different matter which raises more difficult questions under the first and fourteenth amendments. Related issues are before the courts already in litigation now pending in Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, and Virginia, all of which can conveniently be discussed together.[39]

---

36 Union Brokerage Co. v. Jensen, 322 U.S. 202 (1944).

37 Atlantic Refining Co. v. Virginia, 302 U.S. 22 (1937).

38 Complaint, par. 8, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 407 (1956).

39 In addition, several other states have proposed or adopted legislation designed to require production of membership lists; but test litigation has not yet reached the courts.

Ark. Acts 1957, No. 85, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 495 (1957). This act requires the registration with, and the making of periodical reports to, the State Sovereignty Commission by persons and organizations promoting school desegregation by legislation or litigation. In addition to requiring in effect disclosure of membership lists, there are extremely burdensome requirements for detailed receipting and listing of expenditures. This may exceed permissible limits of regulation. Farrington v. Tokushige, 273 U.S. 284 (1927).

In Georgia, the attorney general proposed a resolution which, if enacted, would have authorized an investigation of the NAACP, described as "an enemy of the North Carolina.—The North Carolina statute, it will be remembered, calls for disclosure of financial sources. If this means that names of all members must be listed because as members they are also contributors, that requirement would destroy the confidential character of the membership lists which has previously been preserved. And, in any event, because the statute is directed exclusively at organizations which seek to influence opinion and legislation, the free speech issue seems inescapably raised.

Alabama.—Although the Alabama foreign corporation registration statute[40] does not call for full disclosure of membership, the same issue was quickly reached in that state. The state attorney general sought an injunction in a state court to restrain the NAACP as a foreign corporation from doing business in Alabama without complying with the registration law. At an ex parte proceeding a temporary restraining order was issued broad enough in effect to prohibit the continuance of activities of the NAACP in the state during its pendency.[41] Later the state filed a motion to require the NAACP to produce certain books, documents, and other papers, significantly including its membership lists. Over defendant's objection production was ordered, and the NAACP was adjudged in contempt of court when it refused to produce the membership lists, although complying with other parts of the order. The punishment was fixed at $10,000.00, to be raised to $100,000.00 if compliance was not effected within five days; but it was not made clear whether the contempt was civil or criminal.[42] Although the Association had in fact ceased functioning in Alabama when the temporary restraining order was issued, the size of the fine was one of the factors which prevented it from purging itself of the contempt.[43] The Alabama Supreme Court denied certiorari.[44] Although the NAACP offered to produce some of South," with authority in the committee to subpoena all Association records, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 956, 957 (1956).

In Florida, a package of proposals to preserve segregation, including disclosure of membership lists, was debated but not enacted in 1957. Southern School News, May 1957, p. 4, col. 1; id. July 1957, p. 12, col. 4.

Tenn. Pub. Acts 1957, cc. 151, 152, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 497, 498 (1957). These acts require the filing of membership lists by organizations which solicit funds to finance or maintain litigation or which promote or oppose legislation relating to racial matters.

A proposed Texas statute requiring registration of persons advocating segregation or integration was ruled unconstitutional by the attorney general of the state. Southern School News, June 1957, p. 2, col. 1.

40 Ala. Code Ann. tit. 10, §§ 192-94 (1940).

41 Alabama ex rel. Patterson v. National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 707 (1956).

42 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 917 (1956).

43 NAACP Annual Report: 48th Year 28 (1957).

44 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 919 (1956).

the demanded records, its refusal to give up membership lists brought an order from the trial court confirming the fine at the $100,000.00 level. The state supreme court again denied certiorari, but this time with an opinion explaining that the fine was for civil contempt because it was coercive in purpose.[45] The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari for argument in the October 1957 term.[46] The principal question raised in argument in January 1958 was the question of freedom of speech and association guaranteed against state intrusion by the fourteenth amendment.[47]

Georgia.—The sole litigation against the NAACP in Georgia was brought by the state revenue commissioner, who made a demand on the Association and certain of its local officers and employees for production of records for the stated purpose of assessing tax liability. When the records were refused because compliance would disclose membership lists, the court found the Association and some of the individual defendants in contempt.[48] After the president of the local chapter was imprisoned, he gave up the records and was released.[49] After examination of the records the state levied an assessment against the NAACP for back income taxes of $17,459.08. Liability for back taxes is claimed even if the NAACP should sustain its claim as a nonprofit organization because it had failed to apply for tax exemption in the past. [50]

Louisiana.—Ironically, the legislation which the NAACP was charged with having violated in Louisiana was the anti-Ku Klux Klan legislation which the NAACP undoubtedly supported at the [45] 91 So. 2d 214 (Ala. 1956).

---

[46] 353 U.S. 972 (1957).

[47] Oct. Term 1957, No. 91. A somewhat unusual feature of the case is the fact that the state action complained of does not derive directly from state statute, but from a court order to produce membership lists, granted on motion of the attorney general. However, it has long been clear that judicial action which denies due process is state action violative of the fourteenth amendment. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. 339 (1880); State Action: A Study of Requirements Under the Fourteenth Amendment, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 613 (1956).

In addition, there are complex questions of Alabama procedural law. The NAACP argues that the state court's denial of certiorari (on the ground that mandamus was the proper remedy) was in conflict with Alabama precedent. Thus, to reach the substantive issue the United States Supreme Court will have to determine that there was no adequate state ground for the denial of certiorari. This may be troublesome, but is certainly not an insurmountable obstacle if the state court abused its own precedents to arrive at a discriminatory result. Cf. Konigsberg v. State Bar of California, 353 U.S. 252 (1957); Davis v. Wechsler, 263 U.S. 22 (1923); Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U.S. 226 (1904).

[48] Williams v. NAACP, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 181 (1957). Appeal from this decision has encountered procedural delays and difficulties under Georgia law. Southern School News, July 1957, p. 9, col. 2.

[49] N.Y. Times, Dec. 15, 1956, p. 16, col. 1.

[50] Southern School News, July 1957, p. 9, col. 2.

time of its enactment in 1924.[51] That legislation calls for the annual filing of membership lists of "each fraternal, patriotic, charitable, benevolent, literary, scientific, athletic, military, or social organization . . . operating in this state . . . ."[52] For failure so to file the state attorney general sought and obtained an injunction "forever enjoining, restraining and prohibiting" the Association and its branches, agents, and members from holding any meetings or doing any business within the state.[53] Meanwhile, however, before this injunction had been made permanent, the NAACP sought to remove the case to the appropriate federal district court, as provided in section 1446 of title 28 of the United States Code. Although that section provides that after proper steps for removal have been taken, "the State court shall proceed no further unless and until the case is remanded," the state court proceeded to the permanent injunction, as already noted. In these irregular circumstances the federal district court refused to enjoin the state court from further action in the case,[54] pending state court review. Some seven months later the matter was resolved when the state intermediate appellate court held that the removal had been properly effected and that it accordingly lacked authority even to entertain the appeal.[55] Although this ruling would seem to have left the way clear for a test of the constitutional issue in the federal court, the state attorney general announced his intention to enforce the penal provisions of the law. Accordingly, at the end of 1956 the New Orleans branch and other branches filed lists totaling 475 members;[56] however, it was several months before the NAACP again held meetings in Louisiana.[57] Clearly the freedom of speech and freedom of association issue remains critical and unresolved in the state.

Texas.—In most states it is conceded without question that the NAACP is a nonprofit corporation. But such an admission in Texas would apparently mean that the Association would not be required to register as a foreign corporation.[58] and would not be subject to the 51 La. Rev. Stat. §§ 12:401-405 (1950). See Comment, Anti-Mask and Anti-Klan Laws, 1 J. Pub. L. 182 (1952).

---

52 Id., §§ 12:401, 12:402.

53 Louisiana ex rel. LeBlanc v. Lewis, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 571 (1956).

54 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 576 (1956).

55 Louisiana ex rel. Gremillion v. National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 185 (1957).

56 Southern School News, Feb. 1957, p. 16, col. 5.

57 Id., June 1957, p. 6, col. 2.

58 Tex. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 1529 (Vernon Supp. 1955) requires the issuance of a permit to "Any corporation for pecuniary profit," but apparently has no similar requirement as to nonprofit corporations. This distinction is of course consistent with the well-recognized difference between the power of the state to regulate commercial enterprise generally as compared with its inability to impose prior restraint upon the operation of organizations concerned exclusively with the dissemination of ideas.

franchise tax assessed against profit-making foreign corporations.[59] It is perhaps not surprising then to find that the state attorney general charged that the NAACP was not a nonprofit corporation, as it claimed, and therefore required a state permit which it did not have; that it had engaged in political and lobbying activities; that it had practiced law illegally; that it had unlawfully solicited and recruited plaintiffs for lawsuits opposing desegregation; that it had failed to pay franchise taxes; and that its activities would result in "racial hatred and inflamed communities." These charges were faithfully echoed in the temporary injunction granted by the state district court.[60] Some months later the same court issued a permanent injunction against the NAACP, the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund Inc., the Southwest Regional Conference of the NAACP, the Texas State Conference of Branches, and 113 named branches in the state. The original order was modified somewhat to permit educational and charitable activities, and the NAACP was now found to be a nonprofit organization. Nevertheless, it was held required to pay franchise taxes for the privilege of operating within the state and it was forbidden to engage in litigation or lobbying activities.[61] This order, on appeal to the Texas Civil Court of Appeals, raises questions of interpretation under Texas law as to whether a nonprofit corporation can be subjected to regulation of the kind sought; and of course it raises questions of freedom of speech and association.

Virginia.—Without doubt the most important legislative threat to the NAACP is contained in the package of statutes adopted by the 1956 Special Session of the General Assembly of Virginia. While others of those acts will be discussed subsequently, the ones here relevant are chapters 31 and 32 of that special session. Chapter 31 provides that any corporation which plans to solicit or spend funds for a legal proceeding in which it has no liability or pecuniary interest must file with the State Corporation Commission a copy of its charter, a list of names and addresses of officers and contributors, a detailed statement of financial transactions, and a statement showing the location of all offices and branches. Violation by a corporation permits a fine up to $10,000.00 and revocation of its authority to do business in Virginia. Chapter 32, after declaring the essentiality "to the welfare, health and safety of the people of Virginia" of the "continued harmonious relations between the races," requires submission of information similar to that required by chapter 31 as to persons and organizations advocating "racial integration or segregation or whose activities cause or tend to cause racial conflicts or violence . . . ." Provisions for enjoining activity in violation thereof are included in both sections. These statutes were enacted along with provisions outlawing barratry and acts providing for legislative investigation of the sufficiency of the anti-barratry legislation and of groups seeking to influence or promote litigation involving racial activities. The combined effect of the legislation creates a neat statutory dilemma for the NAACP. If it fails to register as an organization which plans to solicit or spend funds for a legal proceeding in which it has no liability or pecuniary interest, it will be subject to fine and revocation of authority to do business in Virginia, under the provisions of chapter 31. However, if it so registers, it will in effect convict itself under chapters 33, 35, and 36 of malpractice, thus becoming subject to fine and revocation of its authority to do business in Virginia. The latter chapters are discussed in part V, infra. The entire package has been challenged by the NAACP in an action for declaratory judgment before a three-judge federal district court.[62]

[59] Tex. Civ. Stat. Ann. art. 7084 (Vernon Supp. 1955).

[60] Following a similar, ex parte temporary restraining order. Both appear in 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 1068, 1069 (1956).

[61] Texas v. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 678 (1957).

A. Corporations as "Persons"[63]

Shortly after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, the Supreme Court denied that corporations could be citizens within the meaning of the privileges and immunities clause of the amendment;[64] and this remains the view at the present time.[65] On the other hand, the Court had no difficulty in concluding that corporations are persons within the protection of the due process and equal protection clauses of the fourteenth amendment, at least so far as property is concerned.[66] However, also without discussion or apparent reflection as to possible consequences, the Court has held that the liberty guaranteed by the fourteenth amendent is the liberty of natural, not artificial persons.[67] The most recent statement on this issue was in [62] National Association for the Advancement of Colored People v. Almond, Civ. No. 2435 (E.D. Va.), filed Nov. 28, 1956.

---

[63] See Note, State Control Over Political Organizations: First Amendment Checks on Powers of Regulation, 66 Yale L.J. 545, 546-50 (1957).

[64] Orient Insurance Co. v. Daggs, 172 U.S. 557, 561 (1869).

[65] Hague v. C.I.O., 307 U.S. 496, 514 (1939).

[66] Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R.R., 118 U.S. 394 (1886); Smyth v. Ames, 169 U.S. 466, 522 (1898). But cf. Connecticut General Life Insurance Co. v. Johnson, 303 U.S. 77, 85 (1938) (dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Black); Wheeling Steel Corp. v. Glander, 337 U.S. 562, 576 (1949) (dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas, Mr. Justice Black concurring).

[67] Northwestern National Life Insurance Co. v. Riggs, 203 U.S. 243, 255 (1906); Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U.S. 359, 363 (1907). See also Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U.S. 197, 362 (1904) (concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Brewer).

However, there was not a freedom of speech or association issue in any of these

Hague v. C.I.O.[68] This was a suit by individual citizens, unincorporated labor organizations composed of such citizens, and a membership corporation (the American Civil Liberties Union) to enjoin city officials from enforcing municipal ordinances forbidding the distribution of printed matter, and the holding without permits of public meetings, in public places. Five of the seven participating justices held that the ordinances as enforced violated the rights of the individual citizen plaintiffs. However, in each of the two opinions necessary to the majority result there were explicit holdings that only the individual citizens were protected by the fourteenth amendment. Mr. Justice Roberts (with the concurrence on this point of Chief Justice Hughes and Mr. Justice Black), relying on the privileges and immunities clause of the fourteenth amendment to protect the individuals' right of peaceful assembly and freedom of communication, nevertheless specifically excluded corporations from that protection: "Natural persons, and they alone, are entitled to the privileges and immunities which § 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment secures for 'citizens of the United States.' "[69] Mr. Justice Stone (with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Reed) rejected the privileges and immunities argument, but found the ordinances violative of the due process clause. However, he continued:

> As to the American Civil Liberties Union, which is a corporation, it cannot be said to be deprived of the civil rights of freedom of speech and of assembly, for the liberty guaranteed by the due process clause is the liberty of natural, not artificial, persons.[70]

Despite this apparently unequivocal holding that corporations are not persons within the protection of the first amendment as incorporated into the fourteenth, the Supreme Court has been somewhat ambivalent on this issue. First amendment protection has been accorded newspaper corporations[71] and moving picture companies,[72] with no indication that this might be inconsistent with such sweeping pronouncements as have already been cited. And of course, as demonstrated in the Hague case itself, the Court finds no difficulty in recognizing the free speech protection due individuals who act in behalf of unincorporated associations,[73] or presumably those who act cases. Cf. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535 (1925), where the Court denied that corporations were protected as to liberty, but granted protection to the claimed right of religious freedom on the basis of a denial of property.

[68] 307 U.S. 496 (1939).

[69] Id. at 514.

[70] Id. at 527.

[71] Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 244 (1936).

[72] Joseph Burstyn, Inc. v. Wilson, 343 U.S. 495 (1952).

[73] In Hague v. C.I.O., 307 U.S. 496 (1939), the individual plaintiffs were labor organizers acting in behalf of unincorporated labor organizations.

in behalf of corporations.[74] Moreover, as already noted, though a nonprofit corporation may not be protected against deprivations of liberty, it is guaranteed against denial of property without due process.[75]

These distinctions seem to have developed almost by chance. In each case the Court appears to have decided these important issues in an ad hoc fashion, without explanation or meaningful citation of precedent. Indeed, this labyrinth of distinctions without difference suggests that the Court has not developed a coherent philosophy in this area. The apparent state of the law now would permit an officer or other agent of a corporation to complain of a denial of freedom of speech or assembly as to himself when acting on behalf of the organization, but deny the corporation any right in its own behalf. Moreover, the corporation can raise the issue directly if it is hit in the pocketbook (through loss of members or contributions), but cannot otherwise defend its freedom of expression. Such sinuosities in the law encourage new and unwelcome fictions at best, and downright evasion at worst. This anomaly in the law of the first and fourteenth amendments should be eliminated by overruling the objectionable statements in Hague v. C.I.O. and its predecessors. If corporations are persons as to property rights and equal protection of the laws, they should be entitled to no less security in connection with liberty, the most cherished right of all.

Even within the existing legal framework, the NAACP is by no means unable to assert its claimed first amendment rights. If it can show, as it has alleged, that the furnishing of membership lists will adversely affect its recruitment of members, it can of course demonstrate a financial loss that will amount to a denial of property (through interference with freedom of speech and assembly). As an alternative means of satisfying the vagaries of the present doctrine relating to corporations, the NAACP could join with it as plaintiffs in each suit individual members of the organization from the affected state conference or local branch. Those individual plaintiffs would then be entitled to demonstrate the way or ways in which state action invaded their freedom of speech or assembly.

---

[74] See Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123, 186 (1951) (Mr. Justice Jackson concurring). See also Comment, State Control Over Political Organizations: First Amendment Checks on Powers of Regulation, 66 Yale L.J. 545, 548 (1957).

[75] Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 263 U.S. 510 (1925). Cf. Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee v. McGrath, 341 U.S. 123 (1951). In that case unincorporated associations and corporations had been listed by the Attorney General as Communist without notice or hearing. Although the complaint raised essentially first amendment issues, the majority found the complaint stated a cause of action as a denial of property without due process under the fifth amendment.

B. Identification of Members[76]

As has already been noted, a number of states now require the filing of membership lists or, what may amount to the same thing, lists of contributors. Some of these requirements are based on statutes going back to anti-Ku Klux Klan legislation, as in Louisiana; at least one, North Carolina, is essentially a lobbying registration statute; others have enacted special legislation directed primarily at the NAACP, as in Virginia; and in Alabama and Georgia the direction to produce membership lists was not based on any statute, but on court order pursuant to motion by a state official. Despite this diversity of sources, all have been applied only since the decision in the School Segregation Cases, and all have been resurrected or enacted in a context which shows clearly an aim to frustrate the effectiveness of the NAACP. Indeed, if the facts of history were otherwise—if, for example, it could be shown that such a requirement in a statute was reasonably drawn to achieve a justifiable purpose, it may well be that the requirement would be sustained.

The precedent in favor of disclosure appears at first impression to be strong. Thus in Bryant v. Zimmerman[77] the Supreme Court upheld New York's requirement of disclosure of membership lists by any organization requiring "an oath as a prerequisite or condition of membership, other than a labor union or a benevolent order . . . ."[78] There was no doubt that the law was aimed at the Ku Klux Klan. Indeed, its very specificity almost seems to have been helpful to the Supreme Court in upholding the statute. "It is a matter of common knowledge that this organization functions largely at night, its members disguised by hoods and gowns and doing things calculated to strike terror into the minds of the people. . . ."[79] Nevertheless, the restricted nature of the class at which the statute was directed was not found to violate the equal protection of the laws, even though other oath-bound organizations were specifically exempted from the provisions of the statute. The Court took judicial notice that the exempted groups "have a recognized lawful purpose," leaving for penalty under the statute only those whose activities tend "to the prejudice and intimidation of sundry claims of our citizens,"[80] such as the Klan.

Although this decision supported state control in these special

---

[76] Comment, State Control Over Political Organizations: First Amendment Checks on Powers of Regulation, 66 Yale L.J. 545, 560-66 (1957).

[77] 278 U.S. 63 (1928).

[78] Id. at 66, quoting from N.Y. Civ. Rights Law art. V-A, as it read at that time.

[79] Id. at 75, quoting from the opinion of a state court in the case.

[80] Ibid.

circumstances, the precedent hardly seems applicable to the NAACP whose objectives and methods have been recognized as worthy and not criminal. Indeed, it is at least implicit in the Bryant ruling that a similar exaction of membership lists from "benevolent orders, labor unions, and college fraternities" would have been unconstitutional because they "have existed for many years, and, while not immune from hostile criticism, have on the whole justified their existence."[81]

Surprisingly, the Supreme Court did not even mention the free speech limitation imposed by the New York statute involved in the Bryant case. In a number of subsequent rulings, however, the Court has emphasized the constitutional problems involved in the requirement of membership registration of any kind. The Court has given reluctant approval to two kinds of federal statutes which directly or indirectly require identification of individuals engaged in political or public opinion activities. In American Communications Ass'n v. Douds[82] the Court upheld section 9(h) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, which denies certain benefits under that act to labor organizations whose officers fail to file affidavits of non-Communist affiliation. The Court recognized that the negative identification called for (that is, denial of membership) might impose a limitation on free speech. But it concluded that the legitimate public purpose involved in preventing political strikes in essential industry justified this minimal restraint. By way of general caution the Court noted:

> Under some circumstances, indirect "discouragements" undoubtedly have the same coercive effect upon the exercise of First Amendment rights as imprisonment, fines, injunctions or taxes. A requirement that adherents of particular religious faiths or political parties wear arm-bands, for example, is obviously of this nature.[83]

In United States v. Harriss[84] the Supreme Court upheld the registration provisions of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act, but only by virtue of a narrow definition of the term lobbying to refer solely "to direct communications with members of Congress on pending or proposed federal legislation."[85] There was recognition that a broader construction might impinge on first amendment rights; but the majority of the Court found that hazard "too remote to require striking down a statute which on its face is otherwise plainly within [81] Bryant v. Zimmerman, 278 U.S. 63, 76 (1928).

---

[82] 339 U.S. 382 (1950).

[83] Id. at 402. Cf. Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Bd., 223 F.2d 531, 544 (D.C. Cir. 1954) (registration provision of Subversive Activities Control Act upheld in circumstances, although recognizing that there was a restriction on freedom of expression), rev'd on other grounds, 351 U.S. 115 (1955).

[84] 347 U.S. 612 (1954).

[85] Id. at 620.

the area of congressional power and is designed to safeguard a vital national interest."[86]

It is plain that the lack of concern over first amendment invasions by a statute requiring identification of members, as evidenced in the 1928 decision in Bryant v. Zimmerman, is no longer characteristic of the Court. Even minimal and indirect restraints can be justified only if there is involved a sufficiently vital public interest which can not otherwise be effectively protected.[87] To put the case mildly, it seems unlikely that the Supreme Court will find that suppression of the NAACP and its activities in the Southern states is a sufficient public purpose to justify such a limitation on free speech[88] and assembly.[89] There can be little doubt in fact that a requirement that the NAACP disclose its state membership lists in some of the Southern states will subject members to fear of reprisal[90] and may make prospective members reluctant to associate themselves with the organization.[91] There should similarly be little doubt in law that such re-[86] Id. at 626. Cf. United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 46 (1953) (narrow construction of congressional resolution defining powers of committee investigating lobbying activities, thus avoiding first amendment problems).

---

Disclosure legislation has also been enacted by Congress in its efforts to enforce election honesty, principally the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925. 43 Stat. 1070 (1925), as amended, 2 U.S.C. §§ 241-56 (1952). This act requires "political committees" to file periodic reports with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, listing names and addresses of all contributors of one hundred dollars or more. The Supreme Court has never passed on the question of whether this legislation violates first amendment rights of the political organizations or of contributors. However, it has generally been assumed that the legislation would be upheld. For discussion of this act and of the problem generally, see Bicks and Friedman, Regulation of Election Finance: A Case of Misguided Morality, 28 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 975 (1953); Notes, 48 Col. L. Rev. 589 (1948); 66 Harv. L. Rev. 1259 (1953). See also Overacker, Money in Elections c. X (1932).

[87] Comment, Legislative Inquiry into Political Activity: First Amendment Immunity from Committee Interrogation, 65 Yale L.J. 1159, 1173-75 (1956).

[88] See also Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516 (1945); Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105 (1943); Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88 (1940); Lovell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444 (1938); Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359 (1931).

[89] See also De Jonge v. Oregon, 299 U.S. 353, 364 (1937). "The right of peaceable assembly is a right cognate to those of free speech and free press and is equally fundamental . . . the right is one that cannot be denied without violating those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all civil and political institutions,—principles which the Fourteenth Amendment embodies in the general terms of its due process clause."

[90] A South Carolina statute making unlawful the employment of NAACP members in the state school system (S.C. Acts 1956, No. 751, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 751 (1956)), was repealed after the act was tested before a three-judge federal district court. Bryan v. Austin, Civ. No. 5792 (E.D.S.C. 1957), 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 378 (1957), dismissed for mootness, 354 U.S. 933 (1957). The 1956 Act was repealed by S.C. Acts 1957, No. 324.

[91] Before a three-judge federal district court in Virginia, sitting to hear argument on the constitutionality of the so-called "NAACP laws" of that state (see notes 100 et seq. infra), counsel for the NAACP indicated a sharp decline in membership strictions, absent sufficient public purpose, are violative of the Constitution.

V

Malpractice of Law and the NAACP

Over the centuries lawyers have frequently, often deservedly, been subjected to restrictive legislation by an outraged public. In large part the complaints against the practice of law—or more accurately its malpractice—have centered on offenses known as champerty, maintenance, and barratry. The confused history, in ancient Greece and Rome, and in feudal England, relating to the origins and common-law development of these offenses, has been competently investigated.[92] For present purposes, however, the knowledge of the past can be sufficiently summarized in a single statement from a leading American case:

> The general purpose of the law against champerty, maintenance, and barratry was to prevent officious intermeddlers from stirring up strife and contention by vexatious or speculative litigation, which would disturb the peace of society, lead to corrupt practices, and prevent the remedial process of the law.[93]

Complex distinctions have been drawn among these offenses; but in the last analysis they are all activities indissolubly associated in the public mind with the practice of law. As Professor Radin has said:

> If a maintainor is one who stirs up vexatious suits to which he is not a party, if a barrator is one who makes a profession of doing so, if a champertor is one who does so for pecuniary gain and if an embracer is one who in the course of such proceedings seeks to influence or intimidate judge or jury, it must be admitted that in the minds of the lay public, the chief maintainors, barrators, champertors and embracers of today are the members of the legal profession.[94]

These "vexatious" activities of lawyers, perhaps best summarized as "stirring up litigation," are widely condemned in the United States today.[95] Penalties are sometimes imposed for the common-law offense of barratry, even in the absence of statute;[96] more often barratry has been made a statutory offense;[97] and the following the enactment of the new legislation. He stated that Virginia membership in the NAACP for the first eight months of 1957 was 13,595, whereas it had been 19,436 for the corresponding period of 1956. Southern School News, Oct. 1957, p. 7, col. 3. See also note 11, supra.

---

92 Radin, Maintenance by Champerty, 24 Calif. L. Rev. 48 (1935).

93 Gammons v. Johnson, 76 Minn. 76, 81, 78 N.W. 1035, 1037 (1899).

94 Radin, Maintenance by Champerty, 24 Calif. L. Rev. 48, 66-67 (1935).

95 And still more widely so in England. Id. at 76.

96 E.g., State v. Batson, 220 N.C. 411, 17 S.E.2d 511 (1941).

97 139 A.L.R. 620, 621 (1942). Such statutes may include the old offenses of champerty and maintenance. 10 Am. Jur., Champerty and Maintenance § 5 (1937).

canons of professional ethics forbid certain practices that relate at least generally to the activities prohibited at common law.[98] In addition, attorneys are subject to the inherent disciplinary powers of the court to protect against any activity in derogation of the principles of the profession. And finally, the corporate practice of law is generally forbidden.[99] These various restrictions, in terms of general principles, however, have little meaning; for each state is free to adopt or reject the common law, to legislate or not to legislate, to adopt or refuse to adopt canons of ethics, and to forbid or permit the corporate practice of law. Accordingly, it may be useful to examine the legislation and decisions of a single state. Virginia has been selected for this purpose because in 1956 the General Assembly completely recast the Virginia law regulating the practice of law, directed more or less specifically at making unlawful some of the practices of the NAACP and its attorneys.[100] This legislation is further important because, if successful in withstanding present attacks,[101] it will undoubtedly be the pattern for similar legislation in other states.[102]

The previously existing legislation in Virginia authorized disbarment for "Any malpractice, or any unlawful or dishonest or unworthy or corrupt or unprofessional conduct," including "the improper solicitation of any legal or professional business or employment, either directly or indirectly . . . ."[103] This provision, when coupled with the inherent disciplinary power of the court, had been found sufficient for civil proceedings of disbarment for corrupt and dishonest conduct.[104] In addition, it was unlawful for any person or organization to act as a "runner" or "capper" in the solicitation of business for an attorney.[105] It was evident, however, that these statutes were by no means sufficient as a basis for sanctions to be imposed against the NAACP and its attorneys in that the Association's normal activities clearly did not violate any of these provisions. Accordingly, new and more stringent legislation was devised and enacted.

---

[98] The relevant Canons of Professional Ethics of the American Bar Association are Numbers 27, 28, and 42.

[99] Note, 44 Harv. L.R. 1114 (1931).

[100] Va. Acts 1956, cc. 33-36.

[101] NAACP v. Almond, Civ. No. 2435 (E.D. Va.), complaint filed Nov. 28, 1956.

[102] The State of Tennessee has already enacted an anti-barratry statute based on the Virginia act. Tenn. Pub. Acts 1957, c. 104. Other anti-barratry legislation enacted since 1954 includes the following: Ga. Laws 1957, No. 514, 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 501 (1957); Miss. Laws 1956, H.B. No. 33, 1 Race Rel. L. Rep. 451 (1956); S.C. Acts 1957, No. ....., 2 Race Rel. L. Rep. 502 (1957).

[103] Va. Code Ann. § 54-74 (1950).

[104] Campbell v. Third Dist. Comm. of Va. State Bar, 179 Va. 244, 18 S.E.2d 883 (1942); Norfolk & Portsmouth Bar Ass'n v. Drewry, 161 Va. 833, 172 S.E. 282 (1934). Cf. Legal Club of Lynchburg v. Light, 137 Va. 249, 119 S.E. 55 (1923).

[105] Va. Code Ann. § 54-78, 54-79 (1950).

Chapter 33 of the new legislation amends the existing provisions described above, principally by enlarging the definitions of acts prohibited to attorneys. Section 54-74(6) of the Code of Virginia now reads as follows:

> (6) "Any malpractice, or any unlawful or dishonest or unworthy or corrupt or unprofessional conduct," as used in this section, shall be construed to include the improper solicitation of any legal or professional business or employment, either directly or indirectly, or the acceptance of employment, retainer, compensation or costs from any person, partnership, corporation, organization or association with knowledge that such person, partnership, corporation, organization, or association has violated any provision of Article 7 of this chapter, or the failure, without sufficient cause, within a reasonable time after demand, of any attorney at law, to pay over and deliver to the person entitled thereto, any money, security or other property which has come into his hands as such attorney; provided, however, that nothing contained in this Article shall be construed to in any way prohibit any attorney from accepting employment to defend any person, partnership, corporation, organization or association accused of violating the provisions of Article 7 of this chapter.

Section 54-78(1) (the beginning section of article 7 referred to in section 54-74(6)) reads as follows:

> (1) A "runner" or "capper" is any person, corporation, partnership or association acting in any manner or in any capacity as an agent for an attorney at law within this State or for any person, partnership, corporation, organization or association which employs, retains or compensates any attorney at law in connection with any judicial proceeding in which such person, partnership, corporation, organization or association is not a party and in which it has no pecuniary right or liability, in the solicitation or procurement of business for such attorney at law or for such person, partnership, corporation, organization or association in connection with any judicial proceedings for which such attorney or such person, partnership, corporation, organization or association is employed, retained or compensated.

Chapter 35 prohibits and provides penalties for the crime of barratry, defined as "the offense of stirring up litigation." This in turn is defined to mean payment of all or part of the expenses of litigation by persons other than plaintiffs unless the instigation is by a person related to the plaintiff or by a person having a personal right or pecuniary interest in the litigation. Numerous exceptions are made, including approved legal aid societies, contingent fee contracts where the attorney does not assume the litigation costs, suits involving the title of real or personal property, collection of taxes, rates or services of common carriers, and criminal matters. In short, the offense was defined as narrowly as possible to include the NAACP and little else.[106] The thrust at the NAACP is indicated also in the penalty provision:

> § 3. A person found guilty of barratry, if an individual, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be punished as provided by law; and if a corporation, may be fined not more than ten thousand dollars. If the corporation be a foreign corporation, its certificate of authority to transact business in Virginia shall be revoked by the State Corporation Commission.

Finally, chapter 36 supplements the anti-barratry provision by making it unlawful for any person or organization lacking a direct interest in litigation to give or receive money or other assistance as an inducement to any person to commence any legal proceeding in Virginia. As a special enforcement device, plaintiffs and their attorneys may be required, on motion of opposing parties or the court, to submit affidavits disavowing violation of the section. Additional penalties for false swearing, including disbarment of Virginia attorneys, are provided.

The legislation is so drawn that, if it should be upheld, the NAACP would be virtually barred from its normal litigation activities in Virginia, which of course was precisely the intent of the drafters. Whatever may be the internal details of the Association's operation at the national and at the local level, there seems no doubt that officers and members of the NAACP have encouraged Negroes to resort to state and federal courts in the constant seeking after the objective of full equality of rights for Negroes. Under its charter, to do less would be dereliction. Undoubtedly, too, all or a portion of the expenses of such litigation are sometimes borne by local branches or by the national office, despite the absence of blood relationship or personal or pecuniary interest in the litigation. Clearly within the intendment of the statute as it is, then, can the NAACP make good its challenge to these acts as a part of the Virginia legislative program enacted in 1956? A qualified affirmative seems appropriate, for the reasons outlined below.

A. Commercialization of the Professional Ideal

There can be little doubt that modern statutes forbidding solicitation of legal business[107] and prohibiting the corporate practice of law,[108] as well as the canons of ethics,[109] are designed to preserve the

---

[106] Perhaps inadvertently, the statute appears to include labor organizations within its strictures.

[107] For a recent discussion of one aspect of this problem, see Note, Legal Ethics —Ambulance Chasing, 30 N.Y.U.L. Rev. 182 (1955).

[108] The practice of law by corporations or by lay individuals is prohibited by statute in many states. Note, 44 Harv. L. Rev. 1114 (1931). See also Drinker, Legal personal relationship between the lawyer and his client, and to protect against commercialization of the practice of law.[110] Thus it has been recognized that it is not only permissible,[111] but may be obligatory,[112] to represent an indigent client. And it has generally been assumed that litigation which was free of any commercial taint, and whose aim was the vindication of a valid public purpose, was not within the prohibitions imposed against champerty, maintenance, and barratry.[113] There may even be an exception where there is no public purpose as such involved, but only vindication of a private right not otherwise subject to protection.[114]

Presumably, organizations such as the NAACP, ACLU, Jehovah's Witnesses, and other organizations[115] which participate in litigation to further their announced policy objectives are motivated by a public purpose within the meaning of the public purpose exception. Even though such organizations have often "stirred up" litigation in the sense of seeking advantageous cases to be used as a basis for challenging existing laws, practices, or precedents, this has always been considered a constitutionally protected right of freedom of expression and free access to the courts. Indeed, much of the constitutional development has been in response to "test" suits sponsored by one or more of these organizations. In this respect the NAACP seems to be in a peculiarly advantageous position because its principal objective at the present time is to seek judicial enforcement of the principle of desegregation enunciated by the Court in relation to public schools, public transportation, and recreation.

The one point at which the NAACP might be vulnerable under the construction ordinarily given these statutes would be if members

---

Ethics 159-69 (1953); Symposium, The "Unauthorized Practice of Law" Controversy, 5 Law & Contemp. Prob. 1-174 (1938); Weihofen, "Practice of Law" by Non-Pecuniary Corporations: A Social Utility, 2 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 119 (1934).

[109] Canon 27 of the ABA Canons of Ethics prohibits solicitation; canon 28 prohibits stirring up litigation; canon 35 prohibits the practice of law by laymen, including corporations; and canon 42 forbids a lawyer from agreeing to pay the expenses of his client's litigation.

[110] See notes 107-109 supra. See also Drinker, Legal Ethics 63-68, 210-20 (1953).

[111] E.g., charitable societies rendering aid to indigents are exempted from canon 35's ban on the intervention of lay intermediaries between lawyer and client.

[112] Canon 4 of the ABA Canons of Ethics. See also Drinker, Legal Ethics 62-63 (1953).

[113] In re Ades, 6 F. Supp. 467 (D. Md. 1934); Gunnels v. Atlanta Bar Ass'n, 191 Ga. 366, 12 S.E.2d 602 (1940). See also American Bar Association, Canons of Professional & Judicial Ethics 308 (1957) (Opinion No. 148, Nov. 16, 1935, approving public offering of legal services in protection of the constitutional rights of those unable to pay for them).

[114] Thallhimer v. Brinckerhoff, 3 Cow. 623, 15 Am. Dec. 308 (N.Y. Ct. of Errors 1824).

[115] Robison, Organizations Promoting Civil Rights and Liberties, 275 Annals 18 (May 1951).

were encouraged to seek legal advice on personal matters from lawyers employed by the Association.[116] However, this is expressly forbidden by section 2(d) of article III of the Constitution and By-Laws for Branches. Accordingly, all the legal work done in behalf of the Association objectives by members of branch legal redress committees, by members of the National Legal Committee, or by the staff of the NAACP Legal Aid and Defense Fund would seem to relate directly to the organization's purpose of promoting racial equality.

Of course, it is true, as pointed out above, that the Virginia legislation seems aimed specifically at these ordinarily unobjectionable practices. Therefore, the Virginia courts may well hesitate to carve out an exception of the kind here suggested. Similarly, since the interpretation of this legislation will be a question of state law, it may be difficult for a federal district court or for the Supreme Court to find that the statute does not prohibit present practices of the NAACP. That being the case, if the practices are to be permitted to continue, attack must be directed at the constitutionality of the legislation.

B. The Constitution and the Practice of Law

Several propositions are clear. In the first place, each state has the authority to fix reasonable standards for the admission to practice in the courts of that state and for the continuance of that practice.[117] In the second place, one of the few privileges and immunities which is accorded constitutional protection is the citizen's right of access to the state and federal courts.[118] Finally, it is axiomatic that every litigant, plaintiff and defendant alike, is entitled to exercise freely his choice of whatever counsel he can procure and pay for. But when a state seeks to exert its admitted right of control over the practice of law in a way that effectively deprives one group of its citizens of the only kind of representation likely to be effective, there may be a denial of a protected privilege and immunity, denial of the equal protection of the laws, and an abridgment of [116] See Hildebrand v. State Bar of Cal., 36 Cal. 2d 504, 225 P.2d 508 (1950). But cf. Ryan v. Pennsylvania R.R., 268 Ill. App. 364 (1932).

---

[117] Brooks v. Laws, 208 F.2d 18 (D.C. Cir. 1953); Divine v. Watauga Hosp., 137 F. Supp. 628, 632 (M.D.N.C. 1956); Application of N.Y. County Lawyers Ass'n, 4 Misc. 2d 728, 156 N.Y.S.2d 651, 655 (Sup. Ct. 1956). Cf. In re Summers, 325 U.S. 561 (1945). See also Jackson, Bar Examinations and Requirements for Admission to the Bar (1952).

[118] Section 1 of the fourteenth amendment provides that "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States . . . ." Although the clause was early given a restrictive interpretation in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (83 U.S.) 36, 74 (1873), the Court recognized that access to the courts of justice in the several states is a privilege and immunity of national citizenship. Id. at 79.

freedom of speech and assembly. Thus, where the prevailing climate of opinion discourages members of a class from independent assertion of their constitutionally protected rights, it perhaps follows that a nonprofit organization dedicated to preservation of those rights should be immunized against this kind of harassment. This seems particularly justifiable when the complained-of state action is directed in discriminatory fashion against a single organization and an identifiable class of citizens whom that organization serves. Refined though the device may be, shielded though it is under the respectable mantle of regulation of the practice of law, the discriminatory purpose cannot be concealed. This bears every mark of unfairness which calls for its elimination as a violation of equal protection and an intrusion upon first amendment freedoms.

VI

Intimidation by Investigation

Of the several Southern states which have authorized investigations of organizations "which encourage and promote litigation relating to racial activities,"[119] Virginia is again the leader whose example other states will assuredly follow if the scheme proves successful in its objective of harassment of the NAACP. Chapter 34 of the Virginia legislation provides for the creation of a joint legislative committee to study > the administration and enforcement of those laws relating to champerty, maintenance, barratry, running and capping and other offenses of any other nature relating to the promotion or support of litigation by persons who are not parties thereto.

In addition to the powers regularly conferred upon legislative committees of the General Assembly this committee is empowered to administer oaths, examine witnesses, employ counsel, and compel attendance of witnesses or production of documents.

Chapter 37 establishes a legislative committee > authorized to make a thorough investigation of the activities of corporations, organizations, associations and other like groups which seek to influence, encourage or promote litigation relating to racial activities in this State.

This committee, too, is given broad investigative authority, the stated purpose being to consider the necessity for legislation and to determine "the effect which integration or the threat of integration could have on . . . the general welfare of the State. . . ."

The apparent, albeit unstated, premise underlying these investigative programs is an intent to force disclosures relating to the NAACP and its members that will establish violation of the statutory package; and if membership lists and financial statements are not made public pursuant to the other statutory requirements, here then is another way to accomplish the same objective. Even if the statute is not unconstitutional on its face, it seems almost certain that any committee investigation conducted in furtherance of the legislative intention would run into several constitutional obstacles. If, for example, the committee demands membership lists or names of contributors, the same objections can be made as described above in connection with the registration statute.[120] This conclusion is reinforced in connection with refusals to answer the improper questions of a state legislative investigating committee by the case of Sweezy v. New Hampshire.[121] Although that case involved a committee attempt to require disclosure of past associations of a political nature, that problem is clearly analogous to the right to associate with an organization dedicated to the preservation of approved social ideals. Indeed, if anything, the case for the NAACP is stronger. Political associations of a subversive character have on occasion been subjected to limitation in the exercise of first amendment rights;[122] but it seems unthinkable that an organization devoted to the promotion of racial equality—a Supreme Court-endorsed objective—would ever be restrained from the free exercise of its right of association.

---

119 The language quoted is from the preamble to chapter 37 of the 1956 laws of the Virginia General Assembly. See also id. c. 34.

VII

Summary and Prospectus

The legislative, judicial, and executive action designed for the harassment, or worse, of the NAACP is remarkably ingenious. Logic tells one that an organization truly dedicated to the promotion of equality should not be reluctant to disclose its purpose, members, financial structure, or way of doing business. Similarly, having nothing to hide, such an organization should arguably welcome investigation rather than shun it. And finally, no respectable lawyer or organization devoted to these public-service ideals would knowingly become involved in the historically nefarious practices associated with champerty, maintenance, and barratry.

---

[120] It is probable that individuals could plead the privilege against self-incrimination to avoid identifying themselves with the NAACP (because its activities are tainted with criminality under the Virginia statute). But it seems almost unthinkable that thoughtful members of the Association would afford an investigating committee such an opportunity for damaging publicity.

[121] 354 U.S. 234 (1957).

[122] E.g., Dennis v. United States, 341 U.S. 494 (1951); American Communications Ass'n v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382 (1950).

The ring of plausibility is there. But behind the facade the discriminatory purpose is all too evident. The Virginia legislation, for example, was part of a program designed to implement Governor Stanley's announced policy of "unyielding resistance" to the decision in the School Segregation Cases.[123] To whatever extent a single act does not on its face manifest discriminatory aims, the package clearly demonstrates the pattern. Thus the NAACP seems to have exercised sound judgment in seeking a declaratory judgment as to the invalidity of the entire scheme in a single suit before a three-judge federal district court. If the association is successful in invalidating this legislative program, other legislation in other states, in some cases identical and nowhere more skillfully drawn, should similarly be held unconstitutional. As the Supreme Court has stated, it will nullify "sophisticated as well as simple-minded modes of discrimination."[124]

---

[123] Southern School News, Oct. 1956, p. 16, col. 1. The governor's forthright admission should prove useful to demonstrate the discriminatory purpose of the legislation. Davis v. Schnell, 81 F. Supp. 872 (S.D. Ala.), aff'd, 336 U.S. 933 (1949). Southern political leaders are often caught in a difficult dilemma. In order to satisfy the presumed desire of their constituents for a strong anti-integration stand, it may be necessary to make public pronouncements liable to prove the constitutional undoing of the proposed program.

[124] Lane v. Wilson, 307 U.S. 268, 275 (1939).

JAN 2 1959 BLACK DISPATCH

Civil Liberties Union Seeking Stronger Rights Legislation

NEW YORK. — The American Civil Liberties Union called on the new congress to give "paramount attention" to legislation increasing the federal government's power to initiate "preventive" non-criminal legal action in defense of all civil rights. The 197 civil rights law allows the government to act only in cases where the right to vote has been violated.

The Union's statement was made in a 73-page report on the civil liberties record of the 85th Congress released as a special publication on Bill of Rights Day. December 15 was the 167th anniversary of the final adoption of the Bill of Rights. The report was prepared by the Union's Washington, D. C. office, headed by Irving Ferman.

The appeal to the incoming 86th Congress to enlarge the Federal government's power to enforce civil rights noted that the last Congress did pass the first civil rights legislation in 82 years "guaranteeing principally the right to vote embodied in the Fifteenth Amendment."

"The Federal Civil Rights Act of 1957," the report said, "although not broad enough to prevent the tragedy of Little Rock, did aid significantly the continuing struggle to guarantee Negroes and other minority groups equal protection of the law. However, there is still much to be done in establishing further bases for needed federal action."

The ACLU urged that a section deleted from the 1957 measure which would allow the Justice Department to intervene in school desegregation and other civil rights cases as well as voting cases be speedily enacted.

In addition to the civil rights comment, two other broad observations were made of the 85th Congress' record:

(1) A major campaign conducted by a coalition of anti-civil rights and other legislators against the Supreme Court was repelled only by the narrowest margin.

(2) "The premise underlying our security system, namely, that negative protection can safeguard our superior strength," was not fully revelation despite the disturbing revelation of Communist Russia's scientific progress.

In an introduction to the report, ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin declared that the attack on the Supreme Court was "more disturbing because the debate often misrepresented the actual holdings of the court in specific cases," adding that there is "great need for increased public understanding of what those decisions were, and what they were not."

Asserting that the Congressional offensive was a direct challenge to the independence of the Judiciary, Malin said that the anti-court drive was turned back only after a "spirited counter-offensive" and that further attacks in the new Congress are to be expected.

Malin's analysis of the 85th Congress' attitude toward national security programs "derived from the concept of the barricade. The fence of security, we thought, could barricade our military, industrial and scientific superiority against all enemies. To maintain this guard a bureaucracy has been established which now has such a vested interest in maintaining this system that we have created a Maginot line psychology."

Urging that "scrupulous observance of our constitutional guarantees" is the best positive protection for our security, the ACLU director commented that the 85th Congress did little to end "obsessive and dangerous preoccupation with old methods of security." He concluded that the 86th Congress should make an honest appraisal of past excesses and judgments in the security system.

The report covers 14 legislative areas taken up by the 85th Congress, including access to government information, passport controls, internal union democracy, the Senate filibuster rule, amendment of the Smith Act and censorship problems involved in new curbs on obscene material. A limited number of copies are available at the national ACLU office, 170 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

JOHNSON, ROGERS, COURT GET PRAISE

Chatt. Times

Report of Civil Liberties Union Optimistic on Outlook for 1959

1-2-59

NEW YORK (AP)—The American Civil Liberties Union Thursday praised the "parliamentary genius" of Democratic Sen. Lyndon Johnson, the leadership of Republican Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers, and the courage of the Supreme Court.

In its 38th annual report, released Thursday, the union added up some gains and losses of the past year, outlined some of the problems likely to come up in 1959, and found the current climate for civil liberties definitely improved.

The new Congress was pictured by the union as offering far less danger to free speech and due process of law than the old Congress, and promising perhaps even some gains.

The report found a reasonable possibility that the new Congress would act to curb the filibuster, but said this would be merely a preliminary step in the drive for broader civil rights legislation.

ACLU Executive Director Patrick Murphy Malin said in the introduction to the report that the improved climate for civil liberties was noted even before the election—when Congress failed to pass a number of bills aimed at curbing the Supreme Court.

"This happy outcome," commented Malin, "was due in great part to the parliamentary genius of Sen. Lyndon Johnson. . . ." Johnson is the Democratic majority leader.

Court 'Undaunted'

The report said the Supreme Court was undaunted by the bills aimed at it or by the narrow margin of their defeat. The court was praised for standing firm on school integration.

Atty. Gen. Rogers was lauded for undertaking "the indispensable task of moral and political leadership" on the Little Rock issue "after four years of costly administration neglect."

The report found these civil liberties problems among those which should be faced during the new year:

Censorship — Both government restriction of information ("press releases and favoristic leaks are not enough. . .") and "censorship by boycott" of private religious and non-religious organizations.

Wiretapping—Termed by the report an invasion of privacy despite legal curbs on evidence obtained by bugging.

"The distortion of fair trial"—By pre-trial publicity and the "cruel slap-dash treatment of juvenile delinquents and the mentally ill" were regarded as "frightening problems."

Civil Liberties 1959

The New Abolitionists

A torrent of criticism has been directed against the House Committee on Un-American Activities during the long years of its inquisitorial reign, but efforts to abolish it have been sporadic. Representative James Roosevelt (D., Calif.) has promised that, when the new Congress convenes, he will propose an amendment to the rules which would abolish the committee. This latest effort at abolition is infused with energy and imagination. Last summer the Southern California Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, which has been opposing the committee and its activities for twenty years, decided that Congress should be asked to abolish it. When the committee visited Los Angeles early in September, on its annual scalp-hunting foray, it was met with full-page ads of protest in the local press, sponsored by the ACLU, and signed by a distinguished group of citizens. For the first time in this happiest of all its happy hunting grounds the committee was forced into a defensive position. The hearings were held in closed session, the testimony was not revealed to the purpose, it should be abolished.

The NATION

Orig. Tribune 1/3/59

Civil Liberties Union Sees Gains

NEW YORK (UPI) — The American civil Liberties Union said on Friday some gains may "perhaps" be made in the new Congress in the areas of free speech and due process of law but that only a preliminary victory appeared in sight in the fight for Negro equality.

In an introduction to the 39th annual ACLU report, Executive Director Patrick Murphy Malin said that "men have once again this year been more successful in conquering outer space than in redeeming inner space: They have done better with satellites and trans-polar submarines than with themselves."

Malin said the ACLU could "justifiably feel a bit uplifted by the temper of the times" in the field of civil rights during the past year.

"Even before the elections," Malin said, "Congress had negatively aided the cause of civil liberties, by not passing a parcel of restrictive bills - notably those aimed at the Supreme Court because of its recent decisions upholding free speech, due process and equal protection of the laws."

He said the 86th Congress, which convenes next Wednesday, "promises far less danger to free speech and due process than the old, perhaps even some positive gains; but in the area of Negro equality, the only victory which seems reasonably probable is a preliminary one - curbing the filibuster."

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD
JAN 3 1959

Orig. Tribune 1/3/59

Braden Contempt Trial Scheduled For Monday

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD JAN 17 1959

Carl Braden

The trial of Carl Braden, who will face a federal court hearing on charges brought by the House Un-American Activities Committee, is scheduled to convene here Monday, Jan. 10.

Braden, field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., was indicted on a contempt of Congress citation after he stood on what he called his constitutional rights in refusing to answer questions put to him by a subcommittee on Un-American Activities Committee investigating Communist infiltration in the South.

Braden was cited for contempt of Congress after he refused to answer certain questions regarding activities of the SCEF at the Committee hearing in Atlanta during the past summer.

Set for trial the same day along with Braden is Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles, Calif., who also refused to answer certain questions at the same Committee hearing this past summer.

The American Civil Liberties Union intervened in the case of Wilkinson and asked that the indictment against him be dismissed on grounds that the Un-American Activities Committee is an unconstitutional body.

U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan refused Monday to consider an attack on the constitutionality of the House Committee and later set the trial date for Monday, Jan. 19.

At the summer hearing, Braden refused to answer some of the questions regarding his asscoiations and alleged association and some questions about SCEF board meetings on grounds that they violated his rights under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

(Continued on Page 5, Col. 5)

Braden Contempt

(Continued from Page One)

The core of Braden's resistance to the questioning was said to have been a belief that the Un-American Committee or any governmental agency had no right to ask a private citizen questions about his beliefs, associations and his activities as a citizen.

The Committee that ruled Braden in contempt came to Atlanta over the protest of approximately 200 Southern Negro leaders who were quoted as saying they foresaw that "the real purpose of the investigation would be to smear the integration movement" and those working in it as "subversives."

Carl Braden 1959

Contempt Trial Is Opened Here

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Civil Rts

By JOHN BRITTON JAN 21 1959

The first leg of a trial to determine if two men were actually in contempt of Congress when they refused to answer certain questions asked by a subcommittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities last summer opened Tuesday afternoon and is scheduled to continue today at 9:30 a. m.

The first to face the 12 man federal court jury was Frank Wilkinson, executive secretary of the Citizen's Committee to Preserve American Freedoms, of Los Angeles, California.

Wilkinson ,along with Carl Braden, field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, was indicted by a federal Grand Jury last summer after they refused to answer questions regarding their present and past political ties.

Heading a government trial prosecutions team was Bob Sparks who said in his opening argument to the jury that the government intends to prove Wilkinson's refusal to answer the Committee's questions was willful and deliberate.

Sparks further declared he and his trial associate, U. S. Attorney Ralph Ivey, will prove Wilkinson knew his refusal to answer the Congressional sub - Committee's questions would obstruct the groups announced purpose.

Sparks then reminded the jury that the Committee had announced that it sought to destroy the "Communist colonization and infiltration of textile and other basic Southern industries."

The United States Attorney warned the jury, however, that the only consideration to be weighed in this hearing is whether Wilkinson actually knew his answers this summer were pertinent to the purpose of the committee and if the defendant refused to answer deliberately. He told the jury the question of Wilkinson's alleged political ties was of no interest.

(Continued on Page 3, Col. 8)

Contempt Trial

(Continued from Page One)

Sparks promised that his part of the trial proceeding would be very short. He noted that he intended to present only two witnesses. The prosecution put on the ness stand the tenotype reporter who served at the July hearing here in Atlanta and Richard Aarons, staff director for the Committee on Un-American Activities for the U. S. House of Representatives.

The stenotypist was used exclusively by the prosecution to positively swear to the validity of copies of transcrpits showing the testimony of Wilkinson when he refused to answer the Committee's questions.

Aarons took the witness stand to identify certain documents issued by agents of the federal government who were responsible for the contempt citations being issued against Wilkinson and Braden.

Neither man was cross examined by Wilkinson's attorney, Rowland Watts, of Maryland, who is the general counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union. The ACLU is providing the legal representation for this case which they term "a test of the Constitutionality of the Mandate of the House Committee on Un-American Activities."

The trial of Wilkinson is scheduled to resume today at 9:30 a. m. Immediately following his trial, presiding Judge Boyd Sloan has said he will hear a case involving similar charges against Carl Braden.

The Jury, which included one Negro, Jack Grier, of Locust Grove, Ga., was instructed by Judge Sloan to refuse to either discuss the case with anyone, read newspaper accounts of the proceedings, or listen to news broadcasts over other communications media.

WILKINSON GUILTY OF CONTEMPT, JURY SAYS

Civil Liberties

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

JAN 22 1959

By JOHN BRITTON

After a concise final argument on the legal and technical points of law involved in a contempt case by Defense Attorney Rowland Watts, a 12-man federal jury returned a verdict of guilty against Frank Wilkinson on charges that he was in contempt of Congress this past summer.

The jury deliberated approximately one hour before returning the guilty verdict against Wilkinson, who was indicted last summer by a federal Grand Jury on charges that he had been in contempt of Congress when he refused to answer certain questions put to him by a sub-committee of the House Committee on Un-American Activites meeting in Atlanta last July.

Defense attorney Watts, general counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, indicated in a conversation after the jury's decision that the verdict brought no particular surprise to him, however. He added that a motion for a new trial will be made before presiding Judge Boyd Sloan today at 2 p.m.

Watts had asked the judge at the Monday arraignment of the Wilkinson case that the case be heard without a jury, however, Judge Sloan overruled that motion saying he never tries a criminal case without a jury. It was noted, however, during the trial that the jury was excluded from the courtroom on many occasions when attorneys on both sides argued technical points of law.

Watts indicated he might attempt several maneuvers to get a new trial or to delay the expected sentencing of Wilkinson. Watts pointed out, as he did at the Monday arraignment, that a similar contempt case is pending decision in the U.S. Supreme Court.

The attorney said he has hopes that Judge Sloan may allow a continuance of bond if he pronounces sentence today in order to await the decision of the Supreme Court in the Barenblatt case. The decision in that case is expected sometimes near February 24.

(Continued on Page 6, Col. 5)

Wilkinson Guilty

(Continued from Page One)

Watts said the decision of the Supreme Court may have a direct bearing on the Wilkinson case and the finding of facts in the Supreme Court case may provide a basis for an appeal in the local case at a later date.

In his final argument, Watts told the jury that one of the basis for his defense was the challenge of the constitutionality of the mandate setting up the Un-American Activities Committee. Another argument was that the question the committee asked Wilkinson at the July hearing regarding his political associations was not pertinent to the group's announced purpose.

The defense attorney also declared it was possible that the subcommittee may have failed to make clear to Wilkinson the pertinence his answer might have on the purpose of the group in "seeking out Communist activity in the textile industries and other basic industries in the South."

Watts told the jury the indictment returned against his client by the Grand Jury this summer failed to allege any crime against the government. This was one of the reasons Watts contended that Wilkinson should be acquitted.

It is expected that Watts will, during his motion for a new trial at 2 p.m. today, ask the judge for a new trial and an arrest of judgement, ask for a continuance of bail pending an appeal and make a motion for an extension of time before filing an appeal pending the decision of the Supreme Court in the Barenblatt case.

Meanwhile, a battery of recognized legal brains are scheduled to take the courtroom floor early today in defense of Carl Braden who is also accused of being in contempt of Congress. He also refused to answer certain questions asked by the subcommittee this summer regarding his political affiliations, and his activities with the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.

The jury decision against Wilkinson does not automatically indicate a like judgement will be returned against Braden, according to the indicted man's lawyers, however, they added they are also prepared to make an appeal to a higher court if the need arises.

The two contempt trials are thought by courthouse officials to be the first of their kind to be heard in a Georgia courtroom in the history of the state. U.S. Attorney Bob Sparks was smiling broadly after the decision in the Wilkinson case, however, his only statement to the press was that he "thought the evidence presented warranted the jury's verdict."

JAN 21 1959

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Contempt Of Congress Trial Opens

The trial of a Los Angeles, Calif., man charged with contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions of a House Un-American Activities subcommittee, began Tuesday in U.S. District Court here.

Frank Wilkinson had requested a non-jury trial, but Federal Judge Boyd Sloan ruled for a jury. The jury, including one Negro, was selected Tuesday afternoon.

RECORDER CALLED

Among the first witnesses called by J. Robert Sparks, assistant U.S. district attorney, was Frank A. Smonskey Jr., of Alexandria, Va., stenotype recorder of the subcommittee's proceedings here last July.

Also put on the stand late Tuesday was Richard Arens of Washington, D.C., staff director of the House committee.

Defense counsel Rowland Watts conceded that Wilkinson had refused to tell the subcommittee at its hearing whether or not he was a Communist.

At the same time, Watts indicated he will raise questions during the trial regarding the subcommittee's authority to conduct inquiries into Communist activity in the South.

FOUGHT SIX YEARS

In an interview, Wilkinson said he has spent six years fighting the House UnAmerican Activities Committee.

He identified himself as secretary of the Citizens Committee to Preserve American Freedoms.

CONTEMPT TRIALS OPEN IN ATLANTA

Frank Wilkinson Is First to Face Jury in Refusal to Answer U.S. Probers

1-21-59

ATLANTA (AP)—A man who says he has spent six years fighting the House Un-American Activities Committee went on trial in U.S. district court Tuesday for refusing to tell a subcommittee whether he was a Communist.

He is Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles, one of two men indicted on charges of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions July 30 at a subcommittee hearing into Communist activity in the South.

The other is Carl Braden of Louisville, Ky., whose trial is scheduled to follow Wilkinson's.

Wilkinson identified himself to newsmen as secretary of the Citizens Committee to Preserve American Freedoms. He said he formerly was director of the Los Angeles City Housing Authority but quit in 1952 to combat the Un-American Activities Committee as contrary to the freedoms guaranteed in the First Amendment to the Constitution.

He and his attorney, Rowland Watts, staff counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, indicated that if he is convicted they intend to take the battle against the committee on to the Supreme Court.

They conceded in court that Wilkinson refused to tell the subcommittee whether he then was a Communist but declared that he was within his rights. They contend that not only was the committee pursuing an unconstitutional inquiry but that, even so, the question was not pertinent.

Persecution Claimed

Braden and his attorneys indicated to reporters that they planned a slightly different defense. He is a field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund Inc., a bi-racial integrationist group, and he claims that he is being persecuted for his racial stand.

Braden argued that of six counts of an indictment against his only one dealt with a question of whether he was a Communist, the others with questions about his racial activity.

He charged that the Department of Justice in prosecuting him is "harrassing integrationists with its left hand while claiming to support integration with its right hand."

Richard Arens, staff director of the House Un-American Activities Committee, came from Washington to testify against Wilkinson and Braden. At Wilkinson's trial, he identified numerous congressional and committee records, several of which were entered in the absence of the jury and presumably were intended for the court file in the event of an appeal.

Arens was still on the stand when court recessed for the day.

Wilkinson had asked for a non-jury trial but Judge Boyd Sloan decided he should be tried by a jury. A Negro farmer was included in the jury which was selected in a matter of minutes.

Asst. U.S. Atty. J. Roberts Sparks told the jurors the trial issue is not whether Wilkinson is a Communist but whether he is in contempt of Congress, which created the Un-American Activities Committee and delegated its powers. He said the government intends to prove the defendant is wilfully in contempt.

One of Braden's attorneys is a Negro bishop in the AME Zion Church, the Rt. Rev. C. Ewbank Tucker of Louisville, Ky.

Civil Liberties

Braden Believed a Commie, Witness Tells U.S. Jury Here

House Unit's Director Testifies On Data That Led to Subpoena

A government witness said Thursday in Federal Court here the defendant in a contempt of Congress trial had been subpoenaed before a House subcommittee in Atlanta on information he was a Communist.

Richard Arens, staff director for the House Committee on un-American Activities, opened the case against Carl Braden, 44, of Louisville, Ky., with testimony about Braden's alleged Communist activities.

"It was our information that Mr. Braden was a member of the Communist Party. That he was going over the Southland . . . doing Communist work," Mr. Arens said.

The questions about Braden's alleged Communist activities were put to Mr. Arens by Asst. Dist. Atty. J. Robert Sparks, as the government sought its second conviction for contempt of Congress here.

* * *

CARL BRADEN and Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles, Calif., were both indicted on charges of contempt of Congress by an Atlanta Federal Grand Jury here Dec. 2.

Both men were charged with refusing to answer questions of a House subcommittee on un-American activities meeting in Atlanta July 30.

Wilkinson, 44, was found guilty Wednesday.

The jury, deliberating for 50 minutes late Wednesday afternoon, returned a verdict of guilty on a one-count indictment charging Wilkinson with refusing to answer the question: "Are you now a member of the Communist party?"

* * *

Mr. Arens testified Wednesday that the House subcommittee had information Wilkinson had been sent into the South to "spearhead" Communist infiltration here. This was one reason Wilkinson was called before the subcommittee meeting in Atlanta July 30, Mr. Arens said.

* * *

DEFENSE attorney Rowland Watts of Baltimore, Md., said he would appeal the case for Wilkinson, who faces a possible maximum penalty of 12 months' imprisonment and $1,000 fine.

Braden And Wilkinson Cases Reset To Today

The federal trials involving two men who were cited during the past summer for contempt of Congress when they refused on Constitutional grounds to answer questions of a Congressional committee were re-scheduled for this morning.

The trials of Carl Braden and Frank Wilkinson, originally scheduled for hearing Monday morning, was re-set from Monday until this morning when the pressure of other criminal matters forced the contempt case off the Monday calendar, according to a U. S. Attorney.

Infomation received from the U. S. Attorney's office indicated that Wilkinson's trial will begin at 9:30 a. m., today while a separate hearing on Braden's case is scheduled immediately following the conclusion of the Wilkinson proceedings.

HELD IN CONTEMPT

Both men were held in contempt of Congress this past summer when they refused to answer certain questions asked of them by the House Un-American Activities Committee on grounds that the inquiries violated their rights under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The early summer hearing was initiated by the Congressional committee for what they announced as an effort to root out Communist infiltration in the South.

The House Committee that ruled Braden and Wilkinson in contempt came to Atlanta over the protest of approximately 200 Southern Negro leaders who were quoted as saying they foresaw that "the real purpose of the investigation would be to smear the integration movement" and those working in it as "subversives."

Wilkinson, of Los Angeles, California, and Braden, field secretary of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., with an office in Atlanta, are scheduled to come under the jurisdiction of District Judge Boyd Sloan.

Civil Liberties

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

JAN 20 1959

'GUILTY' VERDICT FOR CARL BRADEN

Chatt. Times 1-23-59

ATLANTA (AP)—A U.S. District Court jury Thursday convicted Carl Braden, 44, of Louisville, Ky., of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions of a House Un-American Activities subcommittee investigating communism in the South.

The jury required only 40 minutes to reach its verdict on an indictment charging Braden with failure to answer six questions at a subcommittee hearing in Atlanta last summer.

Judge Boyd Sloan said he would pass sentence as soon as he receives a probation officer's report on Braden. The defense asked that sentence be deferred until the U.S. Supreme Court decides a somewhat similar case now pending.

Sloan said that he would give consideration to this request but thought that the defense might better achieve its purpose by some other course such as a motion for a new trial. Attorney John M. Coe of Pensacola, Fla., said that such a motion is contemplated.

Braden was the second defendant to be convicted in as many days for balking at subcommittee questions in Atlanta. The other was Frank Wilkinson, also 44, of Los Angeles.

Civil Liberties 1959

Move To Abolish Un-American Activities Committee Opposed

By EDDIE WILLIAMS

WASHINGTON — (SNS) — House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D.-Texas) and a group of Republicans last week yanked on the congressional reigns in an attempt to halt a bill sponsored by Rep. James Roosevelt (D.-Calif.) to abolish the House Un-American Activities Committee and transfer its jurisdiction to the Judiciary Committee.

Rep. Roosevelt said his proposal is based on the charge that the congressional mandate of the nine-member standing committee is vague, thus allowing it to infringe on "constitutional guarantees of individual freedom."

Since introducing the bill, Mr. Roosevelt has stood alone in defending it, but some Capitol observers believe he has the silent backing of some one hundred or more Congressmen who at one time or another have voiced disapproval of the committee and who at present are afraid to speak out for fear of political consequences.

Political consequences are unavoidably tied up in any proposal to rid the nation of an organization or group constituted and dedicated to the suppression of communist activities. This is the avowed goal of HUAC.

HAND-OFF ATTITUDE

Despite the fact that the Roosevelt proposal specifically points out the need for investigation of subversion and says that the Judiciary Committee is best qualified to do this, there is still a general hands-off attitude toward the bill.

In all sections of the country sentiment over the proposal is gradually shaping up into two theo-

(Continued on Page 2, Col. 1)

JAN 23 1959
ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Civil Liberties

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD

Move To

(Continued from Page One)

ries. One is that HUAC does more harm than good and the second is just the opposite.

Opposition to the proposal which is now in the hands of the powerful Rules Committee, has been voiced on the House floor by members of HUAC, including the committee chairman, Francis E. Walter (D., Pa.).

Earlier in the session Mr. Walter sought to expand the jurisdiction of his committee by having it take over matters concerning immigration. However, Speaker Rayburn quickly put an end to this idea with a flat "no." Some political observers feel this was a compromising "no." A few days later Mr. Rayburn gave his dreaded "kiss of death" to the Roosevelt proposal. It may have been that Rayburn promised Walter he would spare the life of his committee, providing he did not try to take over immigration matters.

Meanwhile, the bill is pending before the Rules Committee whose chairman, Rep. Howard Smith of Virginia, has "assured" Mr. Roosevelt that the measure will be considered. Rayburn warned that if the bill is not killed in the committee, it will be defeated on the floor, apparently under his generalship. He obviously spoke for a large segment of Democrats, and a strong GOP bloc spoke for itself in unanimously agreeing to oppose the bill.

SECURITY QUESTION

Regardless of the future of the proposal, it has raised some questions concerning the internal security program. They will have to be answered some time. The big questions are: Is the mandate of the committee so vague as to hamper its operation? and, Just what is the meaning of un-American?

The U.S. Supreme Court raised the latter question in its Watkins Decision which is cited by Roosevelt as a challenge to Congress to do something about HUAC. The decision also held that a "person is entitled to have knowledge of the subject to which the interrogation is deemed pertinent . . . . ." The committee says its questions are aimed at exposing communist infiltration and at providing it with a sound basis for proposing anti-subversive legislation.

Pending before the Supreme Court is the Barenblatt case which is similar to the Watkins case and which may throw more light on the court's interpretation of the committee's role.

Mr. Roosevelt, son of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, last week told his colleagues, "we cannot continue to ignore or evade the issue (raised by the court) without running the risk of doing great

PRISON SENTENCE GIVEN WILKINSON

Chett. Times — 1-24-59

ATLANTA (AP)—Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles Friday was sentenced to 12 months for contempt of Congress, but was released in $1,000 bond after his attorney moved for a new trial.

U.S. District Judge Boyd Sloan said he will rule later on the new trial motion.

Wilkinson was convicted Wednesday of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions of a House Un-American Activities subcommittee at an Atlanta hearing July 30. One of the questions was whether the 44-year-old Californian is a Communist.

Carl Braden, 44, former Louisville, Ky., newspaperman, also was convicted of contempt as a result of the subcommittee probe into Communism in the South. Braden, field secretary for the Southern Conference Educational Fund, will be sentenced next month.

Civil Liberties 1959

BRADEN IS SENTENCED TO YEAR ON CONTEMPT

Chatt. Times 2-4-59

© New York Times News Service

ATLANTA (AP)—Carl Braden, Louisville, Ky., integration advocate, was sentenced Monday to 12 months for contempt of Congress.

The contempt charge was made after Braden refused to answer questions of a House Un-American Activities subcommittee here last July. Braden was convicted in U.S. district court here Jan. 21.

Federal Judge Boyd Sloan set Braden's bond at $1,000 pending a motion by his attorney for a new trial.

Frank Wilkinson of Los Angeles was given a similar sentence for contempt of the committee. He is secretary of the Citizens Committee to Preserve American Freedom.

Braden is field secretary for the Southern Conference Educational Fund. He accused the committee of using its position to harass people working for integration.

Civil Liberties

Law Enf. 1959

Civil Liberties

MAR 10 1959
NEW YORK TIMES

Robeson in Britain for 'Othello'

LONDON, March 9 (Reuters) —Paul Robeson arrived by air today from Moscow after having recovered from an illness in the Kremlin hospital. The 60-year-old American Negro singer will play the title role in "Othello" at the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon.

Civil Liberties Laws

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD
MAR 18 1959

80 Senators, 75 Representatives File Rights Bills

WASHINGTON, D. C. — U. S. Senator Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D.-Mo.), Chairman of the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, Monday issued a memorandum containing a list of legislation introduced during the first two months of the 86th Congress affecting civil liberties of the American people in one way or another.

"Because of our recognized interest in due process of law and equal protection of the laws, the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee receives numerous telephone calls and other inquiries every day from other Congressional offices, members of the press corps in Washington, and the public, asking whether legislation has been introduced in this Congress on a certain civil liberties issue, by whom, on what date, and to which Committee it has been referred," said Senator Hennings.

"Therefore," said the Subcommittee Chairman, "This list has been prepared, covering legislation introduced in the first two months of 1959, to provide a ready reference in answering such inquiries."

MANY FORMS INCLUDED

Senator Hennings went on to point out that the forms of the legislation include: resolutions expressing the sense or understanding of Congress; amendments to the Constitution of the United States; amendments to the Federal Criminal Code; authorization for civil remedies by the Government in certain cases; and authrization for other Government programs.

Among the subjects covered are: protection of Federal voting rights; public school desegregation; posting of voting information in post offices; Federal action concerning bombings of schools and places of religious worship; restatement of Congressional intention in various statutory provisions; censorship; civil rights; government employees and loyalty-security matters; newsmen and sources of information; freedom of information; service of warrants by military personnel; wire-tapping; judicial review of deportation orders; and powers of the Supreme Court to review lower court decisions.

Of course, not every bill has been further referred to a subcommittee for hearings. But to date the Senate Constitutional Rights Subcommittee has been assigned these bills: S. 435, S. 456, S. 499, S. 810, S. 957, S. 969, S. 1034, and commenced public hearings thereon Wednesday morning, March 18, in Room 318 (the Caucus Room), Old Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MAR 18 1959

Civil Liberty

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

New Trials Denied to 2 In Contempt

Carl Braden, 44, of Louisville, Ky., and Frank Wilkinson, 44, of Los Angeles, convicted on contempt of Congress charges, have been denied new trials in U.S. District Court here.

The two were convicted and sentenced to one year in prison for failing to answer questions of a House un-American activities subcommittee here in July.

Both are under appeal bonds.

Wilkinson's attorney had asked for a new trial. Braden's counsel sought a new trial and made a motion to arrest judgment on the verdict. Both of Braden's motions were denied by Judge Boyd Sloan.

Civil Liberties - 1959

A Communication

Christ. Cent.
2-7-62
Anti-Comm. Crusade

Contra the Schwarz Crusade

A Statement Addressed to Certain Church and Synagogue Groups in Northern California and Nevada

In presenting this statement on the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, we who are signatories to it would emphasize that we are acting as individuals. Our denominations have not taken action in this matter, and we are not committing them through our action to any specific position.

Indeed, the statement is addressed to the congregations of our church and synagogue groups and has already been mailed by us to them. Its major intent is to share with them our convictions on the crusade in order that they may take these convictions into account as they determine their own attitudes. Its release to the press is simply for public information. . . . The itemization of statements or attitudes which we find objectionable is not meant to be comprehensive but simply to illustrate the nature of our concern. We recognize that the documentation in a number of instances is from secondary sources, but we have discovered no reasons to doubt either their accuracy or their implications. And certainly our unhappiness with the crusade is not dependent upon any one of them or even upon any combination of them but rests fundamentally upon an approach to the whole problem of communism and national policy of which they are but examples.

It should not be necessary in this connection for us to state the obvious and to deny any "softness toward communism" on our part. That we are Christian and Jewish clergymen entrusted by our particular groups with administrative responsibilities of a significant nature should make any suspicion of that impossible for anyone to hold. But just so that there can be no doubt whatever in anyone's mind at this point, we reaffirm here our complete and utter opposition to and abhorrence of communism in any form and anywhere. We have taken and will continue to take stands at many points that seem to us wise and helpful in order to make unalterably clear that opposition. The atheism, the carelessness of individual life and aspirations, the ruthlessness in the attainment of objectives, the destruction of democratic freedoms which characterize communism everywhere would inevitably make it impossible for us to do otherwise than to oppose it. But this opposition does not commit us to ways of fighting communism which we are persuaded will be both ineffectual and damaging to the cause of free men and the maintenance of peace in the world.

ROBERT D. BULKEY.

THE STATEMENT

✦ NO ONE can quarrel with the basic premise of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade—namely, that Americans need to be aware of the true nature of the communist threat, as well as of their own American heritage. However, it is certainly permissible to question the degree to which an organization carries out its own aims; and the type of "education" provided by the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade has seemed of dubious value to many commentators and positively harmful to others.

Such magazines as Time, Life, the Reporter, the Nation, Harper's, the Progressive, Newsweek, and The Christian Century have, in articles devoted to the spread of right-wing extremism, characterized Dr. Frederick C. Schwarz and his organization as belonging to this school of thought. Locally, the San Francisco Chronicle, in its editorial pages, has made the same point. Leaders of both major parties, including Pres. Kennedy and former Pres. Eisenhower, have warned us of the dangers inherent in this point of view and in its widespread acceptance. In short, it would seem that the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade has been guilty of using anticommunist motivations to promote specific attitudes which are characteristic of one political point of view. It is very difficult to identify any particular programs with the crusade itself, but most of the regular faculty members of the crusade are on record as to the views they hold. Among those which seem to us to be most questionable are the following:

1. Cleon Skousen has advocated United States withdrawal from the United Nations unless the U.N. charter is rewritten in such a way as to make it an instrument of American policy.[1]

2. Walter Judd and W. P. Strube, Jr., have called for an end to cultural exchanges, and have characterized them as mechanisms for the importation of communist agents.[2]

3. Both Congressman Judd and Dr. Schwarz have called for the end of negotiations on any subject with the Soviet Union, maintaining that we can never negotiate with the Soviets for to them negotiations are an act of war.[3]

4. Sen. Thomas Dodd, by suggesting that there are in the state department communists or communist dupes, has cast doubt upon the ability of the state department to furnish leadership to the United States in the field of foreign policy.[4]

5. Cleon Skousen, just before the death of Dag Hammarskjöld, said that the Congo "is fast going the way of Cuba and China. The move is being aided and abetted by U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld," whom Skousen described as a Socialist "with the dream of making the world one large Socialist State."[5]

6. Dr. Fred C. Schwarz, director of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, has as one of his announced lecture topics, "Why Millionaires, Ministers of Religion, and College Professors Become Communists."[6] He further says in his book You Can Trust the Communists: "The truth is that Communism as such has little appeal for the poor, the oppressed, or the exploited. The basic appeal of Communism is to the educated and particularly to the student intellectual."[7] Such charges, if unsubstantiated, lead to direct attacks upon the more basic institutions in American life. J. Edgar Hoover, for instance, has recently pointed out that the communists have been almost entirely unsuccessful in infiltrating American churches. In view of this, the raising of such suspicions has the effect of confusing those who might look to the intellectual and religious leadership of the community, and can be most destructive to our society in general.

7. The crusade curriculum has consistently used such training aids as "Communism on the Map," a filmstrip released by Harding College in Searcy, Ark.[8] This film, which has been repudiated by the defense department and many other official agencies because of the misinformation contained therein, makes the point that communism today is achieving domination of the entire globe with the exception of a handful of countries.[9]

8. Speakers for the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, including Dr. Schwarz, are reported to believe that the American way of life is under attack by fifth columnists operating under such "socialistic" guises as "liberalism," "the welfare state" and "one world-ism." Since "liberalism" goes undefined, such statements are further invitations to widespread suspicion of American institutions, particularly the churches and the schools.[10]

9. Despite these specific positions, the crusade as a whole denies having a "program,"[11] preferring simply to call upon people to "fight communism," to "roll up their sleeves," to "be alert" and other such nonspecific suggestions. This approach seems to us more likely to produce frustration and fear than to produce intelligent action.

10. While the connection between the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade and the John Birch Society is apparently not direct, Fred Schwarz has been quoted as saying: "You know, I sometimes get the notion [Robert Welch] follows me around the country signing up people after I have worked them up." Not unappreciatively, Robert Welch has said, "The Fred Schwarz schools have already done a superb job of providing this preliminary education."[12]

For the above reasons, and because of the strong criticisms these schools have drawn from many fellow churchmen in communities where they have been held, we have decided personally to take no part in the sponsorship or support, directly or indirectly, of the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade or any of its local schools or of any similar school which makes use of the materials and faculty of the crusade. While this is obviously an area for individual decision, we thought that perhaps you would like to be guided by the decision to which we have come as a group.

Experience in several communities has indicated that, in the wake of these schools, there has been a resurgence of attacks on churches, schools and councils of churches. While the crusade organization specifically denies any such intent, it is nevertheless a fact that the spread of the doctrines of the "radical right" have had this effect elsewhere.

At a time when America is faced with a dangerous and subtle external enemy, internal unity is of the gravest importance. Any activity which threatens this unity by adding to the climate of fear and suspicion which already is abroad must be approached with the greatest caution and discrimination. Good motivations alone are not sufficient; intelligent anticommunism demands a clear-eyed understanding of the danger, and the ability to discriminate accurately between communism on the one hand and genuine movements for social reform on the other.

SIDNEY AKSELRAD, President, Northern California Board of Rabbis.

BEN C. BOBBITT, Executive Secretary, Christian Churches of Northern California-Western Nevada.

ROBERT D. BULKLEY, General Presbyter, North Coastal Area, Synod of California, United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.

MACK MCCRAY, JR., Executive Secretary, Northern California Baptist Convention and Nevada-Sierra Baptist Convention.

RICHARD C. NORBERG, Minister and Superintendent, Northern California Congregational Conference.

JAMES A. PIKE, Bishop, Episcopal Diocese of California.

DONALD HARVEY TIPPETT, Bishop, The Methodist Church, San Francisco Area.

SUMNER WALTERS, Bishop, Episcopal Diocese of San Joaquin.

REFERENCES

1. "Hollywood's Answer to Communism," television broadcast, Mutual network, Oct. 16, 1961. Also Los Angeles Times, Aug. 30, 1961, p. 2.

2. Ibid. Also Los Angeles Times, Sept. 2, 1961, p. 3. Cf. Schwarz, Fred: You Can Trust the Communists, Prentice-Hall, pp. 119 ff.

3. "Hollywood's Answer to Communism." Cf. testimony by Dr. Fred C. Schwarz before the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Un-American Activities, May 29, 1957.

4. "Hollywood's Answer to Communism." Cf. also tape No. SOC 61-3-A, "America's Internal Security," lecture by Sen. Thomas J. Dodd at the Southern California School of Anti-Communism, Los Angeles sports arena, Aug. 28-Sept. 1, 1961. Cf. Cleon Skousen and Rear Admiral Chester Ward, USN (Ret.), as reported in Los Angeles Times, Aug. 30, 1961, p. 2.

5. Palo Alto Times, Sept. 16, 1961, p. 2. The speech was delivered in San Jose civic auditorium Sept. 14.

6. "Sowing Dissension in the Churches," p. 20. Protestant Episcopal National Council, Department of Social Relations.

7. Schwarz, Fred C.: You Can Trust the Communists, p. 17.

8. The Nation, Oct. 28, 1961, p. 323.

9. Cf. also Protestant Episcopal National Council, op. cit.

10. The Nation, Oct. 28, 1961, p. 325.

11. Protestant Episcopal National Council, op. cit., p. 20. Cf. also W. P. Strube, Jr., as reported in Los Angeles Times, Sept. 2, 1961, p. 3.

12. The Reporter, July 20, 1961, p. 25.

Religion

BISHOP AFFIRMS CONFIDENCE IN MISS BERKLEY

Excellent Jam File

The Augusta Chronicle-Herald
Sunday, February 25, 1962.

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

(Editor's Note: Due to space limitations, The Chronicle-Herald ordinarily limits letters to the editor to 300 words. However, because of the subject matter involved and out of respect for the positions held by these individuals, that limitation is waived in the case of the two letters presented here.)

Editor, The Chronicle-Herald:

I note with interest your recent editorial in which you say the Directors of the United Fund call upon "The appropriate powers of the Methodist Church to take prompt steps to restore confidence so that it will not be necessary for the United Fund to withdraw its future support from Bethlehem Center." As Bishop of the Georgia Area of the Methodist Church, I desire to make an official statement regarding this matter. Thank you very much for the space in your paper to do so.

Our Methodist Church, including many many Augusta Methodists, has never lost any confidence in Bethlehem Center, nor in Miss Ruby Berkley, the Director. As I see it, if any loss of confidence is suffered, it is due to the Herald newspaper that performed a terribly immature prognosis, with respect to both fact and procedure. This flurry has been greatly exaggerated. Our Church regrets very much the disturbance involved but we do not accept the responsibility for placing the United Fund in an embarrassing position.

The following observations seem quite appropriate:

(1)When any subversive situation is suspected, we are reminded constantly by the Department of Justice that the individual citizen is not to appoint himself as a house cleaner, but instead, to report same to "constituted officers of the law." The Herald should remember that if it had succeeded in pointing up something treasonable in this case, it violated point number one in Edgar Hoover's suggestion for handling subversiveness.

(2) Furthermore, in this situation, it would have been proper to notify responsible Church authorities, rather than excite the public with suspicions and fears, not too well founded. If suspicion prevails regarding one of our preachers, we do not write an article in the Wesleyan Christian Advocate or the local newspaper before we consult with responsible citizens on the local level, Miss Berkley is an ordained servant of the Church. She is appointed to her position by the Methodist Church. Our Methodism has its own procedure with regard to both investigation and trial. According to Methodist policy, any other process is out of order.

(3) This statement is not to justify or condemn the meeting that was held where Mrs. Carl Braden and others were present. We would get quite involved, should we attempt to justify all the meetings where there are Methodist people. Topics of conversation, language used, refreshments served, etc., could get rather personal and one would want to claim his rights. One judges, however, that if

Mr. Braden were in prison for committing murder, it would be a probable act of kindness for a friend to invite an old friend to be present, but since he is a suspected Communist, no kindness or friendship may be tolerated.

Where are we? What about the luncheon that Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kennedy had the other day with the daughter and son-in-law of Mr. Khrushchev? Many years ago, Chief Justice Marshall in relationship to the trial of Aaron Burr for treason, ruled that Burr was not guilty simply because he had associated with treasonable persons. The Chief Justice was calling attention to the difference between American freedom and the tyranny of other sections of the world.

Some contributors to the United Fund will be interested to know that Miss Ruby Berkley was born in Mississippi and has been a devoted and active member of the Methodist Church for many years, that she is in good standing in our Church, especially in the Church where she now worships and serves in Augusta; that she paid quite a price to become a Deaconess in the Methodist Church, taking vows that are quite demanding: that she has served most creditably in this capacity for approximately thirty-five years; that she is now performing a service in the name of Christ that 99 per cent of her critics would not even consider doing; that there are no evidences of Communist tendencies in her teachings or supervision at the Augusta Bethlehem Center.

Furthermore, it is the opinion of the Methodist Ministers in the Augusta area that Miss Berkley is a fine Christian person and is doing well the work she was appointed to do; that she has been given a new vote of confidence by the local board of directors of said organization; that in spite of suspicions and accusations that have been thrown at Ministers and Deaconesses across this country during the past twenty-five years, no Methodist Minister or Deaconess has been found either by Church or Civil Court to possess Communist leanings. We do not believe the first one is to be found at Bethlehem Center in Augusta, Georgia.

The Methodist Church does not scare very easily at this point. The Cabinet of the North Georgia Conference of the Methodist Church, consisting of ten District Superintendents and the Bishop, in recent session, was amazed that a little lady working among Negroes in the South had become the target of subversive accusations. They wondered if this could possibly be the most subversive spot in Augusta. These men remember that some Augusta citizens extended cordial gestures to certain self-appointed individuals who say that they are out to fight Communism and save America; those who cast preposterous charges of pro-Communism against such Americans as President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman, and Dwight D. Eisenhower, Chief Justice Earl Warren, and the late Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, and other respectable statesmen; those who snipe and scandalize many of the ablest ministers and teachers in our country, though they never seem able to prove their accusations; those who are always hunting but never finding; those who thrill at denouncing but never liking a private interview to talk turkey about their program.

One such patriot, not a citizen of this country, boasts that he collected from the American public $500,000 in 1961 and he anticipates contributions of $1,000,000 in 1962. The FBI has listed approximately twelve hundred of these organized endeavors, the leadership being frequently represented by a de-frocked preacher or a failure at some previously attempted profession. The Department of Justice has not only warned us against such, but has continuously expressed its disapproval of creating turmoil and insecurity on the local level. Quoting Edgar Hoover again, "Unfortunately, there are those who make the very mistake that the Communists are careful to avoid. These individuals concentrate on the negative rather than on the positive. They are merely against Communism without being for any positive measure to eliminate the social, political and economic friction which the Communists are so adroit at exploiting."

Our Methodist leadership is aware that some of these movements have created a strange and useless restlessness in Augusta. We are loaded, not with insinuations or innuendoes, but facts to show this sort of thing is proving to be vastly more subversive in many communities than the meeting referred to in Miss Berkley's apartment.

The Methodist Church is up to its ears in the fight against Communism. Nevertheless, it prays that it may not get arrogant, tyrannical or Communistic in the scrap to win.

The Methodist Church is proud of its Bethelem Centers and we are glad that Augusta has one in its area. We reaffirm our confidence in its program and its director.

John Owen Smith
Bishop, the Atlanta Area
The Methodist Church.

TRAINING PROGRAMS and JOBS for RURAL SOUTH CAROLINIANS

a southern rural conference sponsored by

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES, INC.
South Carolina Council
on Human Relations

February 13-15, 1963
Penn Center
Frogmore, South Carolina

FEBRUARY 14

THURSDAY

8:00 A.M.—BREAKFAST

9:00 A.M.—AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

A. WHAT IT IS, Which communities are eligible: Wayne Shields, Senior Field Coordinator, Southeast Region, A.R.A.

B. ARA IN SOUTH CAROLINA, Instances of the program helping low income families: Gordon Berry, A.R.A. Coordinator for S. C.

C. ARA AND NON-DISCRIMINATION, Where the porgram is and is not reaching Negroes, and what can be done to make it more effective: George Robinson, Special Assistant for Community Organization

D. TWO EXPERIENCES in Rural Development

1—Fayette County, Tennessee: Allen Yancey

2—Beaufort County, South Carolina: Jean Morot, Port Royal Industries

10:30 A.M.—COFFEE BREAK

11:00 A.M.—DISCUSSION

12:30 P.M.—LUNCH

1:30 P.M.—FEDERAL AND STATE TRAINING PROGRAMS

A. ARA TRAINING: Miss Anne Gould, Training Coordinator, ARA

B. MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT TRAINING ACT: William Mirengoff, Deputy Assistant Director, Office of Manpower, Automation and Training

C. NATIONAL DEFENCE EDUCATION ACT (TITLE VIII): Dr. Roy W. Dugger, Director of Manpower, Development and Training Services, U. S. Office of Education

D. SOUTH CAROLINA PROGRAMS FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING UNDER ARA, MDTA, AND NDEA (TITLE VIII): R. D. Anderson, Director of Vocational Education, South Carolina Department of Education

E. TECHNICAL EDUCATION CENTERS: John Hills, Director, Division of Technical Services, State Committee for Technical Education

FEBRUARY 13

WEDNESDAY

Chairman: REV. M. D. McCOLLOM

District Superintendent of the Methodist Church Walterboro District

11:00 A.M.—REGISTRATION

12:00 N. —LUNCH

1:00 P.M.—RURAL AREAS DEVELOPMENT

WELCOME: Courtney Siceloff, Director of Penn Center

PURPOSE OF CONFERENCE: L. S. James, South Carolina Council on Human Relations

A. WHAT IS RAD, How does it work, What resources are available to communities and individuals: A. T. Mace, Director, Office of Rural Areas Development

B. RAD IS SOUTH CADOLINA, Special plans: O. W. Lloyd, Rural Development Specialist, Clemson College

C. RAD AND NON-DISCRIMINATION, How the program is and is not reaching Negroes, How it can reach them more effectively: Dr. L. P. Potts, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture

2:30 P.M.—DISCUSSION

3:30 P.M.—COFFEE BREAK

4:00 P.M.—WORKSHOPS

Cooperatives. Job Savage, Director, Management Services Division, Farmer's Cooperative Service

Rural Housing Loans: James K. Barnes, Area Supervisor, FHA

Credit Unions: Sidney Gillikin, Federal Examiner for Credit Union

County Agricultural Committees: Ira Kaye, Lawyer, Sumter, S. C.

Community Services: Alvin Stortroen, Domestic Farm Labor, Department of Labor

6:00 P.M.—DINNER

7:30 P.M.—KEYNOTE ADDRESS

"The Rural South 15 Years From Now", Dr. Gilbert Hardee, Assistant Professor of Sociology, N. C. State College

FEBRUARY 14

THURSDAY

8:00 A.M.—BREAKFAST

9:00 A.M.—AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

A. WHAT IT IS, Which communities are eligible: Wayne Shields, Senior Field Coordinator, Southeast Region, A.R.A.

B. ARA IN SOUTH CAROLINA, Instances of the program helping low income families: Gordon Berry, A.R.A. Coordinator for S. C.

C. ARA AND NON-DISCRIMINATION, Where the porgram is and is not reaching Negroes, and what can be done to make it more effective: George Robinson, Special Assistant for Community Organization

D. TWO EXPERIENCES in Rural Development

1—Fayette County, Tennessee: Allen Yancey

2—Beaufort County, South Carolina: Jean Morot, Port Royal Industries

10:30 A.M.—COFFEE BREAK

11:00 A.M.—DISCUSSION

12:30 P.M.—LUNCH

1:30 P.M.—FEDERAL AND STATE TRAINING PROGRAMS

A. ARA TRAINING: Miss Anne Gould, Training Coordinator, ARA

B. MANPOWER DEVELOPMENT TRAINING ACT: William Mirengoff, Deputy Assistant Director, Office of Manpower, Automation and Training

C. NATIONAL DEFENCE EDUCATION ACT (TITLE VIII): Dr. Roy W. Dugger, Director of Manpower, Development and Training Services, U. S. Office of Education

D. SOUTH CAROLINA PROGRAMS FOR VOCATIONAL TRAINING UNDER ARA, MDTA, AND NDEA (TITLE VIII): R. D. Anderson, Director of Vocational Education, South Carolina Department of Education

E. TECHNICAL EDUCATION CENTERS: John Hills, Director, Division of Technical Services, State Committee for Technical Education

3:10 P.M.—COFFEE BREAK

3:30 P.M.—

F. ROLE OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY IN RE-TRAINING PROGRAMS: Arthur Chapin, Bureau of Employment Security, U. S. Department of Labor

G. SELECTION AND PLACEMENT FOR S. C. TRAINING PROGRAMS: Keith Aull, Director, South Carolina Employment Security

4:10 P.M.—DISCUSSION

6:00 P.M.—DINNER

7:30 P.M.—RURAL DEVELOPMENT FOR ALL PEOPLE
John Baker, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture

FEBRUARY 15

FRIDAY

8:00 A.M.—BREAKFAST

9:00 A.M.—WHO IN SOUTH CAROLINA CAN SEE THAT PROGRAMS REACH ALL OF THE PEOPLE?

A. ROLE OF EXTENSION AGENT: O. W. Lloyd

B. ROLE OF VOCATION AGRICULTURE TEACHERS: W. E. Gore, State Superintendent of Vocational Agriculture, S. C. Department of Education

C. ROLE OF GUIDANCE TEACHERS: Miss Ellen Lyles, State Supervisor of Guidance Services, S. C. Department of Education

D. ROLE OF TECHNICAL ACTION PANEL: John Lovorn, Director of Rural Renewal Division, F.H.A., U.S. Department of Agriculture

E. ROLE OF PRIVATE AGENCIES: Mrs. Alice Spearman, Executive Director, South Carolina Council on Human Relations

10:30 A.M.—COFFEE BREAK

11:00 A.M.—SUMMARY OF CONFERENCE
Dr. C. H. Thomas, Professor of Education, S. C. State College, Orangeburg, S. C.

12:30 P.M.—LUNCH

RURAL AREAS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. A. T. Mace, Director RAD
USDA
Washington, D. C.

Mr. O. W. Lloyd
RAD Specialist
Clemson College

AREA REDEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Wayne Shields, Coordinator
Center for Continuing Education
Room 243
U. of Georgia, Athens, Ga.

Mr. Gordon Berry, ARA
1320 Pendleton St.
Columbia, S. C.

Mr. George H. Robinson
Office of Area Operations, ARA
U.S. Dept. of Commerce
Main Building, Rm. 7008
Washington 25, D. C.

TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. William Mirengoff
Deputy Ass't Director
Manpower, Automation & Training
US Dept. of Labor, Wash., D. C.

Dr. Edwin L. Rumpf
Ass't Director
Vocational & Tech. Education
US Dept. of Ed., Wash., D. C.

Miss Anne Gould
Training Coordinator, ARA
US Dept. of Commerce, Rm 6327
Washington 25, D. C.

Mr. R. D. Anderson
Dept. of Vocational Education
S.C. Dept. of Education
Columbia, S. C.

Mr. John Hills, Director
Division of Technical Services
SC Commission for Tech. Ed.
1321 Pendleton, Columbia, S. C.

EMPLOYMENT SECURITY

Mr. Arthur Chapin
Bureau of Employment Security
US Dept. of Labor, Wash., D. C.

Mr. Keith Aull, Exec. Dir.
SC Employment Security Div.
Box 995, Columbia, S. C.

SPECIALIZED SERVICES

Mr. William E. Gore
State Super. of Vocational Agr.
SC Dept. of Education
Columbia, S. C.

Mr. John M. Lovorn, Dir.
Rural Renewal Division
FHA/USDA, Washington 25, D. C.

Miss Ellen Lyles
State Super. of Guidance Services
S.C. Dept. of Education
Columbia, S. C.

Mr. Job K. Savage
Farmer Co-op Service, USDA
Washington 25, D. C.

Mr. Sidney Gillikin
Fed. Examiner for Credit Unions
2009 Sein Pl., Savannah, Ga.

RESOURCE PERSONS

Dr. L. A. Potts
Special Ass't to Sec'y of Agr.
232 W. Administration Bldg.
USDA, Washington, D. C.

Mr. John Baker
Ass't Sec'y of Agriculture
USDA, Washington, D. C.

Mr. P. F. Aylesworth
Federal Extension Service
USDA, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Alvin Stortroen
Domestic Farm Service
US Dept. of Labor, Wash., D. C.

PRIVATE AGENCIES

Mrs. Alice Spearman, Exec. Dir.
SC Council on Human Relations
1330 Laurel St., Columbia, S. C.

Miss Fay Bennett
National Sharecroppers Fund
112 E. 19th St., N.Y. 3, N.Y.

Mr. Paul Anthony
Director of Field Activities
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Courtney Siceloff, Dir.
Penn Community Services
Frogmore, S. C.

Penn Community Center

COURTNEY SICELOFF, Director

MEMO to conference participants

HOW TO REACH PENN CENTER: Penn Center is located at Frogmore and one-half mile off U. S. Highway 21, six miles beyond Beaufort, S. C. It is roughly 50 miles north of Savannah, Georgia, and 75 miles south of Charleston. Greyhound bus line serves Beaufort from Savannah and Charleston, and taxi fare from Beaufort to Frogmore is $2. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad serves Yemassee, S. C., about 30 miles from Frogmore, and several airlines serve Savannah and Charleston. The Penn staff will provide transportation from Yemassee, Savannah or Charleston to conference guests arriving by plane or rail, IF THEY WILL NOTIFY PENN OF THEIR TIME OF ARRIVAL IN ADVANCE.

ACCOMMODATIONS: Penn Center has dormitory facilities for over 100 people, with arrangements in private homes for overflow. The dining room serves all meals cafeteria style. Main sessions of the conference will be held in Frissell Auditorium on the Penn campus; discussion groups will be in the classroom building. All buildings are heated and linen is provided. There is no charge for sleeping accommodations or for meals.

REGISTRATION: To register for the conference, simply contact Mrs. Alice Spearman at the address below and notify her of your intention to register. There is no charge for registration. Room assignments will be made upon arrival at Penn Center.

SOUTH CAROLINA COUNCIL
on HUMAN RELATIONS
1330 Laurel Street
COLUMBIA, S. C.
Mrs. Alice Spearman, Executive Director

Interzyp Mac.

PENN NEWS

PENN COMMUNITY SERVICES

St. Helena Island — Frogmore, S.C.

Spring, 1963

WORKSHOP ON RURAL PROGRAMS

"Good players are being benched because the people who are calling the signals in their communities have not yet awakened to the full meaning of democracy." This charge was made by John A. Baker, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at a workshop on rural development and re-training programs, which was held at Penn in mid-February. In his speech to the workshop, he also stated that prejudice is a primary problem in making effective the federal government's Rural Areas Development program.

Over 200 Negro farmers from across the state attended the three-day workshop and heard speakers from the U. S. Departments of Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, as well as representatives from the S. C. Departments of Education, Agriculture Extension and Employment Security. The speakers explained the functions of each program, what funds were available to farmers and for what purposes, and suggested means whereby Negroes could take advantage of the financial resources available to them. Questions from the audience were perceptive and indicated several major problems concerning the need for adequate information about the programs, and the difficulties encountered by Negroes seeking access to federally supported re-training programs for underemployed workers.

The principal address of the workshop was Mr. Baker's, which was delivered by Dr. L. A. Potts, Special Assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture, after Mr. Baker was unexpectedly detained in Washington. The workshop was sponsored jointly by Penn and the South Carolina Council on Human Relations. We have enclosed a copy of the program.

VOTER EDUCATION WORKSHOP

In January and early February, Penn held two of three scheduled voter education workshops for the residents of Beaufort County. The workshops were designed to supplement voter registration drives by explaining to voters how their votes can be used more effectively. For a voting right to be a truly democratic instrument, citizens must understand their government, their responsibilities and how voting is related to community improvement. Thus, the first two workshops provided a basic introduction to the government of the county and state. Leaders in local communities conducted the two days of discussions for each workshop, which covered such topics as government and party organizations, the functions of elected and appointed officials, and agricultural committees. In addition, speakers analyzed Negro registration and voting, and briefly discussed techniques of voting and campaigning.

Attendance at the workshops was much better than we had anticipated, and we feel that the enthusiasm of the participants is a healthy sign. Throughout the workshops, audience participation was vigorous and pointed, with questions and suggestions concerning problems which might be solved through more effective voting. At the first workshop, Frank D. Reeves, National Democratic Committeeman for the District of Columbia, addressed a standing-room-only crowd.

In the third and final workshop, which is in the planning stages, we expect to bring into focus the major problems of Negro voters in the county, as well as their potential voting strength, in the hope that it

COURTNEY AND TOM VISIT PUERTO RICO AND JAMAICA

Courtney Siceloff and Tom Barnwell left Penn on March 16, for a ten-day observation of community development projects in Puerto Rico and Jamaica. The projects, sponsored by the governments of each country, encompass many of the same problems we have found through our Pilot Project, and by studying their techniques, we can develop methods for making our own programs more effective. Courtney and Tom will interview administrators of the projects, and then will be individually assigned to field workers, in order to directly observe their methods. In our next newsletter, we will have a report of their findings.

$5000 LIBRARY AWARD

The Beaufort County library system, consisting of the Beaufort Township Library and the Laura M. Towne Library at Penn, has received a national, first prize award of $5000 from the Book-of-the-Month Club. The annual award, given in memory of Dorothy Canfield Fisher,was presented to the county system on the basis of its efforts to bring adequate library services to rural areas. John Mason Brown, a member of the editorial board of the Book-of-the-Month Club, will speak at the presentation ceremony, which will be held at the Beaufort Chamber of Commerce Building on April 21 at 3 P.M. Several representatives of the Club will be present, as well as state library officials. The ceremony will be open to the public.

CONFERENCES

Among recent conference groups at Penn have been two highschool seminars, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee's regional office at High Point, N. C. The seminars were led by Bill Dreyer, the highschool secretary for the region. Norman Whitney, consultant in peace education for the AFSC, participated in the second seminar, March 15 - 17.

The SC Student Council on Human Relations a bi-racial group of college students,met here in early December, and will return in April for another three-day conference

Thirteen students from the Meeting School in New Hampshire, spent two days here in January, on a return trip from Jamaica.

Students from the new Arthur Morgan School in the Celo Community (Burnsville, N. C.) visited· us for a week in March, touring the islands and meeting local residents and students.

The Guilford College A Capella Choir will give a concert in Frissell Community House on March 30th. The concert will be sponsored by the Penn Nursery School.

STAFF

Hale Chamberlain and Jimmy Hazelton, two of our short-term staff members, left us in December. Hale, from Brevard, N. C., is now living in New York, and Jimmy , who was raised in Paraguay, is living on a dairy farm in Connecticut. Dave Habercom, from Antioch College, arrived in September and will be here until the end of the summer. Margo Martin, a sophmore at Oberlin College, will join our staff in June for two months.

- 0 -

Our Sales House, which provides used, but servicable,clothing to local families for nominal prices, is in dire need of children's clothing. If you have second-hand children's apparel which is still useable please consider a donation to the Sales House. Packages may be mailed directly to Penn, or sent by express to Beaufort.

- 0 -

Published quarterly by
Penn Community Services, Inc.
Courtney Siceloff, Director
David Habercom, Newsletter Editor

will provide a basis for more concerted and effective participation in future elections. Senator Leroy Johnson, Georgia's new Negro senator, has agreed to deliver the major address to this workshop.

BEAUFORT COUNTY STATISTICS

In January, we published a brochure of statistics on various aspects of Beaufort County which we felt would be important to our Pilot Project. Based on 1960 census reports and county records, the statistics covered population changes, educational levels, farm characteristics, employment, income, housing conditions and voter registration. Whenever possible, the figures were broken down into white and non-white categories to help give a perspective to the problems with which the Pilot Project is specifically concerned. The data was also divided according to the county's six census divisions, in order to help identify the most pressing problems in each community.

Hale Chamberlain spent a full year combing records and compiling the data, and we feel that the result has been an especially comprehensive study. The twenty-page brochure was sent to all public officials in the county and is being provided to individuals associated with the Pilot Project.

Among the problems concerning Negroes which stood out most dramatically were these: 81% of the Negro students enrolling in 1950 dropped out before graduation; 46% of the Negro population over twenty-five years old is functionally illiterate, yet the public schools spend per Negro pupil only 70% of the funds that it spends for each white student; Negroes comprise 74% of the farm operators but cultivate only 8% of the total farm land;almost one-third of Negro families earns less than $1,000 annually, and over one-half earns less than $2,000; one-third of the total homes in rural areas have either an outdoor privy or no sanitary facility whatsoever, and one third lack piped water.

PILOT PROJECT

The Beaufort County Pilot Project moved into an important phase in early December. A meeting was held at Penn, attended by representatives of state and local health departments, the state department of education, and the regional office of the U. S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, as well as Courtney Siceloff and Thomas Barnwell, the Pilot Project Field Director. The objective of the meeting was to discuss where the health and education agencies and the Field Director might work simultaneously on common problems. It is thought that community development efforts can be substantially expedited through inter-agency cooperation, especially since the involved agencies approach similar problems at various levels. The group was particularly interested in Bluffton, where several community improvement projects are underway; Bluffton also has a high incidence of infectation by internal parasites, a serious health problem. In connection with this inter-agency cooperation, Tom will spend additional time in Bluffton. The group plans to continue meeting, in order to share information about what each is doing.

The Coffins Point Improvement Committee, organized as a result of Tom's work in this St. Helena community, has begun construction of a praise house. The building will also be used for Sunday School classes and general community meetings. Although the thirty members of the committee are contributing to the construction, a financial problem has arisen as a result of the shrimp season's being closed and many community residents temporarily unemployed.

Tom has also been working closely with young people in Beaufort County. He contacted approximately fifteen high school students, who attended a bi-racial conference at Penn entitled, "What Will the World Be Like Twenty Years From Today?" The conference was sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee. (see CONFERENCES) Tom also secured a scholarship for a week-long seminar in Greensboro, N. C., for Samuel Burke, a high school student from Sheldon. The seminar was also sponsored by the AFSC and was called, "The Courageous Generation."

Date?

Macon Telegraph

The South Needs Leaders Who Don't Play 'Ostrich'

Editor, The Telegraph: An ostrich is a bird, so tradition has it, that puts his head in the sand to keep from seeing what alarms him. By so hiding his eyes, evidently, he imagines that he is hidden, and that impending threats will not come too near.

Sometimes, I suppose, all of us have been like ostriches. We tend to hide our eyes, and so refuse to see what so obviously is there.

We Southerners, faced with the most tremendous change in our thinking is nearly a hundred years, are tempted to hide our eyes about integration. We don't want to admit that this thing will actually come to pass. Those that know better, sometimes, join the rest of us and pretend not to "see." They even declare that what we see is a mirage, or something that, though acceptable to other areas of the country, can never come to us.

I use to believe this kind of talk. I guess I did because I wanted to believe it. But I've had some jolts. A close observer and interpreter of what's happening to us in this explosive realm told this account:

Soon after the first ruling of the Supreme Court on integration, a former governor of a southern state was dining with some business and political friends The air was full of the subject. The former governor, publicly always loud in his declarations that "it" could never happen here, took the conversational initiative, and said substantially this,

"Well, of course, gentlemen, you know as well as I, that the edict of the court lays down the highway over which all of us and our children must ultimately travel. But I intend to delay transit as long as possible."

At this juncture the person reporting this incident was interrupted by a young member of the group to which he was talking with some such naive question as this,

"You mean, sire, that our Southern politicians talk one way privately and another way publicly?"

The rest laughed at the idealism of the young man, wishing at the same time that what he asked were not so miserably true.

The story teller explained that it would be political suicide now for a Southern politician to champion integration although all but a very few expressed privately—where they could be reasonably sure not to be quoted publicly—the view that integration is inevitable in spite of all state legal maneuvering to block it. All they hope for, they say in private, is to slow down the process until we can get ready for it, and thus avoid as much reaction as possible. Anyone, he added, who has enough sense to be a southern governor or member of congress knows some history, and knowing history, he knows the "signs of the times."

O, well, maybe I, too, was too naive and idealistic, for I looked at the young questioner admiringly and wished, like he did, that men who lead us would not pretend to stick their heads in the sand and tell us one thing when they really believe history is shoving us the other way.

Macon. A FORMER OSTRICH.

Opinion

Religion

CLAIMING THE RIGHT TO CHOOSE:

a profile

BY EDGAR A. LOVE

THE ferment of social change and the application of the Christian gospel to the problems of human society sometimes churn up dramatic incidents—particularly if the race issue is involved, and the location is in the South.

The story of John Robert (Bob) Zellner is a case in point. Although it may be folly—perhaps even unjust—to focus on one individual among the thousands who have been active participants in the struggle for racial justice and understanding, it may still be valuable in understanding events even now taking shape. Bob Zellner's involvement in the work of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee is, in many ways, typical—a sort of paradigm—of the role of the individual in the contemporary Southern Revolution.

Bob's family—a somewhat typical southern one—was educated at Bob Jones College, and held traditional "Bible Belt" religious and social concepts until their own religious convictions forced them to re-examine the mores of their society. When Bob was a small child, his parents came to an increasingly liberal position on social issues, especially the race question. The Zellner sons—Bob is the second of five boys—were raised to share the parents' convictions.

Like children of many Methodist families in the South, Bob entered a small denominational college—Huntingdon College in Montgomery, Alabama. As a student, he became interested in the Christian application of sociological methods to the problems of a biracial society. And because Huntingdon is in Montgomery, he had ample opportunity to put his convictions to the test.

In Bob's senior year—1960-61—one of his classes received an assignment to "study the race problem and present your idea of a solution in a paper." Bob and some other students were aware that they were living in a community which had attracted world-wide attention but a few years before as a result of the application of nonviolence (as a philosophy and as strategy) in the midst of racial tensions. Therefore, they were not content to go only to the library for their answers. Instead, they used the resources of their community and attended the annual workshop on nonviolence sponsored by the Montgomery Improvement Association, the organization that had led the Montgomery bus protest.

Several Negro ministers in Alabama, including the Reverend Ralph Abernathy, who had succeeded Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., as president of the Montgomery Improvement Association, were defendents at this time in a libel suit by city officials—an outgrowth of an ad on which their names appeared in the New York Times seeking support for Dr. King who was under attack. Bob and some fellow students attended the trial of this suit and offered their friendship and support to the ministers. When the verdict was against the ministers and the courts confiscated Mr. Abernathy's car, the students took a collection of $22 among Huntingdon College students and sent it to Mr. Abernathy with a note saying: ". . . We are disappointed that the officials chose to resort to such petty harassment. . . . We would like to stand up for decency. . . . Any financial assistance we might be able to give will be nominal, but we wish to express our moral support with this small sum." This, along with several private interracial meetings, was about the extent of the students' activities, but it was enough to cause a major controversy at Huntingdon.

COLLEGE officials announced that it was the policy of the college that students who wished to remain in school should attend no meetings where Negroes were present. According to Bob's father, college officials later said verbally that the reason for this policy was that any other approach was "impractical and impossible" at that time. Several ministers in the Alabama-West Florida Conference (which supports Huntingdon College) protested the administration's policy. In an official document, it was noted that in seeking interracial contacts the students were only following the policies and recommendations of The Methodist Church, concluding:

We do not question the right of the administration of Huntingdon College to disagree with . . . the policy, directives, advice, and recommendations of The Methodist Church . . . (but) we question the rights of the institution to prohibit students from following these policies, advice, and recommendations if they so choose. . . .

This matter is still an issue in the Alabama-West Florida Conference.

Bob was graduated from Huntingdon with honors and spent the summer of 1961 in various interracial activities in order to study further the whole problem of racial conditions in a democratic society. More and more, he felt called to participate actively in the movement for integration.

The Southern Conference Education Fund, interested in seeing more white students participate in the historic movements being developed by southern Negro students, made a grant to the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) for the employment of a field secretary to spend the 1961-62 school year in an attempt to present the viewpoint of this movement to southern white students. The leadership of the SNCC asked Bob to take this job, and he accepted.

On October 4, 1961, Bob was in McComb, Mississippi, for a staff meeting with fellow SNCC workers who were engaged in Negro voter registration activities. McComb is in southern Mississippi—a rural area where virtually no Negroes are registered to vote and, until the recent stirrings, there had never been a challenge to segregation. It was in McComb that Bob faced his "baptism of fire."

While the SNCC meeting was in session, over a hundred students from Burgland High School left their classes in protest because a fellow student, Brenda Travis, had been expelled from school for "sitting-in" at the local bus station. The Negro school administration was under pressure from the city government, and the students decided to march on City Hall in protest. They asked the SNCC members to go with them. Except for Bob, all were Negroes. They readily agreed to go. "How about it, Bob?" one of them asked.

Bob did not hesitate. He said he would go.

That afternoon he became the victim of an angry mob and was beaten under the eyes of the police; that night, he was thrown into an unheated jail cell and denied food and bedding. A Negro prisoner in an adjoining cell shared his supper with Bob and gave him a blanket.

After a few days, Bob and his associates were out on bail. They face four- to six-month jail sentences on convictions for breach of peace, which are on appeal.

In December, 1961, came Albany, Georgia, where students were also demonstrating and asked Bob's support. Again, along with the others, he went to jail.

HIS arrest in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, came on February 17, 1962. On that occasion, he and Charles (Chuck) McDew, chairman of the SNCC, went to the Baton Rouge jail to visit a friend, Dion Diamond, also a SNCC staff member who had been arrested several weeks before because of his part in student demonstrations against segregation there. Dion was under very high bond, and had to stay in jail.

Bob and Chuck arrived in Baton Rouge late in the afternoon of February 17. They learned at the jail that they could not visit Dion until the next visiting period, several days later; they could not stay that long. But they were also told that they could leave him a basket of fruit and books. They went to buy these, returned, and left them at the jail with a note. By this time, officials had apparently learned who they were. They were preparing to leave the jail and leave town when they were stopped by officials and arrested.

They had been in Louisiana two days—in Baton Rouge only a few hours. The charge was criminal anarchy against the state of Louisiana.

Bob has been fortunate in that, unlike many white students active in the protest movement, his parents share his convictions and have supported his actions consistently. In January, 1962, when Bob was refused admittance to the campus of his alma mater, Huntingdon College, because "his presence posed a potentially dangerous situation" in that his "views on racial matters differ from those of the student body," the Zellners issued the following statement to the press:

"Our son, John Robert Zellner, is currently involved in following his Christian conscience in the face of public disapproval. With other young students, Negro and white, he is active in seeking to bring about a just, more democratic, and more Christian solution to the race problem—a problem his generation did not create.

"Our son's activities have landed him in jails, subjected him to mob violence, and have held him up to public and private scorn—none of which has yet broken his spirit. We, his parents, are proud of him for this. We doubt that any of his critics have paid such a price for the convictions they so vehemently hold.

"Many friends (and some others) have asked us for explanations and have indicated a desire, for one reason or another, to know why Bob is so engaged and what he hopes to accomplish by it. . . .

"Our son was reared in . . . The Methodist Church . . . he is an honor graduate of a Methodist college. . . ."

The parents' statement then quoted from the Discipline of The Methodist Church, including these passages:

OUR THEOLOGICAL BASIS: The Methodist Church must view the perplexing times and problems which we face today in the light of the teachings of Jesus. . . . To be silent in the face of need, injustice, and exploitation is to deny him. . . . We stand for the equal rights of racial, cultural, and religious groups. . . . The right to choose a home, enter a school, secure employment, vote or join a church should not be limited by a person's race, culture, or religion. . . .

RECOMMENDATIONS: That Methodists in their homes, in their work, in their churches, and in their communities actively work to eliminate discrimination and enforced segregation on the basis of race, color, or national origin; that as a church we pursue a program of education and action to bring about Christian practices with respect to housing, open occupancy, schools, opportunity of employment, and community acceptance which . . . create a sense of belonging. . . .*

* DISCIPLINE of The Methodist Church, 1960, pgph. 2020-2026 passim (italics supplied).

The Zellners then continued:

"Not all Methodists share these beliefs. It is not required of them that they do. In our church those who differ are entirely free to do so. It is felt, however, that those who do hold such convictions and choose to act in accord should have the blessing of their church and the tolerant understanding of this membership. Bob has been taught these things and has made them his own. . . .

"Some have chided us, saying, 'But all this agitating and demonstrating is not the way to do it.' To this we answer:

"Send us an outline of your better way. Draw up a report on how long you have worked at it and the success you have had. We espouse no particular method or technique. Our concern is for getting the problem solved. Our generation has had (as several before it) a try at the problem and our success has been something less than phenomenal. We say let the young try it their way. They can hardly do worse than we—and they just might have what it will take to turn the trick! How do we know it won't work? It's never been tried before.

"Others have said, 'But we have had this problem a long time. It has never been solved. This younger generation isn't going to solve it either.' To this we answer:

"But look at the progress they have already made! And besides this, if we expect to keep praying the Lord's Prayer, 'Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven,' we had better keep working at the job.

"As long as our son, and others with him, are 'in there pitching,' we intend to stand by them, so help us God!"

This is the testimony of Bob's parents. A similar testimony, striking in its simple analysis, is that of Robert Moses, a young Negro working to promote voter registration in Mississippi:

"It has been said that few people know—or at least talk—about the bitterness and hatred which many southern Negroes feel toward whites. I've thought of the kids I've met here in McComb and some of the hatreds they have expressed toward whites and some of the folklore stemming from that hatred coupled with ignorance.

"At the same time I thought of the visible effect of Bob Zellner's appearance among us as a friend and co-worker: one girl talking of her white brother, when I had previously heard her say with bitterness, 'We don't associate with peckerwoods; another boy talking long after Bob had left of his laughter and good humor. . . . A new meaning I thought I detected in the phrase 'Black and white together' from our theme song. Little things, maybe, but very important, I feel. The kids here need more contact with people like him. . . ."

EDGAR A. LOVE is resident bishop of the Baltimore Area (Central Jurisdiction) of The Methodist Church, where he has served for the past ten years. He holds degrees from Howard University, Boston University, and the University of Chicago, and has been thrice honored with the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He serves as Chairman of the Board of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

THIS ARTICLE is reprinted from the November, 1962, issue of motive magazine. For additional copies write to the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., 822 Perdido Street, New Orleans 12, Louisiana.

1956

Herbert Answers Dabbs' Segregation Argument

Opinion

To The Editor of The State:

I have a high regard for Mr. Dabbs as I had for his father before him—both good men and good citizens.

The State has been generous in giving me space and I will try to make this brief. The whole subject of race is an immense subject and there is a vast deal that cannot be covered in one article.

Mr. Dabbs evidently answered my article before he had given much thought to it or he was "in the land of nod" to which he refers.

Purity of Race

No where did I say anything about the purity of race which he mentions several times. This, unfortunately, is one of the brain washing things that some of the northern press try to put upon the South in an effort to make us appear ignorant, vain and bigoted, vaunting our race as a pure race or a super race. There is nothing like that in my article.

I do not think there is any very pure race, nor do I think any of them have acted well enough to boast about it. I merely said whites and Negroes are widely different races occupying the same country and that under such conditions in all times controversies have arisen.

Under such circumstances both races do much better to recognize the race problem and each tries not to do things unnecessarily antagonistic to the other. In this way we will get along much better than if we claim that one or the other is vain, or bigoted, or low, or high, and I believe this more nearly comports with the Christian attitude.

Biblical Standpoint

Mr. Dabbs says I passed over the Bible lightly because I did not put "the curse of Ham" on our Negro friends.

I hope I shall never treat the Bible lightly. It is a book of wisdom and nearly every book in it shows the existence of race strife, feeling, and contention.

In my humble opinion, and I speak with some hesitation in a field in which I am not well qualified, the teachings of Christ are aimed at righteousness among all races, but there was plenty of segregation in His time and He no where spoke out against it.

He may have thought that if people could get along better and treat each other better living separately they should do so.

At any rate, in matters relating to government He said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

Supreme Court Devision

In the matter of the Supreme Court decision, this is not the place for a legal argument. The Supreme Court of course has on occasions reversed itself but never, I believe, where there was so long a line of precedence and with so little regard for the history of the controversy.

If the Chief Justice had thought more about the way he and his brother Californians treated the Japanese in California, the decision might have been different. It perhaps is easy for us to say how the Californians should have acted and easy for the Californians to say how we should act, but it is much different when you are close to the fire than when you are far away.

Question of Science

I don5t know where Mr. Dabbs got the idea that I was writing about science.I gave one quotation from Huxley's "Science and Culture" and I don't think Mr. Dabbs would take any exception to the wisdom set out in that quotation. He was evidently "in the land of Nod" and thought I was bringing science into the matter of race.

James Brice was a great man and a great writer. He was an Englishman and certainly during his formative period never lived in a land where two widely different races occupied the same land. Even the quotation from Mr. Brice used by Mr. Dabbs indicates that different races were striving one with another.

This shows exactly the theme my article carries; that is. people divide racially, each one tending to side with his race.

We all know that and what is there to argue about it? My contention is that we should all acknowledge it and conduct ourselves accordingly and cease to talk about bigotry and ignorance and pride.

Authority From Afar

There is plenty of authority from people who stand afar off and would tell their brothers how to run their affairs. Generally, the man who lives farthest from any kind of race problem will be the one who thinks he can find the readiest solution. That is one of the difficult angles of a vastly difficult problem.

If Mr. Dabbs will examine into the true conditions existing in Brazil, I do not think he will find much encouragement to set it up over the South, and I would not advise any of our Negro friends to change their status for that of many millions of people in Brazil.

Races and Nations

Mr. Dabbs says that my argument on race instinct allows the concept of race and nations to slide interceptedly into one another. It is obvious that races form into nations and what applies to race often applies to nations.

He says we are for the most part of the same race as the Russians. We have been separated a long time and we are very in-ghastly failure of their part in government which, of course, was natural and should not be held against them, but you can scarcely blame the South for being very slow to open the gate too widely.

While I am not in favor of mixed schools and a mixed race, I am in favor of giving to the Negroes the same rights that we claim, including the right to keep the race which God has given each. We have a bi-racial society and I believe we will all get along better if we try to learn to recognize this fact and act accordingly.

R. B. HERBERT

COLUMBIA

Opinion 1956

He may have thought that if people could get along better and treat each other better living separately they should do so.

At any rate, in matters relating to government He said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

Supreme Court Devision

In the matter of the Supreme Court decision, this is not the place over the South, and I would not advise any of our Negro friends to change their status for that of many millions of people in Brazil.

Races and Nations

Mr. Dabbs says that my argument on race instinct allows the concept of race and nations to slide interceptedly into one another. It is obvious that races form into nations and what applies to race often applies to nations.

He says we are for the most part of the same race as the Russians. We have been separated a long time and we are very intent on preventing the Russians from butchering and annihilating our people as they did the Ukranians.

I wish Mr. Dabbs had tried to suggest some reason why states and communities with large Negro populations all react in racial matters the same way. His idea seems to be that somehow the White people in those communities are worse.

I would certainly not put it on our colored friends that to have more Negroes in a community makes it a worse community. I think it is much kinder to them to say what I believe is true that wherever you have two races present in large numbers there is a greater race problem.

Better Co-existence

The Negro race as a minority race has been able to work out a better co-existence than the Indians because at least they have been able to live and increase and improve in a land with a numerically larger race.

This the White people were unable to do in Haiti and San Domingo where they were the minority race and the Negroes were the majority because the Negro exterminated the White people. This is an unpleasant fact to recount. The same thing is today happening in Africa where the Maw Maws (Negroes) are endeavoring to destroy all of the White people.

Mr. Dabbs says that my argument rests on 19th century opinion and that we have now changed all that. If Mr. Dabbs can get that across to the various races he has a wonderful future. The United States should send him at once to persuade the Israeli and the Arabs in the near East and the Maw Maws in Africa that things have changed and that human nature has changed and that men no longer band together for self protection, each one siding with his race.

The UNESCO in New York may hold up such an ideal but it will be found hard to persuade many people in areas where other races in one way or another may threaten them not to band together for self protection.

Mixed Breeding

The matter of destroying a race by mixed breeding is merely one way. Anyone who will think about it knows that the potential threat exists also in politics and actual strife. Sometimes the threat comes in one form and sometimes in another.

It is all a part of an immensely difficult problem and both Negroes and white people should have sympathy and understanding in the handling of the problem and when outsiders come in and rock the boat it is just too bad.

I have alluded to outsiders. We of the South are partly to blame for the coming in of outsiders. We should have been able to do more for our Negro friends than we did and if we had done so I believe this segregation matter would not have come up. But here again we had gone through the Confederate War and all the reconstruction period, in which Negroes made a

Opinion 1956

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
OFFICE 311 EAST PEARL STREET
Entered as second class matter daily except Sunday at the post office at Jackson, Mississippi under the act of March 2, 1879.
Editor

THIS IS SHOCKING!

This writer does not know who is the editor of The Mississippi Methodist Advocate and does not care particularly, but he is evidently among those spineless and unthinking members of the clergy who think segregation is "in violation of the Christian spirit." Listen to this absurd editorial seeking to justify compliance with the United States Supreme Court decision.

In spite of the difficulties and unpopularity of the Supreme Court decision, we must think clearly and pray earnestly for Divine guidance. It is a problem we cannot solve ourselves but we should study carefully suggestions being made about our school system. In our sister state of Georgia we notice that the senate approved the bills of Governor Marvin Griffin's package of eight measures designed to close the public schools if necessary to maintain segregation. The problem of integration is small compared with what might happen if we in the south fail to maintain a free public school system. To deny public schooling to the poor and underprivileged at a time when Russia is outstripping us in the race for trained minds, seems downright stupid, to say nothing of being un-Christian and undemocratic.

For Christians to practice a caste system in free America is unthinkable at any time but when we do it in the face of the fact that communistic countries are turning our prejudices into their best propaganda weapon, it is dangerous. We must question the wisdom of men who preach Hitler's doctrine of racial superiority. We have no right to deny people the right of full citizenship nor stand in the way of their democratic rights.

How any mind could be so shallow as to seek to make a comparison between educational conditions in Russia and in the United States truly passes all comprehension.

Here in the South we do preach the doctrine of racial superiority and intend to keep on doing so. Any white man who does not feel he belongs to a superior race does not deserve to be called a white man.

Some may think it is unkind to thus refer to a prattling parson, but that is exactly the way the leaders in this fight against the Supreme Court decision feel about it.

In this battle against social equality, miscegnation, mingled whites and blacks in schools and colleges, wholesale bastardy and mongrelization of the white race, we can see no distinction whatever between a member of the clergy and an ordinary citizen.

You are either for us or you are against us.

There is no middle ground, no place for neutrals, and certainly no place for persons who advocate abject surrender.

The Daily News does not believe the editor of the Mississippi Christian Advocate voices the thought of an overwhelming majority of the Methodists in Mississippi.

Bishop Marvin Franklin and his superintendents in the two Mississippi conferences of the Methodist church had better start some fast thinking.

THOSE SPECIAL WEEKS

Gov. J. P. Coleman remains firm in his determination not to sign any ready-made proclamations for the observance of weeks or months in behalf of various causes for obvious selfish purposes.

The Governor will, of course, be subjected to a lot of pressure from persons seeking proclamations for their favorite causes and they will be

The Daily News does not believe the editor of the Mississippi Christian Advocate voices the thought of an overwhelming majority of the Methodists in Mississippi.

Bishop Marvin Franklin and his superintendents in the two Mississippi conferences of the Methodist church had better start some fast thinking.

THOSE SPECIAL WEEKS

Gov. J. P. Coleman remains firm in his determination not to sign any ready-made proclamations for the observance of weeks or months in behalf of various causes for obvious selfish purposes.

The Governor will, of course, be subjected to a lot of pressure from persons seeking proclamations for their favorite causes and they will be telling him "this is an exceptional case and you can well afford to set aside your rule."

For instance during the month of February, aside from the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln, we will be having these special weeks:

"Cherry Vanila Ice Cream Week."
"Cottage Cheese Week."
"Better Bedding Week."
"Peach Dessert Week."
"Break A Cold Week."

In the offing—dates not available at the moment—will come the following:

"Idaho Potato Week."
"Onion Week."
"Printing Week."
"National Thirst Week."
"Church Week."
"Economic Life Week."
"Hot Tea Week."
"Noise Abatement Week."
"National Flower Week."
"Portable Radio Week."
"Television Week."
"Dairy Week."
"National Smile Week."
"Return Borrowed Books Week."
"Father-and-Son Week."
"Soft Water Week."
"Bird Cage Week."
"National Prosperity Week."

And so on and so forth. Some of these events cover a whole month, not a mere week, but at the moment we don't recall which is which.

Now, Governor, if you want to display a spirit of iron-clad destermination in this matter, issue a formal proclamation right now declaring "No Weeks-Week." That will show 'em you are much in earnest.

The Clarion-Ledger

T. M. HEDERMAN ..... Editor 1921-1948
R. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ..... Manager
R. H. HENRY ..... Editor 1871-1921
T. M. HEDERMAN, JR. ... Editor

"There are disloyalties and there are crimes which shock our sensibilities, which may bring suffering upon those who are touched by their immediate results, but there is no disloyalty and no crime in all the category of human weakness which compares with the failure of probity in the conduct of public trust. The breaking down of the faith of the people in the honesty of their government and in the integrity of their institutions, the lowering of the respect for standards of honor which prevail in high places, are crimes for which punishment can never atone."

Southern Opinion

More Thefts Reported In Capital's Mixed Schools

Down here in shameful, backward and segregated Mississippi we have not heard of any serious or sustained theft of cafeteria silverware by students in any school, white or colored, but a Washington Post news item indicates that this has become still another problem and difficulty growing out of the loudly-boasted integration of the national capital's schools.

School integration there, claimed and boasted as being largely successful and an example for other U. S. cities, has caused many troubles, problems and difficulties, but integration is only indicated, not deliberately charged, as the cause of the theft epidemic mentioned in this report.

Note that the thieves were so numerous that the anti-theft action was aimed not at just a few of the students but at all of them.

This is the Washington news item:

"Taft Junior High students now must pay a deposit on school cafeteria silverware as the result of sticky fingers that have lifted 400 knives, forks and spoons since fall.

"Teen-agers are charged a nickel a utensil, the money refunded at the end of the lunch hour. Since the charge went into effect last week, all silverware has been returned. . ."

That such theft has been common in other Washington schools is clearly indicated by this added paragraph:

"Top school administrators currently are studying this experiment of Principal Harold H. Honegar. They are worried that some young people might come to school with 15 cents to eat on—and no more."

Is such impoverished want as common as such thefts in the famous racially integrated schools of the nation's wealthy capital?

Southern Opinion

March 29, 1937

SUMMARY OF STATE LAWS REGULATING THE KU KLUX KLAN

I. STATE LAWS FORBIDDING THE WEARING OF MASKS PUBLICLY.

1. Arizona -- Laws of 1923, Chapter 78, Section 4729-30. Felony for a person to wear a mask, etc. with intent to disturb, etc. any person, or to escape detection in the commission of any public offense; every act which would otherwise be a misdemeanor when committed by a person wearing a mask shall be a felony.

2. Illinois -- Cahill's Rev. St. 1935, Chapter 38, Section 34 (1 to 3) Hooded, robed or masked person appearing in public "with evil or wicked intent" is guilty of assault.

3. Iowa -- Code of 1935, Sections 12916, 12931, 12932. If a masked person assaults another with a dangerous weapon he shall be guilty of assault with intent to commit murder; misdemeanor for masked person to disturb peace or intimidate; masked person entering or demanding entrance to another's premises with intent to inflict bodily injury is guilty of assault with intent to commit a felony.

4. Louisiana -- Regular Session of 1934, Act 3 -- Misdemeanor for any person to use or wear publicly a hood or mask.

5. Michigan -- Acts of 1931, Section 396. Misdemeanor for any person to assemble, march or parade in public place while wearing a mask or covering whole or part of face.

6. Minnesota -- Statutes 1927, Section 10300 -- Misdemeanor for a person to appear in public wearing a mask.

7. North Dakota -- Laws of 1923, Chapter 240, Section 1. Misdemeanor to wear a mask, etc. in public.

8. Ohio -- Section 12810, General Code (March 28, 1889). Riotous conspiracy for one or more persons to unite or combine to commit a misdemeanor while wearing white caps, masks or other disguise.

9. Oklahoma -- Session Laws 1923-24, Chapter 2, Sections 1 to 3. Unlawful to wear mask, hood or covering concealing identity of wearer; for masked person to demand admission to premises; felony for a masked person to assault another.

10. Tennessee -- Laws of 1869-70, Chapter 54, Section 1. Misdemeanor to wear a mask publicly; felony to enter or demand entrance to premises while masked. Person who assaults another with deadly weapon while masked guilty of an assault to commit murder in first degree.

11. Washington -- Remington's Revised Statutes, Section 2553. Gross misdemeanor for three or more persons to assemble while masked; for owner of premises to permit such meeting.

12. Texas -- Chapter 1, Title 9 of the Penal Code of Texas. Article 439-454F. Misdemeanor to wear mask in public; felony for masked person to enter house; forbids masked persons to assault or falsely imprison a person; unlawful for secret organization to parade while masked.

II. UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLAGE OR PARADES WHILE MASKED. (See attached appendix II for typical law)

1. Michigan -- Misdemeanor to assemble, march or parade on street, highway or public place while wearing a mask. Acts of 1931, Section 396.

2. Texas -- Chapter 1, Title 9, Penal Code, Section 454-F. Unlawful for secret organizations to parade while masked.

3. Washington -- Remington's Revised Statutes, Section 2554. Gross misdemeanor for three or more persons to assemble while masked.

III. UNAUTHORIZED MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS (See attached Appendix III for typical law)

1. Colorado -- Compiled Laws of 1921, Section 230. Unlawful for any body of men other than National Guard or troops of the United States to associate themselves together as a military organization to parade in public with arms, without license from the Governor; unlawful for any city or town to raise or appropriate money to support such bands of men or to provide drill rooms or armories.

2. Washington -- Remington's Revised Statutes, Section 2546. Misdemeanor for any body of men other than the National Guard or troops of the United States to form a military company with arms without the consent of the Governor (social and benevolent associations allowed to wear swords).

NOTE: There are additional states having such laws, but these are typical. The complete list is being gathered now.

Appendix I

Tennessee Code

11031 6668 (4770a). PENALTY FOR GOING ABOUT MASKED OR IN DISGUISE. --- Any person or persons, masked or in disguise, who shall prowl, or travel, or ride, or walk through the country or any town to the disturbance of the peace, or to the alarming of the citizens of any portion of this state, they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail of the county wherein convicted, in the discretion of the jury trying the case. (1869-70, ch. 54, sec. 1.)

11032 6669 (4770b). ENTERING UPON THE PREMISES OF ANOTHER IN DISGUISE. --- If any person or persons, disguised or in mask, by day or by night, shall enter upon the premises of another, or demand entrance or admission into the house or inclosure of any citizen of this state, it shall be considered prima facie that his or her intention is to commit a felony, and such demand shall be deemed an assault with intent to commit a felony, and the person or persons so offending, shall, upon conviction, be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than ten years nor more than twenty years. (Ib..sec.2.)

11033 6670 (4770c). ASSAULTING ANOTHER WITH DEADLY WEAPON IN DISGUISE. --- If any person, so prowling, traveling, riding, or walking through the towns or country of this state, masked or in disguise, shall assault another with a deadly weapon, he shall be deemed guilty of an assault with intent to commit murder in the first degree, and, on conviction thereof, shall suffer death by electrocution; provided, the jury trying the cause may substitute imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not less than ten years nor more than twenty-one years. (Ib., sec. 3.)

11034 6673 (4770f). GOVENOR MAY OFFER TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS REWARD. --- The governor is hereby authorized to offer a reward of two hundred and fifty dollars, for the apprehension and delivery to the sheriff or jailer of any county, any person who may be guilty of a violation of section 11032 or section 11033. (Ib., sec. 6).

11035 6673a1. MISDEMEANOR TO RIDE OR TRAVEL THROUGH THE COUNTRY OR TOWNS TO THE DISTURBANCE OF THE PEACE, DAMAGE OF PROPERTY, OR INTIMIDATION OF CITIZENS; FINE AND IMPRISONMENT. --- Any person or persons who shall willfully prowl or travel or ride or walk through the country or towns, to the disturbance of the peace or to the alarming of the citizens of any portion of the state, or for the purpose of damaging or destroying property, or for the purpose of intimidating or terrorizing any citizen or citizens of this state, or for the purpose of causing, through threats or intimidation or other improper means, any citizen or citizens of this state to do or not to do any lawful thing or to do any unlawful thing, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, and imprisoned in the county jail for not less than six months nor more than twelve months, said imprisonment to be within the discretion of the judge trying the case. (1907, ch. 427, sec. 1).

(more)

11036 6673a4. FELONY FOR NIGHT RIDER OR OTHER LAWLESS PERSON TO ATTEMPT TO PREVENT DISPOSAL OF FARM PRODUCTS: IMPRISONMENT IN PENITENTIARY. --- It shall be a felony for any night rider or other lawless person, by threats, written or verbal, or by intimidation in any form, to attempt to prevent one having the disposal of farm products from selling and delivering such products, at such time and to such market as he may prefer. Any person convicted under this section shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than three nor more than fifteen years. (1915, ch. 15. sec. 1.)

11037 6673a5. FELONY FOR NIGHT RIDER OR OTHER PERSON TO SEEK TO COMPEL DISMISSAL OF LABORERS, SHARE CROPPERS, OR TENANTS, OR TO COMPEL THEM TO VACATE; IMPRISONMENT IN PENITENTIARY. --- It shall be a felony for any night rider, or other person, by threats, written or verbal, or by intimidation in any form, to compel or seek to compel one having hired laborers, share croppers, or tenants on his place to dismiss them or any of them from employment without due cause, or for any night rider or other person by threats, written or verbal, or by intimidation in any form, to compel or seek to compel hired laborers, share croppers, or tenants or their families to vacate, under fear or compulsion, the premises they have occupied. Any person convicted under this section shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than three nor more than fifteen years. (Ib., sec.2, modified.)

11038 6673a6. FELONY TO ADVISE OR INCITE, OR TO CONSPIRE TO COMMIT, SUCH OFFENSES; IMPRISONMENT IN PENITENTIARY. --- Any person advising or inciting others, or conspiring with others to commit the offense mentioned in the two preceding sections shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than three nor more than fifteen years. (Ib.)

Appendix II

Chapter 1. Title 9. of the Penal Code of Texas

Art. 454a (of the Penal Code of the State of Texas). WEARING MASK IN PUBLIC. If any person shall go into or near any public place masked or disguised in such manner as (to) hide his identity or render same difficult to determine, he or she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction fined in any sum not exceeding $500.00 or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding twelve months, or by both such fine and imprisonment provided this article shall not apply to private or public functions, festivals or events not fostered, caused or presented by any secret society or organization.

Art. 454b. "PUBLIC PLACE" DEFINED. Any "public place" as used in the preceding article is any public road, street, or alley of a town, city, or any store, garage, workshop, or any place at which people are assembled or to which people commonly resort for purposes of business, amusement, or other lawful purposes, other than a church or other place where people are assembled for religious services or purposes.

Art. 454c. MASKED PERSON ENTERING HOUSE. If any person who is masked or disguised in such manner as to hide his or (her) identity, or as to render same difficult to determine shall go into or near any private house, or shall demand or seek entrance therein or disturb any of the inhabitants thereof, he shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for a term of not less than one nor more than ten years; provided this article shall not apply to persons attending social gatherings in private homes where social custom sanctions the wearing of a mask or disguise.

Art. 454d. MASKED PERSON ENTERING CHURCH. If any person masked or disguised in such manner as to hide his identity or make same difficult of determination shall go into any church or other place where people are assembled for religious services or purposes, he shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for a term of years not less than two nor more than ten; provided this article shall not apply to any entertainments or service solely under the auspices of such church or religious gathering, and not fostered, caused or presented by any secret society or organization.

Art. 454e. MASKED PERSONS ASSAULTING; "MASKED" DEFINED. If any two or more persons acting in concert, or aiding and abetting each other, when either or all of whom are masked, or in disguise, shall assault or shall falsely imprison any other person, each of such persons so offending shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for any term of years not less than five. The terms "masked" or "in disguise" used in this article mean(s) that such person by artificial means has so changed or obscured his usual appearance as to render his identification impossible, or more difficult than it would have been if such mask or disguise has (had) not been used.

(more)

Art. 454f.. MASKED INDIVIDUALS PARADING ON PUBLIC HIGHWAY. It shall be unlawful for any secret society or organization, or a part of the members thereof, masked or in disguise, to parade upon or along any public road or any street or alley of any city or town in this State, and all members of such society or organization so parading, or other members of such, who aid, abet or encourage such parade, shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisonment in the county jail not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Appendix III

Washington

Section 2546, Remington's Revised Statutes:

ARMED ASSOCIATION. It shall not be lawful for any body of men other than the National Guard or troops of the United States, to associate themselves together as a military company with arms, without the consent of the governor; but members of social and benevolent associations are not prohibited from wearing swords. Every person who shall associate with others in violation of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (L. '09, p. 980, Sec. 294)

Section 230 Compiled Laws, Colorado, 1921

"Unauthorized military organizations - Parades - Municipality not equip men. - Sec. 58 It shall not be lawful for any body of men whatsoever, other than the regularly organized national guard or the troops of the United States, to associate themselves together as a military company or organization, or to parade in public, with arms in any part of the state without license of the governor therefor, which may at any time be revoked; nor shall it be lawful for any city or town to raise or appropriate any moneys toward arming, equipping, uniforming or in any way supporting or sustaining, or providing drill rooms or armories for such bodies of men."

File under KKK.

Matter of file
Ku Klux Klan

June 30, 1948

The Honorable Theo McGee
Murrah Building
Columbus, Georgia

Dear Colonel McGee:

Word has reached us of a Ku Klux Klan demonstration at Cusseta, and we have been informed further that the City Council of the Town of Cusseta will take up the matter at its next meeting.

We are looking forward to the passing of an ordinance against hooded parades. You are nearby, and I am wondering if you could speak our mind on that subject and put the influence of our organization, and particularly of yourself, to pass such an ordinance.

I enclose a copy of the Columbus ordinance, adopted unanimously there on April 27, 1948. This copy has minute changes in Sections 2 and 3 only, deemed to close gaps in the language, and by the addition of clause 4 of section 3 to enable policemen, firemen, soldiers, and the like, to perform their duties as heretofore.

Sincerely,

R. L. Russell
State Director

Enclosures: 2 copies of draft of Columbus ordinance

AN ORDINANCE

Proposed draft of an ordinance to prohibit the wearing of masks in the City of _____, where such masks wholly or partially conceal the identity of the wearers; providing for certain exceptions; providing penalties for violations hereof; providing that this ordinance shall become effective immediately upon passage; and for other purposes.

* * * * * * * * *

WHEREAS, the unrestricted wearing of masks which conceal the identity of the wearer is a hindrance to the maintenance of order and the effective detection of crime, it is deemed necessary that this ordinance be adopted as an emergency measure to take effect immediately upon passage;

Therefore, be it ordained by the commission of the city of _____:

Section 1

That it shall be unlawful for any person to appear upon a public street or in a public place with the City of _____ while such person is wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity.

Section 2

That it shall be unlawful for any person to enter any building or premises of another in the City of _____ while wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity or, having entered, to then wear such a mask, unless such person has secured the prior consent of the owner and all the tenants of such building or premises.

Section 3

That this ordinance shall not be applicable: (1) to persons attending, by invitation, private fancy-dress parties where masks are removed during the parties; nor (2) to children under fourteen years of age wearing costumes at Halloween; nor (3) to persons wearing Santa Claus costumes at Christmas or during the four weeks next preceding; nor (4) to legally constituted persons in the duly authorized performance of governmental functions.

Section 4

That any person violating this ordinance shall, upon conviction before the Recorder of said city, be punished, for each offense, by a fine not exceeding $250 or ninety (90) days confinement, either or both, in the discretion of the Recorder.

Section 5

That this ordinance shall be effective immediately upon passage.

AN ORDINANCE

Proposed draft of an ordinance to prohibit the wearing of masks in the City of _____, where such masks wholly or partially conceal the identity of the wearers; providing for certain exceptions; providing penalties for violations hereof; providing that this ordinance shall become effective immediately upon passage; and for other purposes.

* * * * * * * * *

WHEREAS, the unrestricted wearing of masks which conceal the identity of the wearer is a hindrance to the maintenance of order and the effective detection of crime, it is deemed necessary that this ordinance be adopted as an emergency measure to take effect immediately upon passage;

Therefore, be it ordained by the commission of the city of _____:

Section 1

That it shall be unlawful for any person to appear upon a public street or in a public place with the City of _____ while such person is wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity.

Section 2

That it shall be unlawful for any person to enter any building or premises of another in the City of _____ while wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity or, having entered, to then wear such a mask, unless such person has secured the prior consent of the owner and all the tenants of such building or premises.

Section 3

That this ordinance shall not be applicable: (1) to persons attending, by invitation, private fancy-dress parties where masks are removed during the parties; nor (2) to children under fourteen years of age wearing costumes at Halloween; nor (3) to persons wearing Santa Claus costumes at Christmas or during the four weeks next preceding; nor (4) to legally constituted persons in the duly authorized performance of governmental functions.

Section 4

That any person violating this ordinance shall, upon conviction before the Recorder of said city, be punished, for each offense, by a fine not exceeding $250 or ninety (90) days confinement, either or both, in the discretion of the Recorder.

Section 5

That this ordinance shall be effective immediately upon passage.

The Klansman

ISSUED MONTHLY FROM THE INVISIBLE EMPIRE

ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, INC.

"The Lord Is My Shield; the Truth Is My Sword"

[illegible] 1, 1948 — NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS — COLUMBUS, GEORGIA — VOLUME ONE NUMBER ONE

Klansmen Alerted

ORIGINAL

[illegible]UTHERN KLANS Inc.

[illegible]LAMATION — 1

[illegible]UBJECT —Ritual Masks

[illegible] all Genii, Grand Dragons, [illegible]ed Cyclops, Terrors and [illegible]ns of the Invisible Em-

GREETINGS:

[illegible]hereas, from time to time, [illegible]oprieties have been com-[illegible]d by masked figures pur-[illegible]ing to represent the Klans,

[illegible]T IS THEREFORE OR-[illegible]RED that from this time [illegible]rward, the mask is banned

[illegible] the [illegible] alistic economics or property of the Klans, or an private property with the [illegible]

Statement Of Policy

The Original Southern Klans were organized and are operated for one specific purpose—to nullify the effect of Communistic teachings on peoples of the South. The Klans have come completely out in the open, unmasked, and are prepared to face the program of villification which will come from the fools who fight the Klans instead of turning on the common enemy which seeks to destroy our South.

We expect, and will get, a shower of brickbats from the "liberal" press, but brickbats from parlor pinks have never discouraged Americans from going after what they need. When the shower is over, we will settle down to the long, hard task of neutralizing the most dangerous propaganda campaign America has ever faced.

The Klans will devote time and money to Negro education; to teaching the minority groups that they can attain a status only when they deserve it. It cannot be forced for them, and it cannot be forced on us. We say that the primary objective is the Negro race because that is the fertile soil on which [illegible] weed flourishes best.

The Klans are not law enforcement agencies. If you are planning on joining the Klans to reform your brother-in-law who drinks too much and beats your sister occasionally,—don't

ORIGINAL

SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc.

OFFICIAL

PROCLAMATION — 2

SUBJECT—

—KLAN OBJECTIVES

To all Genii, Grand Dragons, Exaulted Cyclops, Terrors and Citizens of the Invisible Empire;

GREETINGS:

Whereas, it appears to the affiliate KLANS of the ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc., that the objectives and purposes of the Order were [illegible] the substance and forms of the original Order of the Ku Klux Klan under the leadership of General Nathan Bed[illegible]

All Klansmen in the East Alabama-West Georgia area were ordered today to be on the alert to render immediate assistance to law enforcement officers, if necessary, to prevent an outbreak of interracial violence following the occurance of the fourth of inflammatory incidents between the white and Negro races in the Columbus area within the past two weeks. Klansmen were placed under strict orders to take every measure prescribed by law enforcement officers to avoid a flare of tempers.

The incidents between the races have included the slapping of a white man by a Negro woman during a conversation altercation on a Columbus city bus; the slapping of a white woman by a Negro man after the Negro man had [illegible]

LAMATION — 1

UBJECT —Ritual Masks

all Genii, Grand Dragons, ed Cyclops, Terrors and ns of the Invisible Em-

GREETINGS:

hereas, from time to time, oprieties have been com- d by masked figures pur- ng to represent the Klans,

T IS THEREFORE OR- RED that from this time rward, the mask is banned alistic communics as property of the Klans, or on private property with the [illegible] of the owner [illegible] during licensed parades and demonstrations.

Whereas, the Klans do operate lawfully and in an orderly manner and have nothing to hide from the public at large, the use of the mask is restricted to the purposes above set forth in which the mask symbolizes the secrecy of its membership.

Any Klans personnel violating this order will be immediately subject to PENALTY THREE and all Exalted Cyclops are charged with the enforcement of this order.

BY ORDER OF THE GRAND WIZARD.

Alton E. Pate
Adjutant

RACIAL TENSIONS REPORTEDLY INCREASING

ATLANTA, June 30—Director James V. Bennett of the Federal Bureau of Prisons today said racial tensions are increasing behind the walls of the U. S. penitentiaries.

Bennett, here from Washington, for the federal prison wardens' meeting said the bureau is planning to increase recreational and exercise programs to help combat the problems.

IF YOU'RE NOT AFRAID,

JOIN! IF YOU ARE AFRAID,

WE'LL PROTECT YOU!

The Original Southern Klans were organized and are operated for one specific purpose—to nullify the effect of Communistic teachings on peoples of the South. The Klans have come completely out in the open, unmasked, and are prepared to face the program of villification which will come from the fools who fight the Klans instead of turning on the common enemy which seeks to destroy our South.

We expect, and will get, a shower of brickbats from the "liberal" press, but brickbats from parlor pinks have never discouraged Americans from going after what they need. When the shower is over, we will settle down to the long, hard task of neutralizing the most dangerous propaganda campaign America has ever faced.

The Klans will devote time and money to Negro education; to teaching the minority groups that they can attain a status only when they deserve it. It cannot be forced for them, and it cannot be forced on us. We say that the primary objective is the Negro race because that is the fertile soil on which the [illegible] of Communism are being planted, that is which the [illegible] weed flourishes best.

The Klans are not law enforcement agencies. If you are planning on joining the Klans to reform your brother-in-law who drinks too much and beats your sister occasionally,—don't do it. The Klans will maintain an intelligence unit and if this information is given to that unit, it will only pass it on to the proper law enforcement agency. It will not concern itself with intemperate inlaws, noisy tenants, bad girls, or necking parties on private property.

In other words, don't seek admission to the Klans in hope that it exercies police power. It does not. It does, and will, cooperate with law enforcement groups, but it never will usurp any of the powers they exercise.

Join the Klans to save America!

But not to save your brother-in-law.

An Open Letter To Dr. Brewer

June 30, 1948.

Dr. T. H. Brewer
1025½ 1st Avenue
Columbus, Georgia.
Dear Dr. Brewer:

The occurrence of several inter-racial incidents during the past two weeks in the Columbus area points up all too sharply the necessity for prompt action by members of both races, if racial friction is to be avoided.

With the realization that a discussion of racial problems is a delicate and touchy matter, nevertheless, the real danger of a flare-up prompts me to write you this letter.

The incidents, all of which are set out in this week's KLANSMAN, are becoming publicized by word-of-mouth all over this end of Georgia, and they were deliberately publicized in the KLANSMAN to point up a plea for intelligent action, rather than to wait on bloodshed.

You are the recognized leader among the Negroes of Muscogee County. They followed your suggestions solidly in voting, and they will follow your suggestion solidly in the matter of these pretext-incidents.

Won't you, therefore, publicly ask the Negroes of Columbus and the vicinity to attempt to avoid creating "incidents," to show common courtesy in their inter-racial relations, and to ask the white people to bear no more than they would ask members of their own race to bear in the way of insult and affront?

If you will do this, it is my belief that you will do much to avert a clash which now appears inevitable.

Very truly yours,

BY ORDER OF THE GRAND WIZARD

A. E. Pate, Adjutant.

SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc.

OFFICIAL

PROCLAMATION — 2

SUBJECT—

—KLAN OBJECTIVES

To all Genii, Grand Dragons, Exaulted Cyclops, Terrors and Citizens of the Invisible Empire;

GREETINGS:

Whereas, it appears to the affiliate KLANS of the ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc., that the objectives and purposes of the Order were [illegible] the substance and forms of the original Order of the Ku Klux Klan under the leadership of General Nathan Bedford Forrest; and

Whereas, it appears that the dangers of Communism are rampant throughout the American continent and that only the combined thought and action of patriotic Americans can vitiate those dangers; and

Whereas, it appears that no other Order or organization is prepared to cope with the Communistic infiltration; and

Whereas, the ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS are composed exclusively of native-born citizens having a greater responsibility to the future of

(Continued on page 4)

FOUR NEGROES HELD IN FARMER'S DEATH

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., — June 30 — Four Negroes arrested near the home in which James Edward Weaver, 53-year-old farmer, was found dead Monday night, today were held on recommendation of a coroner's jury.

The jury was unable to determine the cause of Weaver's death, which Dr. James Nunez said was probably a heart attack brought on by exertion, excitement or the heat. Coroner Sam Terry held that there was sufficient cause for suspicion.

The Negroes held for grand jury action are Viola McSwain, Gohen Mitchell, Wyatt Jones and Jones' wife, who lived on the Weaver farm.

Evidence given at a lengthy inquest yesterday said Weaver had a large sum of money when he went to his home Monday, but only a small amount was found when his body was found that night.

were ordered today to be on the alert to render immediate assistance to law enforcement officers, if necessary, to prevent an outbreak of inter-racial violence following the occurance of the fourth of inflammatory incidents between the white and Negro races in the Columbus area within the past two weeks. Klansmen were placed under strict orders to take every measure prescribed by law enforcement officers to avoid a flare of tempers.

The incidents between the races have included the slapping of a white [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] an altercation on a Columbus city bus; the slapping of a white woman by a Negro man after the Negro man had threatened to slap a two-year old child; insulting behavior toward white female personnel of the Columbus City hospital by male Negro personnel; and an obsene and brutal insult hurled at a white woman by a Negro soldier on the streets of Columbus.

The Grand Wizard of the Original Southern Klans, upon being informed the tempers were growing short between the races, issued stern orders that all Klansmen keep alert for any indication of individual or concerted violence and to report such immediately to the proper authorities. The order placed upon Klansmen the duty of watching and listening for any incendiary talk among members of either race and giving the result of such investigation to the authorities at once.

The first incident occurred on Hamilton Avenue in Columbus, Georgia, Sunday afternoon, June 23rd on a public bus when Lieutenant Wilbur O. Mack, a Negro Army officer of Fort Benning, sat beside a white man in the bus. The driver, W. R. Faulk, ordered the Negro Army officer to observe the State segregation law for public vehicles and to move. The Army officer arose and a fight started in which Mary Hawkins, a Negro woman in the face with a heavy pocket-book. A general melee began in the bus and the Negro Army officer struck several persons.

The bus driver locked his doors to prevent some 500 persons who quickly formed outside from joining the riot.

(continued on page 2)

The KLANSMAN

Official Organ Of The
ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc.
809-811 Talbotton Avenue
Columbus, Georgia

A. E. PATE,
Executive Secretary

Published on the first of each month in the interests of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan affiliated with the Original Southern Klans and dedicated to the destruction of Communism in America.

Non silba, sed anthar

The Shape Of Things To Come

Here in the South today, we are fast approaching a climax to scores of years of bumbling race relations which is going to cost blood, sweat and tears.

The lead story of this issue relates four separate incidents, any one of which would have made your grandfather reach for his shotgun with no compunctions.

To blame any of the Negroes involved in these incidents. is to blame a result—not the cause of the incidents. The Negro, without realizing it, is being used as the instrument of the dissension which Karl Marx holds is absolutely essential in priming a people for the sowing of Communism.

The thoughtful people of both races are earnestly urged to use all of the compassion and common sense of which they are capable in dealing with these things, because a multiplication of such incidents as these will inevitably cause actual combat between the races,—and it could happen here, today.

To intelligent people, a discussion of what the ruckus is about, will best enable them to cope with the incidents as they arise. It will be noted in these incidents have one factor in common, a sort of common denominator, as it were. The common denominator is a forced association of Negro people with white people; in two instances slapping of white people is involved, and in the other two instances, an attempt to associate on a basis of "romance" as lust is known to these benighted souls.

An analysis of the teachings of Communism on "social equality" is therefore necessary in order to understand the problem. The teaching of Communism on "social equality" uses the term as it is defined by the people they are infiltrat-

KLANSMEN ALERTED

(Continued from page 1)

The prompt arrival of police, plus the thoughtful action of the bus driver averted a serious disturbance.

Mary Hawkins was sentenced to 90 days in the stockade by City Recorder Alvin Davis, while Lieutenant Mack was bound over to City Court under a $500 bond.

The second incident occured in Columbus shortly afterward on 10th Avenue where Negro and white houses are side by side. A Negro man listed by police as Henry Hunter, alias William Hunter, was passing by the house of a white family when a two-year old child threatened to throw a rock at him. According to witnesses, Hunter said to the child, "If you throw that rock, I'll slap your head off!" The Grandmother of the child was standing on the porch and she stated to Hunter, "If you slap him, you'll have to slap me too." Hunter responded, "Alright, I will," whereup he leaped upon the steps and slapped the 76-year old Grandmother. She struck at him, and Hunter knocked her down, injuring her legs severly. Hunter disregarded all pleas and attempted restraint of his wife and mother-in-law when he ran up the steps to strike the white woman.

Hunter fled to the home of a nearby policeman and was removed to the city jail. He is at liberty under bond pending action in the City Court of Columbus.

Hunter is reported to have said to officers at the city jail that he was acting under the Civil Rights Bill in slapping the elderly white woman.

Nurses at the Columbus City Hospital were reported to be carrying pistols in their uniforms this week to protect themselves against molestation by Negro male employees when the nurses were forced by official business to visit the basement of the hospital. Tension between the races employed in the hospital was reported to have mounted when hospital authorities issued instructions that all white nurses address Negro orderlies, patients, and employes of the hospital as Mister, Miss, or Mistress as the case might be. The sarcastic treatment of the white nurses by male Negro personnel following this order is partially responsible for the attitude of the white nurses.

One nurse was reported to be armed against an impending proposal of a Negro doctor practicing in the hospital, and the nurse stated that his behavior clearly indicated that he was ready to practice "social equality" with her, and that she intended to resist his attempt at "social equality" with force and arms, if necessary.

Informed sources in the city administration stated today that unless drastic steps were taken by the Columbus city administration to lessen the racial tension, that violent trouble was likely to flare at any moment.

The fourth and most serious incident occurred in Columbus on Saturday, June 26th when police officers found a white woman sobbing on the streets while she was attempting to reach a telephone to call police headquarters. She related to patrol car officers that she had stopped for a stop sign at 4th Avenue and 5th Street, when Private Edward C. Merriman, a Negro soldier from the 25th Infantry at Fort Benning, shouted at her, "What's the matter, baby? If you can't drive that car, I can and I mean it, you white mother f---r!" The white lady drove to 4th Street and 4th Avenue looking for police officers and the Negro soldier followed her. The police found Merriman trying to batter his way into the door of a Trailway Bus with a bottle. He was taken to police headquarters where he resisted being searched and assaulted the arresting officers. Later, Merriman was removed to the hospital for treatment where he called the hospital doctors by the same filthy epithets he had applied to the white woman. The Negro had been drinking, the officers stated.

The lady who was thus obscenely accosted is a resident of Garden Drive in Columbus.

The Negro soldier, Merriman, was released on bond and returned to nearby Fort Benning where no segregation is practiced between the races.

Local law enforcement authorities expressed grave concern over the attitude of Negroes who seemed determined

HELP WANTED

Male or Female

Wanted in each county in Georgia, a Klan organizer for pleasant, profitable work among patriotic men and women. Good pay, steady employment. Only sober, Christian men or max to scores of years of bumbling race relations which is going to cost blood, sweat and tears.

The lead story of this issue relates four separate incidents, any one of which would have made your grandfather reach for his shotgun with no compunctions.

To blame any of the Negroes involved in these incidents. is to blame a result—not the cause of the incidents. The Negro, without realizing it, is being used as the instrument of the dissension which Karl Marx holds is absolutely essential in priming a people for the sowing of Communism.

The thoughtful people of both races are earnestly urged to use all of the compassion and common sense of which they are capable in dealing with these things, because a multiplication of such incidents as these will inevitably cause actual combat between the races,—and it could happen here, today.

To intelligent people, a discussion of what the ruckus is about, will best enable them to cope with the incidents as they arise. It will be noted in these incidents have one factor in common, a sort of common denominator, as it were. The common denominator is a forced association of Negro people with white people; in two instances slapping of white people is involved, and in the other two instances, an attempt to associate on a basis of "romance" as lust is known to these benighted souls.

An analysis of the teachings of Communism on "social equality" is therefore necessary in order to understand the problem. The teaching of Communism on "social equality" uses the term as it is defined by the people they are infiltrating with their doctrines.

In 1917 Russia, the term "social equality" meant the right to rape, rob, burn, pillage and plunder, and finally to exterminate the ones who has been the ruling class.

To a Negro, "social equality" is defined in terms of a Negro "social," and that is the "equality" he wants. Any experienced Southerner knows that a Negro "social" begins with a drink and ends with a fight. In between drink and fight, there is eating together and various romatic acts conducted with varying degrees of moral laxity,—but there is nearly always, in the amorality, an element of force which is usually absent in inter-sex relations among the Caucasians.

Therefore, there is always, just beneath the surface of man-woman relations among the Negroes, a hint or threat of force on the part of the male, which is one of the contra-distinguishing characteristics of the sex-relations of that race.

Therefore, when the Communist organizer or pamphleteer speaks to the Negro with a view to organizing him, he holds out the overt promise of unbridled drinking, feasting, fighting and fiddling with persons of the white race,—all of which inflames the male Negro to the point of scarlet insanity.

We are dealing with a harsh, raw aspect of race relations, but this Order is pledged to destroy the cause which inflames the Negro, rather than to attempt to cope with mere results.

There are hundreds of raped white women in America today who were raped with Russian money—money spent to inflame the Negro to orgiastic heights so that he would do just what he did.

To the Communistic group, the purpose is two-fold; the first to show the minority group Negro just what he is missing by being denied "civil rights," and the other to cause the majority groups to take action which will appear as "oppression" because he is being denied his "civil rights." After disunity, comes Communism.

The answer is not found in the knout, rope, faggot, or torch with the offending Negro on the other end. The answer is found in a cold, calculated plan to make the Negro realize the correlative duties which go with civil rights. A plan of education which includes a rationalization of the proposition that two races can dwell in amity in the same community so long as they dwell apart.

No person, be he Jew, Catholic, Moslem, atheist, or Protestant, is a fit and decent American if he contribute even by one jot or tittle to the disunity of America by encouraging a minority group to flout law, order, and the conventions of the society in which they live.

The Negro in the South is in a fair way of becoming like a crippled child in a family of twelve. Petted, spoiled, indulged, fawned on, and given his way by all the rest of the social family, he will become an unbearable pest, socially, politically, and economically.

If he exercises the balance of power in an election or two, he will become a pawn of such proportions that the interest of all the majority of white people will be subordinated to the interest of the minority group.

This is not democracy, and this is not tolerable.

There is food for intelligent Negro thought in the four incidents related elsewhere in this week's KLANSMAN. No white man would have tolerated from a white man what has been tolerated from a Negro this week in Columbus. It is asking white men to strain their tolerance pretty far to tolerate these things in a Negro.

The attitude of harsh and resentful thrusting of themselves upon white people, in a manner which white people do not permit other white people to do, will in the end cause more trouble than the Communist party can come in and get stopped in time to save a lot of innocent folks.

White people are urged to be extra tolerant of Negroes trying out their civil-right wings. Negroes are urged not to be any more discourteous than they could expect to get by with in their own race.

If that is not done, no one can be answerable for the result mother of the child was standing on the porch and she stated to Hunter, "If you slap him, you'll have to slap me too." Hunter responded, "Alright, I will," whereup he leaped upon the steps and slapped the 76-year old Grandmother. She struck at him, and Hunter knocked her down, injuring her legs severly. Hunter disregarded all pleas and attempted restraint of his wife and mother-in-law when he ran up the steps to strike the white woman.

the case might be. The sarcastic treatment of the white nurses by male Negro personnel following this order is partially responsible for the attitude of the white nurses.

One nurse was reported to be armed against an impending proposal of a Negro doctor practicing in the hospital, and the nurse stated that his behavior clearly indicated that he was ready to practice "social equality" with her, and that she intended to resist his mean it, you white mother f---r!" The white lady drove to 4th Street and 4th Avenue looking for police officers and the Negro soldier followed her. The police found Merriman trying to batter his way into the door of a Trailway Bus with a bottle. He was taken to police headquarters where he resisted being searched and assaulted the arresting officers. Later, Merriman was removed to the hospital for treatment where he called the hospital doctors by the same filthy epithets he had applied to the white woman. The Negro had been drinking, the officers stated.

The lady who was thus obscenely accosted is a resident of Garden Drive in Columbus.

The Negro soldier, Merriman, was released on bond and returned to nearby Fort Benning where no segregation is practiced between the races.

Local law enforcement authorities expressed grave concern over the attitude of Negroes who seemed determined to create incidents which might result in mass violence.

The incidents are becoming more widely known in Columbus and its immediate vicinity, which led the Grand Wizard of the Original Southern Klans to issue a statement to all Klans personnel.

"The June 2nd elections in Muscogee County which resulted in victory for all bloc Negro-supported candidates except two, have caused widespread repercussions among the peoples of both races," the Grand Wizard said. "The emotional impact of political victory in the less intelligent Negroes carries serious implications. It is the time for cool heads and wise judgment among Klansmen who are sworn to uphold the law. Stand by now to help officers. All Klansmen are forbidden to take part in any individual or mass violence and are specifically ordered to keep sharp serrtiny for impending disturbances and to notify the proper officers before they occur. This way, and this way only can we uphold our oath and support the principle of law and order which we represent. Keep your heads cool and persuade your neighbors to do the same. An overt violent act now could destroy much of the work of he Klans and it is to be averted even at the price of insult and personal affront. We are striving for a goal under which this kind of conduct would not occur. Keep striving!"

Meanwhile, in Columbus, tension grows.

HELP WANTED

Male or Female

Wanted in each county in Georgia, a Klan organizer for pleasant, profitable work among patriotic men and women. Good pay, steady employment. Only sober, Christian men or women of excellent character need apply. If your record will bear close investigation, apply to the address below.

Also need a settled man as supervisory organizer in each Congressional District in Georgia.

ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, INC.

809-811 Talbotton Ave.

COLUMBUS, GA.

You Need The KLAN!

THE KLAN NEEDS YOU!

★ ☆ ☆ ★

WHITE, GENTILE, PROTESTANT AMERICANS Are Eligible For Membership

★ ☆ ☆ ★

JOIN TODAY!

MEN AND WOMEN, OVER THE AGE OF 16 ARE INVITED TO

WHITE, GENTILE, PROTESTANT AMERICANS Are Eligible For Membership

★ ☆ ☆ ★

JOIN TODAY!

MEN AND WOMEN, OVER THE AGE OF 16 ARE INVITED TO JOIN THE RANKS OF LOYAL AMERICANS WHO ARE NOW FIGHTING THE VICIOUS INROADS OF COMMUNISM ON THE AMERICAN WAY OF LIFE

★ ☆ ☆ ★

GET IN TODAY AND HELP!

CALL FOR COMPLETE INFORMATION

Original Southern Klans, Inc.

809-811 Talbotton Avenue

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

TELEPHONE 3-8636

A. E. Pate, Executive Secretary

PROCLAMATION — 2—

(continued from page 1)

America than any other organization in the United States and that it must not, and will not, shirk that responsibility; and

Whereas, it appears that the principles of Klaneraft must be promulgated among the white peoples of America to save the individual, the home, the church, the school, and the government of America,

Now, therefore, IT IS ORDERED THAT THE ORIGINAL KLANS RIDE AGAIN! and that they shoulder the responsibility of preserving the democratic way of life through lawful and orderly means; that it prepare to face the enemy from without and within and militantly resist the attempt to turn the United States of America into the United Soviet States of America; that it bend its mighty effort to maintain the democratic forms and substance of our country.

To that end, the Klans are dedicated to the following aims:

1. The militant defense of Protestant Americanism.

2. The unending opposition to forces which advocate blending of the white race with any other race.

3. The maintenance of the Southern white man's position of political superiority.

4. Preventing political dominance of any inferior minority group.

5. Just and equal laws and law enforcement, removal of the causes of lynching and mob rule, the maintenance of all

KLAN UNMASKED

COLUMBUS, Ga., June 29, 1948.—The first official act of the newly-incorporated ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS, Inc. was to ban the use of the traditional Klan mask, according to Alton E. Pate, Executive Secretary of the Original Southern Klans group. The new Klans group, were granted a charter by Judge T. Hicks Fort, Judge of Muscogee County Superior Court here today.

The incorporators of the new corporation were named as Pate, A. L. Hill, and T. L. Colwell, all of Columbus, Ga. The incorporators stated that an undisclosed number of existing Klans, all pledged to preserve the Southern way of life for the South, were members of the parent corporation.

In a prepared statement, Pate stated that the Klans affiliated with the new corporation; have no connection with any existing group or association of a similar nature, but that the new group consists of old Klans which wished to return to the original aims and purposes of the Klans of General Nathan Bedford Forrest, founder of the Original Klan.

The new Klans, Pate stated, will use no masks nor demonstrate in any way except such as are permitted by local laws and ordinances. The Klans will tolerate no rowdyism among its membership, nor will any acts of terrorism be permitted. The objectives of the Klans will be achieved by the use of the ballot and the social sanctions directed against those

AN UNKNOWN ADMIRER

Dallas, Georgia

June 30, 1948

Mr. Alton E. Pate,

Columbus, Georgia

Dear Sir:

Noticing that you have organized a new Klan, I wish to state a few things. In the first place, I have it on what I consider good authority that the original Klan was sold out for four million dollars. The Klan at that time had a large number lecturing against Catholicism. One of the lecturers, one who did not quit from orders at the top, states this as a fact. Anyhow, the lecturers were all called in. And so far as I can see, the present Klan headed by Dr. Samtel Green, is still owned by the Catholics. It is doubtless kept alive to keep down a real Klan.

I have never been a member of the Klan. While I was in sympathy with its purposes, I have thought all the while that it was badly handled. Trying to correct the moral conduct of the country, which was maybe good in intention, is an impossibility. Too many mistakes can be made to give the order a bad odor. On the other hand, a wise strategy committee could accomplish in a tactful way much more good. A research force who can and should collect indisputable it is these underground organizations which fight your Klan the hardest and seek to bring your organization into disrepute.

I would not favor whipping and punishing of people by the Klan, but a lively interest in seeing that officials do their duty. But I do think that researchers should seek out and verify the names of persons throughout the country who are responsible for the underhand methods being used. A list should be made of them and their addresses so that a well organized Klan can be ready to do fast and quick work in the event something is started in the way of war by these undergrounders. In other words, the Klan should ever be ready with an organized force to defend the rights of the public and defend quickly and successfully before they can bring their forces into play.

As many as two should remain constantly on the grounds about Washington who will report every trend or adverse activity to the Klan membership. They should know who are being admitted into this country, their race and membership. There is an abundance for a Klan to do of real service, a counter force against the large lobby maintained at Washington who seek to run the government and all of the states. They are at the root of putting the Negro on a level with the white, they need their votes.

KLANAGRAPHS

A stiff rebuke to Klansman Number 1-2-633 for his fond wish in Klavern the other night that since a certain Columbus newspaper editor, who used to be known as "Boozy" down Miami way, had gotten his civil right desire in the matter of throwing out restrictive deeds covenants involving races, that the biggest, blackest neighbor immediately move right in beside "Boozy".

Now, Now! Number [illegible] what has that poor bl[illegible] that you would wish [illegible] ful a fate on him!

A reprimand to you.

• • • •

July 4th will see seven completely new Klans chartered by the ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS. A [illegible] of Independence Day, [illegible]

• • • •

It is not true, as told by Rastus Brown's gal that he is head of the Klan because he is a wizard under the sheet.

$1.00 ORDER ☐

America into the United Soviet States of America; that it bend its mighty effort to maintain the democratic forms and substance of our country.

To that end, the Klans are dedicated to the following aims:

1. The militant defense of Protestant Americanism.

2. The unending opposition to forces which advocate blending of the white race with any other race.

3. The maintenance of the Southern white man's position of political superiority.

4. Preventing political dominance of any inferior minority group.

5. Just and equal laws and law enforcement, removal of the causes of lynching and mob rule, the maintenance of all American rights, protection of American workers and farmers, the restriction of immigration, the expulsion from America of foreign propagandists seeking to subvert democratic principles, and militant upholding of the law and militant assistance to law enforcement officers.

6. Better schools, churches, recreational facilities, and housing facilities for minority groups in the South under strictly segregated conditions.

7. Unceasing vigilance in teaching the principles of Christian Americanism to minority groups of the South.

8. Militant opposition to the teachings of the Communistic party which embody the advocacy of "sexual equality" under the guise of "social equality."

Let these things be done. Let them be done by free, white Americans! Let them begin today! The hour is late and the danger near!

BY ORDER OF
THE GRAND WIZARD OF THE KLANS

Alton E. Pate, Adjutant.

A. E. Pate
809-811 Talbotton Ave.
Columbus, Ga.

I want to join the Klan; send me some literature or send some one to see me.

_____
Name

_____
Address

...ize for the South, were members of the parent corporation.

In a prepared statement, Pate stated that the Klans affiliated with the new corporation; have no connection with any existing group or association of a similar nature, but that the new group consists of old Klans which wished to return to the original aims and purposes of the Klans of General Nathan Bedford Forrest, founder of the Original Klan.

The new Klans, Pate stated, will use no masks nor demonstrate in any way except such as are permitted by local laws and ordinances. The Klans will tolerate no rowdyism among its membership, nor will any acts of terrorism be permitted. The activities of the Klans will be confined to the use of the ballot and the social sanctions directed against those who seek to destroy the Southern way.

Pate stated that the membership will use education and counter-propaganda against the forces of Communism which seek to dominate the South by the use of minority groups as the balance of power.

Secretary Pate, who is also Adjutant of the national order, said that the new corporation is designed as a "profit organization" only because that was the one point of law on which the charter of the last incorporated Klan was revoked and that the designation of the corporation as a "profit organization" simply means that it will be operated for the common profit of all America, and that its stockholders expect to realize no return on the money they have placed in escrow as an investment in the American future.

The corporation, he added, will make its tax returns as any other private organization. Nothing, he said, will be secret in the work of the Klans except its membership.

The membership of the New Klans organization will operate two charities, one a hospital for tubercular children, and an alcoholics hospital for the reclamation of persons of all creeds, races and faiths who are afflicted with that dread ailment. The Klans have chosen these two charities, he said, because no adequate facilities for them now exists.

Pate declined to state the number of Klans affiliated with the new corporation and he refused to name the national officers who are elected by vote of the Klans. "Each man's membership is his own secret,: he said, "And only he is authorized to reveal it."

The new corporation opened offices today at 809-811 Talbotton Road in Columbus and Pate said these offices would be used temporarily as national headquarters.

The first issue of the "THE KLANSMAN", house organ of the Klans will come off the presses this week, Pate said.

Radio programs and short movies are in process of preparation, the secretary stated. The new Klans will avoid political affiliations but will keep sharp scrutiny on office-seekers who attempt to manipulate the votes of minority groups to their detriment.

...olicism. One of the lecturers, one who did not quit from orders at the top, states this as a fact. Anyhow, the lecturers were all called in. And so far as I can see, the present Klan headed by Dr. Samtel Green, is still owned by the Catholics. It is doubtless kept alive to keep down a real Klan.

I have never been a member of the Klan. While I was in sympathy with its purposes, I have thought all the while that it was badly handled. Trying to correct the moral conduct of the country, which was maybe good in intention, is an impossibility. Too many mistakes can be made to give the order a bad odor. On the other hand, a wise strategy committee could accomplish in a tactful way much more good. A reserve force who can and should collect indisputable facts and expose the cliques who are seeking to undermine the U. S. Constitution and keeping secrets, which would otherwise operate to our hurt, exposed. Bring them all out into the light. This could be of inestimable value.

There is in both the Catholic and Jewish organizations underground forces which are stealing American business. A sound policy to fight intelligently these underground forces and keeping their thievish methods from operating is a goal worthy of a Klan. And ...

...ered in the way of war by these undergrounders. In other words, the Klan should ever be ready with an organized force to defend the rights of the public and defend quickly and successfully before they can bring their forces into play.

As many as two should remain constantly on the grounds about Washington who will report every trend or adverse activity to the Klan membership. They should know who are being admitted into this country, their race and membership. There is an abundance for a Klan to do of real service, a counter force against the large lobby maintained at Washington who seek to run the government and all of the states. They are at the back of putting the Negro on a level with the white, they need their votes.

Let us hope that yours will be a patriotic organization and that the funds will be used to preserve our Constitution.

With best wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

P. S. Since I do not want publicity, I will not sign my name. My only purpose is to help you get off in the right direction.

GRAND WIZARD'S COMMENT: If you had written our statement of policy, it could not have coincided more exactly with things as we see them. We intend to turn the pitiless light of publicity on these people..

Why not come on in and join the fight?

...what has that poor ... that you would wish ... ful a fate on him?

A reprimand to you.

• • • •

July 4th will see seven completely new Klans chartered by the ORIGINAL SOUTHERN KLANS. A ... of Independence Day, ...

• • •

It is not true, as told by Rastus Brown's gal that he is head of the Klan because he is a wizard under the sheet.

PLEASE ENTER MY SUBSCRIPTION TO —

The KLANSMAN 12 issues $1.00

Inclosed: CHECK ☐ CASH ☐ MONEY ORDER ☐

NAME

ADDRESS

A. E. Pate,
809-811 Talbotton Ave.
Columbus, Georgia

I am interested in getting a KLAN started in my town or county. Send someone to see me. He can contact me at the address below.

_____
Name

_____
Address

_____
Occupation

(From white press. Alabama omitted) KKK

7/24/49 List of laws

PATTERN OF VIOLENCE

(From April 1, 1949 ----)

to July 24, 1949

HOOKER, Ga., April 2 — Seven Negroes, while in costody of the sheriff, were seized and flogged by a mob in Ku Klux Klan regalia. The sheriff, 3 deputies, and a private citizen were indicted by a grand jury on May 11 for "assault and battery" on the Negroes and for failing to suppress mob violence.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 3 — A white fireman, abducted by four masked men, was beaten after a gunny sack had been placed over his head. Taken into the woods, he was stripped of all his clothing, tied to a tree, and given 25 lashes. His abductors told him he had not been "treating his family with respect."

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 5 — Five unmasked white men entered the home of a white railway worker and beat him severely with a pistol. The victim said that his attackers gave no reason for the beating, which was the 16th in a series of beatings in the Chattanooga area. 8 white men and 8 Negroes have been beaten and terrorized.

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 6 — 15-foot cross burned near the site of a proposed Negro housing unit.

GASTONIA, North Carolina, April 26 — Dormant in this locality for two decades, Klan burned cross on lawn of anti-Klan newspaper editor who had exposed and condemned resurgence of Klan activities.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 1 — An anonymous telephone warning and a burning cross marked "KKK" at his front door, threatened a City Councilman the night before he introduced an anti-mask ordinance in Atlanta City Council.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn, May 5 — A Baptist minister, who had openly admitted membership in the Ku Klux Klan, was re-elected pastor of his church, despite protests from some of his congregation. In a prepared statement for the press, the minister said: "I wish to state publicly that I am a member of the Klan. I believe in the principles of the organization. The Klan is for God and country, and as a minister of the Gospel I find nothing inconsistent with my membership therein and my work in the vineyard of the Lord."

ORANGEBURG, S.C., May 5 — Dr. Samual Green, Grand Dragon of the Klan, addressed approximately 900 hooded Klansmen following a cross-burning outside city limits. Later, a 148-car motorcade sped through town ignoring traffic signals.

DOLLY POND, Tenn., May 7 — Fifteen or twenty armed and masked men, believed to be Klansmen, terrorized the community for an hour or more. Six white persons, two of them minors, were beaten with blackjacks, and a local resident was threatened in his home. The Hooded mob also staged a parade around the Dolly Pond church, firing their pistols into the air. Two men, accused of taking part in the terrorism, were indicted by a grand jury on June 29.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., May 7 — A group of unmasked men threatened a white mechanic in his home after accusing him of "drinking". Although ill, the mechanic was armed with a pistol, and the men did not molest him.

Cross 10/2 SAC Birmingham Today

COLUMBIA, S.C., May 8 — 76-year old Negro farmer seized by 15 white men, stripped and beaten. One of the unmasked attackers was reported to have said: "We white folks are going to run this state."

CLINTON, Tenn., May 12 — Crosses burned before homes of 2 white lawyers. Note found by one cross wared "You had better get out of town", and was signed "Knights of the Ku Klux Klan".

WARNER ROBINS, Ga., May 12 — Ku Klux Klan mile-long parade passed through; among the 50-odd cars and 400 reported participants were three floats and two school buses.

JUPITER, Fla., May 14 — Second cross within a week burned near newly dedicated Negro beach.

LAFAYETTE, Ga., May 16 — Some 20 men in KKK costume held a noose around the neck of a white war veteran and horsewhipped him. Taken from his home and family at night, ~~xxxxx~~ victim says he was accused by nightriders of drunkenness and failure to support his family. He reported a similar assault on a friend in a neighboring community.

MACON, Ga., May 17 — White man sentenced to life imprisonment in connection with slaying of two Negroes last March.

SOPERTON, Ga., May 21 — The Mayor of Soperton ripped the masked off three men who had frightened several women by wandering around the streets in Klan regalia. The men were arrested, but charges of disorderly conduct against them were dismissed in Recorder's Court for lack of evidence. Grand Dragon Green accused the Mayor of violating the "Civil Rights" of the three men by unmasking them.

CLARKSVILLE, Va., May 24 --Revival of Klan "gangsterism" reported with unsolved beating of young Negro.

IRWINTON, Ga., May 30 — The first lynching of 1949 took place when Caleb Hill, 28-year-old Negro, was ~~xxxx~~taken from the jail by two or more white men and shot to death. Hill had been arrested after a fight in a Negro cafe and allegedly had fired at the sheriff. The sheriff was absent from the jail when Hill was abducted and had left the keys to the jail on a table in a downstairs room. Two white men, suspected of the lynching, were freed by the grand jury on grounds of "insufficient evidence". This marked the 26th unsolved lynching of Negroes in Georgia since 1930.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 30 -- An estimated 50 to 100 white persons gathered in front of Negro homes in a "white" area and ordered them to "get out". There were reports of threatened violence.

MACON, Ga., June 3 -- Federal grand jury indicted a deputy sheriff and 7 other residents of Harris County in connection with the year-old beating of a Negro. According to the indictment, the Negro was arrested by the sheriff, and then turned over to the others, who beat him with an axe handle to repay a grudge.

GASTONIA, N. C., June 5 — Newly organized Klan chapter interrupted services in two churches, as robed members marked resurgence of movement in N. C.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 6 — Police reported the kidnapping and beating of an unidentified Negro boy by five white youths. Bystanders were quoted as saying that the Negro was beaten and then forced into a car bearing Georgia license plates.

MARION, N.C., June 10 and June 17 — The Governor was asked to investigate beatings of two union organizers. Police allegedly witnessed one of the beatings and were accused of "cynical complicity" in a "reign of terror" against union activity.

HOUSTON, Miss, June 12 — A deputy sheriff reported that he had outwitted a mob of armed men who gathered at the jail to seize a Negro rape suspect. The deputy told the mob that he had a number of suspects but "did not have the guilty one". Later the prisoner was secretly moved to a safer jail.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 13 — Six law officers went on trial for the beating of a Negro prisoner.

STONE MOUNTAIN, Ga., June 14 — The Ku Klux Klan staged a ceremony at which more than 100 new members were initiated.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., June 17 — It was reported that the Hamilton County Grand Jury was investigating the police department and the attorney general's office for suspected Ku Klux Klan activity by policemen.

CHESNEE, S.C., June 26 -- A six-foot cross was burned in a white neighborhood on the outskirts of Chesnee. A crudely printed sign, found nearby, stated: "The KKK came today. And we are here to stay." A witness was reported to have seen three men plant the burning cross.

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C., July 2 — White man, accused of shooting a Negro woman, was saved by police from an angry Negro mob.

HOUSTON, MISS., July 9 — Two white men were jailed for the fatal beating of a Negro. The Negro was killed with an auto jack because he was "hogging the road" with his wagon.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., July 12 — A Milledgeville grocer and the Baldwin County Coroner were indicted for the shootings of two Negro women, allegedly in an argument over a debt collection.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., July 12 — A white man was held in the severe beating and subsequent death of a 65-year-old Negro man.

DUBLIN, Ga., July 13 - Motorcade of hooded Klansmen.

ORANGEBURG, S.C., July 16 — Crosses were burned in front of a private residence and a dance hall; nobody reported seeing the cross-burners. One victim applied for a gun permit.

COLUMBIA, Tenn., July 16 — Beating reported of a man and woman by a "hooded group" in the Pulaski Pike section 5 miles from Columbia.

GROVELAND, Fla., July 16 — Four Negroes were accused of beating a white man and kidnapping and assaulting his wife. After three of the Negroes had been apprehended and placed in an undisclosed jail, a mob of 100 armed white men approached the jail and demanded the prisoners. The sheriff told them that the prisoners had been moved and, after an hour of talking, convinned the mob that it should leave. The following evening the mob returned and fired several shots into the Negro section. There were no casualties, since almost all of Grovelands 400 Negroes had been moved out of town for safekeeping. The National Guard was called out to maintain order in the town.

SOPERTON, Ga., July 17 — About 150 robed and hooded Klansmen paraded through town in a 40-car caravan, burning a cross in the middle of town. Several of the cars had their license plates either removed or covered.

GROVELAND, Fla., July 17 -- A group of 20 cars passed through town, tossing into the streets pamphlets entitled "Ideals of the Ku Klux Klan".

GROVELAND, Fla., July 18 — A mob of armed white men burned down three Negro homes, whose occupants had fled town earlier. The same evening, the sheriff dispersed with tear gas bombs a mob of about 50 men riding through Stuckey's Still, a Negro community near Groveland. National Guardsmen were called out for the second night in a row to protect the Negro section of Groveland.

GROVELAND, Fla., July 21 — National Guardsmen seized a man and confiscated his pistol after he had been observed cruising near a Negro settlement at nearby Clermont. He was later released. Guards were still posted around the Negro sections of Groveland.

GROVELAND, Fla., July 21 — A special grand jury indicted three Negroes for rape. The indictment made no mention of a fourth Negro who allegedly participated in the crime.

POLK CITY, Fla., July 21 — A cross was burned by a group of unidentified men in the yard of a Negro elementary school in Polk City, where the fourth Negro suspect in the Groveland case was thought to be hiding out.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 22 — Grand Dragon Green denied allegations of two attorneys that they had been threatened by the Klan and that one had been shot at and had a cross burned on his lawn on July 14. The attorneys had previously asked the courts to enjoin "Dr. Samuel Green, doing business as the Ku Klux Klan", from threatening a client.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., July 22 — Dynamite damaged the porch of a Negro home recently purchased from a white family.

GROWING PUBLIC SENTIMENT AGAINST THE KU KLUX KLAN

Louisville, Ky. March 14, 1949. Dr. Hugh A. Brimm, Executive Secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, "recently" urged pastors to refuse to accept donations from Klansmen, stating that "the bringing of such bribes into the church ought to be openly resented and refused by Christian people."

Thomson, Ga. April. Upon the formation of a klavern of the Ku Klux Klan, a group of leading citizens met and made a public statement urging citizens to "think very seriously" before joining the Klan. "Our law-making, judicial, and enforcement agencies, both local and otherwise, are men chosen by us, either directly or indirectly. They need the full cooperation of every loyal citizen toward giving us better government, better courts, and better law enforcement. But, in our opinion, we do not need an organization which operates in concealment, and which takes unto itself the powers of the courts and law enforcement officers. Such usurpation of power is destructive of our democratic way of life. It would be wrong and undemocratic if practiced openly — practiced in concealment it becomes cowardly as well."

Chattanooga, Tenn. April 6, 1949. Commissioner Hyatt stated that he will recommend to the City Commission the dismissal of any policeman or fireman found to be a member of the Ku Klux Klan, declaring that "membership in the Klan is prima facie evidence that the member at times stands for lawlessness instead of the law and order which he has sworn to uphold."

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 7, 1949. Criminal Judge Raulston Schoolfield, charging the grand jury to investigate mob violence in Chattanooga, stated:

> "What right has any man or group of men to declare themselves the jury, the judge, the sheriff, and the executioner? For every grievance we have, there is a court in which to seek redress.....
>
> "This is one of the most cowardly forms of law violation. The fact that we allow things like these to go on is a disgrace. We here in the South have a right to run our own affairs and we resent too much Government control. The people who claim they have a right to pass Federal laws have a perfectly sound argument when they say we are not protecting our citizens....
>
> "I suggest these crimes, particularly mob violence, be investigated long and diligently. It is an important matter to this court. It bids for disrespect of the law. If a mob...goes unpunished, others will have utter contempt for the law.
>
> "...I urge you closely to investigate these things. They are momentous matters not only to Hamilton County Chattanooga but the entire United States. The court will not tolerate such activities."

Trenton, Ga., April 12. Superior Court Judge J. H. Paschall told the grand jury investigation of Klan activities:

> "When any band of masked men assumes to take the law into its own hands, and under the cover of darkness goes out and administers punishment to anybody, that is striking at the foundations of our form of government -- un-American and contrary to the principles of freedom and the right to trial by jury that we have been taught to believe in and do believe in."

Columbus, Ga., April 19, 1949 The Georgia Baptist Sunday School Convention condemned hooded organizations and the effort anywhere in the world to agitate racial or religious prejudice.

Atlanta, Ga. May 2. City Council passed an ordinance banning the wearing of masks on the Atlanta streets.

Chattanooga, Tenn., May 16, 1949 Criminal Judge Raulston Schoolfield again denounces mob violence in a charge to the grand jury investigating activities of masked mobs in and near Chattanooga:

> "We have been hearing a lot lately about the Ku Klux Klan, or what purports to be the Klan -- it doesn't matter what it is. It is a violation of the law to go masked.
> We sometimes have a distorted idea of what our duties are as citizens, but if there was ever a time or place for the Klan, that day is ended.
> There is no occasion, rhyme, reason, or excuse for such activities. If you believe in law and order, then these people have no right or place in our community.
> To allow such acts to go unpunished is a badge of dishonor on every one of us. I particularly call your attention to these* laws because violation of them violates the very basis of our society. These acts of violence by hooded mobsters undermine the very principles of free government."

* The Tennessee "anti-Klan" statute forbids going masked. A masked person performing an assault with a deadly weapon may be sentenced to death in the electric chair upon conviction. The simple act of going masked in public carries a penalty of up to 11 months, 29 days in the county jail and a fine of from $100 to $500.
Must prove intent under this law however.

Augusta, Ga., June 8, 1949 Augusta City Council passed an ordinance prohibiting the wearing of masks in public places.

Atlanta, Ga., June 14, 1949 Judge J.M.C. Townsend of the Georgia Court of Appeals, speaking before the Atlanta Civitan Club, condemned the Ku Klux Klan for its threat to American freedom. Citing specific recent cases of Klan violence throughout Georgia and neighboring states, Judge Townsend stated that "hooded mobsters" have become self-appointed judges, jurors and executioners, and as such, are threatening our basic rights. The judge declared that there is no place in America for "religious hatred and intolerance, for preachments which cause one group to rise up against another."

Macon, Ga., June 17, 1949 A resolution deploring police action by hooded and masked groups adopted by the Georgia Baptist Training Union Assembly at the end of its one-week session at Mercer University.

Washington, D.C., June 26, 1949 Atlanta Constitution Editor Ralph McGill, in a radio broadcast here, urged the Southern States to pass laws unmasking the Ku Klux Klan.

Moultrie, Ga., July 11, 1949 Moultrie City Council passed ordinance prohibiting the wearing of masks except by special written permission granted upon receipt of a written request stating the purpose, route, and other particulars of the parade.

Areas which have passed anti-mask ordinances:

State of Tenn.
State of Alabama
Albany, Ga. (7-10-49)
Atlanta, Georgia
Augusta, Georgia
Macon, Georgia
Valdosta, Georgia
Columbus, Georgia
Wrightsville, Georgia
Swainsboro, Georgia
Gainesville, Georgia
Moultrie, Georgia

Knoxville, Tennessee - anti mask + anti cross burning Nashville, Tenn.
Tallahassee, Florida
Bartow, Flordia
Miami, Florida
Miami Beach, Florida
South Miami, Florida
Miami Shores, Florida
Coral Gables, Florida
Atlantic Beach, Florida
Auburn, Ala. (7/14/49)

~~According to press reports Chattanooga, Tenn. has also passed an anti-mask ordinance.~~

Statement by Ga. Press Association against mob (Klan) violence -- 1949 Meeting (June '49 ?)

---

anti-mask ordinances - cont.

Cedartown, Ga.
Iron City, Ga.
Morristown, Tenn. (source: ADL)
Charlotte, N.C. - 12/14/49 (anti-mask + hood)
Raleigh, N.C. - 3 Jan 50 (anti-mask)
Opelika, Ala. - 2-7-50 (anti-parade)
State of S.C. (Feb. 1950) - anti-mask
Clayton, Ga. - 6 April 1950

Tarpon Springs, Fla. (mask + cross-burning)
West Miami, Fla.
Columbia, S.C.

OFFICIAL UNCONCERN

Nashville, Tenn., July 5. Governor Browning stated that he had not "seen anything that makes it look like the situation is especially out of hand in Tennessee" and reiterated his earlier opinion that local law enforcement authorities must handle Klan violence.

Atlanta, Georgia, July 21 Governor Talmadge told two visiting German editors he didn't believe the Ku Klux Klan's membership is large enough to be significant. Talmadge further told the visiting editors he knew of no acts of violence being committed in Georgia by the present-day Klan. He said that he will enforce the State laws in event anyone or any organization violates them.

Statement by Alex Boone, Editor of ~~two~~ Wilkinson County (Irwinton, Ga.) ~~Newspaper~~, at Ga. Press Assoc. 1949 Meeting — defended Klan.

This report prepared + circulated by Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Summer 1949

RECEIVED
AUG 31 1949
Southern Regional Council

There has been so much confusing news of Klan activity in recent weeks that the following summarization should be helpful.

There is no organization in operation today known as the Ku Klux Klan. There are no less than five different Klan groups operating in the South today. Here they are:

A. The Association of Georgia Klans, with headquarters in Atlanta, Ga. This organization is probably the closest to being the direct lineal descendant of the old Klan of Col. Simmons, Hiran Evans and Jim Colescott. The late Dr. Samuel Green was Imperial Wizard of this group. Its membership is mostly in Georgia but it has affiliates in a number of other states, including South Carolina, Tennessee, Florida and one or two in Alabama. Recently it has been engaged in a vigorous drive to start new chapters in North Carolina.

This Klan is the most "respectable" and powerful of all the groups. Its main strength lies in the fact that it serves a definite political purpose in Georgia where, because of the County Unit System, the rural vote swings the state elections. Klan groups in farm counties can exert tremendous pressure in frightening from the polls Negroes and liberal whites who might be for the opposition candidate.

Between elections, some of the boys get restless and that is when you read about morality floggings and cross burnings.

It is too early as yet to gauge the effect of the death of Dr. Green. Suffice it to say that Green was a somewhat restraining influence on Klan hoodlums and strove to make the Klan as "respectable as the Masons, the Knights of Columbus and B'nai B'rith."

Samuel W. Roper has just succeeded Dr. Green at an annual salary of $10,000 a year. In his first press interview he promised to carry on Dr. Green's policies and expansion program. Significantly, Roper for many years was a member of the Atlanta police force and under the late Eugene Talmadge headed the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. He resigned the state position to which he was appointed by Governor Herman Talmadge to accept the Imperial Wizardship.

B. The Original Southern Klans, Inc., of Columbus, Ga. This organization was started well over a year ago by Parson Jack Johnston and Fred New, following an argument over dues-splitting with Dr. Green. It never achieved important strength and our latest report is that it is withering pretty badly, with both leaders having resigned because of "ill health." This organization openly expoused anti-Catholicism and anti-Semitism as well as anti-Negroism.

C. Southern Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, of Tallahassee and Jacksonville, Fla. This is a very active group which sprang to the fore in the last year. It is led by Bill Hendrix who calls himself adjutant acting for the emperor Samuel II, and the imperial wizard, who remain anonymous. This Klan has held many demonstrations, including recent parades in Tallahassee and Iron City Ga., with the resultant gun battle in the latter community. This Klan also played a prominent part in the near riots in the Groveland, Fla., area. This Klan has tied up with all sorts of disreputable elements including the Rev. A. C. Shuler of Jacksonville and River Junction, Fla. Rev. Shuler is the brother of Evangelist Bob Shuler of California, who for years has been a notorious anti-Semite. Some two years ago you may recall that Shuler invited the now defunct Columbians to worship in his church in Jacksonville and present "their side of the story."

This organization publishes a newspaper called the Southern Gospel, which contains not only the usual anti-Negro diatribes but also such statements as:

> "All over this country there are front organizations trying to tear down the American system. Most of them are headed by a bunch of kike Jews who are tearing down this country and replacing our form of government with one of their own -- plainly speaking, Communism. Down in Miami, Fla., at this date, they have formed a citizens committee to contact decent businessmen for money to help tear down the American system."

This same issue also quotes the notorious Ben Franklin forgery about the Jews and, in addition, two columns are devoted to a vicious attack on Cardinal Spellman and the Roman Catholic church.

D. The Federated Ku Klux Klans, Inc., of Alabama, with headquarters in Birmingham and Bessemer, Ala. This group also has been in the news quite a bit of late. Its leader, William Hugh Morris of Birmingham, at this writing sits rather forlornly in jail in contempt of court because of failing to have produced Klan records when called upon to do so. This Klan group was responsible for the recent mass outbreak of floggings in the area just west of Birmingham. Public indignation, plus the passage of legislation by the State of Alabama, have halted this type of activity, according to latest reports, and reduced the membership of this group.

The Federated Ku Klux Klans, Inc., of Alabama also publishes a newspaper called Uxtra. This paper, not only defends Klanism in Alabama but just as vigorously attacks Roman Catholicism and the "whiskey trust." No mention at all is made in its pages of any other minority groups.

E. The Ku Klux Klans of America, with headquarters in Montgomery, Ala. This group has just been organized. At its head is Rev. Lycurgus Spinks, of Thomasville, Ala., who in 1946 was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor of Mississippi. Although Rev. Spinks claims the fantastic number of 265,000 members, it is to be doubted, as this new group apparently has little power, prestige or membership at this point. One indication of Spinks' power -- or lack of it -- is the fact that only a few days prior to the formation of this group, he advertised a monster Klan parade and rally in Pell City, Ala., and only 58 Klansmen showed up.

Since Dr. Green's death there has been much speculation as to whether his passing would result in a coalition of all these Klan splinters or cause further divisions. The formation of Spinks' group is the first indication we have had that the drift may be going in the latter direction. The possibility of a coalition, however, is a serious threat and bears careful watching.

* * *

Anti-Klan Legislation -- On both a state and local level the rising threat of terrorist groups is being met by legislation,

On a state level, the State of Alabama passed an Anti-Mask Bill.

On a local level, the following cities have passed anti-Klan legislation to date:

Atlanta, Ga.	Swainsboro, Ga.	Miami, Fla.
Albany, Ga.	Gainesville, Ga.	Miami Beach, Fla.
Augusta, Ga.	Iron City, Ga.	Miami Shores, Fla.
Macon, Ga.	Moultrie, Ga.	Coral Gables, Fla.
Valdosta, Ga.	Knoxville, Tenn.	South Miami, Fla.
Columbus, Ga.	Nashville, Tenn.	Atlantic Beach, Fla.
Wrightsville, Ga.	Tallahassee, Fla.	Tarpon Springs, Fla.
		Bartow, Fla.

* * * *

Report No. L-5
June 12, 1959

Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue N.E., Rm. 432
Atlanta 3, Georgia

"There is no doubt that the education climate and the business climate are interdependent. To this I can attest by my own experience, for I was personally responsible for the selection of Virginia as the location of one of General Electric's new plants."

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THE ECONOMY OF VIRGINIA

Excerpts from a talk by Dr. Louis T. Rader, General Manager, Special Control Dept., General Electric Co., Waynesboro, Virginia, March 15, 1959 at Thomas Jefferson High School Auditorium, Richmond, Virginia.

I would like to make it known at the beginning that the views I will present today are my own--not those, for example, of the General Electric Company or the Virginia Manufacturers Association. I am speaking as a member of the Advisory Board of the Virginia Committee for Public Schools.

I was glad to accept the opportunity to talk to you today because I feel strong personal concern about the school situation. I was also glad to accept the opportunity because I am convinced that businessmen, like myself, should stand up and be heard... In my opinion, the manager of a modern business organization has ever-widening responsibilities to his community, his state, and his nation. This includes responsibility in educational affairs, as business, education, and the community come to a greater realization of their mutual concerns...

Let's first look at the size of public education in Virginia. Truly, it is a mammoth undertaking, and its importance to the economic life of the Commonwealth is obvious when we note that the present book value of school property in Virginia is $576 million, and the total expenditure for public education in Virginia in 1957 was nearly $200 million. In addition, public schools are a very effective institution in our economic life. The results of expenditures for public education were summarized this way by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's extensive study of a few years ago. This study established the fact that educated people:

> "produce more goods, earn more money, buy and consume more goods, read more magazines and newspapers, are more active in civic and national affairs, enjoy a higher standard of living--and, in general, contribute more to the economy than those who are not so well educated."

This study also found that education must precede economic growth--it does not come after it.

Business Climate and Education Climate

A strong system of public education is very important among those factors

Report No. L-6
July 3, 1959

Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E., Rm. 432
Atlanta 3, Georgia

THE "DAVIS REPORT" AND THE TRUTH ABOUT THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SITUATION IN WASHINGTON, D. C.*

In June, 1956, with 13 of the 25 members of the House of Representatives Committee on the District of Columbia meeting in closed session, 11 of the 13 voted to create a subcommittee "to investigate Public School Standards and Conditions, and Juvenile Delinquency in the District of Columbia." Representative James C. Davis of Georgia became chairman of the subcommittee and his name is generally given to its subsequent report.

The five other members of the subcommittee were: Representatives John Bell Williams, of Mississippi; Woodrow W. Jones, of North Carolina; Joel T. Broyhill, of Virginia; A. L. Miller, of Nebraska; and DeWitt S. Hyde of Maryland. William Gerber, an attorney of Memphis, Tennessee, was retained as chief counsel.

The committee hearings, which were conducted publicly for nine days, beginning September 17, 1956, produced 512 printed pages of testimony. The "findings" of the subcommittee, together with excerpts from the testimony of selected witnesses, the "Recommendations," and a brief minority statement, are in the 48-page official report of the investigation.

Two of the six committee members did not sign the majority report but gave their own views in the minority statement which included the following: "In a close reading of the hearings we must come to the conclusion that the technical staff presented leading questions to a selected group of witnesses. Persons with views not in accord with those of the Counsel were not given full and fair opportunity to testify." Any copy of the subcommittee report which does not include the last page on which are given the views of Representatives Miller and Hyde is not an official copy.

The subcommittee hearings took place at a time when Congress was not in session and when most of the members of the District of Columbia Committee were away from Washington. Representative Roy Wier (D. Minn.) a former member of the Minneapolis Board of Education, sent a telegram to the chairman of the District Committee, Representative John L. McMillan (D. S.C.), September 25, 1956, "strongly urging" that the subcommittee counsel, William Gerber, be suspended pending a meeting of the full committee. "Counsel Gerber's sole object," Representative Wier said, "seems to be to prove that integration has not worked and to get teacher against teacher, parent against parent, and pupil against pupil to prevent it from working in the future."

---

*This report has been read and approved for accuracy by Dr. Carl F. Hansen, Superintendent of Schools, District of Columbia.

Many of the witnesses at the subcommittee hearings gave testimony of a sensational nature, and the Washington newspapers reported such testimony. But in their editorial columns all three daily newspapers discounted the objectivity and deplored the tactics of the investigation.

On September 21 a Washington Evening Star editorial stated: "The Davis investigation of integration in Washington is of course designed to delay its acceptance elsewhere. The committee will supply ammunition in that respect in the form of testimony by responsible witnesses, under guidance of a skilled interrogator who knows precisely what sort of information he wants in the record."

An editorial in the Washington Post and Times-Herald, September 23, 1956 said: "....Counsel Gerber has already compiled just the record he wants....a record showing that integration has brought difficult problems to the District schools arising out of Negro educational deficiencies. The fact that these problems stemmed from the evils of segregation and from the cultural, economic, and educational disadvantages to which Negroes have been subjected has been consistently ignored or glossed over by the subcommittee."

The Washington Daily News of September 26, 1956 carried an editorial which opened: "About all that has been brought out at the House District Committee hearings on District public school desegregation up to now is a self evident fact. A great social change has been imposed on District citizens." The editorial writer went on to say that the way out of the dilemma was not a return to segregation but was rather to separate students according to ability.

In addition to editorial comment the newspapers frequently made their own investigation of some "incident" reported by a subcommittee witness. A temporary teacher at McKinley High School testified that a white McKinley senior had received serious injuries in a fight with two McKinley Negro boys. The Washington Post sent reporter Karl Meyer to see McKinley's principal, Charles Edward Bish, and Inspector John E. Winters of the Youth Aid Division. Both Principal Bish and Inspector Winters stated that while two Negro boys did attack a McKinley senior, they were not McKinley students at all. The two boys who came to the assistance of the senior, they said, were McKinley students -- two Negro classmates of the white victim.

Twenty-seven prominent citizens of Washington, including leading clergymen of all faiths and responsible civic leaders, met on September 23, 1956, to form "The Washington Committee of Public Schools" for the purpose of making available "dispassionate, unprejudiced, and accurate information" to offset the reports of the House hearings on the city's schools. Gerhard Van Arkel, a Washington attorney was selected chairman. Speaking for the group he said "The tone of the committee hearings indicates little or no interest in determining the full facts respecting the District schools."

At one point in the committee hearings Rep. Williams asked the then Assistant Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Carl Hansen: "Do you think, Dr. Hansen, that integration in the District of Columbia schools has been carried on smoothly and without incident?"

Dr. Hansen replied: "It would be fantastic to say 'without incident.' I think that the integration program in this city has been a miracle of social adjustment."

A few months later Dr. Hansen wrote a comprehensive report, giving a picture of the Washington school situation prior to integration, and describing the kinds of problems and the kinds of solutions that had been developing since two separate school systems had been unified. Dr. Hansen called his 70-page report, "Miracle of Social Adjustment; Desegregation in the Washington, D. C. Schools." While Dr. Hansen's report was not written as a "reply" to the Davis report, many people felt that it contained the kind of information about the complicated situation which Washington citizens were asking for when the Davis hearings were underway.

Dr. Hansen's report gave evidence that the basically good situation described in the September 24th (1954) issue of the U. S. News and World Report had not changed:

"There wasn't even a fist fight between youngsters. That's how quietly a historic change came as the nation's capital ended segregation in its public schools last week" the U. S. News and World Report read. "The capital, by tradition is a Southern City. Its schools have always been segregated, yet when 100,000 Washington children entered mixed schools for the first time on September 13 there was no rioting, no violence, no picketing, not even a protest meeting ---politeness everywhere, downright friendliness in many cases. ---It is generally agreed that the mixing of races in Washington is working out far better than most people expected."

It is recorded in the Congressional Record that on Friday, March 8, 1957, the Honorable Clifford P. Case (R. N.J.) said of Dr. Hansen's report: "Those who are concerned with an objective, factual account of the Washington problems and how they were met will find it in the authoritative study by Dr. Carl Hansen. ---I hope that The Miracle of Social Adjustment will be read widely here and abroad."

On March 12, Representative Abram J. Multer (D. N.Y.) said "I am pleased to commend to the attention of our colleagues the following article which appeared in Time Magazine February 25, 1957." The Time article presented was an account of Dr. Hansen's report. It began: "Last December a House subcommittee headed by Georgia's James Davis declared that integration had seriously damaged the public school system and recommended that it be stopped. Last week a more reasonable judgment came from Washington's Assistant School Superintendent Carl F. Hansen---."

Three years after the Davis report and four and a half years after the beginning of desegregation in the District of Columbia, the Richmond Times Dispatch sent staff reporter, Larry Weekley, to Washington to see how school integration was developing in 1959. "After four and a half years" reporter Weekley wrote on February 9, 1959, "the integrated public schools of the District of Columbia remain remarkably free of racial strife." In the same article he quotes Principal Arthur Storey ---whose testimony before the subcommittee hearings had been critical of school discipline in the early days of desegregation ---as saying in 1959 that the "tension has disappeared. By and large our discipline problems have decreased tremendously."

In 1956 the Washington school administration began implementing the now famous plan of grouping students according to ability, called the "Four-Track System." This system prevents backward pupils of either race from retarding the progress of the whole group and gives an opportunity for all to achieve their educational potential. In a total of 13,377 senior high school students, 3,026 are in the basic track, 5,575 in the general track, 3,804 in the college preparatory track and 892 in the honors track.

In 1953 when the achievement test scores only of white pupils were reported, the median grade equivalent in reading for the sixth grades was 7.2 -- against a national norm of 6.7.

In 1954 when sixth grade students, white and colored, were tested together for the first time the grade equivalent for reading was 4.9. With Negroes representing 60.8 per cent of the school enrollment, it was obviously their average rating which had brought the aggregate grade equivalent down.

Today Washington's combined white and Negro sixth grade public school students have progressed to a position equal to, or above, the national norm in 5 out of the 6 categories covered by the Stanford Achievement Test. The 1959 results show that Washington sixth graders have achieved a 6.7 median -- against a national norm of 6.6.

In view of the fact that the Negro pupils now represent 74 per cent of the total enrollment, it is evident from the forgoing that substantial progress has been made in the achievement rating of both white and Negro pupils since 1953.

Only one case of interracial marriage out of a total enrollment (in 1956) of 114,219, has occurred in four years among students or graduates of integrated schools. A Negro boy and a white girl, who had attended the same school, but in different grades, were subsequently married.

A report of the District of Columbia Welfare Department issued March 8, 1959, shows that, the delinquency rate among Negroes (aged 5 to 17) fell from 37.1 per 1000 in 1954 to 21.2 per 1000 in 1958. Among white children the rate remained stable at 15.3 in 1954 and 15.2 in 1958.

References:

Miracle of Social Adjustment, by Carl F. Hansen, 70-page Freedom Pamphlet may be obtained from the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, 515 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y. 35¢

The Truth About Desegregation in Washington's Schools, by Erwin Knoll, may be obtained from the Turnpike Press, Annandale, Virginia, 15¢ postpaid; special rates for quantity orders.

For comprehensive study of the problem, the following are also suggested:

References - continued

Series of articles on the Washington public schools by Reporter Larry Weekley, in the Richmond Times Dispatch of February 8, 9, 10 and 11, 1959.

Report on Desegregation in Washington, D. C. for the Conference of the Commission on Civil Rights, Nashville, Tennessee, March 5, 6, 1959, by Dr. Carl F. Hansen, Superintendent of Schools, Washington, D. C., Office of the Superintendent, Franklin Administration Building, Thirteenth and "K" Streets, N. W., Washington 5, D. C. (3 pages).

Summary of the Desegregation Experiences in the Public Schools of the District of Columbia for Notre Dame Conference, May 8, 1959, by Dr. Carl F. Hansen, Superintendent of Schools, Office of the Superintendent, Franklin Administration Building, Thirteenth and "K" Streets, N. W., Washington 5, D. C. (15 pages of factual material, much of it related to the effect of desegregation on academic standards.

Democracy and the District of Columbia Schools, by Ellis O. Knox, Judd and Detweiler, Inc., Washington, D. C., 1957, $3.50. Hard-back book, 131 pages, by a professor of education at Howard University. Scholarly and carefully documented study of District of Columbia schools before and in the years immediately following desegregation.

Report No. L-7
July 24, 1959

Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue N.E.
Atlanta 3, Georgia

GOVERNOR ALMOND (VIRGINIA) ON THE IMPORTANCE OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

EXCERPTS FROM AN ADDRESS by Gov. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. at the commencement exercises of the Warren County Educational Foundation, June 9, 1959.

(Note: Gov. Almond included in his address a sharp criticism of the Supreme Court and a review of his long fight to prevent public school desegregation in Virginia. It is not desired to give a misleading impression of Gov. Almond's attitude, but to invite attention to his eloquent plea for the continued operation of public schools.)

. . .

The time for hurling the firebrands of criticism, charges and countercharges and recriminations has passed. The time has arrived to take stock, not of theory and indulgence in wishful thinking, but in actual conditions and realities, and the laborious and soundest procedures within the limits of our genius to devise for the present and future welfare of Virginia.

We must not allow the welfare of our children and the future of our state to be victimized by the bitterness of disappointment, the pang of frustration, the demon of hate, and threat of political purge, appeal to base passions and prejudices, and the stirring of emotions productive of violence and disorder.

It is your sacred responsibility and mine, the responsibility of those whom you elect to positions of high trust, to face the issues squarely and honestly, and to dedicate every energy and talent to a constructive resolution consistent with honor and under the aegis of law.

No error could be more grave, no mistake more costly, no travesty more tragic, no curse more productive of woe, than to succumb to the blandishments of those who would have Virginia abandon public education and thereby consign a generation of children to the darkness of illiteracy, the pits of indolence and dependency, and the dungeons of delinquency.

The only sure prevention of any integration anywhere in Virginia is the total abolition of every public school everywhere in Virginia. If this is what they advocate, the people of Virginia should now be told with complete clarity and frankness.

I tell you now that we cannot secede from the Union; we cannot overthrow the Federal Government, and we cannot reverse a final decree of a federal court.

I tell you now that the General Assembly cannot confer upon the Governor, any board, agency or person, any power which it does not itself possess.

I further tell you, notwithstanding the claims of some, that the General Assembly cannot under the pretense of invoking the police power take over and operate the public school system and thereby negate the final decree of a federal court. People who permit themselves to be fooled by such delusions deserve to be fooled.

. . .

In consideration of the abandonment of public schools, we should bear in mind that enrolled in the public schools of Virginia are approximately 800,000 children. There are only 112 sectarian schools, 12 of which are integrated, with a total enrollment of 26,610. There are 110 nonsectarian schools, one of which is integrated, with a total enrollment of 10,325. Private schools--both sectarian and nonsectarian--accommodate only 36,935 as compared with 800,000 in public schools. This points up the magnitude of the problem of accommodating children denied access to public schools.

. . .

The issues revolving around public education will confront the next session of the General Assembly. I have taken my stand. We must save, sustain and support the cause of public education in Virginia. I call upon all Virginians who believe in the soundness and righteousness of that position to rally to my support before it is too late. "To be forewarned is to be forearmed."

ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL ODUM (FLORIDA) ON THE FINANCIAL COMPLICATIONS OF CLOSING PUBLIC SCHOOLS

EXCERPTS FROM AN ADDRESS by Asst. Attorney-General Ralph E. Odum before the Independent Bankers of Florida, at Tampa, February 23, 1959.

(Note: Mr. Odum included in his address a number of opinions which the SRC would regard as plainly mistaken. Again, it is not intended to give a false impression of an official's public position, but to emphasize certain incontestable facts which his speech clarifies.)

To me it seems clear that the one sure way of insuring a public school system in Florida which might in time be operated on a compulsory attendance basis and which is owned, controlled and operated by the federal government is for Florida to abolish its public schools.

Second, I do not think it practical to abolish our public school system for financial reasons.

The liquidation of Florida public school property and its bonded indebtedness would be, in a way, one of the largest bankruptcy proceedings in history, involving well over a billion and a quarter dollars.

Mr. Lee Young, Assistant in School Finance, State Department of Education, has estimated the actual fair market value of public school property in this state to be well in excess of one billion dollars. Considering the fact that most school buildings have only a limited use for any purpose other than education without extensive remodeling, the sale of these holdings would present extraordinary problems unless it could be accomplished gradually over a period of years.

The federal courts have already ruled that public school buildings may not be leased to segregated private schools. Although the question has not been legally tested, I believe that the buildings could be sold under state law at their fair value on a time payment basis. This would, of course, contemplate that title to the property would pass and the school board accept a mortgage to secure the deferred payments. It would also contemplate that the sales were not a method of circumvention of federal court orders but were bona fide sales of school property which was no longer needed for school purposes.

In addition to the liquidation of over a billion dollars worth of property, we would also be faced with the retirement of bonded indebtedness of $232,852,899.00 which we now owe for school buildings. Our state courts would have to enforce the payment of the principal and accrued interest on these bonds, regardless of the reluctance of the taxpayer to continue paying taxes for benefits which no longer existed.

In addition to school bonds, our Florida county school boards owe Florida banks $2,413,180.00 on short term notes for money borrowed for capital outlay.

In addition to these notes, our school boards owe local banks an undetermined but considerable amount on short term loans for operating expenses. No record of these loans is required to be kept in Tallahassee, so it would be necessary to check each county board to ascertain the amount of this type of indebtedness.

Of the 282 banks in Florida, most have invested heavily in Florida school bonds and revenue certificates.

Picking at random 15 banks of all sizes in different parts of the state, I found that all but one of them had invested in Florida school bonds. The percentage of their total investment in securities which is invested in Florida school bonds varied from 0 to 14%, or an average of 4% for all 15 banks. The total in dollars for the 15 banks amounted to $4,559,000.00. If the pattern set by these 15 banks can be projected as a guide even on the most conservative estimate our 282 Florida banks must now be holding at least 80 million dollars of Florida school securities.

A default of these bonds, although ultimately remedied by litigation, might in the interim strain the earning capacity of many of our smaller independent banks who form the financial mainstay for most Florida communities.

All this with the abrupt termination of employment of 33,029 teachers and several thousand other public school employees such as administrative assistants, bus drivers, clerks and lunch room personnel; the cancellation of school expenditures for operating expenses totalling $216,804,957. a year; plus the dislocation of 899,000 pupils with no schools to attend, might easily create an economic and social catastrophe in this state.

. . .

Resist Dupo-KKK

ADL
ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE
OF B'NAI B'RITH
[illegible] Ave., New York, N. Y. 10016
[illegible] Hill 9-[illegible]00
Press Representative
N. C. Belth

Anti-Defamation League Press Room
Waldorf Astoria Hotel
ELdorado 5-3000

For Release Saturday, A.M., Jan. 28

Ku Klux Klan strength in the South has jumped to 50,000 -- a rise of 30,000 members in the past year -- and is still going strong, according to research findings made public today (Friday) by Dore Schary, national chairman of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

The League report attributed the upsurge to "a return of drop-outs," to Klan capitalization on "a climate of fear" stemming from violence in and around Negro ghettoes, and to "political decisions" such as education issues in Virginia and the nomination of Lurleen Wallace for governor of Alabama and Lester Maddox for governor of Georgia.

Mr. Schary revealed the findings before ADL national commissioners convened at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, January 27 through January 30, for the League's 54th annual meeting.

Mr. Schary said "the most alarming growth" in Klan membership took place in Virginia, which had an increase of 750%, in Georgia, where it increased 175% and in Alabama, 100%, since the beginning of last summer. Klan leaders, he continued, consider the elections of Mrs. Wallace and Maddox as signals that both states are "welcome havens" for the KKK.

In Virginia, according to the report, recruitment efforts centered around the Prince Edward County situation -- a Supreme Court decision ordered County commissioners to personally repay public funds which they dispersed to private schools rather than open and integrate the public schools.

Mr. Schary said the Klan had an estimated membership of 20,000 in February and March, 1966. The upsurge, he declared, began at the beginning of April when the Klan decided that the House Un-American Activities Committee hearings on the organization would have no significant impact and members who had dropped out returned to the fold.

By the beginning of summer, he said, strength had increased by 10,000, another 20,000 has been added in the past seven months, and recruitment continues unabated.

Describing Klan strength as "a barometer of uneasiness" about the race issue, Mr. Schary said there is "a growing hard core" of individuals who refuse to accept Negroes into the mainstream of American life.

The League study shows that KKK membership remains preponderantly affiliated with the United Klans of America, which is the prime recipient of the overall Klan growth. Led by Imperial Wizard Robert M. Shelton from headquarters in Alabama, the group has grown from an estimated 20,550 at the beginning of summer to current membership of 40,550. The National Association of Knights of the Ku Klux Klheaded by chairman James R. Venable from headquarters in Georgia, has 6,780 members and independent Klan groups nearly 3,000 -- representing slight increases in both groups.

The League gave the following state-by-state breakdown of the United Klans of America:

GEORGIA: 11,000 members in 89 Klaverns against 4,000 members last summer. Calvin F. Craig is Grand Dragon.

ALABAMA: 10,000 members in 37 Klaverns against 5,000 members last summer. Grand Dragon is James Spears, a Baptist minister.

VIRGINIA: 4,000 members in 100 Klaverns against 500 members last summer. Marshall Robert Kornegay is Grand Dragon. Southside Virginia has become a Klan stronghold and a source of increasing worry to much of the state.

NORTH CAROLINA: 8,500 members in 143 Klavens against 6,000 members last summer. James Robert Jones is Grand Dragon. An outstanding organizer, he has recruited throughout the state without cessation.

FLORIDA: 1,500 members in 12 Klaverns against 800 last summer. Boyd Hamby is Grand Dragon.

LOUISIANA: 1,250 members in 13 Klaverns against 1,000 last summer. Jack Helms is Grand Dragon, spends much of his time traveling in other states with the Imperial Wizard, has activated only three additional Klaverns in his own state in the past seven months.

SOUTH CAROLINA: 1,150 members in 25 Klaverns against 1,000 last summer. Robert E. Scoggin is Grand Dragon. There has been little Klan activity in the state.

TENNESSEE: 1,100 members in 9 Klaverns against 1,000 last summer. Raymond R. Anderson is Grand Dragon. Internal problems appear to have been straightened out with the affiliation of the Dixie Klans into the United Klans of America.

ARKANSAS: 600 members in 8 Klaverns against 300 last summer. George A. McNeely is Grand Dragon. Considerable recruiting efforts were made when James Johnson, an avowed segregationist, won the Democratic nomination for the governorship. This slowed when Johnson was defeated and there is now a "wait and see" attitude.

MISSISSIPPI: 500 members in 26 Klaverns, representing no rise. There is no Grand Dragon. The state has been handled directly by Shelton since he fired Edward L. McDaniel. For the past eight months there has been internal Klan strife and very little recruiting.

MARYLAND: 450 members in 15 Klaverns against 150 last summer. Vernon Naimaster is Grand Dragon. Recruiting activity centered around the open housing issue in the governor's race and the fact that CORE used Baltimore as a "target city" last summer.

TEXAS: 400 members in 4 Klaverns against 300 members last summer. Jack Cannon is Grand Dragon. The operation has not completely recovered from internal difficulties and changes of personnel during the past year.

"Since the Klan appeals to the most vehement prejudices of the most frustrated segment of the population," Mr. Schary said, "it naturally attracts those individuals with a predilection to violence.

20 - Ku Klux Klan

AN ORDINANCE

Proposed draft of an ordinance to prohibit the wearing of masks in the City of_____, where such masks wholly or partially conceal the identity of the wearers; providing for certain exceptions; providing penalties for violations hereof; providing that this ordinance shall become effective immediately upon passage; and for other purposes.

****

WHEREAS, the unrestricted wearing of masks which conceal the identity of the wearer is a hindrance to the maintenance of order and the effective detection of crime, it is deemed necessary that this ordinance be adopted as an emergency measure to take effect immediately upon passage;

Therefore, be it ordained by the commission of the city of_____:

Section 1

That it shall be unlawful for any person to appear upon a public street or in a public place within the City of_____while such person is wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity.

Section 2

That it shall be unlawful for any person to enter any building or premises of another in the City of_____while wearing a mask which wholly or partially conceals his identity or, having entered, to then wear such a mask, unless such person has secured the prior consent of the owner and all the tenants of such building or premises.

Section 3

That this ordinance shall not be applicable: (1) to persons attending, by invitation, private fancy-dress parties where masks are removed during the parties; nor (2) to children under fourteen years of age wearing costumes at Halloween; nor (3) to persons wearing Santa Claus costumes at Christmas or during the four weeks next preceding: nor (4) to legally constituted persons in the duly authorized performance of governmental functions.

Section 4

That any person violating this ordinance shall, upon conviction before the Recorder of said city, be punished, for each offense, by a fine not exceeding $250 or ninety (90) days confinement, either or both, in the discretion of the Recorder.

Section 5

That this ordinance shall be effective immediately upon passage.

See corresp. files under:
"22 - Li - misc - Lines, Rev. Stiles B."

B. H. Jones - Tallladega College 17- Intercultural Educ

FORWORD

The resource unit presented herein is only incidentally a unit on inter-cultural relations. It was made sufficiently flexible, however, to permit of use and adaptation in other situations. Persons who are planning a unit on intercultural or inter-ethnic relations will, I think, find the attached bibliography of some value. While the bibliography necessarily deals primarily with Negroes, there are included certain items which bear on some aspects of the whole problem of inter-cultural relations.

The question of where to place the study of the Negro in our schools itself poses certain problems which, though not difficult, do serve to reflect some of the confusion in our thinking about him. Properly speaking, the study of the American Negro has no place in a unit on inter-cultural relations. The term Inter-cultural relations in educational parlance presupposes the joint existence of dual cultures within the same geographic or social area and implies that the interplay between these cultures is a proper subject for study in the secondary school. The Negro does Not fit in here at all. The culture of the Negro is the culture of the dominant long-settled Anglo-Saxon as that culture has been modified by the additions of other groups. This does not mean that the Negro has not contributed to American culture. Rather does it mean that he gave so ultimately of his own as to retain little that is distinctive. One of the most nearly complete fusions of cultures in human history is represented in the history of the Negro and his original culture in this country. The Negro has so completely absorbed the American culture that there are today few, if any, genuine traces of his African ancestry, That the Negro, broadly speaking, has a cultural history is quite true but the American Negro has been cut off from that history for so long that were he to return to Africa today he would be a stranger in the birthplace of his more remote ancestors. The friction between Negroes and whites does not stem from any inter-play between two cultural groups. It is, instead, the result of an intra-cultural struggle within the American nation. It is a struggle between our dominant ideas seeking to find implementation infact and our regional mores which have spread and are designed to prevent the fruition of our ideal.

Yet the term "minority" applies to the Negro only in its numerical sense. He is an integral part of American life - a long-time contributor to American history: one of the colonizing group, for he arrived in 1619 and has been here continously since. He differs, therefore, from most other numerical minorities in American He has grown in number not by any great immigration but by the normal process of reproducing his kind, whereas every other numerical minority has grown through the admission of more members of that group.

ANTI KLAN LAWS PASSED

STATES

Alabama, Anti-Mask
Georgia, Anti-Mask, Anti-Crossburning
Florida, Anti-Mask
South Carolina, Anti-Mask, Anti-Crossburning
Virginia, Anti-Mask, Anti-Crossburning

ALABAMA

Cities

Auburn, anti-mask

GEORGIA

Cities

Albany, anti-mask
Atlanta, anti-mask
Eatonton, anti-mask
Macon, anti-mask
Valdosta, anti-mask
Columbus, anti-mask, anti-cross burning
Wrightsville, anti-mask
Swainsboro, anti-mask
Gainesville, anti-mask
Iron City, anti-mask
Cedartown, anti-mask
Moultrie, anti-mask
Augusta, anti-mask
Claxton, anti-mask

TENNESSEE

Cities

Knoxville, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Nashville, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Morristown, anti-mask, anti-crossburning

FLORIDA

Cities

Tallahassee, anti-mask
Bartow, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Jacksonville, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Hialeah, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
West Palm Beach, anti-mask, anti-crossburning

FLORIDA (following)

Orlando, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Hollywood, " "
Miami, " "
Miami Beach, " "
Miami Shores, " "
Coral Gables, " "
South Miami, " " Atlantic Beach, " "
Tarpon Springs, " "
West Miami, " "
"

NORTH CAROLINA

Cities

Winston-Salem, anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Charlotte, anti-mask
Raleigh, " Tarboro " Whiteville, " Greensboro, "
Wilmington , anti-mask, anti-crossburning
Reidsville, anti-mask
Hickory, " Fayetteville, " Hendersonville, "

SOUTH CAROLINA

Cities

Columbia, anti-mask
Greenville, anti-mask

VIRGINIA

Cities

Suffolk, anti-crossburning
Newport News, anti-mask

3/21/52

ADL

SOUTHEASTERN OFFICE
41 EXCHANGE PL., S. E. ATLANTA, GA.

For your information

Harold Fleming

Art Levin

KKK

Anti-Klan legislation--municipal; Safety, Security and the South says that cities in the South have anti-mask legislaion or rules (41)

[redacted]

Georgia

Mar. 1949--Columbus
May.1949--Atlanta
July,1949--Moultire
Aug.,1949--Iron City
Aug.,1949--Albany
Oct.,1949--Cedartown
Apr.,1950--Claxton

See Birmingham Valdosta, Macon Augusta (Press 1-14-50)

Florida

Feb.1949--Tallahassee
Feb.1949--Miami
July,1949--Atlantic Beach
Aug.1949--Tarpon Springs
Oct.1950Ruling that anti-mask and anti-cross burning city rules are legal Feb.1951--Jax KKK asks for city anti-~~mxkx~~ mask law

North Carolina

Dec.1949--Charlotte
Jan.1950--Farboro
Jan.1950--Raleigh

Alabama

Feb.1950--Opelika
July,1949--Auburn

Tenn

Knoxville, 1949
Nashville, 1949

KKK

Anti-Klan legislation--states

[redacted]

Alabama

Anti-mask law passed by state legislature--1st in South passed by a state .(June, 1949) Bill passage preceeded by use of governor s emergency powers to control mob violence

Texas

Anti-lynch law adopted July, 1949.

Georgia

Anti-mask law passed July, 1951

Oct.1951--Discussion of proposed mob-violence bill which would give the State Patrol authority over mob violence in municipalities

South Carolina

Anti-mask law passed April, 1951

Florida

Anti-mask bill passed July, 1951

NC had one dating back to 1869

Tenn - law of 1869 invoked

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . No. 1

Ar. Sec. Hum.
R + R Rel.

Racial Fires Are Burning

EDITOR'S NOTE — Is America in this turbulent summer, plummeting headlong toward permanent racial discord? What are the true dimensions of the integration struggle? Here, in the first of a series of Associated Press reports on the deepening crisis, is a close look at what Secretary of State Rusk calls "the worst domestic crisis since 1865."

By SID MOODY
Associated Press Writer

When, how, where did it happen?

Perhaps on the day in Birmingham when a hand reached for the hose nozzle. Maybe somewhere else, on a different day. But now, suddenly, racial crisis is here, a giant shadow darkening the national scene.

For years the nation has said racial solution would take time, lots of it. But somehow, swiftly, the sands ran out. The time is now.

Time for decision in the corridors of Congress and the town council of Cambridge, Md., in the school yard and the factory. In Harlem and Chicago and Danville, Va. and Greenwood, Miss., at the hamburger stand where the Negroes are kneeling, in the suburban development where the colored family moved in up the street. In the policy meetings of the great political parties and in the minds of all Americans face to face, finally, with their own personal decision: Where DO I stand on the racial question?

Associated Press Wirephoto

NEW YORK SCENE TYPICAL OF RISING PRESSURE OF DEMANDS BY U.S. NEGROES Pickets Protesting Racial Discrimination Shown as They Rushed Barricade

THE SOUTHERNER — Any white man anywhere — holding to the status quo shakes his head over the Negro crime rate, his school record, over what might happen should the Negro majorities of the South get the vote. But these questions raise another: How determined must the stand-patter be in the face of a now grimly determined Negro?

"Fires of frustration and discord are burning in every city," said President Kennedy. Secretary of State Dean Rusk calls it the worst domestic crisis since 1865. As the world watches the world writhes.

The crisis has left blood in the streets. But that is not new. What is new is its gathering speed and spread.

A cross burns on the lawn at the home of a Montclair, N.J., school girl who has included some Negroes in a party for her classmates. A leading white clergyman is arrested in Baltimore. A Black Muslim is shot in Los Angeles and Negroes demonstrate in Boston, Birmingham, the Bronx and too many other places to count.

VIOLENCE SWEPT Oxford, Miss., last September.

"But," said Whitney Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, "who a year ago had heard of Lexington, N.C., or Danville, Va.?"

"Things can happen so rapidly — they may be doing it now— that no one can keep a perspective on it," said Dr. John Monsell, assistant to Roy Wilkins, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Are we in truth careening downhill with no one at the wheel? Could an accumulation of such sparking fuses as Jackson, Miss., lead to a national explosion?

"I would hope in the last 20 years we have developed mechanisms that would mediate or modify," Monsell said. "No one thinks we'll have another depression like the '30s because of modifiers built into the economy. I think the same may be true of civil rights."

poses of the bill is to give him an avenue into the courts."

And if the bill is defeated and the avenue becomes a dead end leaving the Negro once again parading outside the lunch counter, what then?

"Then, in effect, Congress will have said we'd rather offer the Negro dogs, hoses and nightsticks rather than his inherent rights," said Dr. Kenneth Clark, Negro psychologist and professor at New York University. "To this the Negro has to say no. If he said yes, he'd be confirming the myth of his own inferiority.

"THE NEGRO is asking not to change society but to be included in it — to have the franchise, equal education, removal of arbitrary barriers in the purchase of homes, in public accommodations. He's really asking America to stop being hypocritical, to fulfill the promise of the Constitution. From where I sit, these are pretty modest goals. No one should have to die for these things. The Negro can't be intimidated out of demanding them."

This determination, too, is new. It has been growing since World War II when the Negro saw the world and fought to make it safe for a democracy he felt was denied him at home. It was spurred by the postwar emergence of the black and yellow nations, the 1954 Supreme Court school decision. There was the 1957 Montgomery bus boycott that began when a Negro woman wouldn't give up her seat to a white and ended with the Negroes realizing for the first time the power of stubborn persistence. The young freedom riders of 1961 who risked harm and even death stirred the Negro further.

YET FOR ALL his new militancy the Negro in many instances has shown disciplined restraint. Splashed with ketchup or kicked in the shins, he has as often as not turned the other cheek.

"For 300 years the Negro has been accustomed to injustice," said Clark. "What you're seeing now is the result. Never in his past could the American Negro improve his situation by mob action because he would have been annihilated. The Indian he doesn't know what the Negro wants."

HE WANTS JOBS: In Detroit where he is 20 per cent of the population but 60 per cent of the unemployed; for his young, almost half of whom in the 16-21-age group are jobless; across the nation where his unemployment rate has been triple that of the whites.

"For the Negro," said Young, "there has been no recession. He's in a depression."

Yet the Negro is faced with a growing automation that has need for greater schooling and training than he has had.

"It would be different if he had this," said a veteran craft union official in Washington. "There's no prejudice in skill. But you can't put an unqualified man in a skilled job. The unions would be cutting their throats if they lowered job standards. Why some of our pipefitters are installing on atomic reactors valves no bigger than your fists that cost $35,000."

THEN GIVE US the skills, say the Negroes and they demonstrate against the traditional neighborhood school pattern by which you go to the school nearest your home. This has meant an almost de facto segregation in some Northern towns with their de facto Negro ghettoes. Whether true or not the Negroes claim the schools in the white areas are better and demand to be allowed to go to them. In Englewood, Montclair, Morristown and Plainfield in New Jersey and in New York, they've made their point. But the Plainfield couple who are moving away rather than have their children "go to school with a lot of Negroes" may not be alone.

When the whites move out, sometimes the Negro moves in. Block-busting begins. Other white neighborhoods remain so. But what pressures build up in the Negro who gets his education, who can afford the white homes but can't cross the unwritten color lines around the Harlems of the North?

"The Negro from the South comes North and he finds the signs are down and no one is going to say 'Nigger' but then he finds things are really the same," said Young. "He's hurt ing crisis. At home, on the job, in the subway, at the polling booth.

IF THERE IS no foreseeing the future, there is a looking glass that strikingly mirrors the painful route to stalemate and its tragic cost. It is the attractive Chesapeake Bay town of Cambridge, Md. where, across a thoroughfare ironically named Race Street, both sides of America's racial equation glower at each other.

Crisis at Cambridge didn't start the night last June the white stores in the Negro section were burned or the white men were shot by an unknown gunman. In fact of all the towns on the old eastern shore of Maryland, Cambridge probably would have been the last to pick as a trouble spot. It was making progress—Negroes on the school board and town council, schools being integrated (only five grades to go in the grammar school), athletic games integrated, mixed church Lenten services. Why, Cambridge was one of Maryland's first towns to hire Negro policemen.

Then, in January 1961, some out-of-towners from the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee picketed a tavern where the oystermen and crab fishermen hang out. There was a scuffle. Demands from the demonstrators to desegregate restaurants in town met with a request for time from the council. Nothing doing.

"TRY TO UNDERSTAND," said a Marylander. "A funny little Negro comes in and says you shape up in three days or else. If you're the mayor, what would you do?"

The rift widened. Local Negroes formed their own committee and become increasingly militant in their demands for complete integration of the schools, restaurants and equal job opportunities in the new factories that an aggressive group of businessmen was attracting.

"We would have moved to a solution," said Maurice Rimpo, editor of The Cambridge Banner, the daily newspaper. "Maybe we needed some pressure. What town doesn't? But the demonstration at the Choptank Inn broke the back of moderation."

The restaurant, nearly broke from loss of white business, resegregated.

The whites lost confidence in the Negro leadership, headed by Mrs. Gloria Richardson whom they accused of just shaking her head "no-no-no" when compromise was suggested. Last May the biracial committee disbanded, demonstrations persisted. Then came the June nights of arson and shooting.

WHITE WOMEN driving to pick up their maids in the Negro section were stoned. White men were pulled from their cars and pummelled. On June 14 the National Guard moved into the vacuum between the races. Order was restored at bayonet point and the town council agreed to desegregate the restaurants and consider a Negro housing program. The restaurant plan is subject to approval by the voters where there is a heavy white majority. The Negroes resumed demonstrations as soon as the Guard pulled out July 8 and two nights later Cambridge assuaged its agony with gunfire.

Why did this happen?

"No one realized what this would turn into," said one Cambridge businessman. "If we were a community where a Negro was hit on the head every time he put his foot in the door, we might have moved faster. But we were making progress. When the Negroes got unruly, the whites had to prove they were men, too."

MACE BLAMES hoodlums on both sides for the violence. Another man close to the Cambridge tragedy thinks it happened because "there were damn few people with any guts." People willing to lead, to say the unpopular, to keep trying.

It was all of these. Pride, hoodlums, go-slow Uncle Toms and impetuous youths, a 4-1 unemployment ratio black to white, old time traditions, a feeling of you'll-get-your-dessert, just-don't push-me, passions outspeeding efforts to find agreement.

Such tinder is present in varying degrees in thousands of Cambridges across the United States. In Cambridge it pro-

"Fires of frustration and discord are burning in every city," said President Kennedy. Secretary of State Dean Rusk calls it the worst domestic crisis since 1865. As the world watches the world writhes.

The crisis has left blood in the streets. But that is not new. What is new is its gathering speed and spread.

A cross burns on the lawn at the home of a Montclair, N.J., school girl who has included some Negroes in a party for her classmates. A leading white clergyman is arrested in Baltimore. A Black Muslim is shot in Los Angeles and Negroes demonstrate in Boston, Birmingham, the Bronx and too many other places to count.

VIOLENCE SWEPT Oxford, Miss., last September.

"But," said Whitney Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, "who a year ago had heard of Lexington, N.C., or Danville, Va.?"

"Things can happen so rapidly — they may be doing it now—that no one can keep a perspective on it," said Dr. John Monsell, assistant to Roy Wilkins, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Are we in truth careening downhill with no one at the wheel? Could an accumulation of such sparking fuses as Jackson, Miss., lead to a national explosion?

"I would hope in the last 20 years we have developed mechanisms that would mediate or modify," Monsell said. "No one thinks we'll have another depression like the '30s because of modifiers built into the economy. I think the same may be true of civil rights."

AS AN EXAMPLE the Urban League points out that there has been no violence in the Southern cities where it has organized biracial committees. The attorney general's office points out that since government officials began rounds of talks with business leaders in May there has been some desegregation in 146 cities of more than 10,000 population in 14 Southern and border states. It hopes passage of Kennedy's civil rights bill will ease pressure.

Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett, on the other hand, feels the bill would violate the "rights of man" and would "reap a bloody harvest" from aroused whites fighting blacks.

Violence if it passes, violence if it doesn't. That's the point the crisis may have reached.

"NO ONE PRETENDS this bill is going to deal with every valid grievance," said one of the young men in the attorney general's office. "But at the moment the Negro has no way to protest but to go into the streets. One of the major purinferiority.

"THE NEGRO is asking not to change society but to be included in it — to have the franchise, equal education, removal of arbitrary barriers in the purchase of homes, in public accommodations. He's really asking America to stop being hypocritical, to fulfill the promise of the Constitution. From where I sit, these are pretty modest goals. No one should have to die for these things. The Negro can't be intimidated out of demanding them."

This determination, too, is new. It has been growing since World War II when the Negro saw the world and fought to make it safe for a democracy he felt was denied him at home. It was spurred by the postwar emergence of the black and yellow nations, the 1954 Supreme Court school decision. There was the 1957 Montgomery bus boycott that began when a Negro woman wouldn't give up her seat to a white and ended with the Negroes realizing for the first time the power of stubborn persistence. The young freedom riders of 1961 who risked harm and even death stirred the Negro further.

YET FOR ALL his new militancy the Negro in many instances has shown disciplined restraint. Splashed with ketchup or kicked in the shins, he has as often as not turned the other cheek.

"For 300 years the Negro has been accustomed to injustice," said Clark. "What you're seeing now is the result. Never in his past could the American Negro improve his situation by mob action because he would have been annihilated. The Indian fought back and look what happened to him."

But "Uncle Tom" has become a nasty epithet now to many Negroes and, a century after the Emancipation Proclamation, the Negro is impatient.

THIS BEWILDERS, angers, the South.

"Why," said a surprised white man in Cambridge when he saw an old Negro acquaintance of his marching with young demonstrators outside a restaurant, "just last week I gave him a cord of wood."

The Negro in the South today wants not wood but the vote, to eat in the same restaurant as the white, sleep in the same hostelry. The white Southerner, who claims to know the Negro best, blames the unrest on outside agitation and certainly there is much of this.

"But that's one of the myths the last months have dispelled —that the Negro would be fine if the outside agitators would only leave him alone," said Clark. "No one can claim now need for greater schooling and training than he has had.

"It would be different if he had this," said a veteran craft union official in Washington. "There's no prejudice in skill. But you can't put an unqualified man in a skilled job. The unions would be cutting their throats if they lowered job standards. Why some of our pipefitters are installing on atomic reactors valves no bigger than your fists that cost $35,000."

THEN GIVE US the skills, say the Negroes and they demonstrate against the traditional neighborhood school pattern by which you go to the school nearest your home. This has meant an almost de facto segregation in some Northern towns with their de facto Negro ghettoes. Whether true or not the Negroes claim the schools in the white areas are better and demand to be allowed to go to them. In Englewood, Montclair, Morristown and Plainfield in New Jersey and in New York, they've made their point. But the Plainfield couple who are moving away rather than have their children "go to school with a lot of Negroes" may not be alone.

When the whites move out, sometimes the Negro moves in. Block-busting begins. Other white neighborhoods remain so. But what pressures build up in the Negro who gets his education, who can afford the white homes but can't cross the unwritten color lines around the Harlems of the North?

"The Negro from the South comes North and he finds the signs are down and no one is going to say 'Nigger' but then he finds things are really the same," said Young. "He's hurt. He's at the gangplank. Where's he going to go now?"

THAT'S THE dilemma for the North, white and black. What's going to happen now?

"If you look at Kennedy's bill," said Young, "none of it affects the North. It talks about voting and public accommodations but you still have all those Negroes out on the street because of automation, in the ghettos because they can't buy houses.

"The Negro of the Harlems of this country, he knows you're not going to transform a functional illiterate into a skilled workman overnight. But he wants some tangible evidence of change."

There are people on both sides trying to see that he gets it. Governors, union leaders, civic groups, educators, the Urban Leagues, NAACPs, congressmen.

But the ultimate solution will not be a paragraph in the law books. It will come from the aggregate of all Americans in how they react to the deepen-white stores in the Negro section were burned or the white men were shot by an unknown gunman. In fact of all the towns on the old eastern shore of Maryland, Cambridge probably would have been the last to pick as a trouble spot. It was making progress—Negroes on the school board and town council, schools being integrated (only five grades to go in the grammar school), athletic games integrated, mixed church Lenten services. Why, Cambridge was one of Maryland's first towns to hire Negro policemen.

Then, in January 1961, some out-of-towners from the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee picketed a tavern where the oystermen and crab fishermen hang out. There was a scuffle. Demands from the demonstrators to desegregate restaurants in town met with a request for time from the council. Nothing doing.

"TRY TO UNDERSTAND," said a Marylander. "A funny little Negro comes in and says you shape up in three days or else. If you're the mayor, what would you do?"

The rift widened. Local Negroes formed their own committee and become increasingly militant in their demands for complete integration of the schools, restaurants and equal job opportunities in the new factories that an aggressive group of businessmen was attracting.

"We would have moved to a solution," said Maurice Rimpo, editor of The Cambridge Banner, the daily newspaper. "Maybe we needed some pressure. What town doesn't? But the demonstration at the Choptank Inn broke the back of moderation."

In other towns perhaps a middle ground could have been found. But the whites of Cambridge are proud, willing to eat with Negroes in a New York restaurant, but not to be pushed into doing it at home. The Negroes felt integration was a right.

"AT THE YACHT CLUB or in their homes, the whites are charming people," said one out-of-towner. "But they know that 100 years ago their forebears owned these people."

Yet the younger Negroes out of work, impatient, weren't willing to accept gradualness. "They felt the Uncle Toms and old aunties weren't working fast enough," said State Atty. C. Burnham Mace.

Nonetheless a biracial committee persuaded four of the better restaurants to start serving Negroes. One of them lost most of its white trade. When Negroes sat down, uninvited, at a table where white people were seated, townspeople said it was a shocking breach of manners.

section were stoned. White men were pulled from their cars and pummelled. On June 14 the National Guard moved into the vacuum between the races. Order was restored at bayonet point and the town council agreed to desegregate the restaurants and consider a Negro housing program. The restaurant plan is subject to approval by the voters where there is a heavy white majority. The Negroes resumed demonstrations as soon as the Guard pulled out July 8 and two nights later Cambridge assuaged its agony with gunfire.

Why did this happen?

"No one realized what this would turn into," said one Cambridge businessman. "If we were a community where a Negro was hit on the head every time he put his foot in the door, we might have moved faster. But we were making progress. When the Negroes got unruly, the whites had to prove they were men, too."

MACE BLAMES hoodlums on both sides for the violence. Another man close to the Cambridge tragedy thinks it happened because "there were damn few people with any guts." People willing to lead, to say the unpopular, to keep trying.

It was all of these. Pride, hoodlums, go-slow Uncle Toms and impetuous youths, a 4-1 unemployment ratio black to white, old time traditions, a feeling of you'll-get-your-dessert, just-don't push-me, passions outspeeding efforts to find agreement.

Such tinder is present in varying degrees in thousands of Cambridges across the United States. In Cambridge it produced a fire. If it can there, why not anywhere else?

Maybe because Americans will have patience enough to determine that the nation can do better than bayonets in the street. For all its damage—business off as much as 25 per cent and a deep hatred that may take years to dispel — Cambridge's experience has succeeded in convincing other eastern shore towns to desegregate. They did it without incident.

BUT CAMBRIDGE set another example. It proved, said a state official, that violence can work. If you push hard enough come what may, you might get a restaurant integrated.

But the cost to Cambridge has been severe. Multiplied nationally it could be catastrophic.

Yet the national Negro leaders are not blindly militant. Mrs. Richardson, for all her head - shaking determination, recognizes the new dawn for the Negro will not be tomorrow. But, say his leaders, the Negro insists on what Young called "tangible evidence of change."

Turn to Page 4B

DEEPENING CRISIS

Continued from Page 1B

Perhaps the nation is today where Cambridge was six months ago. What the Negro wanted was clear. What he was going to get or how was not so certain.

NEGRO LEADERS feel there is time and it is working for them. The Kennedy bill would help bank the fires, they feel. Its defeat, says Morsell, might bring violence but he sees a deeper, more damaging reaction: a general withdrawal and isolation from the mainstream of American life.

Clark sees checks in the Negro character itself that could keep the racial crisis from going over the brink. For one thing, the Negro's centuries as a slave have contitioned him against violence as a recourse.

Furthermore, he has a distaste for extremism, said Clark.

"Through his history the Negro has had to be flexible to survive. The rigidities of communism, of Black Muslimism, are incompatible to the imperative flexibility of the Negro. When the Communists came out in the '30s for self-determination in the Black Belt, they were really advocating segregation against the whites. The Negro doesn't want this. He's flirted with causes—Graveyism, Liberia, Muslimism — but these have not been his main thrust, which is to be an American."

HE MIGHT LIKE to hear Malcolm X give it to the white man, but, said Morsell, "for 150 years the Negro has believed in his ultimate acceptance into the national organism. Even during slavery few Negroes wanted to go back to Africa."

"The Negro has been here twice as long as the Kennedys," said Clark. "He is not an alien person in our midst. This is what the segregationist doesn't see."

And perhaps the Negro's deep regard for the only country he knows will be a bridge over which he will meet the white man half way.

For it must surely be a sign of hope that when Medgar Evers' embittered, outraged friends gathered the night after he was murdered, they didn't close the meeting with a call to arms or an oath of revenge.

They sang "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

R & R Rel.

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 2

Racial Unrest: A Time Bomb With Fuse Lit

Editor's Note: Will current racial strife in America be limited to sporadic outbreaks or are we, in this turbulent summer of 1963, on the verge of major domestic violence? Here, in the second installment of a special series on the deepening integration crisis, is an on-the-spot survey of major friction spots.

By BERNARD GAVZER
Associated Press Writer

Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson has warned that "a time bomb ticks" in America's streets this turbulent summer of 1963.

The bomb is the explosive crisis which already has flared in sporadic violence in Danville, Va., Cambridge, Md., and New York as Negroes and whites have clashed on the issue of full racial equality now.

Overhanging these and other outbreaks are the haunting questions: Will the bomb go off? When? How? Where?

Interviews with and reports from top level white and Negro officials in federal, state and municipal governments, with civic, social and religious leaders and with citizens in the street, point to one conclusion:

There is grave danger of major racial violence as America searches for a solution to the deepening integration crises.

IF SUCH chaos comes, the consensus is:

1. It may very likely—but not necessarily—occur in a Northern big city.

2. It may stem from rigid police action—or from some minor incident blown out of proportion by rumor.

Viewing the state of affairs today, the National Urban League's Board of Trustees reports:

"Hundreds of thousands of (Northern) Negro citizens—struggling beneath the mounting burden of automation, over-crowding and subtle discrimination—are reaching the breaking point."

Dr. Gardner Taylor, Negro pastor of Brooklyn's Concord Baptist Church, warns:

"Miscalculation of the moment of truth which is upon us could plunge New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit and Los Angeles into a crimson carnage and a bloodbath unparalleled in the history of the nation."

ONE OF THE worst years in the history of U.S. race relations was 1919. There were seven major riots that year—the three worst occurring in Chicago (38 killed, 537 wounded and injured), Washington, D.C. (6 killed, scores hurt), and Phillips County, Ark. (30 killed, hundreds hurt).

Can such riots come again?

Dr. Kenneth Clark, Negro professor at City College of New York, answers:

"If white America refuses to grant rights to Negro citizens and continues to withhold them, I suppose white America will try killing Negroes. If white America is prepared to see Negroes being killed and killed and killed, then this will happen, but it won't stop anything because you simply cannot kill everyone."

In Chicago, veteran labor leader Ralph Helstein, president of the United Packinghouse Workers—a union which has been integrated for decades—says:

"My feeling is that the discontent still is below the boiling point, but I wouldn't bet a thin dime on when it boils over. Our organizers throughout the country are surprised that it hasn't boiled over."

IF THE time bomb should go off, where is it likely to explode?

Some, including Dr. Richard Wade, professor of urban history at the University of Chicago, think it may occur in the South.

Wade cites a long history of deference on the part of the Negro, who is in many Southern regions unskilled, uneducated and has little organization.

Others believe the explosion is more likely to occur in the North where there is job discrimination, de facto segregation in housing, de facto school segregation and social discrimination.

Speaking of the onslaughts to personal dignity endured by the Negro in the North, a Negro public relations man notes:

"I sit in my air conditioned office all day and I see nicely dressed people and I look down on Sixth Avenue and I almost forget about color. And then at 5:30 I get downstairs and it hits me in the face. I can't get a cab because everybody thinks I want to go up to Harlem."

IN CHICAGO, Alvin Prejean, deputy director of the Urban League, insists all the ingredients for explosion are to be found in Chicago, among other Northern cities.

"Negroes are pushing and whites are pushing back," he says. "People here used to talk about those poor people down in Birmingham. Now they are talking about here. We need better teachers, better jobs, better housing just to catch up with whites."

Earl Brown, Manhattan's Negro deputy borough president and former magazine writer who with Louis E. Martin, now a member of the Democratic National Committee, predicted the 1943 Detroit race riot (34 dead, 700 injured), says it is the discovery of obtaining dignity which contributes to the Negro militancy.

"This is the Negro doing something for himself," Brown says. "He's learning something about dignity. He may have to lose some blood, but he's found that that's the road to freedom, not just winning a peace."

Martin, former editor-publisher of Detroit's Negro newspaper, the Michigan Chronicle, says:

"Today, everybody recognizes the danger. In 1943, nobody would believe it.

"For once in America, the issue is on top of the table. There are no illusions. The confrontations that have taken place are vital because the Negro now knows he is being listened to."

North where there is job discrimination, de facto segregation in housing, de facto school segregation and social discrimination.

Speaking of the onslaughts to personal dignity endured by the Negro in the North, a Negro public relations man notes:

"I sit in my air conditioned office all day and I see nicely dressed people and I look down on Sixth Avenue and I almost forget about color. And then at 5:30 I get downstairs and it hits me in the face. I can't get a cab because everybody thinks I want to go up to Harlem."

IN CHICAGO, Alvin Prejean, deputy director of the Urban League, insists all the ingredients for explosion are to be found in Chicago, among other Northern cities.

"Negroes are pushing and whites are pushing back," he says. "People here used to talk about those poor people down in Birmingham. Now they are talking about here. We need better teachers, better jobs, better housing just to catch up with whites."

Earl Brown, Manhattan's Negro deputy borough president and former magazine writer who with Louis E. Martin, now a member of the Democratic National Committee, predicted the 1943 Detroit race riot (34 dead, 700 injured), says it is the discovery of obtaining dignity which contributes to the Negro militancy.

"This is the Negro doing something for himself," Brown says. "He's learning something about dignity. He may have to lose some blood, but he's found that that's the road to freedom, not just winning a peace."

Martin, former editor-publisher of Detroit's Negro newspaper, the Michigan Chronicle, says:

"Today, everybody recognizes the danger. In 1943, nobody would believe it.

"For once in America, the issue is on top of the table. There are no illusions. The confrontations that have taken place are vital because the Negro now knows he is being listened to."

AS IN ANY social movement, there is confusion. Leaders struggle for power positions, goals depend upon who's defining them, control of the masses evaporates.

James Meredith gets booed at an NAACP convention in Chicago, for example. At the same convention, Dr. J. H. Jackson, president of the National (Negro) Baptist Convention, is booed for 9 minutes, supposedly because he backed President Kennedy's call for a moratorium on demonstrations.

On leaving the speaker's platform, Rev. Jackson was pinned against it by some 50 persons who kept crying, "Kill him! Kill him!"

The mood for action is all-pervading. Its beat is sounded by Dr. James M. Nabrit Jr., president of Howard University:

"We are sick of evasions, weary of excuses, fed up with promises and want action now, liberty now, equality now."

C. Summer Stone Jr., editor of the Washington (D.C.) Afro-American, says, "There is a new Negro out there somewhere. For the first time, I'd say, everybody is involved. All Negroes, except for some Uncle Toms, are prepared to be involved."

THERE IS concern that the one thing which might lead to trouble would be a mass nonviolent march on Washington.

Such a march was decided upon in New York recently at a top level strategy meeting involving the NAACP's Roy Wilkins, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's Martin Luther King Jr., the Urban League's Whitney Young, CORE's James Farmer, the Students Non-Violent Coordinating Committee's John Lewis and A. Philip Randolph, president of the Negro American Labor Council.

The march is set for Aug. 28. It was decided upon even though the Kennedy administration has voiced vigorous determination to get a strong civil rights bill through Congress. Negro leaders feel there will be a filibuster and that a march would show lawmakers the degree of Negro unity and determination.

While there may be argument about the length of the fuse or whether it will be ignited, the authorities who must plan for any eventuality have done so in many areas. It is clear the federal government is committed to back decisions of courts and policies of the administration with armed troops.

"If there is runaway rioting—I hope there won't be—then the Negro can't help but lose," says Lee Blackwell, editor of the Chicago Defender.

"We represent only 10 per cent of the population. We couldn't win. I don't think it will happen that way because the Negro is realistic about being outnumbered. I do think there will be some blood.

"You can't have a revolution—even a peaceful one—without some casualties."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Naked Basis of Crisis.

R&R Rel.

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 3

'Negroes . . . Just Are Not Ready Yet'

EDITOR'S NOTE: What is the naked basis of the white man's resistance to integration of the Negro in America? Here is a hard look at the core of the problem, often hidden behind polite reasons and rationalizations. This is a third of a special series of articles comprehensively surveying both sides of the argument in today's racial crisis.

By RELMAN MORIN

MACON COUNTY, Ala., July 30 (AP)—It is not uncommon in the South to hear a white segregationist say that, by and large, he likes the Negro.

He sees no inconsistency between having an affection for Negroes and at the same time defending a system that denies them full equality. "The Negroes as a whole just aren't ready yet," he says. "It's not their fault, but that's the way it is at this point."

A key point in his reasoning is that the great majority of Negroes are like children and that, for the time being, they must be treated as such.

A COMPOSITE of many conversations with the thoughtful type of segregationist goes pretty much like this:

"When I was a kid, my best friend was a colored boy. We played together, fished together, slept side by side on hunting trips. I was in and out of his house every day and he was in mine, eating from the same kitchen table.

"After we grew up, I paid his hospital bills and loaned him money when he needed it. I went to the weddings and funerals in his family and he came to ours. On Saturday night, when he got into trouble with the law, who went to the jail at 2 a.m. and bailed him out? I did."

It was a comfortable, harmonious relationship, he says. And even today, while racial strife rises toward the danger point in many places, you can still see this relationship between individual Negroes and whites in the South.

HERE IS A cotton plantation, deep in Alabama.

It is about 10 miles from the nearest community, the nearest sheriff or policeman. In the county, Negroes outnumber the whites, 5 to 1.

Yet the doors of the planter's home are never locked. And when he has to travel, he tells the Negro foreman, "I'll be away a few days. You look after things around here."

At night, the foreman listens to the dogs. If he hears a peculiar note in their barking, he will go outside to investigate. He is proud of being "in charge."

DRIVING INTO the plantation, you see a softball game in a field near the planter's house. Three of his children, including a girl, are playing with the children of the Negro "hoe hands."

In the sun-drenched afternoon, the oldest boy goes fishing with two Negro boys. He brings the sandwiches.

Meanwhile, the oldest girl goes horseback riding, deep in the woods. She is alone. Her parents say they never worry about her, that she is perfectly safe.

Some miles away, in a corner of the plantation, an aged Negro woman sits, rocking, on the porch. She is the widow of a "hoe hand" who worked here many years. The house is hers as long as she lives. The planter asks if she is all right. "Gettin' along jes' fine," she says.

Associated Press Wirephoto

YOUNG GIRL PLAYS WITH FAMILY COOK
She Tries to Teach Woman to Ride Bicycle

A LITTLE scene takes place in the cotton fields. As the Negroes stop work for their mid-day meal, the planter slips a dollar bill into a woman's hand. He tells a man, "Drive her to the store."

You ask what this is about.

For some reason, she brought no food to the fields that morning. "Maybe she hasn't got any money," the planter says, "or maybe she just plain forgot. But I sure can't see her go without eating."

In the winter, when the fields are bare, he finds other work on the plantation for his "hoe hands." They have to eat in the winter, too.

It all adds up to a unique segment of the racial story.

The integrationist, however, calls this "Uncle Tom-ism." And the militant Negro says it is "paternalism," archaic, degrading the Negro, numbing his effort to develop himself.

Let's look further.

THE PLANTER frequently works in the fields beside the "hoe hands." The relationship appears completely comfortable. Little jokes—in language largely unintelligible to a Yankee—pass between them. They agree that the cotton looks good.

"Way I figure," says the Negro foreman, "the better the boss does, the better we do." There will be a bonus for them at Christmas.

He has been on this plantation 24 years, another man for 17, several others for from 8 to 10 years.

The foreman once went to Florida and worked for a year. He came back. Some of the others went north for jobs. They came back, too. All of them have been to school, three, five, six years.

You see television antennae on the Negro houses. The foreman says he saw pictures of the disturbances at Birmingham and elsewhere, North and South. What did he think?

"WELL," HE SAYS, "they is sorry colored folks and they is sorry white folks everywhere, and I wish they'd both jes' leave us alone."

Whether this is the attitude, generally, of the Negro field workers in Macon County is difficult to say. Even the whites there, who consider themselves on close personal terms with their Negroes, say they don't know what the "hoe hands" are thinking, as the clash and clatter of racial trouble comes nearer.

Not all segregationists, of course, profess to like Negroes.

THERE IS the bigot, ridden with fear and hatred of the Negro, and clutching his prejudices. He is the night-rider, shooting indiscriminately into Negro homes, dumping garbage on the front porch of white integrationists.

To anyone who pleads for reason and good will in the struggle over civil rights, he scrawls a "hate letter." It is misspelled, ungrammatical, frequently obscene, dripping venom.

"That type of white man," says a Southern newspaper woman, "is at the bottom of the scale and he knows it. The only thing that separates him from an equally poor, uneducated Negro is the color of his skin. He has to look down on somebody so he looks down on the Negro."

BUT WHAT about the segregationist who says he has a genuine affection for his Negro friends? How does he square this with the fact of injustice and inequality?

He begins with a basic premise, a conviction that underlies most of his attitudes—that, by and large, the Negro has not yet reached a stage of development where he is "ready" for full equality.

"No race on earth ever made so much progress in 100 years as the Negroes have made," he says. "But they did it with the guidance of the white man and they still need our guidance."

Flowing from that comes his opposition to integrated schools.

"THE NEGRO doesn't have the same capacity for learning," he says. "Moreover, his home invironment is seldom conducive to study. So why should my children be held back to his pace? They're both better off in schools where they can advance at their own pace."

The segregationist also says that Negro children frequently come to school unbathed and wearing dirty clothes. He says they come from homes with a high rate of illegitimacy and adds, "I don't wany my kids sitting next to kids who talk openly about what they have seen at home."

For similar reasons, he doesn't want his wife and daughter to sit next to a Negro in a movie theater or a lunch counter, use the same fitting rooms in a store, or the same rest rooms.

Does he really believe the Negro's ultimate goal is to "marry your daughter?" Yes, he does. He's convinced of it.

As to the Negro's right to vote, one segregationist said, "There's no reason why their best people shouldn't vote, those who are educated, literate, and able to make a judgment on candidates and issues. But there aren't many with these qualifications."

SO IT GOES, consistently, over point after point—the assertion that the Negro's level of development is not yet at a stage where he is "ready" for full equality. "What he is asking," segregationists say, "is the rights without the responsibilities."

I once asked a Southern newspaper editor, a segregationist, to itemize the five or six principal reasons why so many Southerners believe in segregation. On the back of an envelope, he set down the various points. Leading his list was one word:

"Habit."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Church's Role.

IN ARIZONA, WHERE MEN ARE COOKS

PHOENIX, Ariz., July 30 (AP)—Joseph Meeker is out to prove that boys know how to use the stove as well as the ice box.

The 13-year-old Phoenix lad has entered a contest with six girls in the Maricopa County junior cooking championships.

your number spell a message.—(c1963.)

AFL. Jour. 7/31/63

THE DEEPENING CRISIS, NO. 4

U.S. Churches Taking Action For Integration

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
Associated Press Writer

The picture in the Sunday school lesson showed a group of babies in a clinic, two of them Negroes. Another picture showed three children at play, one a Negro. The story discussion said:

"God loves white children, yellow children, brown children. Dorothy's hands are very pale. Her hair is golden. Ben's hands are brown. His eyes are black. Do you think God loves Dorothy better because her hands are white?

"No, indeed not—it would be sad indeed if we all looked alike."

MOST AMERICAN religious bodies, in their official pronouncements and educational materials, have long stressed the equal worth of all human beings, whatever their color—that all were created by God and precious to Him.

At the same time, however, the churches have often been described as the most racially segregated major institutions in the nation's life.

"The shame of Sunday morning," goes an oft-used phrase of self-reproach in church circles. And another: "The most segregated hour of the week is at 11 a.m. on Sunday."

Since church congregations harbor intimate personal relationships among whole families — adults, youths and children — it has been maintained that once Negro and white mingle fully there, racial barriers will collapse elsewhere.

IN THAT SENSE, the local church becomes a testing ground —a point of decision — for the whole community pattern.

Churches have long been rallying points for pro-integration activity in many instances, and some Southern ministers have been roughed up for their parts in it.

On the other hand, the churches themselves in their local compositions have remained predominantly one-color units, even though the number of integrated parishes has been increasing rapidly of late.

This is the lump in the throat of the churches—the acknowledged gap between their official pleas, and their on-the-spot conditions.

WITH THE racial crisis flaming and with Negroes demanding equity with new vehemence and immediacy, church strategy generally has undergone an extraordinary change in the last few months.

It has switched from talk, to action.

"It amounts to a new posture toward methodology," says Rev. Dr. Alfred S. Kramer, a sociologist-clergyman consultant to the racial and cultural relations department of the National Council of Churches.

"After years of repentance and appeals for racial reconciliation, the churches have now begun a course of social intervention at the first level."

THIS MEANS official backing for direct action challenging segregation on the local scene.

As expressed by the national council, which includes 33 Protestant and Orthodox dominations with 40 million members, the method calls for personal "involvement in every phase of the struggle for justice including negotiations and demonstration."

A new interdenominational "Commission on Religion and Race" was formed in June, to implement the task.

Steps were under way to form adopted a similar policy. The denomination this spring appropriated a half-million dollars to support direct-action programs for integration. The Disciples of Christ also made a special allocation for this purpose.

Roman Catholicism was a forerunner in integration action. In 1947, Joseph Cardinal Ritter of St. Louis, desegregated parochial schools there, despite lay resistance. Catholic Bishop Vincent S. Waters did the same in the Diocese of Raleigh, N.C., in 1953, ahead of the court decision.

He got shoved about in the process, but stuck to his rule. "Segregation is a product of darkness and the time has come to end it," he said.

MUCH OF the reinforced church activity was geared for an interfaith approach.

That aspect got its big push last January at the historic and unprecedented "National Conference on Religion and Race" in Chicago, the first time leading Protestant, Jewish and Roman Catholic bodies had joined in tackling the problem.

"Racism is our most serious domestic evil," the conference declared. "We must eradicate it with all diligence and speed."

Permanent machinery was set up for continuing interfaith operations, with a local network organized in Atlanta, Detroit, New Orleans, Miami, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Antonio, Little Rock, San Francisco and elsewhere.

AMONG the nation's Negroes, about 10 million belong to separate all-Negro Protestant denominations — Baptist and Methodist. About 500,000 are Roman Catholics and another 500,000 belong to predominately white Protestant bodies, although they are chiefly in one-color congregations.

At the national level, in most denominations, and in inter-denominational bodies, Negroes have considerable representation.

But the pattern rarely is reflected on the local scene—in the overwhelming white suburban congregations, and in de facto segregated city neighborhoods, North and South.

In 1946, nearly a decade before the Supreme Court decision, the Federal Council of Churches, an interdenominational precursor of the national council, declared that "segregation is a denial of our Christian faith."

A famed Southern Baptist evangelist, Billy Graham, set an early example in his crusades, here and abroad. "We will not hold a segregated meeting anywhere in the world," he announced.

AFTER the Supreme Court decision, every major denomination, including the strongest church body in the South, the Southern Baptist Convention, endorsed the desegregation order.

In many cases, groups of Southern pastors, in the midst of racial tension, have issued manifestos calling for equal treatment of the Negro. Some pastors have lost their posts as a result of their stand.

A survey in 1958 showed four out of five Southern Protestant pastors favored integration, whether saying so publicly or not. Others, however, strongly support segregation.

On the other hand, the churches themselves in their local compositions have remained predominantly one-color units, even though the number of integrated parishes has been increasing rapidly of late.

This is the lump in the throat of the churches—the acknowledged gap between their official pleas, and their on-the-spot conditions.

WITH THE racial crisis flaming and with Negroes demanding equity with new vehemence and immediacy, church strategy generally has undergone an extraordinary change in the last few months.

It has switched from talk, to action.

"It amounts to a new posture toward methodology," says Rev. Dr. Alfred S. Kramer, a sociologist-clergyman consultant to the racial and cultural relations department of the National Council of Churches.

"After years of repentance and appeals for racial reconciliation, the churches have now begun a course of social intervention at the first level."

THIS MEANS official backing for direct action challenging segregation on the local scene.

As expressed by the national council, which includes 33 Protestant and Orthodox dominations with 40 million members, the method calls for personal "involvement in every phase of the struggle for justice including negotiations and demonstration."

A new interdenominational "Commission on Religion and Race" was formed in June, to implement the task.

Steps were under way to form local arms in communities in all regions to check congregational practices, to support and join in demonstrations, to press for civil rights legislation, and to organize "corps of prison chaplains" to discourage police mistreatment of demonstrators.

The new punch in the church stand has showed up in many ways. The United Church of Christ (a merger including Congregationalists) at its general synod in Denver this summer shaped a potent financial weapon.

It moved to make loans for new church construction contingent on nondiscrimination in building work, and on a commitment to an interracial policy by congregational leaders.

UNITED Presbyterians have nominations — Baptist and Methodist. About 500,000 are Roman Catholics and another 500,000 belong to predominately white Protestant bodies, although they are chiefly in one-color congregations.

At the national level, in most denominations, and in inter-denominational bodies, Negroes have considerable representation.

But the pattern rarely is reflected on the local scene—in the overwhelming white suburban congregations, and in de facto segregated city neighborhoods, North and South.

In 1946, nearly a decade before the Supreme Court decision, the Federal Council of Churches, an interdenominational precursor of the national council, declared that "segregation is a denial of our Christian faith."

A famed Southern Baptist evangelist, Billy Graham, set an early example in his crusades, here and abroad. "We will not hold a segregated meeting anywhere in the world," he announced.

AFTER the Supreme Court decision, every major denomination, including the strongest church body in the South, the Southern Baptist Convention, endorsed the desegregation order.

In many cases, groups of Southern pastors, in the midst of racial tension, have issued manifestos calling for equal treatment of the Negro. Some pastors have lost their posts as a result of their stand.

A survey in 1958 showed four out of five Southern Protestant pastors favored integration, whether saying so publicly or not. Others, however, strongly support segregation.

AMONG those Southern preachers who support segregation, some maintain that the idea of interracial mixing is Communist-inspired. Some also argue that the Bible teaches segregation.

On the other hand, pro-integrationist ministers cite many Biblical passages in support of all men's equality before God.

Are local pastors addressing themselves to the issue? An official of the Southern Baptist Convention told me:

"As a rule, I don't think they are. Some are beginning to speak plainly and forthrightly. Unfortunately, we're late, just awfully late."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Political Effects.

Rr R Rel

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 5

Voting Is New Negro Symbol Of Citizenship

By RELMAN MORIN

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Aug. 1 (AP)—The Negro woman says she is 50 years old and wants to register to vote.

She doesn't know the procedure, never having done it.

In the offices of the Tuskegee Civic Association (TCA), a Negro organization, they give her a sample copy of the Alabama registration form. Slowly, studying it line by line, she fills in the form. A TCA official finds some minor errors but otherwise, he says, the papers are in order. He tells her where, and on which days, she can file a real application. If it is accepted, she will be a registered voter.

A REPORTER questioned her. She says, simply:

"I just want to become a citizen of our country. Being registered will make me a full citizen."

This scene—with its immense potentialities for the Negro movement—is being re-enacted in hundreds of cities in the South today.

It is the result of the voter-registration drive.

Throughout the South, Negro organizations are working to register more of their people, thousands of men and women who never voted before. As the number grows, the political leverage of the Negro increases. Here, potentially, as a powerful weapon in his fight against segregation.

THE DRIVE moves through many channels.

The woman in Tuskegee may have decided to try to register after hearing a constantly-repeated radio appeal, attending a meeting, or simply receiving a handbill.

Elsewhere, Negro workers canvass a residential district on registration days, ringing doorbells. If the housewife isn't registered, they urge her to go to the courthouse immediately. If she has no transportation, they provide it. If she says she can't leave her children, they offer to baby-sit.

Or they station themselves in municipal buildings. A Negro comes in for, say, a driver's license. They ask whether he is registered. If not, they try to persuade him to do so.

ANOTHER DEVICE is the "voter clinic." This is a meeting in which Negro instructors show would-be applicants the technicalities of registering, how to fill out the forms. In Tuskegee alone, during the month of June, there were 19 such "clinics."

And there is the famous Alabama mule. He walks through the streets of Huntsville, carrying a sandwich billboard. The sign reads, "I'm not registered because I'm a mule. What's your excuse?"

SPEAKING of the voter registration drives, Bishop George W. Baber of the African Methodist Episcopal church said:

"The objectives of the campaign would be accomplished substantially by registering and voting every single, eligible voter within sight or hearing of our membership. Our goal is a minimum of two million new Negro voters, North and South."

The movement is steady and seems to be gaining momentum.

SPEAKING of the voter registration drives, Bishop George W. Baber of the African Methodist Episcopal church said:

"The objectives of the campaign would be accomplished substantially by registering and voting every single, eligible voter within sight or hearing of our membership. Our goal is a minimum of two million new Negro voters, North and South."

The movement is steady and seems to be gaining momentum. What are the results?

Exact figures for the South as a whole are not complete. However, the Department of Justice and the Southern Regional Council's "Voter Education Project" pinpoint the changes in some specific areas.

IN TENNESSEE'S Haywood and Fayette counties, a Justice Department official said, Negro registration has jumped from 150 to about 5,000 in five years.

Bullock County, Ala., had four Negro voters on the rolls in 1961, he said. Now the figure is 1,341. In the city of Montgomery, the rate of registration of Negroes used to be about 200 a year. Now it is about 200 per month, he said.

Statistics on 11 Southern states, compiled by the Southern Regional Council, indicate that about one-fourth of the Negroes of voting age are registered. The figures show a total of 5,045,000, of whom 1,344,000 are registered. Wiley Branton, an SRC executive, said the figures are incomplete, some counties being as yet untabulated.

COMPARABLE figures for the white voting population in these states show 17,539,000, of whom 10,566,000 are registered.

Especially in areas where Negroes outnumber the whites—sometimes by as much as five to one—many devices have been used to keep political power in the hands of the whites.

Registration boards met irregularly and at widely-spaced intervals. They worked slowly, and then quit for the day, while Negroes were still waiting in line to file applications. Or they rejected applications on technical grounds.

For example, on March 17, 1961, after a long legal battle, a federal court in Alabama ruled on a lawsuit involving Macon County. The judge wrote in his memorandum that:

". . . 18 affiants, more than half of whom had college or advanced degrees, were rejected for such inconsequential, formal, technical mistakes."

HE ORDERED the board to register 64 Negroes and to give priority attention to 400 applicants on the waiting list.

Similarly, in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said:

"In one county, Negroes have been required to copy and interpret long, archaic sections of the state constitution, and then have been rejected for omissions of punctuation. Whites, meanwhile have been asked to copy such simply provisions as, 'There shall be no imprisonment for debt.' "

Mississippi's Gov. Ross Barnett, ascribed the small number of registered Negroes in his state to other causes. In a copyrighted interview with "U.S. News and World Report," he said:

"The primary reasons for the fewer Negro voters include illiteracy, apathy, and the law requiring payment of a poll tax. So many Negroes are not qualified to vote."

AS TO LITERACY qualifications and registering, he said:

"They have to be able to read and understand and interpret a section of the constitution of the state of Mississippi. We don't believe in having ignorant people elect our officials."

As Negro voting strength increases, what are the political implications for a candidate for public office in the South?

There have been indications already—although it is difficult to say with certainty—that the Negro vote tipped the balance in certain elections. Some residents of Birmingham, Ala., for example, say Negro ballots ousted T. Eugene (Bull) Connor from the city government. Others are not so sure.

IN ANY CASE, the thousands of new Negro voters can be expected today to go to the man with "moderate" views on segregation and against the candidate running on a program of strict "white supremacy." In a close election, this could spell the difference.

In Tuskegee, Ala., Negro leaders say they already outnumber the whites in registered voters. Thus, theoretically, they could elect a mayor and an entire city government. But William P. Mitchell, executive secretary of the Tuskegee Civic Association, says:

"We would discourage an all-Negro slate. We don't want Negro domination and we have preached that for years.

"We just want to vote for the best qualified man."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Economic Effects.

Atl. Jour 8/2/63

Friday, August 2, 1963

Exploited Negro Must Pay 'Race Tax'

By TOM HENSHAW
Associated Press Writer

One day in June, 1962, a real estate broker dropped in at a home in a town far out on Long Island.

Were the owners interested in selling their home? They were not.

They should be, the broker advised, because soon it would have no value. The reason: Negroes were living in the neighborhood.

The owners, who are white, still were not interested, so the broker left his business card in case they changed their minds. He went next door to pay a similar call.

The broker's enterprise was nipped in midspiel when the New York Department of State lifted his license for "Blockbusting," which New York considers to be "against the public interest."

Blockbusting, or inducing the panic sale of property at a loss when Negroes move into a white neighborhood, is only one of many ways in which individuals can profit from racial segregation and discrimination, a facet of the economics of prejudice.

THERE ARE other ways in which the Negro is exploited—not necessarily because he is black but because being black has placed him in a vulernable social, cultural, economic position.

Exploitation in housing has been the subject of numerous inquiries in Northern metropolitan areas. Substandard housing reaps enormous profits for landlords through a variety of techniques: Reducing large units into many small ones, charging high rents on the basis of persons occupying the quarters, drastically reducing services and upkeep.

Even in such things as the purchase of food, Negroes contend they have paid a double premium: Higher prices and lower quality. A large chain recently was accused of having different price structures in New York in stores dealing with predominantly white customers and those with Negro and Puerto Rican Customers.

The Negro customers paid more for the same goods, according to a survey by New York's East River Democratic Club. The company attributed the situation to "local store management error."

ONE OF THE major complaints of Northern Negroes is that they have been short changed in job opportunities. While no man may directly profit from such a system, in a sense the white worker profits in reduced competition for his job. It is in the struggle for jobs that the North has witnessed some of its worst violence.

In New York, Philadelphia and other Northern cities, the Negro has been demonstrating in demand of jobs. CORE has been particularly active, and heads have been cracked as pickets blocked movement of supply vehicles or sought to keep workers from going on the job. Construction at various sites was halted by pickets.

It is almost axiomatic in the Negro community — and a major irritant in these days of deepening crisis — that Negroes pay more for less. Reginald A. Johnson, associate director for housing of the National Urban League, calls it "the race tax."

Since the business of profiteering in race is a shadowy operation, there are no good estimates of its profits. But a self proclaimed blockbuster, for example, wrote under an assumed name in a national magazine (Saturday Evening Post) and said in effect:

"If you can't make $100,000 a year, you're loafing."

UNDER IDEAL conditions, blockbusting works like this:

Elm Street is all-white. The houses are not new; perhaps they're a bit over the hill. A few blocks away, there is an all - Negro neighborhood. The whites of Elm Street are extremely conscious of its existence.

One day, a white family moves away from Elm Street. A real estate speculator, scenting an opportunity, sells the house to a Negro family. The Negroes move in. Then the speculator really goes to work.

He contacts Brown, another white Elm Street home owner. He reminds Brown, who probably doesn't need reminding, of his Negro neighbors, adding with a knowing look, "and you know what they do to property values."

The speculator offers to buy the house. Brown agrees to sell. He sets the price at $12,500. The speculator laughs. With Negroes in the neighborhood and more certain to move in, he says, he couldn't get more than $10,000 for it. Brown sells at $10,000.

Then the house is offered to Smith, a Negro. The price is $15,000. It's inflated and Smith knows it, but the house and the neighborhood are better than those usually available to Negroes. Smith buys at $15,000.

THE SPECULATOR takes his $5,000 gross profit and moves on to the next house, the next block, the next town. The profit, of course, knows no race—$2,500 came from the white; $2,500 from the Negro.

Blockbusting is the most spectacular way in which unscrupulous people reap a financial windfall from the fact that one race often is uncomfortable in the presence of another. But all methods have a common denominator: The Negro is a captive market.

"The white person can escape," says Whitney M. Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League. "The Negro can't."

Unspectacular but steady profits are made, Negro leaders say, in the so-called Negro ghettos of the North—Harlem in New York City, the South Side of Chicago, Fillmore Street in San Francisco.

Ghetto landlords, most of them white but some Negro, are able to make money without spending much.

"They don't have to worry about improving the property," says Dr. Warren Banner of the Urban League. "The Negro isn't going to move. Where would he go? The owners just milk the property and forget it."

SOME OWNERS keep their property in repair. A noticeable number don't.

Last spring, inspectors discovered 91 violations of the health code in a Harlem tenement. They included rat infestation, disrepair, accumulated refuse and inadequate heat. The landlord lived in the suburbs.

Race profits also are made on the money market. Some channels for obtaining money are closed to the Negroes, particularly in mortgage loans.

"The money we lend is not our own," says a Chicago banker. "We must invest it in sound paper. Negroes just have a tough time meeting our mortgage standards."

"When a person applies for a loan," says Banner, "the bank looks at his job and his collateral. It relates this information to its experience with people in similar situations.

"Negroes are most likely to have marginal jobs with less security. Generally speaking, the neighborhoods into which Negroes are permitted to move are the neighborhoods no one else wants. The House is not worth much as collateral."

THE SPECULATOR, of course, is always willing to step in to help—for a price.

Banner cites as an example the case of a Negro who had a chance to buy a house at its market price of $17,000 and wound up paying $21,000 through a speculator when the bank turned down his loan. Not only that, but he found himself paying simultaneous installments on loans of $10,000 and $6,000.

"The load is more than he can handle," says Banner. "The house is old because that is usually the only type they will sell to a Negro. He has no money left for repairs. He has to rent out rooms to make ends meet."

Young believes the financial exploitation of Negroes begins with the fact of segregation; the inability of the Negro to move around within the whole community.

NEXT IN SUNDAY'S ATLANTA JOURNAL AND CONSTITUTION: How It All Began.

Ak. Jvc 8/4/63

THE DEEPENING CRISIS—NO. 7

Here's How It All Began

EDITOR'S NOTE — The struggle for integration of the races in America started quietly. But a historical perspective reveals its inexorable progress to this critical summer of sporadic violence, frustration and discord — a forward march of events predestined to occur from the moment the first slave ship dropped anchor in the free world.

By JULES LOH
Associated Press Writer

There was nothing very complicated about it at the beginning.

A Dutch ship dropped anchor in the harbor at Jamestown, Va., one sweaty August day and its captain, named Jope, rowed ashore and told tobacco man John Rolfe and some of the others that he had a cargo of "20 negars" which he wished to swap for food.

The Negroes probably had been captured as pirate booty on the high seas from some Spanish vessel for they had names like Isabella, Pedro and Antonio, though the language they spoke surely wasn't Spanish.

Where they came from really didn't matter much to the colonists. After all, many were indentured servants themselves. In fact just a few months earlier a boatload of 90 "young maidens" had arrived from Europe to become wives of the first 90 bachelors who would go the price of 20 pounds of tobacco per maiden.

THE YEAR was 1619. In some respects it is as profound a date in American history as the following year, 1620, when the Mayflower arrived.

However wide the chasm of racial separation was to become during the succeeding 3½ centuries, not a single segment of the fabric of American life would go untouched by the black thread introduced into the nation's social and cultural

NEGRO SLAVES LEAVING THEIR QUARTERS AFTER EMANCIPATION WAS PROCLAIMED
This Sketch From Harper's Weekly of 1864 Caught Negroes at Time of Rising Hope guess, had been forcibly exported and another 30 to 40 million had died before they could be sold.

It wasn't the custom of slavery — an institution as old as Moses — but the commercialization of it that had such melancholy results.

Historically slaves were merely unfortunate folks who happened to have been captured in battle or maybe went bankrupt. It could happen to anybody. Race certainly wasn't a factor and there was no stigma of basic inferiority attached to their lot.

Portugal, for example, had elaborate codes developed over the centuries which made slavery far from a hopeless plight. Families could not be split up; trained tutor named Eli Whitney spent a few idle days in 1792 at the home of the Widow Green in Savannah and noticed how frustratingly tedious was the job of extracting seeds from the tenacious fibers in a boll of short staple upland cotton.

His invention of the cotton gin moved slavery from convenient luxury to economic necessity as small farms became huge plantations. By 1850 three-fourths of the world's cotton was being supplied by the Gulf states and planters felt the economy of the entire Southland depended on slave labor. To a great many in the cotton kingdom it appeared obvious that slavery was a positive good, and practicing it was simply following the natural order of things.

a bad deal and sold her to someone else for a $50 profit.

As the Negro's legal status sank lower and lower so did his human status. He became the butt of ridicule, the subject of caricature by comics who discovered burnt cork. Most famous of all the antebellum blackface minstrels was Daddy Dan Rice who toured the country for years performing a thigh-slapping song and dance number titled "Jump, Jim Crow!"

THE NEGROES had songs of their own, generally regarded as quaint. They had words like "Go Down, Moses, 'Way Down in Egypt Land, and Tell Old Pharaoh to Let My People Go," and "Nobody Knows the nence, persuaded Congress to buy some territory in Africa which later became the independent state of Liberia. Only about 6,000 American Negroes chose to move there, however. The latest and perhaps the most colorful back-to-Africa advocate was Marcus Manassen Garvey, a Jamaican Negro educated in London who came to New York in 1917 wearing a purple and gold uniform and three-cornered hat. He wound up in the Atlanta penitentiary for using the mail to defraud.

From the beginning most Negro leaders have denounced emigration ideas. During the Liberian movement a speaker at a Negro rally in Hartford cried, "Why should we leave this land so dearly bought by the blood

THE YEAR was 1619. In some respects it is as profound a date in American history as the following year, 1620, when the Mayflower arrived.

However wide the chasm of racial separation was to become during the succeeding 3½ centuries, not a single segment of the fabric of American life would go untouched by the black thread introduced into the nation's social and cultural loom that day at Jamestown.

Harper's Ferry, Little Rock, Bloody Kansas, Birmingham—what generation has not known racial violence? Dred Scott, Medgar Evers, Theodore Bilbo, Marcus Garvey, John Brown—how many names has "the Negro question" thrust into national prominence? Lynch law, Mr. Interlocutor, freedom rides, underground railroad, jazz, Ku Klux Klan, sit-ins, eeny meeny miney moe catch a nigger by the toe — what man, woman or child in all the land can say he has escaped the influence of the Negro in his midst?

THE PEOPLE of Jamestown could have suspected none of this; their part in the emerging drama was innocent enough.

The 20 Negroes melded quite nicely into their established system of servitude whereby a man could be sold, or sell himself, for a certain duration. After working or buying off his bondage he was as free, white or black, as any other man. For four decades Negroes lived in Virginia on a basis of equality, accumulating land, voting in assemblies. One Negro even bought a white servant. There was no inferiority attached to skin color. That came later.

The significance of their arrival in 1619 was that it marked the first contact between the American colonies and the Atlantic slave trade.

It was perhaps inevitable that America should be caught up in the trade. For nearly four centuries beginning about 1500, slave ships flying Portuguese, Dutch, English and, finally, American flags competed for favor on the African coast

THEY STACKED their human cargo like cordwood in the fetid holds and in the two-foot space 'tween decks and headed for the thriving markets in the new world. Each day during the 10-week voyage they could count on having to toss a few dead ones over the side. Mutinies were frequent; suicides commonplace.

Most of the slaves imported in America came from the Guinea coast, the Gold Coast, Gambia and Senegal; some kidnapped by whites, most captured by corrupt African chieftains and traded for rum and guns. In 1736 Col. William Byrd of Virginia said in a letter to the Earl of Egmont, "They import so many Negroes hither that I fear this colony will some time or other be confirmed by the name of New Guinea." By the time Col. Byrd's children were grown the Virginia population was estimated at 300,000 whites and 200,000 slaves.

WHEN THE TRADE finally petered out more than 15 million Africans, a conservative

Historically slaves were merely unfortunate folks who happened to have been captured in battle or maybe went bankrupt. It could happen to anybody. Race certainly wasn't a factor and there was no stigma of basic inferiority attached to their lot.

Portugal, for example, had elaborate codes developed over the centuries which made slavery far from a hopeless plight. Families could not be split up; masters were forbidden to injure slaves; slaves could testify in court, even against their owners, and so forth.

IN AMERICA, on the other hand, there were no slave codes. Moreover, only Negroes were slaves. Thus, unlike the attitudes which developed in other countries of the Western hemisphere where the slave ships docked, slavery in the United States gradually came to be regarded as the natural condition of the black man and his color therefore a mark of intrinsic inferiority.

As it became necessary from time to time for American law to define a slave he was described variously as "a chattel" or "real estate" or finally, in the opinion of Chief Justice Roger B. Taney in the 1856 Dred Scott decision, merely an "article of merchandise."

Legally, slaves were incapable of matrimony, which meant they could have children but not families. In 1838 slave dealer Benjamin Davis of Hamburg, S.C., advertised that his current stock "consists of . . . several small boys without their mothers."

THE LAW FORBADE a slave to learn to read or write, to leave the premises without a pass or to assemble with fellow slaves without a white person present to overhear any insurrection plots. He — or she — couldn't testify in any litigation involving a white person.

It took decades, however, for the idea of black inferiority finally to mature. Perhaps it never would have had not a Yale moved slavery from convenient luxury to economic necessity as small farms became huge plantations. By 1850 three-fourths of the world's cotton was being supplied by the Gulf states and planters felt the economy of the entire Southland depended on slave labor. To a great many in the cotton kingdom it appeared obvious that slavery was a positive good, and practicing it was simply following the natural order of things.

"OUR NEW government," explained Alexander Stephens of Georgia the day he was named vice president of the Confederacy, "is based upon this great physical, philosophical and moral truth . . . that the Negro is not equal to the white man, that slavery — subordination to the superior race—is his natural and normal condition."

Stephens acknowledged that "this truth has been slow in the process of its development," but once the process was complete there could no longer be any such thing as a literally free Negro.

An owner could, of course, free a slave, though in some cases it required consent of the legislature or a $1,000 bond to insure his good behavior. But he still remained the prisoner of his skin.

Most of the slave laws continued to apply to him. In some states he couldn't possess firearms, poison, dogs or whisky. Others had deadlines for him to get out of the state or be sold back into slavery—Virginia one year; North Carolina 90 days; Tennessee immediately.

SOME NEGROES, for lack of security, returned to slavery voluntarily. A rare few managed their freedom quite well. In Louisiana a free Negro named Cyprian Ricard owned nearly 100 slaves, and North Carolina freedman Thomas Day hired white help in his cabinet shop. A free Negro shoemaker in South Carolina earned enough to buy his wife from her owner for $700. Later he decided it was blackface minstrels was Daddy Dan Rice who toured the country for years performing a thigh-slapping song and dance number titled "Jump, Jim Crow!"

THE NEGROES had songs of their own, generally regarded as quaint. They had words like "Go Down, Moses, 'Way Down in Egypt Land, and Tell Old Pharaoh to Let My People Go," and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen" and "Oh, Mary, Don't You Weep, Don't You Moan. . . ."

From Socrates to Lincoln, wherever slavery has existed there have been voices to oppose it.

SLAVEOWNER Thomas Jefferson, in his first draft of the Declaration of Independence, wrote a blistering indictment of George III for his part in the slave trade but the 167 words were stricken out.

Concerning slavery Jefferson later wrote "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, that His justice cannot sleep forever," and predicted that slavery would be the "rock upon which the old Union would split." Patrick Henry, another slaveowner, said, "I will not, I cannot, justify it." Neither man anticipated the cotton gin and both thought slavery would gradually fade away.

Benjamin Franklin wasn't that patient. He joined the Abolitionist Society and became its president. George Washington set his slaves free on his deathbed; John Adams refused to own them at all.

Through the years another scheme has attracted intermittent interest as a solution to the Negro's plight: emigration to Africa.

AS EARLY AS 1812 a Negro sea captain, Paul Cuffee, tried unsuccessfully to establish an African colony for American Negroes. In 1820 the American Colonization Society, backed by John C. Calhoun, Henry Clay and others of similar promi-

Garvey, a Jamaican Negro educated in London who came to New York in 1917 wearing a purple and gold uniform and three-cornered hat. He wound up in the Atlanta penitentiary for using the mail to defraud.

From the beginning most Negro leaders have denounced emigration ideas. During the Liberian movement a speaker at a Negro rally in Hartford cried, "Why should we leave this land so dearly bought by the blood, groans and tears of our fathers?"

THE AUDIENCE nodded, perhaps recalling that during the Revolutionary War (when all the colonies practiced slavery except Pennsylvania where the Quakers held it to be an evil deserving of excommunication) there were enough Negoes in the Continental Army's ranks that the British had a barracks doggerel which went:

The Rebel clowns, oh
what a sight,
So awkward is their figure.
Yonder stands a pious wight,
And here and there a nigger.

American abolitionists scored their first major victory in 1808 when Congress declared the slave trade illegal. The act did not stop the trade — an estimated 250,000 more Negroes were smuggled in — but it did increase the hazard and slaves became far more valuable. George Washington paid $500 for a slave, but in 1853 a No. 1 male fetched $1,250 on the New Orleans market and by 1860 the price was $1,800. When civil war came fewer than 5 per cent of the South's 8 million people were slaveowners.

After the Missouri Compromise struck a tenuous sectional balance in 1820 between 12 slave and 12 free states, the abolitionist movement began to develop with the fervor of politics and the zeal of religion. In 20 years' time the American Anti-Slavery Society counted 250,000 members in 15 states and published 25 journals, and it was but one group among several.

IN MANY RESPECTS the various organizations were prototypes of the civil rights groups in today's headlines; change the dates on some of the handbills and history would seem to be repeating itself.

William Lloyd Garrison, one of the most militant of the abolitionists, advocated moral persuasion and passive resistance. "Perhaps blood will flow," he once told a friend, "but not through any counsel of mine." John Brown took an opposite stance, holding that "slavery is a state of war." In a third camp were Arthur Tappan, James Birney, Gerrit Smith and others who believed in political action and in 1840 helped organize the Liberal Party.

Abolitionist literature flooded the mails.

IN THE SOUTH it was contraband and in 1835 a mob sacked the Charleston post office and burned all the propaganda they could find. In Alabama a grand jury indicted

Turn to Page 3E

NIGERIAN NATIVES HOLD UP REMINDERS OF SLAVE TRADE
Chains Were Used to Shackle Captured Natives in Africa

DEEPENING CRISIS

Continued From Page 1B.

Ransom Williams of New York in absentia for mailing his newspaper into the state. In Kentucky Cassius M. Clay kept a loaded cannon at the door of his Lexington office where he published The True American. In Alton, Ill., Editor Elijah P. Lovejoy, three of his presses already thrown in the river, tried to defend the fourth and was shot to death by a mob. In Brunswick, Maine, a mother of six, Harriet Beecher Stowe, took time off from her housework to write a book, more a tract than a novel, which sold 300,000 copies within a year and immortalized such names as Uncle Tom, Simon Legree and Topsy.

Emotions were high, tempers hot. On Capitol Hill Congressman Brooks of South Carolina lit into Senator Sumner of Massachusetts with his cane. There was no middle ground. When war came few were surprised.

If Appomattox solved some problems, it left many more in its bloody wake.

THE SOUTH was in ruins and disorganized former slaves wandered idly about the wreckage. Only one in 10 could read or write. For many, attainment of their ideal was the beginning of their disillusionment. Now able to own property, few were equipped to manage it. But with federal bayonets to protect them at the polls and carpetbaggers to show them how to vote, they became a powerful political force.

Soon the state legislatures of South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi had majorities of Negro members, most of whom learned the rudiments of reading and writing after they were elected. Many of them engaged in what one conservative historian refers to "a saturnalis of corrupt expenditure" and the demoralized South added further economic woes to its misery. There were any number of occasions for the hatred engendered by war to flame again.

Negro rule in the South was such an obvious failure that few Northern states were willing to apply the same reconstruction plans to their own areas. Connecticut, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, Ohio and Michigan, for example, refused the Negro the right to vote.

WHEN PRESIDENT Hayes withdrew federal troops from the South in 1877 white reaction was swift, and in the light of what had happened, predictable.

Legal barriers began to be erected against the Negro, such as the "Grandfather Clause" invented by Louisiana in 1898 which denied a ballot to anyone whose grandfather hadn't voted prior to 1867. Private organizations were formed to restore "the Southern way of life" — the KKK, the White Brotherhood, Pale Faces, Knights of the White Camellia.

Lines of segregation were drawn, and they were unmistakable. When Homer Plessy, a Negro, was removed from a white railroad coach in 1896 and took the case to the U.S. Supreme Court the idea of "separate but equal" became the law of the land.

Over the years the Negro began to protest.

As the protests grew louder, the Jim Crow signs began to fall. More important to the Negro, so did the Jim Crow laws. In the history of the colored man in America, the year 1954, when "separate but equal" was stricken from the law, was as significant as the year "involuntary servitude" was outlawed. Recent events surely prove this.

No one can know when the next turning point will be, what shape it will take. But a glance at how we got where we are, a look ahead at the ever-deepening crisis as America's ears are being assailed as never before, and the suspicion is that it couldn't be far off.

R+R Rel.

The Deepening Crisis . . . No. 8

NEGROES' ULTMATE GOAL: EQUAL OPPORTUNITY TO ALL

By TOM HENSHAW
Associated Press Writer

When Roy Wilkins was a boy in St. Louis, the doctrine of separate but equal facilities for Negroes stood unchallenged as the law of the land. No one cared.

The eminent Negro, Booker T. Washington, counseled his people to work hard, get an education and, above all, do nothing to upset the delicate balance of peace between races.

There was no National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; there was no National Urban League; there were no sit-ins, no freedom rides. Civil rights made scarcely a political ripple.

That was 60 years ago; 40 years after the Emancipation Proclamation and the 14th Amendment which provided equal protection of the law to all citizens of the United States.

THE OTHER day, Roy Wilkins, now 61, executive secretary of the NAACP and a leader in the current Negro civil rights drive, reminisced a bit and looked into the future.

"Things are happening in my lifetime now that I thought I would never live to see," he said with a slight shake of his head. "I've seen goals that I dreamed of as a young man suddenly attained.

"Several years ago, Cincinnati, one of our largest cities, had a Negro vice mayor; last fall Massachusetts elected a Negro attorney general; Connecticut elected a Negro treasurer.

"When I was growing up in St. Louis and rooting for the Cardinals, I always hoped for it and worked for it but I could never visualize a Hank Aaron or a Willie Mays or a Jackie Robinson."

ONLY 25 YEARS ago, high hopes of Negroes reloved around an anti-lynching measure that failed to pass Congress. Now, some see the ultimate goal in sight.

What is the ultimate goal?

"The ultimate goal is simply equal opportunity for all," says Whitney M. Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League.

"There will never be perfect equality—but there should not be an artificial barrier standing between a man and his potential.

"The millenium will have arrived when we see nothing unusual in a Negro occupying a high place in life; when we see Negroes in all situations and it is not a novelty."

Henry Lee Moon of the NAACP sees the ultimate Negro goal as the Negro and white man standing side by side as average people.

"A Negro should not have to be a Ralph Bunche or a Robert Weaver in order to take his rightful place in society," Moon said.

"THE BIG battle is to lower barriers," says Wilkins.

"It's quite important to remember that the chief target is not private or personal prejudice —which may never be eliminated—the chief target is prejudice in public life that influences opportunity and rights.

"It is our concern that private prejudice does not become public policy."

"The goal is simply equal opportunities," says Jackie Robinson, the first Negro to play major league baseball and now a member of baseball's Hall of Fame.

"Look, there will be prejudice as long as people exist. There's prejudice in every group of people; even among members of the same family.

"There's prejudice on baseball teams—but it doesn't keep them from playing ball together. They've found that they can't win unless they play together."

ROBINSON is one Negro who may be considered to have it made, to have reached his ultimate goal. In addition to his baseball fame, he's vice president of a restaurant chain and lives with his family in a fashionable suburb in Connecticut.

Still, whenever he has the chance, he lends his name and presence to the Negro cause.

"Sure, I have quite a lot," he says. "And I also have three kids. You can't save much money nowadays. I couldn't leave them much. What is going to happen to them? What opportunity will they have?

"Until the Negro in the deepest South has it made, I have to keep fighting."

MOST NEGROES measure progress toward the ultimate goal in four fields — education, politics, employment and housing. Education and politics, say Negro leaders, are moving fast; employment and housing are dragging their feet.

"The freedom to live where you want when you are able is moving very slowly," says the NAACP's Moon. "The country is even more ghettoized now than it was at the turn of the century.

"A large number of Negroes have moved into the cities but they have only expanded the ghettos. They haven't broken them up. Most Northern cities with their big ghettos are more segregated than the South."

"The area of employment will always lag behind the others," Robinson says.

"A Negro doesn't have the same opportunity to learn a skill. If he applies for a job and can't pass the requirements in skill, the employer — and remember he's a businessman — says:

" 'Sorry. I'm in business. I have competitors. I have to compete with them. I can't hire you just because you're a Negro. My business would suffer.' "

THE NAACP's Wilkins feels that the ultimate goals will be achieved "within our generation."

In fact, he's so sure that he's starting to look beyond the goal of opportunity.

"There will be a lot of work to do in the Negro community after the barriers are down," he says. "The competition in the white world is fierce. And it has nothing to do with color prejudice. A Negro won't be able to hide behind the excuse:

Negro leaders, are moving fast; employment and housing are dragging their feet.

"The freedom to live where you want when you are able is moving very slowly," says the NAACP's Moon. "The country is even more ghettoized now than it was at the turn of the century.

"A large number of Negroes have moved into the cities but they have only expanded the ghettos. They haven't broken them up. Most Northern cities with their big ghettos are more segregated than the South."

"The area of employment will always lag behind the others," Robinson says.

"A Negro doesn't have the same opportunity to learn a skill. If he applies for a job and can't pass the requirements in skill, the employer — and remember he's a businessman — says:

" 'Sorry. I'm in business. I have competitors. I have to compete with them. I can't hire you just because you're a Negro. My business would suffer.' "

THE NAACP's Wilkins feels that the ultimate goals will be achieved "within our generation."

In fact, he's so sure that he's starting to look beyond the goal of opportunity.

"There will be a lot of work to do in the Negro community after the barriers are down," he says. "The competition in the white world is fierce. And it has nothing to do with color prejudice. A Negro won't be able to hide behind the excuse: 'They did it because I was black.'

"We (the NAACP) are going to have to give him some guidance, some comfort, some encouragement to help him toward excellence.

"I don't entertain many fears that the Negro cannot compete in the white world. The good ones have already been sharpened by the extra competition of prejudice.

"If you unshackle the Negro, you'll find there are the weak ones, there are the fast buck guys, there are the con-men. But there are also the solid, Sunday - go - to - meeting people and even geniuses.

"All the Negro wants is to be let loose. Eventually he will shake down and find his place —his rightful place."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The New Militants.

The Deepening Crisis . . . No. 9

Action Muffles Negro Voices

Editor's Note: A new Negro militancy is apparent in this turbulent summer as voices of responsible moderates are drowned out by radicals who preach an inflammatory approach to racial equality. Here is a closeup of the militant Negro movement.

By JUNIUS GRIFFIN

NEW YORK, Aug. 5 (AP)—Voices of moderation in both Northern and Southern Negro communities are muffled today.

In vogue is a Negro militancy, conceived in frustration and impatience.

Radical organizations preaching inflammatory tactics have emerged in the ghettos where most Northern Negroes live.

In the South, the militant leadership seeks to organize largely undisciplined would-be followers into concerted action.

If the moderate Negro in the South or North speaks out against demonstrations that might result in violence, he often is branded an "Uncle Tom" and a coward. For a Negro to express a moderate view on any civil rights issue is to risk his reputation and maybe his personal safety.

AN EXAMPLE of the radical's vehemence was evident when James H. Meredith and Rev. J. H. Jackson, president of the Baptist Convention, ventured to counsel a conservative course at the annual convention of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Chicago.

Meredith, who risked his life and the safety of his family to establish the right of a Negro to attend the University of Mississippi, was attacked by a youthful wing of the NAACP with such a bitterness that he publicly admitted, "I wept my first tears since I was a child."

Jackson, who heads the largest Negro religious organization in the nation, was booed and narrowly escaped injury before being escorted from the Chicago convention.

Sam Riley, Chicago chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, resigned his post, saying "I'm sick of sit-ins and picket lines."

Riley's resignation came in protest against what he termed the "ultramilitant tactics of the kids" in the organization. "I prefer to plan and negotiate," Riley said.

IT WAS MILITANT civil rights demonstrations in Cambridge, Md., during June and July that split the Eastern Shore town and then brought it back together when violent racial conflict threatened.

The Cambridge demonstrations caused President Kennedy to comment:

"I am concerned about these demonstrations. I think they go beyond information, beyond protest, and they get into a very bad situation where you get violence, and I think the cause of advancing equal opportunities only loses. So I have warned against demonstrations which could lead to bloodshed and I warn now against them."

The President added, however, "You just can't tell people, 'don't protest' — but on the other hand, 'We're not going to let you come into a store or restaurant.' "

"The way to make the problem go away," the President said, ". . . is to provide for redress of grievances."

A militancy similar to that in Cambridge moved north to Brooklyn where Negro ministers gathered their congregations from the ghettos of Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section, described as a "wasteland in the heart of New demonstrations and advocating that "Negro leaders negotiate their grievances with the city fathers."

The influence of the radicals is apparent in the concentrated attack on the "the Big Four" action groups for equal rights. This attack is led by radical organizations such as the Black Muslims and a variety of African Nationalist associations.

These organizations have attracted larger gatherings on Harlem street corners on occasion than the combined forces of the NAACP, the Congress of Racial Equality, The Southern Christian Leadership Conference and the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee.

The success of radical elements in Negro communities is due partly to their ability to identify with grass-roots elements.

DR. MARTIN Luther King Jr., at a recent public appearance in Harlem, was greeted with a barrage of eggs from unidentified Negroes before he entered a church. The leader of a nationalist group blamed the incident on "Communists."

King and leaders of the other "Big Four" groups constantly are referred to as "Uncle Toms" by the radical leadership in Harlem.

One radical explains the popularity of the extremist movement this way:

"We give the forgotten man a dignity that the NAACP, CORE and the other groups deny him. We let him know that he is just as important as the middleclass Negro who wants to ignore his presence in the community.

"The curse of many years of segregation has left him an almost hopeless cripple, a cripple that cannot be cured or rehabilitated even if we were to acquire his complete civil rights overnight. Most of these people will be looking for a handout for the rest of their lives."

THE RADICAL leader adds:

"The individual Negro who fits this description is bitter and ready to fight somebody. If he wants to fight, he might as well join an organization that will guide him in the right direction."

For the African Nationalist, the "right direction" is back to Africa.

Most Negro leaders do not share the idea that Negroes will support organizations that preach a "back to Africa" movement.

But some NAACP officials acknowledged that the nationalists are a thorn in the side for conservative leaders.

NAACP membership is around 4,000 in Harlem, a community of more than a half million Negroes. Most of the members merely pay dues and carry membership cards, but do not attend meetings.

Dissatisfaction with the "Big Four" civil rights organizations is obvious in Harlem.

Who leads the community and pulls the strings?

Who could channel the "new Negro militancy" into a concerted action?

CONGRESSMAN Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., is the spiritual and political king of a large element of the "black burgeois."

Powell exercises control from the pulpit of Abyssinian Baptist Church, the Harlem Democratic Club and a variety of civic organizations of which he is sponsor.

The Harlem Democrat attacks the presence of white men in positions of authority in the "Big Four" civil rights organizations and recently has been vocal in his support of Malcolm X, Harlem's Black Muslim leader.

Malcolm X attracts thousands with tirades against the white man. But Negroes more often than not leave his rallies without noise and get the publicity while the NAACP furnishes the manpower and pays the bills. A good many things have not been made known to our membership. They have come to believe that we are standing on the sidelines working up legal cases while everybody else is participating in nonviolent direct action. We don't like to have people talking about us as if we were old and sitting in the corner knitting."

WHITNEY YOUNG JR., Urban League director, said: "I do not see why I should have to go to jail to prove my leadership."

His organization, though conservative in its approach, seeks civil rights progress through biracial consultation and cooperation.

James Farmer, CORE's national director, said his organization is the "nonviolent Marines of the civil rights struggle."

"It's going to be a long hot summer," Farmer said. "Spontaneous demonstrations are going to be a problem. Our job is to channelize them constructively."

To a great extent, the frictions among these major groups offer no real threat to Negro solidarity on fundamental aims.

Young said: "We are sympathetic to the methods of the other . . . organizations. There are temporary misunderstandings and overlapping, but that's to be expected."

Next in the Atlanta Journal: World Prospective.

the nation, was booed and narrowly escaped injury before being escorted from the Chicago convention.

Sam Riley, Chicago chairman of the Congress of Racial Equality, resigned his post, saying "I'm sick of sit-ins and picket lines."

Riley's resignation came in protest against what he termed the "ultramilitant tactics of the kids" in the organization. "I prefer to plan and negotiate," Riley said.

IT WAS MILITANT civil rights demonstrations in Cambridge, Md., during June and July that split the Eastern Shore town and then brought it back together when violent racial conflict threatened.

The Cambridge demonstrations caused President Kennedy to comment:

"I am concerned about these demonstrations. I think they go beyond information, beyond protest, and they get into a very bad situation where you get violence, and I think the cause of advancing equal opportunities only loses. So I have warned against demonstrations which could lead to bloodshed and I warn now against them."

The President added, however, "You just can't tell people, 'don't protest' — but on the other hand, 'We're not going to let you come into a store or restaurant.' "

"The way to make the problem go away," the President said, ". . . is to provide for redress of grievances."

A militancy similar to that in Cambridge moved north to Brooklyn where Negro ministers gathered their congregations from the ghettos of Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section, described as a "wasteland in the heart of New York."

The militant Negro ministers vowed to lead their entire congregations to jail, if necessary, in pressing their demand for more jobs for Negroes and Puerto Ricans on publicly financed construction projects.

IN SAVANNAH, where National Guardsmen were summoned to quell racial demonstrations, Dr. William Payne, president of Savannah State College for Negroes, refused to make public statements on the situation. The city's Negro community branded him an "Uncle Tom." (Dr. Payne died July 26 after suffering a cerebral hemorrhage.)

In Charlotte, where the city government has made strides on the civil rights front, a leading Negro physician, Dr. Emery L. Rann, became an "Uncle Tom" for suggesting the end of racial

THE RADICAL leader adds:

"The individual Negro who fits this description is bitter and ready to fight somebody. If he wants to fight, he might as well join an organization that will guide him in the right direction."

For the African Nationalist, the "right direction" is back to Africa.

Most Negro leaders do not share the idea that Negroes will support organizations that preach a "back to Africa" movement.

But some NAACP officials acknowledged that the nationalists are a thorn in the side for conservative leaders.

NAACP membership is around 4,000 in Harlem, a community of more than a half million Negroes. Most of the members merely pay dues and carry membership cards, but do not attend meetings.

Dissatisfaction with the "Big Four" civil rights organizations is obvious in Harlem.

Who leads the community and pulls the strings?

Who could channel the "new Negro militancy" into a concerted action?

CONGRESSMAN Adam Clayton Powell, D-N.Y., is the spiritual and political king of a large element of the "black burgeois."

Powell exercises control from the pulpit of Abyssinian Baptist Church, the Harlem Democratic Club and a variety of civic organizations of which he is sponsor.

The Harlem Democrat attacks the presence of white men in positions of authority in the "Big Four" civil rights organizations and recently has been vocal in his support of Malcolm X, Harlem's Black Muslim leader.

Malcolm X attracts thousands with tirades against the white man. But Negroes more often than not leave his rallies without having found solutions to their problems.

A young Negro leaving a Muslim rally commented:

"I dig this cat. But I am not about to become a Black Muslim. I've never been to Africa and don't want to go. I don't care for his religion. What I need is a job so I can make some bread (money)."

His problem is shared by many. About 13 per cent of Harlem's labor force is unemployed. This represents more than twice the percentage for the City of New York at large.

Asked if he had sought employment through the Urban League and other organizations, the young man replied:

"I don't even know where their offices are."

AT LEAST 50 others on Harlem street corners, in pool rooms, taverns and restaurants did not know where the NAACP, CORE or Urban League offices are. Many volunteered, "I don't know and I don't care."

Told of this condition, Paul Zuber, a Harlem lawyer who recently retired from active civil rights work, said, "The only solution to this crucial problem is for all four civil rights organizations to unite and present a solid front."

He readily admitted this is an unpopular view, but said, "The real problem is the refusal of these organizations to actively recruit in the Negro community. The partially suppressed feuds between the organizations tend to make them unpopular and conceal their commendable work for civil rights."

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, said recently, "The other organizations furnish the

8/7/63

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 10

Foreign Envoys Get Bitter Taste

By MAX HARRELSON
Associated Press Writer

Few events in the United States have commanded such wide attention abroad as the developing crisis over integration.

The impact of the violent and dramatic conflicts at Little Rock, Oxford, Birmingham, Cambridge, Savannah, Philadelphia and New York City, has been tremendous.

U.S. policy makers acknowledge they are concerned over possible repercussions in the nonwhite nations of Asia and Africa.

How much damage, they ask, have recent events done to the U.S. image as a champion of human rights? Have these events had any discernible effect on the relations between the United States and other countries?

U.S. officials disagree on the extent of the damage, but influential leaders such as Secretary of State Dean Rusk and U.N. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson believe the United States definitely is being hurt abroad by the racial conflict.

THE SITUATION is complicated by several factors likely to make some countries more sensitive to U.S. events:

—The independence explosion which has brought to the world scene in the past decade a large contingent of new nations whose people had been under the white man's rule for generations. In many cases there were strong racial resentments.

The personal experience of many Asian and African visitors, especially diplomats, who came face to face with racial discrimination in the United States and were left with a bitter taste. Rusk reported scores of such incidents in the past two years.

—The preoccupation of the African and Asian countries with the apartheid (racial segregation) policies of South Africa. This not only makes them more conscious of the developments in the United States, but renders it difficult for the United States to form its own independent policies on South Africa and related world problems.

—Communist efforts to exploit the U.S. racial problem with the aim of discrediting the United States in the eyes of Asians and Africans.

RUSK told a congressional committee recently that the Communists regard racial discrimination "as one of their most valuable assets." He warned that unless Congress acts to remove discriminatory practices "hostile propaganda might be expected to hurt us more than it has hurt us until now."

Stevenson says he finds U.N. diplomats generally tolerant and understanding, but even they have been "shocked by what they have seen and heard in recent months."

Even more serious, he believes, is the "false impression" created abroad about the attitude of the bulk of the American people and the official policy of the government. This must be corrected as promptly as possible, he says.

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro who is an under-exploiting U.S. racial tensions: (1) Racism is inevitable under American capitalism; (2) inaction by the government is tantamount to the support of the "racists"; (3) racial incidents have exposed the "hypocrisy" of U.S. claims to world leadership, and (4) the attitude toward Negroes in the United States is indicative of the attitude toward colored peoples everywhere.

In the United Nations a few weeks ago, Soviet delegate Platon D. Morozov told a committee the "unbridled racism" in the United States has proved there is "no moral basis" to claims that the United States is the defender of human rights in the world. This theme has been stressed in the Soviet press.

There is no evidence so far that the Soviet campaign has driven a wedge between the United States and other friendly countries or that any are ready to follow Soviet suggestions that the United Nations should get out of the United States because of racial discrimination.

THIS IDEA was brought up by the Russians two years ago after African delegations received a scurrilous, unsigned letter threatening their safety. Some Africans were angered by the letter, but Stevenson soothed them by denouncing the senders and stating that the FBI was making a thorough inquiry.

Discrimination in housing and restaurants, however, continues to cause ill-feeling both in Washington and New York where large numbers of nonwhite diplomats are concentrated. One African diplomat, Ambassador Gershon B. O. Collier of Sierra Leone, put it this way:

"Your American Negroes understand this kind of prejudice and are used to it. We are not."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: What It's Like to Be a Negro in America Today.

rican and Asian countries with the apartheid (racial segregation) policies of South Africa. This not only makes them more conscious of the developments in the United States, but renders it difficult for the United States to form its own independent policies on South Africa and related world problems.

—Communist efforts to exploit the U.S. racial problem with the aim of discrediting the United States in the eyes of Asians and Africans.

RUSK told a congressional committee recently that the Communists regard racial discrimination "as one of their most valuable assets." He warned that unless Congress acts to remove discriminatory practices "hostile propaganda might be expected to hurt us more than it has hurt us until now."

Stevenson says he finds U.N. diplomats generally tolerant and understanding, but even they have been "shocked by what they have seen and heard in recent months."

Even more serious, he believes, is the "false impression" created abroad about the attitude of the bulk of the American people and the official policy of the government. This must be corrected as promptly as possible, he says.

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, American Negro who is an undersecretary of the United Nations, says "repression" of the Negro has hurt the United States "because the basic image of the United States is that of a democratic nation leading the cause of world freedom."

DURING THE SUMMIT meeting of African leaders in Addis Ababa, the U.S. racial crisis was widely discussed. Milton Obote, prime minister of Uganda, said: "The key to the successful projection of the United States image in Africa lies more in a solution of the Negro problem than in foreign aid."

The Ethiopian Herald was more critical. It referred to the U.S. government's "half-hearted willingness" to act against discrimination and said:

"The United States is campaigning on a free world slogan and is condemning the racist government of South Africa while practicing its own version of apartheid. What happened in Birmingham . . . showed the United States in its true light."

No African leader has sought publicly to put the United States in the category with South Africa, which has been haled before the United Nations repeatedly because of its official policy of racial segregation.

The London Daily Telegraph pointed out the distinction. In the United States, it said, "the law is on the black man's side," while "the inferiority of the black man was written into the Constitution of the South African Union."

RUSK says the Communists have used four main themes in 8/8/63 Leave on my desk

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 11

Where Did Racial Hate Begin?

By JUNIUS GRIFFIN
Associated Press Writer

"We are not something from Porgy and Bess . . . we want to share equally with our white brothers—yes, brothers."

These are the words of Herbert Fielding, businessman and a leader of the Negro community of Charleston, S.C.

An official in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Fielding prides himself on being a moderate. But he sums up the temptation to violence, to express old angers that many American Negroes feel in this summer of crisis.

"The Negro is mad," he says, "not angry, but mad and filled with a hate he has nourished for almost a lifetime."

THE FEELING is echoed in the North as a Negro youth suddenly snatches a white woman's handbag and flings it into the street.

"I did it because I hate white people," he explains.

You hear the word "hate" again and again as Negroes, packed into the ghettos of Harlem and Washington try to articulate their feelings. In Savannah and Charleston you hear it once more.

In Columbia, S.C., a Negro talks of his "intense dislike" of the white man.

In Charlotte, N.C., a Negro says simply: "We dislike the white man, but he's doing better."

North and South, animosity is a palpable thing. In the South because the Negro feels the weight of "Jim Crow" laws, written and unwritten; in the North because he faces discrimination when he wants to get a job or live in certain neighborhoods.

WHERE DID IT all begin . . . and where will it end?

Hosea Williams, 37, militant head of the Chatham County Crusade for Voters in Savannah, said:

"We Negroes weren't born hating the white man. We have cultivated this hatred and nourished it for years hoping that one day he would make us ashamed of ourselves. But he hasn't . . . he has given us pride . . . pride to protest and if necessary to tell him to go to hell if he doesn't allow us full and equal opportunities."

Williams said that he once worked for the NAACP.

"But, I became too hot for them, or rather too radical. I don't believe in tomorrow. I want equal rights for my people now. If necessary, I intend to die in Georgia fighting for what I believe is right and to leave my children an honorable legacy," he said.

In Charleston, NAACP official Fielding delights in talking about the historical beauty of the city and its traditions.

"The white man's great failing here is that he doesn't know that his Negro neighbors are same clubs, live in the same neighborhoods, or even speak to each other.

E. Cedric Hart, publisher and editor of South Carolina's only Negro newspaper, said this intra-racial color problem hinders the solving of the larger racial conflict.

"My attitudes are those of a militant person," Hart said, "but I refuse to use my newspaper as a militant mouthpiece for the NAACP and disgruntled persons in the Negro community until they unite for a common good and stop bickering among themselves."

Charlotte, N.C., has eased racial barriers in hotels, restaurants, schools and recreational facilities, but still is plagued with racial problems in hospitals and in job opportunities.

Dr. Reginald A. Hawkins, a Charlotte dentist and ordained Presbyterian minister, says:

"I served in World War II and the Korean war, and I have no intention of stopping my people's fight for equal rights. We want those rights now, not gradually . . . but now."

Dr. Emory L. Rann, a Charlotte physician and leading Negro moderate, has spoken against racial demonstrations.

"Our demonstrations have simply outgrown their usefulness," Dr. Rann said. "It is now time we started negotiating with the City Council. I don't see what good we can now derive from an ugly incident which could occur during a demonstration."

Dr. Rann stands almost alone in Charlotte's Negro community.

In addition to the division between militant and moderates in the Negro movement for racial integration there also is a split between what Negroes call "ceremonial leaders" and others who are close to the pulse of America's Negro masses.

CEREMONIAL LEADERS are described by the Negroes as those who stay away from the underprivileged within their own race and who have lost contact with the Negro people as a whole.

S. Summer Stone Jr., editor of Washington's Afro American, declares:

"We need leaders who will continue to meet this problem head on—courageous and valiant fighters for racial equality in America."

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: A Southerner's Viewpoint.

written and unwritten; in the North because he faces discrimination when he wants to get a job or live in certain neighborhoods.

WHERE DID IT all begin . . . and where will it end?

Hosea Williams, 37, militant head of the Chatham County Crusade for Voters in Savannah, said:

"We Negroes weren't born hating the white man. We have cultivated this hatred and nourished it for years hoping that one day he would make us ashamed of ourselves. But he hasn't . . . he has given us pride . . . pride to protest and if necessary to tell him to go to hell if he doesn't allow us full and equal opportunities."

Williams said that he once worked for the NAACP.

"But, I became too hot for them, or rather too radical. I don't believe in tomorrow. I want equal rights for my people now. If necessary, I intend to die in Georgia fighting for what I believe is right and to leave my children an honorable legacy," he said.

In Charleston, NAACP official Fielding delights in talking about the historical beauty of the city and its traditions.

"The white man's great failing here is that he doesn't know that his Negro neighbors are just as prideful, stubborn, and sensitive about this great city as they are."

SPEAKING OF the deeping racial crisis, Fielding said:

"We are at the bottom, the end of the rope. The only way the Negro can go is up. And if we must fight to get there, both races will wear the battle scars for generations to come.

"From where I view the racial situation, I see us emerging with a victory. And I see the white man going down in defeat. With just a little sincere effort on the white man's part we can both leave the battle scene in victory, knowing that we have solved a century-old problem through mutual effort."

Rev. I. DeQuincey Newman, NAACP state field secretary, foresees a long and bitter fight ahead for Negroes in Charleston and other parts of South Carolina.

"If the white man had any sincere desire about ending this problem, he would take down the barriers of segregation and allow responsible Negro leaders to concentrate on preparing the poor and impoverished Negro for the role he is to play in our new society," Newman said.

"We no longer ask the Negro masses not to hate," Newman added, "we tell him that, if he must hate, he should try to show a little mercy. This is a harsh but realistic view."

IN COLUMBIA, Dr. Howard E. Wright, president of Allen University, an all-Negro school, said "the task of helping our students to face the realities of our times is just as important as sending them out into the world with an academic education.

"The racial tempo here is such that any incident in a downtown restaurant or store can cause our students to drop their books and take to the streets.

"It's too bad that I can't join them. I can't tell them that everything will work itself out. This would be a lie."

Negroes in Columbia and Charleston live in a caste system within their own race.

Negroes who have light complexions are disdainful of their darker brothers, so much so that often they do not worship in the same churches, frequent the

R & R Rel.

THE DEEPENING CRISIS . . . NO. 12

Reaction of The South

By RELMAN MORIN
Associated Press Staff Writer

For some 70 years after Reconstruction, every Southerner was born into a segregated society.

He breathed segregation. It was his way of life, deeply rooted in his consciousness. Moreover, it was clothed in legality. In 1896, the doctrine of "separate-but-equal" was tested, and the Supreme Court held it to be constitutional.

Some may have felt twinges of conscience, even so.

In "The South and the Southerner," Ralph McGill, publisher of The Atlanta Constitution, has written:

"The more sensitive Southerner often is self-embarrassed by a realization that he has accepted unquestioningly some aspect of his community life which he rejects. . . . But nonetheless, he is a part of what he has met, and been. And the past, in tales of his grandparents, his great-aunts and uncles, has been in his ears from birth."

IN 1954, another Supreme Court reversed the earlier ruling. It held that "separate educational facilities are inherently unequal."

The ruling, to be sure, did not come as a complete surprise. Southern lawyers and politicians had taken note of a series of court orders that put individual Negroes in some Southern schools. But the man on the street was not prepared for integration.

Overnight, in effect, he was told that he must now do a mental about-face, change his attitudes and abandon beliefs he had always held.

Even where the effort was made—and nobody can say how many Southerners made it—this was no easy task.

Nearly 10 years have passed.

TODAY IN THE SOUTH, racial barriers are going down. Not only schools but other public facilities and business establishments are being desegregated. What are the feelings of the Southerner as he sees the old patters of life crumbling around him?

There is no one answer. Reactions range all the way from implacable opposition to quiet acceptance.

At one end of the spectrum are men like Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, fiercely defending the old order. A legion of Southerners applaud them.

At the other are men like Hodding Carter, editor of The Greenville, Miss., Delta-Democrat, McGill, and others who are less well known for their opposition to segregation. Carter and McGill receive bales of letters. Some are favorable, more are abusive.

BETWEEN THE TWO poles of thought, you find these figures—

There is the Southerner who opposes integration, but believes in law and order. Reluctantly, he says the courts must be obeyed.

There is the person who says, "We were all getting along fine until outsiders came in and stirred up the Negroes. If the outsiders would go away, the Negroes would be perfectly happy again."

This is akin to the vague, amorphous hope that, somehow, the racial problem will vanish of itself, or that it can be swept under the rug.

Then there is the man who says that, since the Supreme Court reversed itself once on segregation, it may do so again sometime. He wants the 1954 ruling tested, again and again.

FOR YEARS the South has been working aggressively to attract new industries. The businesman knows — possibly from experience—that violence will discourage the drive for Northern industry. So, although segregationists, some advocate an accommodation with Negro demands.

The situation for the Southern college student often is similar to the businessman's. It may gall him to see Negroes on the campus. But graduation is more important to him and he doesn't want to jeopardize that.

Something like this was expressed at Little Rock in 1957.

Soon after the Negro students were entered in Central High School, I asked a girl how she and the other students felt about being integrated. "I don't think most of us care very much," she replied. "There are a few creeps and show-offs who say they'll make trouble until the Negroes leave. But most of us are just ignoring them."

SOME THOUGHTFUL, sincere persons in the South are deeply troubled, wrestling with conscience. Here are two—

A divinity student, in a letter, candidly acknowledges that he had been strongly prejudiced against Negroes. After he began studying for the clergy, he concluded that he could not reconcile his prejudice with his religion. "I had to do some rethinking," the letter says. "It was very difficult but I believe I can say now that I have freed myself from those prejudices."

A Southern woman comments on racial disturbances in a nearby city and says:

"When the troubles started, I tried to imagine myself in the position of a Negro. I tried to see things from his point of view. Frankly, it was a shock. But it still seems to me that if I were a Negro, it would be better to try to elevate my own race, not lose myself in another race."

THIS DOVETAILS WITH the position of Southerners who deny any prejudice toward the Negro but say, "Race-mixing is not the answer to the problem. For both races, it is better to develop separately."

One man said he is convinced that "idleness" is causing the Negro unrest, North and South. (Negro unemployment, nationally, is more than double the figure for the whites.) He said, "I've lived all my life with Negroes and I know that when they're idle they tend to get in trouble. Give them something to do and you won't have all this trouble."

In Tuskegee, Ala., Negro leaders say there are enough registered Negro voters now to elect Negroes to public office in the community. How are the whites reacting to this fact?

"We don't know what to expect," said a city councilman, "what to look forward to."

ATLANTA HAS GONE further than most Southern cities in desegregating. A waitress in an upper bracket restaurant says she has seen only one "incident." Two white couples left in the middle of dinner, when Negroes were seated at an adjoining table. How does she feel about waiting on Negroes? "I don't mind," she says. "The kind who come in here are just like anyone else."

However, placard-carrying segregationists picket some Atlanta restaurants that have integrated. This is a painful example of the situation confronting Southern businessmen. They get it in the neck from both sides.

Finally, the Southerner is watching with the keenest interest as Negro demonstrations spread to the North.

"Now the Yankees are getting a taste of the problem," he says. "They're going to see that finding a solution isn't as simple as they thought."

NEXT IN SUNDAY'S ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION —Where do we go now?

THE DEEPENING CRISIS--NO. 13

AVR Rel

Where Do We Go Now?

EDITOR'S NOTE—Caught in the turmoil of a summer of bitter racial discord, Americans find it difficult at times to assess the dimensions of the crisis, to know what has been gained or lost and where we are heading now. Here, in the last of a special series of Associated Press articles on the integration struggle, is a report by a correspondent who has covered it closely. It sums up the situation to date and looks at changes coming.

By RELMAN MORIN

NEW YORK, Aug. 10 (AP)—The Negro drive for full equality has reached the dimensions of a national convulsion.

It wracks the whole United States, not just the Southern states. It is breaching the invisible racial barriers of the North no less than the visible walls in the South, shattering the complacency of one region, defeating the slow-down strategy of the other.

"Something's got a-hold of me," the Negro is chanting. "We Shall Overcome" is his anthem.

His movement is in the streets, the courts, the halls of Congress.

It touches schools and employment practices, a seat at a lunch counter and a home in a better neighborhood, the right to vote and the right to worship in any church, the right to sit in any public park and to read a book in any public library—in short, the rights of an American citizen and access to equal opportunity.

Starting as nonviolent, his campaign has engendered violence. The blood of both races has been spilled. No one can say whether more will flow or where or how much.

"We will advise our people not to use violence," said Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), at a news conference in Jackson, Miss. "The Negro can't win in a pitched battle

Associated Press Wirephoto

GOV. GEORGE WALLACE STANDS IN DOORWAY OF UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA
In Tuscaloosa, Governor Is Flanked by State Policemen; His Prepared Speech on Stand

Elsewhere in the South, however, the barriers remained.

Oxford, Miss., and Tuscaloosa, Ala., were still to come.

At Oxford, two men died and scores were injured when a Negro, James H. Meredith, enrolled in the University of Mississippi. Again, federal troops marched, bivouacing on the campus.

At Tuscaloosa, Gov. George C. Wallace stood in the doorway of a University of Alabama building when Justice Department officials attempted to enroll two Negroes, Vivian Malone and James Hood. A few hours later, he stepped aside when federalized units of the National Guard marched onto the campus.

lion Negroes of voting age in 11 Southern and border states. About one fourth, some 1,344,000, are registered.

MANY TACTICS have been used to discourage Negroes from registering—gerrymandering, intimidation, widely spaced meetings of registration boards, throwing out Negro applications on technicalities.

So concerted voter registration drives began. Students went through Negro communities, ringing doorbells. Officials stationed themselves in public buildings in the South, buttonholing every Negro who came in, whatever his business, and urging him to register, there Fear of violence and economic trouble has fostered a "mood of reconciliation" toward racial integration in the South, Ochs said.

Almost overnight after Birmingham, too, Negro demonstrations erupted in the North. Violence flared in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other Northern cities. The Los Angeles Times published a cartoon depicting two Negro figures, one in a menacing posture. It was captioned, "Integration Not Intimidation."

In the North, Negro demands focus mainly on jobs and housing. Negro unemployment is high, more than double white seen through the window from the sidewalk.

3. President Kennedy, in conferences with scores of Southern businessmen, clergymen and others, has sought means to desegregate many establishments. He set up a presidential committee on equal job opportunity, replacing two other such committees of the Eisenhower administration. It is headed by Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson.

4. Congress is hearing testimony on the President's package of civil rights legislation. On June 11, he asked Congress to "make a commitment it has not fully made in this century ship in any church, the right to sit in any public park and to read a book in any public library—in short, the rights of an American citizen and access to equal opportunity.

Starting as nonviolent, his campaign has engendered violence. The blood of both races has been spilled. No one can say whether more will flow or where or how much.

"We will advise our people not to use violence," said Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), at a news conference in Jackson, Miss. "The Negro can't win in a pitched battle with the whites. He's in the minority."

BUT CAN THE Negro leaders control their followers, everywhere and at all times? Who, for example, speaks for Harlem, the giant Negro community in New York City?

"How can anyone ask me to be nonviolent?" said a Negro war veteran. "That's like putting me back in the line in Korea and loading my rifle with blanks."

Vilence begets violence and the possibility of a white counter-reaction has been noted by many observers. "If that happens," said Hodding Carter, editor of the Greenville, Miss., Delta-Democrat, "all hell will break loose."

During the demonstrations in Birmingham last spring, a white taxi driver said to me, "If they kill any white people, I won't ask any questions. I'll just start killin'."

The hour seems late. Is it one minute to 12 now? If so, what raced the hands of the clock?

The story is soon told.

AFTER WORLD WAR II, the first important federal government action in race relations came when President Truman ordered the end of segregation in the armed forces. He also asked Congress for strong civil rights legislation. It was not granted.

During President Eisenhower's second administration, Congress enacted civil rights bills in 1957 and 1960. Using these laws, the administration filed 10 suits on behalf of Negroes' voting rights in the South.

The historic year, however, in the long and anguished struggle over civil rights, was 1954. The U.S. Supreme Court struck down, as unconstitutional, the doctrine of "separate-but-equal" in public schools. Segregation had been a legal fact for 58 years, based on a decision of the Supreme Court in 1896. Now, the court ordered the schools to be desegregated "with all deliberate speed."

Negroes and their white sympathizers exulted.

But the segregationist, eying that phrase, "with all deliberate speed," saw an escape hatch. He determined to resist as long as possible. And he did.

Mob violence exploded in Southern and border states.

A CLIMATIC point of this stage was Little Rock. The year was 1957. Exactly 80 years after the end of Reconstruction in the South, federal troops marched into a Southern city again. They used bayonets to disperse crowds around Central High School. And they escorted Negro children into classrooms. ever, the barriers remained.

Oxford, Miss., and Tuscaloosa, Ala., were still to come.

At Oxford, two men died and scores were injured when a Negro, James H. Meredith, enrolled in the University of Mississippi. Again, federal troops marched, bivouacing on the campus.

At Tuscaloosa, Gov. George C. Wallace stood in the doorway of a University of Alabama building when Justice Department officials attempted to enroll two Negroes, Vivian Malone and James Hood. A few hours later, he stepped aside when federalized units of the National Guard marched onto the campus. There was no violence.

Long before these incidents, however, the "bright-new-day" jubilance of 1954 had begun to evaporate.

Negro disappointment, as the years passed with little desegregation, turned to bitterness. "Gradualism," the policy of slowly ending segregation, and "tokenism," permitting only a handful of Negro children in schools, offices or factories, became fighting words.

TODAY, nearly 10 years after the Supreme Court decision, figures compiled by the Southern Education Reporting Service indicate that about 257,000 Negro children are attending public elementary and high schools with white students in 17 Southern and border saates and the District of Columbia.

Negro leaders say this is about 8 per cent of the school-age total.

Apart from the schools, new sectors opened in the fight for civil rights.

In 1955 and 1956, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), headed by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., boycotted segregated bus lines in Montgomery. They won.

They boycott, or "selective buying," as the Negro leaders prefer to say, began coming into play as a potent weapon in other parts of the South. Negro economists estimate that the purchasing power of the Negro, nationally, is around $15 billion a year.

"Selective buying" has put Southern businessmen in a vise. If they integrate some facilities after a Negro boycott, they may be hit by a white boycott.

ALONG WITH the boycott came the "sit-in," the tactic of simply sitting quietly in a restaurant, seeking service. Or the "kneel-in," crowds of Negroes praying on the steps of a public building or in a main street, stopping traffic.

These maneuvers were pioneered by the Committee on Racial Equality (CORE), which was founded in 1942 at the University of Chicago. It obtained a foothold in the South with the "sit-in" of 1960.

Parallel with action on these fronts, the Negroes began concentrating their efforts in another supremely important field —voter registration. Another Negro organization, the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee ("SNICK") has been active in this work.

The Justice Department has assisted. Since 1961, it has filed 29 suits against officials for refusing to register qualified Negroes. About 50 per cent of these suits have been won.

The Southern Regional Council estimates there are 5.04 million Negroes in the Southern and border states. About one fourth, some 1,344,000, are registered.

MANY TACTICS have been used to discourage Negroes from registering—gerrymandering, intimidation, widely spaced meetings of registration boards, throwing out Negro applications on technicalities.

So concerted voter registration drives began. Students went through Negro communities, ringing doorbells. Officials stationed themselves in public buildings in the South, buttonholing every Negro who came in, whatever his business, and urging him to register, there and then. Voter "clinics" were set up to instruct Negroes in filling out the application forms and in meeting the technicalities.

It is a long, slow process, but the figures for Negro registration are rising, spectacularly in some cases. In Bullock County, Ala., there were four registered Negroes in 1961. Now there are 1,341. This, of course, is a special case.

Of the registration drives, Bishop George W. Barber of the African Methodist Episcopal Church said:

"The objectives of the campaign would be accomplished substantially by registering and voting every single, eligible Negro voter within sight or hearing of our membership. Our goal is a minimum of two million new Negro voters, North and South."

IN ALL probability, another factor has played a part in the Negro drive for equality, a subtle, unmeasurable factor — the new African nations.

The American Negro has seen African heads of state being received in the White House and getting the red carpet treatment from Soviet Premier Khrushchev and other powerful leaders. He has seen African diplomats speaking from the rostrum of the United Nations.

This has been a source of pride and encouragement.

But it also is a two-edged sword. "An African in a robe and turban can go into a restaurant or a hotel where I can't go," said a Negro public relations man in Washington. "How silly can segregation be? How do you think this makes me feel?"

Then came another catalyst —Birmingham.

Last spring, Negroes there demonstrated in the streets for desegregation of some facilities in downtown stores and the formation of a permanent biracial committee to handle racial problems. So many were arrested that the jails overflowed.

Police dogs and fire hoses were used to disperse the crowds. It was not the first time the dogs had been used in Birmingham. The first time was against white men, rioting around "freedom riders" at a bus station. Nor, of course, was Birmingham the only city to use dogs.

Nevertheless, photographs of dogs leaping toward Negroes went around the globe.

For some reason, Birmingham appears to have dramatized the Negro struggle more than any other incident.

"BIRMINGHAM engineered the revolution that began in the spring of 1963," Martin Ochs, editor of the Chattanooga Times, said in a recent speech at the University of Wisconsin.

ic trouble has fostered a "mood of reconciliation" toward racial integration in the South, Ochs said.

Almost overnight after Birmingham, too, Negro demonstrations erupted in the North. Violence flared in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and other Northern cities. The Los Angeles Times published a cartoon depicting two Negro figures, one in a menacing posture. It was captioned, "Integration Not Intimidation."

In the North, Negro demands focus mainly on jobs and housing. Negro unemployment is high, more than double white unemployment. Labor unions have been accused of discriminating against Negroes. Negro leaders are demanding that a certain quota of Negroes shall be employed on given projects, and even in restaurants.

In New York City, to dramatize these and other demands, Negroes entered the offices of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and stayed for days in a "sit-in." They staged another in the city hall.

ANOTHER RECENT development has been a unifying move among seven Negro organizations, some of which had been sniping at each other. They are the NAACP, CORE, SCLC, "SNICK," National Urban League, National Council of Negro Women and Legal Defense and Education Fund of the NAACP, a separately incorporated organization.

The coalition takes the name Council for United Civil Rights Leadership.

"Our primary concern is to eliminate violence," a spokesman said. "We want to provide a cadre of experienced Negro leaders who will prevent things from getting out of hand and keep irresponsible elements from turning to violence."

Distinctly separate from these groups are the Black Muslims. They demand not integration, but total segregation on their own terms. They want the federal government to set aside territory in which they propose to set up a Negro state.

Their leader, Muhammad Elijah, lies in Phoenix, Ariz. In answer to the question of whether the Muslims hate white people, he said:

"The Bible teaches us to love good and to hate evil. I can't love him (the white) because his is the very essence of evil."

IN THE VAST, complicated and potentially dangerous picture of the racial struggle today, what are the positive sides? The principal ones would seem to be these:

1. To a greater degree than ever before, the problem is out in the open. More people, especially in the North but in the South, too, are aware of the intricacies and the injustices. More are thinking about it, seeking solutions.

2. Some degree of communication between the races is being restored in the South. Communications, Southerners say, generally tended to break down after the Supreme Court decision on the schools in 1954. Now, fitfully and with difficulty, Negroes and whites in some parts of the South are sitting down together again. One Southern newspaper publisher called such a meeting in his own plant — and deliberately placed the conference table where it could be the sidewalk.

3. President Kennedy, in conferences with scores of Southern businessmen, clergymen and others, has sought means to desegregate many establishments. He set up a presidential committee on equal job opportunity, replacing two other such committees of the Eisenhower administration. It is headed by Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson.

4. Congress is hearing testimony on the President's package of civil rights legislation. On June 11, he asked Congress to "make a commitment it has not fully made in this century to the proposition that race has no place in American life or law." Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy told the House Judiciary Committee, "This bill before you today embodies that commitment."

5. WHILE THE Negroes are crying for rights, a Negro lawyer, Mrs. Cora T. Walker, is making speeches sharply reminding them of their responsibilities. She tells them:

"We are as much to blame for our present condition as the white majority."

On the political side, she says, "There are approximately one million black people in New York City. These Negroes have no restrictions on their voting rights. Yet there are only two elected Negroes in the entire city legislative government."

Of the economic situation, Mrs. Walker says, "In Harlem alone, Negroes spend $150 million a year on automobiles, $80 million on liquor, $75 million on wigs and hair pieces, $100 million on playing the numbers. More than 90 per cent of the businesses in our ghettos are owned, controlled and managed by whites outside of the community. We give minimum support to our own, who are in businesses or professions."

Of some social facts, she says, "We now are the major statistic in juvenile delinquency, dope addiction, crime and school drop-outs. Is this why 75 per cent of the out-of-wedlock children are born of our race?"

Mrs. Walker suggests that Negroes should do more to help each other. "Isn't it our responsibility," she asks, "to take the initiative to secure the needs of our underprivileged?"

She says she never has had an adverse reaction from Negro audiences. "On the contrary, there have been more than 500 requests for reprints of these speeches."

A SIMILAR position was taken recently by another minority group, the "Nisei," or American-born Japanese. In San Francisco, Howard Imazeki, editor of the newspaper Hobukei Mainichi said in an editorial:

"We have yet to hear any Negro voices blaming themselves for their social maladjustment.

"What we are trying to say most sincerely here is that the Negro leaders should do a little soul-searching of their own."

Nearly 72 years ago, on Aug. 19, 1891, the New York Mail and Express published a pathetic little item. It said some Negro clergymen had met to discuss means of obtaining "better opportunities" for their people.

Today, the Negro drive is for fully equal opportunity, for everything America offers every citizen.

1939

Race?

What the Scientists Say

Compiled by Caroline Singer

Approved by

Dr. Fay-Cooper Cole
Dr. Ralph Linton
Dr. Harry L. Shapiro

Manifestations of racial, or religious, intolerance have many causes, among them the snobbishness which impels some people to degrade others in order to elevate themselves, and abnormalities which—familiar to doctors and psychologists — drive certain unfortunates to seek pleasure from petty cruelties. Ignorance is, however, the common cause of racial, or religious, intolerance. And Knowledge is, therefore, the major cure. Knowledge is also a bulwark of Democracy since the ignorant — even the well-meaning ignorant — are easy prey for rabble-rousers, themselves ignorant, unscrupulous or tragically abnormal. With this in mind, and also the fact that, owing to misinformation, or lack of information, many genuinely unprejudiced persons innocently employ the language of intolerance, this small handbook of terms has been compiled. It is authoritative in so far as the statements — concerning language, culture and race — have been approved by:

Dr. Fay-Cooper Cole,
Chairman, Department of Anthropology, University of Chicago

Dr. Ralph Linton,
Sterling Professor of Anthropology, Yale University

Dr. Harry L. Shapiro,
Chairman, Department of Anthropology, American Museum of Natural History

There is no ARYAN
race!

There is no SEMITIC
race!

There is no HEBREW
race!

There is no JEWISH
race!

There is no "PURE"
race!

There is no "SUPERIOR"
race!

ARYAN

When you employ this term you refer not to a race of human beings but only to a family, or group, of languages to which the major European languages belong.

The Aryan language was spoken by a pre-historic people who spread over India and Europe. Their origin is unknown. But there are those who believe that they may have originally inhabited the steppes of southern Russia.

Whether the Aryan language was their own, whether it was acquired by them from earlier peoples whom they conquered, or whether it was acquired by them from conquerors is not known.

But, apparently these people were not all blondes. For in their folktales, surviving in the literature of India, they sometimes described themselves as dark-eyed and dark-haired. The unwritten language of the Moslem Kurds, inhabiting the Turkish highlands, belongs to the Aryan language group as do English and also Yiddish, the latter a modern dialect spoken by thousands of Jews. Therefore, a Kurdish-speaking Moslem and a Yiddish-speaking Jew are exactly as "Aryan"—in language — as any person speaking English or German.

SEMITIC

When you employ this term you refer not to a race of human beings but only to a family, or group, of languages to which Arabic, as well as Hebrew, belongs.

HEBREW

When you employ this term you refer not to a race of human beings but only to a language which belongs, like Arabic, to the Semitic language group.

In Old Testament times Hebrew was the official language of the Jewish religion as, centuries later, Latin became the official language of the Roman Catholic Christian church, and Arabic became the official language of the Moslem religion. However, all Jews did not speak Hebrew. For this reason the main sources of the Bible have been Greek manuscripts. However, in time, the official Hebrew language of the Jewish religion became the common language of Jews in Palestine. And, for this reason, Jews became known as "Hebrews."

But, today, few Jews speak Hebrew, as few Roman Catholics speak Latin, and few Greek Catholics speak liturgical Greek. And an Arabic-speaking Arab is — in language —precisely as "Semitic" as any Hebrew-speaking Jew.

JEWISH

When you employ this term you do not refer to a race but to a religion, or to something which pertains to that religion whose founders were the first to worship Jehova in a land of idolators, and whose moral precepts are a cornerstone of Christianity.

Every religion exercises social and cultural influences. So widespread have been the influences of Christianity that whole nations are known as "Christian" nations, and a part of the world is called the "Christian West," as another part is called the "Moslem East." In the Moslem

East the Christian religion continues to exercise a social and cultural influence over groups, such as the Armenian groups. These groups are subject to non-Christian social and cultural influences. But their members are broadly termed "Christian," although all do not necessarily belong to any Christian religious sect.

Like other religions, the Jewish religion continues to exercise a social and cultural influence upon groups of persons whose position in non-Jewish lands is identical with that of Christian groups in the Moslem East. These groups are subject to non-Jewish social and cultural influences. But members of these groups are broadly termed "Jewish," although all do not necessarily belong to any Jewish religious sect.

In the year 70 A.D. the Jewish people were driven out of Palestine by Roman persecution and by the final destruction of Jerusalem. Since then they have been scattered throughout non-Jewish lands.

Christianity is preponderantly a religion of love. Nevertheless, past persecutions of Jews in Christian lands have been as unwarranted and savage — and un-Christian — as persecutions of Christians, (as well as Jews) in the Moslem East, as, for instance, the massacres of Christians in Moslem Turkey in very recent times.

Throughout history the Jewish population has been depleted during periods of persecution. Nevertheless, during periods of peace, Jewish groups have been increased by conversions, and by marriages between Jews and members of other religious groups. However, the members of Jewish religious sects—scattered throughout the world—do not number more than 13,000,000 at the present time.

Religious freedom is, meanwhile, a sacred principle of American Democracy. When this ceases to be true intellectual freedom and Democracy—which perishes when religious and intellectual freedoms perish—will be no more. An American's religious convictions or religious influences upon the social and cultural aspects of an American's personal life, are a personal affair.

Therefore it is absurd to classify Americans according to their religious beliefs or some religion's cultural influence upon their personal lives. However, if such a silly procedure is followed, no individual or group should be singled out. All Americans must be similarly classified.

RACE

When you employ this term you are referring not to nationality or culture or religion, but only to biological heredity and physical type.

Scientists commonly divide the whole of mankind into three great stocks: Negroid, Caucasoid and Mongoloid. But it is not always possible to place particular groups in these basic categories. The Abyssinians are, for example, Caucasoid in their facial features, but Negroid in skin color. Within each of the three human stocks there are various races which have developed particular physical characteristics as the result of natural selection and inbreeding. Thus, among the races of Caucasoid stock, there is the Alpine race (round-headed, brown-haired, short and stocky) as well as the Nordic race (long-headed, fair and tall) and the Armenoid race (with short, high heads, big noses and dark hair and eyes).

These races were developed in remote times when the various tribes lived in comparative isolation. However, since the dawn of history members of various races have been meeting and mingling. Therefore, it is almost impossible to find an individual of pure race anywhere in the world today. Due to the greater freedom of movement, groups living in regions of high civilization tend to be more mixed racially than those living in backward regions. Consequently the peoples of Europe and America are the most racially mixed of all.

New races, or breeds, may come into being whenever peoples move into a new environment, live together and interbreed for generations. And, among anthropologists, there are some who contend that something of the sort may be happening in America. This opinion is based upon the fact that children of immigrants are often found to differ greatly in physical type from their parents and consequently appear to be moving toward the development of an American race within the Caucasoid stock. If this be so, then the term "American" is not merely a national and cultural term. It is becoming a racial term as well.

There is no evidence that the intellectual capacities of any one race are superior to those of any other. Each race has its quota of individuals of low-grade intelligence, as well as its quota of brilliant minds, while the bulk of its members fall between the two extremes. The apparent differences in the capacities of various races are due to differences in training. When members of different races receive the same training they show themselves to be very much the same in brain power.

The Jewish people do not constitute a race in any sense of the word. The overwhelming majority belong to the Caucasoid stock. However, they have never enjoyed the centuries of settled living in a single region which is required for the development of a distinct race! The original Jewish group was wholly a religious group. It drew converts from all of the races then living in the Near East. The big, high-bridged nose of the Near East was an Armenoid racial trait, characteristic of Hittites and ancient Greeks as well as of some Jews. The hooked nose was characteristic of certain groups within the Mediterranean race. Therefore, types often considered as "Jewish" are still common among non-Jews in the region from which the Jews originally came. Driven from one country to another for centuries, the Jews have long since lost any racial distinctions which they may once have possessed. In Europe and America they consequently reveal as much variation in physical type as do the gentile populations among whom they dwell.

From the foregoing it is obvious that the term "race" — so often loosely applied — should be left entirely to scientists, and that ideas of "racial purity" and "racial superiority" should be dismissed as balderdash.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.

—Declaration of Independence.

Article I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

—Bill of Rights,
Constitution of the United States.

This booklet is not to be sold for profit

Copyright 1939 by Caroline Singer

Decorations by Cyrus LeRoy Baldridge

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS

CO-CHAIRMEN

Arthur H. Compton, Thomas E. Braniff
Roger W. Straus

PRESIDENT

Everett R. Clinchy

DIVISIONAL VICE-PRESIDENTS

Hastings Harrison
Southwestern Division
1028 Liberty Bank Building
Dallas 1, Texas

U. S. Mitchell
Western Division
Central Tower, Suite 815
San Francisco 3, Calif.

Willard Johnson
Northeastern Division
381 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, N. Y.

William L. Young
Central Division
203 North Wabash Avenue
Chicago 1, Ill.

Joseph Q. Mayne
East Central Division
907 Washington Boulevard Building
Detroit 26, Mich.

Distributed by

A M E R I C A N
B R O T H E R H O O D

THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS AND JEWS, Inc.

381 Fourth Avenue
New York 16, N. Y.

Printed in U.S.A.

The Negro and The Social Graces

DR. CHARLOTTE HAWKINS BROWN
President Palmer Memorial Institute
Sedalia, N. C.

Address on "Wings Over Jordan" Program
Columbia Broadcasting System
March 10, 1940

COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
710 Standard Building
Atlanta, Ga.

The Negro and The Social Graces

I have chosen to speak to you this morning on a subject which is very near to my soul, "The Negro and the Social Graces." By social graces I do not mean an attitude of cheap servility, assumed for the purpose of currying favor. I mean simply doing the courteous thing and making a pleasing appearance — the practice of everyday good manners so generally lacking nowadays in the conduct of the average young person, regardless of race.

My message for the most part is to that group of young Negroes from high schools and colleges whose education is above the average; for unfortunately many of these are inclined to associate all forms of politeness, fine manners, and social graces with the slavery time performances of the maid and the butler, and to discard anything which they feel might have come out of those days in which their ancestors were slaves. They forget that even in those days many Negroes were schooled in the "correct thing," and that "what they were not taught they caught," in the way of social demeanor.

One needs only to read any book, fiction or fact, associated with the life of Negroes in the households previous to 1865 to see that it was the Negro butler and maid who actually taught the social graces to the children of the aristocracy of the Southern white group; everything from learning how to curtsy to the art of walking with charm and grace across the ballroom floor. The canons of the social graces were learned by those slaves or servants as religiously as their masters learned the catechism.

Fortunate also are those whose parents, immediately after the Civil War, came under the wise and gentle tutelage of the flower of the white race that came from the North and Middle West, built private schools, became their instructors, and were their patterns for intellectual, moral and social behavior. They taught our mothers and grandmothers the dignity of self-reverence and self-restraint. They taught our fathers—through example and precept—the proper attitude toward their women and what was expected of them in the new freedom which was theirs. These cultured Christian men and women gave to the students of that day "Open Sesame" to the best culture that the world knew.

It is perfectly natural that we want to forget much that was associated with slavery and its aftermath; at the same time it is very necessary that we pay attention to some of the things gained by our foreparents through intimate association with an aristocracy schooled in the finer things of life. Well may we add to our modern culture and educational efficiency some of the fine manners of those bygone days.

After all, the success of the American Negro depends upon his contacts with other races who, through the years, have had greater advantages of learning the proper approach to life and its problems. The little courtesies, the gentle voice, correct grooming; a knowledge of when to sit, when to stand; how to open and close a door; the correct attitude toward persons in authority; good manners in public places, such as railroad stations, moving picture houses, and other places where we are constantly under observation—the acquisition of these graces will go a long way in securing that recognition of ability needed to cope with human society, and will remove some of the commonest objections to our presence in large numbers.

Alas, in our day good manners for both races are almost outmoded. In many instances we have lost the art of fine living. The Negro, with all his handicaps, has now the opportunity of his life to develop anew the art of fine manners as one of the means by

---

The author of this address was born in North Carolina, but early moved with her parents to Cambridge, Massachusetts. While a schoolgirl there, she won the friendship of Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, former President of Wellesley College, through whom she was privileged to know the Eliots, Cabots, Lowells, and other distinguished people. Educated for the teaching profession, she returned to North Carolina in 1901 and, without funds, started a private school which, in honor of her friend, she named Palmer Memorial Institute. With the help of friends North and South, this has grown into a well-appointed and important junior college.

After twenty-five years of teaching, Mrs. Brown took a year's leave of absence and won the bachelor's degree at Wellesley. She has also received two honorary degrees. She feels that it has been a peculiar privilege to live both North and South and to win friends among the choice spirits of both sections.—Editor.

which he may climb the ladder of success. The white race, having reached such heights of culture in their civilization, ofttimes feel that they can afford to go back to earlier stages of barbarism, to sweatshirt grooming, to hilarious party and dance performances. Unfortunately many of our Negro youth are wont to follow this as a proper way of life. But in order for the Negro to get even half the recognition which he may deserve, he must be even more gracious than others, more cultured, more considerate, more observant of little courtesies and social finesse if he would gain a decent place in the sun.

Let us take time, therefore, to be gracious, to be thoughtful, to be kind, using the social graces as one means of turning the wheels of progress with greater velocity on the upward road to equal opportunity and justice for all.

—●—

Additional copies of this address, ten cents per dozen, sixty cents per hundred, postpaid.

COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
710 Standard Building
Atlanta, Ga.

30-Race + Race Differences

The Journal of Genetic Psychology, 1944, 65, 161-175.

AN EXPERIMENTAL AND CRITICAL STUDY OF THE INTELLIGENCE OF NEGRO AND WHITE KINDERGARTEN CHILDREN*

Minneapolis Public Schools

FRED BROWN

A. INTRODUCTION

The urgent need for additional manpower in war industries has probably done more to focus attention upon the potentialities of the Negro than has been accomplished by legions of psychological and sociological research workers. Whatever else it may ultimately accomplish, total war has compelled us to utilize the human components of our society in the most immediately practical manner. We are slowly thrusting aside academic considerations, prejudices, and socio-economic barriers in our efforts to utilize human capacities and resources wherever they are needed. Deeply-rooted and unconsciously buttressed beliefs in the innate superiority and inferiority of peoples are just beginning to yield to the stubborn attrition of brute facts. The grudging admission of small groups of Negroes to some flight-training schools, machine shops, and other jealously white-monopolized fields may, in time, bring about a revision of many of our fallacious conceptions of Negro intelligence and stability. From the point-of-view of scientific research, studies of Negro intelligence leave one with the feeling that investigators have been measuring the effects of a certain culture upon the mental-test performance of individuals who are characterized by a heavily pigmented skin rather than the possible correlation between skin pigmentation and intelligence. Conditions affecting test scores have not been rigorously controlled in most of these studies, especially so basic a factor as socio-economic status. This variable is an especially difficult one to control because of the restrictions placed upon Negro employment in all but the lowest occupational levels. It is very likely therefore that the manner in which Negroes are distributed among the various occupational levels may reflect lack of opportunity for diversity of occupational choice rather than limitations in general intelligence and specific aptitudes. If this assumption is correct we may not be entirely justified in assuming that White occupational classification scales permit the same conclusions with regard to the Negro's socio-economic status and intelligence as they do for the White population. Furthermore, even though we assume that dining car waiters, for example, represent persons of relatively good social and economic position among Negroes and that the White equivalent in terms of prestige and income would be roughly equivalent to the semi-skilled occupational class (Group V), we ought not to be surprised if the children of these waiters fail to score as well on tests of intelligence as do White children of comparable socio-economic status. A theoretical resemblance between two social groups in terms of socio-economic status as indicated by ratings based upon occupational rating scales does not necessarily demonstrate a real equivalence in cultural drive, motivation, and aspirational level.[1] If we discovered that Negro children of semi-skilled fathers obtained mean IQ's which were similar to those obtained by White children of similar socio-economic level this might point to the truth-value of the Negro occupational designation. Such an occurrence might also be interpreted as a confutation of the presumed intellectual inferiority of the Negro school child. If, on the other hand, such a group of Negro children scored either above or below the mean for Whites we must assume that the nominal socio-economic rating assigned this group was probably erroneous and/or that other factors must be taken into consideration in dealing with this problem. The problem of socio-economic status as it affects the Negro remains stubbornly insoluble so far as an accurate equating of groups is concerned as long as occupational opportunities are not the same for both Whites and Negroes. In this study we have compared the test scores of Negro and White kindergarten children in an effort to determine how they compare at a young age when both groups are relatively unaffected by factors resulting from racial and cultural differences.

*Received in the Editorial Office on December 28, 1942.

B. The Negro Community

Negroes in Minneapolis are a small group comprising less than one per cent of the total population. Their presence has never led to class riots. Their residences are more or less involuntarily segregated in certain sections of the city by the pressure of public opinion. Their living conditions are [1]This may be particularly true for the Negro professional and semi-professional groups where assumed equivalence with Whites is apt to be fallacious. For the Negro in general it may be said that improvement in socio-economic status is often saltatory and does not reflect a family history of intellectual traditions. This would seem to be especially true for the professional class.

characteristic of those found in other large cities. Here illiteracy among Negroes is relatively small, since 1.7 per cent of the Minneapolis Negro population over 10 years of age is illiterate and 16.3 per cent of the Negro population of the United States over 10 years of age is illiterate. Even this low rate of illiteracy among Minneapolis Negroes would be lower were it not for the older people, since 44.5 per cent of Negro illiterates are over 65 years of age. Also, 55.3 per cent of the males are found in domestic and personal service and 83.0 per cent of females belong in this category. "The remaining male Negroes are porters, janitors, waiters, barbers, laborers, and unskilled workers in manufacturing industries and in street and railroad construction. A very small percentage of the Negroes are doing clerical and professional work" (22). Also, 74.5 per cent were born in other states, with Missouri, Kentucky, Kansas, Tennessee, Iowa, and Texas contributing their contingents in that order.

C. Subjects

Three hundred forty-one native White, second generation kindergarten children of Scandinavian extraction were compared with 91 Negro children attending the Kindergartens of the Minneapolis Public Schools. The mean chronological age of the White subjects was 69.51 months, σ 3.93. The mean Negro age was 69.15 months, σ 3.47. The critical ratio was 0.48, indicating that both groups were equated for chronological age. The White group consisted of 137 males and 204 females. There were 50 Negro males and 41 females. The selection and distribution of our White subjects was based upon the percentage of gainfully employed adults in Minneapolis classified according to the Goodenough-Anderson Scale of Occupations (1930 census data) (10, 13). A comparison of occupational levels within each group by means of the t-test showed a general tendency for extreme levels to be more highly differentiated than adjacent levels. A marked relationship between level of occupation and level of intelligence was also noted. As a further check an analysis of variance was made to determine whether the variation among occupational levels was greater for White males alone and White males and females combined than the variation within individual occupational levels. This was found to be the case without exception. A test for homogeneity of variance (to determine whether the variances within levels were true estimates of the total variance for each group) showed homogeneity of variances within levels. Hence the significance of the variance ratios were found to be attributable to the differences among the means of individual levels (4). This rigorous treatment of the White data provided us with a reliable yardstick for the determination of the approximate socio-economic status of our colored subjects. A study of paternal occupations among the colored group showed that 63.7 per cent were listed as janitors, porters, waiters, laborers, and WPA workers; 14.5 per cent were listed as tailor, statistician, postal clerk, grocer, mail clerk, mechanic, engineer (janitor?), draftsman, stenographer, and clergyman; while 21.8 per cent were unlisted. But we may assume, upon the basis of Minneapolis Negro occupational samplings and the fact that school records generally contain certain data on the non-transient professional and semi-professional classes, that many fathers in this group probably fall into the semi- and un-skilled categories. Homogeneity of variance among the Negro (1.299, $p<5$) indicated that they came from the same population. Variance between Negro and White subjects was also found to be homogeneous.

D. Procedure

All children were given individual Stanford-Binet tests, Form L, by their kindergarten teachers. These teachers were trained to administer and score the tests as part of the Minneapolis Kindergarten Binet Testing Program. Hilden (14) obtained a correlation of .89 with a probable error of estimate of 4.7 IQ points upon retesting 274 teacher-tested children after a lapse of one year. Brown (6) re-tested 201 such children after a mean interval of 2.62 years and found a correlation of .86 with a probable error of estimate of 5.6 points. These results agree with retest findings of other investigators and demonstrate that highly trained and certificated teacher-testers at the kindergarten level are able to administer a reliable Binet test to their pupils. Details of the project have been published elsewhere (3, 4, 5, 6).

E. Results

1. IQ

The mean IQ of the White children ($N=341$) was 107.06, σ 13.1. The mean IQ for the total Negro group ($N=91$) was 100.78, σ 12.9. The critical ratio (Diff./σ diff. was 4.13, indicating with certainty that the difference between means was not due to chance. It is interesting to note that there is virtually no difference in the sigmas of the two groups and that these sigmas agree with those reported by Terman and Merrill for this age group (25).

2. Sex Differences

Table 1 shows that Negro males make somewhat higher scores than do

TABLE 1

SEX DIFFERENCES IN STANFORD-BINET IQ'S OF NEGRO AND WHITE KINDERGARTEN CHILDREN

	N	M	σ	*M*1 - *M*2	D/σ diff
Negro males	50	103.02	11.91
a. vs. Negro females	41	98.0	13.55	5.0	1.85
b. vs. White males	137	106.8	12.52	3.8	2.27
c. vs. White females	204	107.2	12.85	4.2	2.80
Negro females	41	98.0	13.55
a. vs. White females	204	107.2	12.85	9.2	6.97
b. vs. White males	137	106.8	12.52	8.8	4.88
White males	137	106.8	12.52
a. vs. White females	204	107.2	12.85	0.4	.01

Negro females but the difference is not statistically significant. White females are superior to Negro males whereas White males tend to score higher than Negro males, the significance of the difference being somewhat doubtful. Both White males and females are definitely superior to Negro females. Whether this results from the factor of rapport between Negro girls and White female examiners remains to be determined. There is no sex difference in intelligence between White males and White females.

3. Socio-Economic Status

The correct interpretation of Negro socio-economic status is, as we have stated before, a difficult task because of the inequalities in occupational opportunities. It would appear to be methodologically feasible however to compare a social group of vaguely defined socio-economic status (such as the Negro) with another group sharing the same culture and separated into experimentally determined occupational levels (such as our White group.) While we most emphatically point out that this technique does not establish the absolute socio-economic identity of the colored group in terms of the social and cultural implications of such status in our culture, it should nevertheless enable us to surmise the probable position of our Negro group in terms of at least one variable, namely intelligence. Inasmuch as the relationship between socio-economic status and intelligence is a positive one for employed white adults we might assume that the same relationship holds for the colored group and that comparisons of mean IQ's of one group with the other may give us a knowledge of the true socio-economic level of the colored group. This approach, while theoretically defensible, can be entirely valid only in those instances where the vaguely defined group is not hampered in its social and economic adjustments. In the case of the Negro, because of restrictions operating to limit social and economic mobility, any such generalization can be made only with reservations, even though most of the Negro children used in this study come from parents who are engaged in what would be regarded among those for whom color is no bar, as semi-skilled and unskilled occupations. We do not know whether Negroes who are so classified would be capable of attaining a higher position on the socio-economic scale in a free society or whether the positions they actually occupy represent endowment-limited ceilings.

The data in Table 2 show that the variances are homogeneous, demonstrating that our subjects come from the same population. The difference between the variances of Negro males and Group VII White males is significant, but since the difference between the means is not statistically significant a more rigorous treatment of the data in this region was not indicated. We have only computed variances in those cases where the number of subjects was small. It should be pointed out that the critical ratio of 2.26 between Negro females and Group VII White females is not statistically significant since the t-test revealed a p of $> .05$.

The comparison of mean Negro IQ's with White groups broken down into separate occupational levels brings out some interesting and provocative findings. Table 2 shows that Negro males are inferior to White males of professional and semi-professional paternity at the kindergarten level. It is highly significant that our Negro subjects are not inferior in tested intelligence to Whites in Group III (Clerical, retail business, and skilled trades!) The slight but statistically insignificant difference at this level vanishes almost entirely at levels below this point. In view of the fact that a majority of our Negro subjects have fathers who may be classed as semi- and unskilled workers this is all the more significant, as it may suggest the fallacy of using White occupational norms for Negro workers. Our studies with White subjects (4) reveal no such results.

Negro females make significantly lower scores than White females at every level except VI and VII. The colored subjects as a whole are similar in socio-economic status to White semi- and unskilled labor classes. As this is what we might be led to anticipate solely upon the basis of Negro occupational listings (noting however that the low female scores are responsible for the total group results) we are justified in making the follow-

TABLE 2

COMPARISON OF NEGRO MALES AND FEMALES WITH WHITE MALES AND FEMALES OF KNOWN SOCIO-ECONOMIC STATUS (MINNESOTA OCCUPATIONAL SCALE)

	N	M	σ	*M*1 - *M*2	F ratio (Variances)	CR
Negro males	50	103.0	11.91
a) vs. White males I	14	114.6	12.45	11.4	1.154 p>5	3.62
b) vs. White males II	16	115.0	8.94	13.8	1.698 p>5	5.36
c) vs. White males III	25	107.7	13.24	4.5		1.53
d) vs. White males V	60	104.5	12.20	1.3		0.64
e) vs. White males VI	7	101.8	10.88	1.4	1.048 p>5	0.32
f) vs. White males VII	15	101.2	8.12	2.0	4.897 p<1	0.81
Negro females	41	98.0	13.55
a) vs. White females I	11	109.0	11.33	11.0	1.331 p>5	2.97
b) vs. White females II	17	113.7	16.97	15.7	1.628 p>5	3.65
c) vs. White females III	57	110.2	11.32	12.2		5.82
d) vs. White females V	86	106.2	11.25	8.2		4.35
e) vs. White females VI	18	96.5	15.64	1.5		0.37
f) vs. White females VII	15	105.4	11.35	7.4	1.360 p>5	2.26
Total negro	91	100.0	12.91
a) vs. Total White I	25	112.1	12.30	11.3		4.03
b) vs. Total White II	33	114.4	13.03	13.6		5.15
c) vs. Total White III	82	109.4	12.42	8.6		4.52
d) vs. Total White V	146	105.5	11.68	4.6		2.78
e) vs. Total White VI	25	98.0	14.66	2.8	1.329 p>5	0.86
f) vs. Total White VII	23	105.7	10.58	4.9		1.88

ing assertion: Negro children at the kindergarten level in the Minneapolis Public Schools are not inferior to White children of nominally similar socio-economic status in general intellectual capacity as measured by the Stanford-Binet Scale, Form L. Negro males compare favorably with White males of higher socio-economic status than their own.

Previous Studies

Our findings differ from those reported in the literature on the intelligence of young Negro children. Koch and Simmons (16) tested seven year old Negro children on the Myers Pantomime and Detroit First Grade tests and found that 78 per cent of the Whites surpassed the Negro median. Graham (12) compared the scores of Negro children in Atlanta, Georgia, with national norms on th Otis Group Intelligence Scale. Differences between Negroes and Whites ranged from 3.10 to 9.09 points from ages 8 to 11 inclusive, favoring the Whites. The difference between 7-year-olds was only .35 points. Differences favoring Whites on the Advanced Examination (10 to 14 years) ranged from 11.01 to 25.00 points. Sunne (24) compared 110 White with 32 Negro children, using the Terman and Yerkes-Bridges Revisions of the Binet tests. The mean IQ of the White group at age 6 was 100. The mean Negro IQ was 95. Strachan (23) compared 7,474 White and 298 Negro children. The median IQ of the White kindergarten children was 105.7 and of the Negro 96.79; and 44.61 per cent of his Negro children fell into the 56-95 IQ range as compared with only 20.12 per cent of the Whites. Klineberg (15) administered the Stanford-Binet Scale (1916 revision) to Negro children whose parents had migrated from the south and who had lived in the north from one to over four years. The average IQ of migrants of less than one year of residence was 81.4; one to two years, 84.2; two to three years, 84.5; three to four years, 85.5; over four years, 87.4. New York born Negro children earned an average IQ of 87.3.

Sunne (24) found that 7-year-old Whites obtained a mean IQ of 96 as contrasted with 88 for Negroes. At age 8 the White mean was 93, Negro 88; age 9, 93 for Whites, 85 for Negroes; at age 10 the average White IQ had dropped to 90, the Negro IQ to 79. Garth, Lovelady, and Smith (7) tested 2,006 Negro children in Dallas and Oklahoma in Grades IV to IX on the Otis Classification and obtained an average IQ of 77.9. Peterson and Harrelson (20) used the Pressey, Otis, Haggerty, and Myers tests with groups of from 32 to 734 Negro children. They claim to have obtained a relatively higher type Negro than White, but the findings revealed an average Negro IQ of 75 and 80.83 per cent of Whites were more efficient than the median of Negro ability. Only 15 to 18 per cent of the Negroes reached the median for Whites. Garth and Whatley (9) found a median IQ of 75 for 1200 Negro children on the National Intelligence Test. McGraw (19) administered the Buhler "Babytests" to Southern Negro and White infants with the result that White infants proved superior to Negroes (as they also did according to height and weight norms.) Bruce (7) examined 521 White and 432 Negro children in the rural South. The average Kuhlmann-Anderson group test IQ for White children (mean CA 9-6 years) was 88.10. Mean for Negroes (mean CA 9-9 years) 71.80. On the 1916 revision of the Stanford-Binet scale White children (N=87) obtained an average IQ of 90.07, σ 15.66. The Negro subjects (N=72) obtained an average IQ of 76.33, σ 14.22. The Grace Arthur Performance battery, using the same N's, resulted in an average IQ of 94.21, σ 22.11 for Whites, 77.10, σ 14.08 for Negroes. Critical Ratios for these differences were all above 5.00. Boynton (1) concludes ". . . most studies point so definitely to the superiority of the average White over the average Negro that it would seem justifiable to assume this condition to exist, at least until such time as definite objective confutations can be brought forth by objectors to this Hypothesis."

Discussion

It does not suffice to show that the average IQ of Negro children is lower than that of Whites. If we reject the myth of superior and inferior races we must probe deeper into the causes for these rather consistently observed differences. It is imperative that we ascertain whether such differences are attributable to nature or nurture. In doing so we have no intention of discrediting previous investigations, weak as many of these have been methodologically, but in these times the psychological research worker who is interested in social issues must frequently advance beyond his refined statistical techniques and inquire into the qualitative factors which may be responsible for his results. It is these very factors which are often disregarded by those who make use of scientific data in order to bolster reactionary prejudices.

Our findings have already shown that Negro children, residing in a community wherein the literacy level is higher than that found for Negroes in the United States, make higher score on the Stanford-Binet Scale than is customary for children of this group elsewhere. We have shown that these children are as intelligent as Whites of approximately the same occupational level and we have pointed out the well-known fact that the Negro is grossly hampered in his choice of occupations. Sunne's findings (24) show a drop in the Negro IQ from 95 at age 6 to 79 at age 10. Bruce (7) asserts "From 6 through 12 years of age, the Negroes show no greater decline in IQ than the Whites." When we consider the initially low IQ's of her subjects and the stultifying environment in which they live this is not to be wondered at. Our own experience with Negro children in the Minneapolis Public Schools indicates that such children make progressively poorer test scores as they grow older until the average IQ for Negroes at the sixth and seventh grades approaches the scores mentioned by other investigators. School principals in Negro districts have told the writer that Negro children seem to grow duller as they grow older. It might be assumed therefore that mental development in the case of the Negro reaches its maximum at a relatively early age. Such a hypothesis would be more tenable if he shared the social and economic advantages of the White. This he obviously does not do. We are forced to search for another explanation which will rest upon the objectively verifiable facts of the Negro's social and economic milieu and which will also possess psychological validity.

Gordon (11) tested English Canal-boat children and found that 76 older children earned an average IQ of 69.6 whereas younger children tested at the average for English children. He found a correlation of —.755 between intelligence and chronological age. This finding, interestingly enough, did not lead him to the conclusion that Canal-boat children are innately inferior or reached maximal mental development much earlier than did land-based children. Instead, these results were advanced in support of the theory that intelligence deteriorates in the absence of external stimulation.

Given equal opportunity to attend public schools in the North and therefore exposed to educational stimulation (unlike Gordon's subjects), why has the Negro school child failed to reflect this advantage and why does his IQ seemingly deteriorate? If we point out that he almost always resides in the poorest sections of our cities and that his schooling in many cases is not comparable in quality to that of White children we would expect him to score at approximately the same level as do Whites in his neigborhood. The average IQ for Minneapolis Kindergarten children is 107.7 (2). The average IQ for White children in a Negro neighborhood and in the same school wherein most of our subjects were tested is 104. A comparison of percentiles for Negro and White children in the same school reveals that the Negro IQ lies in the 27th percentile whereas the White average in the same school lies at the 35th percentile. Nevertheless these scores are more alike than would be the case if we compared these Whites with Whites elsewhere in the city.

The theory which we wish to advance in this paper involves emotional factors in the life-development of the Negro which are not encountered in other cultural groups in America. We have suggested in a previous paper (2) that the variabilities of the IQ at various age-levels from two years to post-adolescence follows a rather consistent pattern not due to chance. From two to six years the standard deviations of the IQ gradually decline until the lowest variability (12.5) occurs at age 6. Beyond this point the variabilities gradually grow larger until a maximum is again attained at the adolescent period. We have interpreted this phenomenon to mean that home training up to this age involves inhibitions and restraints imposed from above in an effort to divert aggression and hostility into socially conventional patterns of behavior. When the child enters school he is exposed to social and intellectual stimuli which encourages differentiation. This phase of the process is reflected in increasing variabilities. Since the standard deviation of the Negro IQ in our group is almost identical with that of the total White group and Terman's standardization population (σ 12.91 and σ 12.30) we may assume that this process of conformity patterning is very similar for both groups. We must ask whether increasing differentiation after the age of six years characterizes Negro development, since we assume that such changes in variability are culturally determined. If opportunities and incentives for differentiation are withheld from the Negro child, is it not likely that this process of differentiation fails to occur to the same degree as for Whites? This problem lends itself to experimental verification. What looks like deterioration of the Negro IQ may in reality be a hemming-in of intellectual development and/or efficiency which strongly suggests the operation of a constrictive factor in Negro intellectual development. It is our theory that such a process of constriction or "pinching off" takes place and accounts for much of the Negro's personality and intellectual development. This would lead to a studious regard for outward forms of behavior characterized by set conformity to White norms, an inhibition of spontaneity in verbal behavior, and sharp reduction in the level of aspiration. Such patterns of behavior have their counterpart in frustration experiments carried out with animals.

There are a number of cogent considerations which lend support to such a theory. The Negro attempts to adapt himself to a dominant culture corporation in which he holds very little stock and has a proportionately small voice in determining policies (the Poll-tax situation illustrates this dramatically). His level of aspiration is adjusted to his opportunities and there is little motivation for superior performance which will only lead to severe frustration later in life. The Negro child realizes (consciously or unconsciously) that his vertical mobility is more restricted than is that of almost any other group in this country. In the Southern states he is expected to assume an attitude of submissiveness toward Whites. Signs of aspiration higher than that tacitly permitted him by Whites is construed as arrogance and presumption. If he should strive for White status he is almost certain to encounter bitter disappointment which is likely to lead to neurotic symptom formation.[2] Lemkau, Teitz, and Cooper (17) made a Mental Hygiene study of 3337 cases in the Eastern Health District of Baltimore, supplementing their findings with National Health Survey material. They state:

> In the "nervous" and psychoneurotic groups, Negroes furnish but 15 and 14 per cent of the cases respectively. The proportion in the small cases with neurotic traits corresponds almost exactly to the representation of the Negro race in the total population of 20 years of age and over, which is 21.5 per cent. This distribution pattern, a disproportionally small percentage of Negroes, is seen to prevail in most of the diagnostic subgroups among the psychoneuroses.

Upon the basis of an "index of case finding" they further conclude ". . . Our lower rate for adult neurotics among Negroes corresponds to the actual facts." This probably arises out of his sharp goal-reduction and would appear to offer further support to the theory of a constriction mechanism which enables the Negro to attune himself to a culture which creates a frustration trap by ostensibly offering freedom of opportunity for all peoples regardless of race or creed, but at the same time prohibits the Negro from implementing these concepts operationally.

Intelligence tests (whether individual or group tests) presuppose a certain degree of articulateness on the part of the examinee. We believe that the Negroes inhibit verbalizations among Whites as one of the overt manifestations of the constriction process. Klineberg (15) has said that the

---

[2]The author has in his files the case of a Negro adolescent who developed paranoid tendencies as a result of severe status conflict.

Negro's language equipment is poor. He cites no experimental evidence in support of this statement, but if we accept it at its face value it would be necessary to point out that a sharp distinction must be made between language facility as measured by White test standards (which, upon the basis of intelligence test results would necessarily be low) and language as a vehicle for the expression of attitudes. Since language reveals attitudes, and forbidden attitudes may attract hostility and/or aggression from the dominant Whites, discretion outweighs valor in the development of language habits. Limiting one's self to "yea" and "nay" reduces threats to personal security while it concomitantly leads to linguistic atrophy through disuse. The effects of this verbal inhibition, as the need for it increases with more life experience, upon measured intelligence needs no further elaboration. That it is very likely a logical explanation of IQ deterioration must also be given careful consideration.

Summary

Three hundred forty-one native White, second generation kindergarten children were compared for intelligence with 91 colored kindergarten children of the same chronological age. All children were given the Stanford-Binet Scale, Form L. Socio-economic status of the White subjects was accurately determined and rigorously analyzed by the analysis of variance method. Socio-economic status of the Negro subjects was carefully scrutinized and interpreted in terms of the community pattern for the Negro. Methodological assumptions underlying a comparison of White and Negro subjects at each of six occupational levels were discussed. The following results were presented:

1. The mean White IQ was 107.06 as compared with a mean Negro IQ of 100.78. The variances were particularly identical.
2. Negro males make somewhat higher scores than females, but the difference is not statistically significant.
3. White females are superior to Negro males, but the evidence does not clearly demonstrate White male superiority over Negro males. Both White males and females are superior to Negro females.
4. Variances for White and Negro IQ's are homogeneous at all occupational levels, indicating that the subjects come from the same population.
5. Comparison of intelligence at various occupational levels reveals that Negro males are not inferior in tested intelligence to White subjects in Group III (Clerical, retail business, and skilled trades.)

6. Negro females score lower than White females at all occupational levels except VI and VII.

7. The total Negro group resembles the White semi- and unskilled labor class.

A theory of developmental constriction based upon clearly defined cultural factors in the life of the Negro is advanced as an explanation of the apparent deterioration of intelligence among Negro children with increase in age. This theory seems to account for the consistently lower IQ's of Negroes in comparison with Whites without assuming racial inferiority.

References

1. Boynton, P. L. Intelligence, Its Manifestations and Measurement. New York: Appleton, 1933.
2. Brown, F. Variability of the IQ in relation to age on the revised Stanford-Binet scale. J. Genet. Psychol. (In press.)
3. ———. The Minneapolis kindergarten Binet testing program: an experiment in applied psychology. J. Consult. Psychol., 1942, 6, 142-148.
4. ———. A comparative study of the intelligence of Jewish and Scandinavian kindergarten children. J. Genet. Psychol. (In press.)
5. ———. Mental hygiene in the kindergarten. Ment. Hyg. (In press.)
6. Brown, F., & Challman, S. A. Binet testing by kindergarten teachers as a mental hygiene measure. Sch. & Soc., 1940, 52, 668-672.
7. Bruce, M. Factors affecting intelligence test performance of Whites and Negroes in the rural South. Arch. of Psychol., 1940, No. 252, Pp. 99.
8. Garth, T. R., Lovelady, B. E., & Smith, H. W. The intelligence and achievement of southern Negro children. Sch. & Soc., 1930, 32, 41.
9. Garth, T. R., & Whatley, C. A. The intelligence of southern Negro children Sch. & Soc., 1925, 22, 501.
10. Goodenough, F. L., & Anderson, J. E. Experimental Child Psychology. New York: Century, 1931.
11. Gordon, H. Mental and scholastic tests among retarded children. London: Bd. of Educ., Educ. Pamphlet No. 44, 1923.
12. Graham, V. T. Health studies of Negro children: I. Intelligence studies of Negro children in Atlanta, Georgia. Printing Office, Washington, D. C., Reprint No. 1127, Pub. Health Reports, 1926, 41. (P. 2759.)
13. Green, J., Berman, I., Trabue, M. R., & Paterson, D. G. A manual of selected occupational tests for use in public employment offices. Univ. of Minn. Press, Bulletin Series, 2, No. 3, Employment Stabilization Research Institute, 1933.
14. Hilden, A. H. Training kindergarten teachers to test their own pupils on the Stanford-Binet scale. Sch. & Soc., 1938, 48, 123-124.
15. Klineberg, O. Negro Intelligence and Selective Immigration. New York: Columbia Univ. Press, 1935. Pp. 66.
16. Koch, H. L., & Simmons, R. A study of the test performance of American, Mexican, and Negro children. Psychol. Monog., 1926, 166. (P. 35.)

17. LEMKAU, P., TIETZ, C., & COOPER, M. Complaint of nervousness and the psychoneurosis. Amer. J. Orthopsychiat., 1942, 12, 214-223.

18. LONG, H. H. The intelligence of the colored elementary pupils in Washington, D. C. J. Neg. Educ., 1924, 3, 205-222.

19. MCGRAW, M. B. A comparative study of a group of Southern White and Negro infants. Genet. Psychol. Monog., 1931, 10, 1-105.

20. PETERSON, J., & HARRELSON, P. V. The comparative abilities of White and Negro children. Comp. Psychol. Monog., 1923, 5.

21. PETERSON, J. Comparisons of White and Negro children in the Rational Learning test. Pub. Sch. Pub. Co., 27th Yrbk. Nat. Soc. Stud. Educ., 1928, Part I. (P. 333.)

22. SCHMID, C. F. Social Saga of Two Cities. Minneapolis: Council of Soc. Agencies, 1937. (Ch. VII.)

23. STRACHAN, L. Distribution of intelligence quotients of twenty-two thousand primary school children. J. Educ. Psychol., 1926, 16. (P. 169.)

24. SUNNE, D. Comparison of White and Negro children by the Terman and Yerkes-Bridges revisions of the Binet tests. J. Comp. Psychol., 1925, 5. (P. 209.)

25. TERMAN, L. M., & MERRILL, M. Measuring Intelligence. New York: Houghton-Mifflin, 1937.

Lubbock Field
Lubbock, Texas

SRC

The Georgia Observer

issued by

GEORGIA COMMITTEE ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

710 STANDARD BUILDING, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Chairman—R. L. RUSSELL, Griffin Vice-Chairman—RUFUS E. CLEMENT, Atlanta

Vol. III JULY-AUGUST, 1942 Nos. 7 & 8

Tommyrot

In the heathenish rage with which Eugene Talmadge is trying to prejudice the voters of Georgia into returning him to the Governorship of that State, he has now picked out the Rosenwald Foundation for his vitriol condemning its labors and services for the education of the Negroes of the South as an intention to bring about social equality with the two races.

Those who know the facts about the fine offices of the Rosenwald foundation are quite sure of the designs of this enterprise and long ago became convinced against all such piffle and twaddle that this benefaction had nothing in mind save that of giving the unattended and long-outcast Negroes of the South a better chance for a better education.

It has been co-operative with the entire South's own educational leaders in this constructive enterprise, sent its money down here to be spent by them and without restriction or reservation save that it should be used for the ends for which it was bequeathed.

To undertake to create the impression in Georgia or in any other part of the South that the Rosenwald foundation is a racial Fifth Columnist in its ulterior purposes is the sheerest sort of tommyrot.—Charlotte Observer, August 20.

BLAKE—

The morning after the night before,
'Twas surely a glorious dawn,
Because there were times in the night before
When it seemed that our cause was gone;
Thursday morning, the tenth of September
Is a morning I'll always divinely remember,
For just as the dawn began to break
After a night of din,
We knew without doubt that the fight was won
As victory's tide swept in;
Thursday morning, the tenth of September
Is a morning I'll always divinely remember.

—Atlanta Journal.

Odum Brands Race Issue As Political Dodo

By the Associated Press

Dr. Howard W. Odum, president of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, said Saturday he believed the result of the gubernatorial campaign in Georgia and the recent senatorial campaign in South Carolina "shows clearly that the race issue no longer has its old-time political appeal."

In a statement issued through the commission office here, Dr. Odum, who is director of the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina, asserted the elections "will contribute definitely to the unity and welfare of the (Southern) region."

Dr. Odum's statement:

"The outcome of the gubernatorial contest in Georgia last Wednesday shows clearly that the race issue no longer has its old-time political appeal. Relied upon by the governor as his chief asset in a hard fight for re-election, this issue was repudiated by an overwhelming vote for the opponent who had denounced its injection into the campaign as insincere and dangerous.

"The result of the recent senatorial race in South Carolina bears testimony to the same effect. Politicians may well take notice and hereafter pitch their appeals on a higher plane.

"These results and the trend they indicate will greatly encourage the constructive leadership of both races in the South and will contribute definitely to the unity and welfare of the region. The Negro may reasonably expect increasing sympathy and co-operation as the great heart of the South follows its judgment in a continued program of unity and progress."—Atlanta Journal, Sept. 13.

BLAKE—

The Old Home Counties

The sweetest news above the rest,
Please shout it long and loud—
Old Fulton and DeKalb came through
To make us very proud;
The old home counties thundered out
In tones that were emphatic,
They did the job to make us feel Quite happy and ecstatic.

—Atlanta Journal.

A BOLT FROM THE BLACK

—Atlanta Journal.

September 1 the University System of Georgia lost its accredited rating with the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

SCHOOLS ARE SAVED; DEMOCRACY RESTORED

"Victory and salvation!"—those words typify the thoughts that today run through the minds of every loyal Georgian and every student of the Georgia schools. For today, unofficial reports give Ellis Arnall a close, but decisive, victory over Eugene Talmadge. From the students' viewpoint, Arnall's win spells for us not only victory, but also salvation—the salvation of our schools.

Perhaps one of the most important results of the Arnall victory is that the reputation of our state and of its voters has been redeemed in the eyes of the nation. The people of these United States, looking on conditions in Georgia, came to regard the foul treatment our people and institutions suffered under Governor Talmadge as nothing less than a serious threat to democracy. Now that Arnall has been elected, Americans the country over feel much more at ease. Knowing that democracy has been restored here at home, we can now concentrate our efforts in our war for "Democracy, forever!"—The Technique—Georgia School of Technology.

THE STUDENTS

OF GEORGIA

ASK THE CITIZENS

OF THEIR STATE

TO REMEMBER

THIS DAY

FOR TODAY,

AS A RESULT

OF THE POLICIES

OF ONE MAN,

GEORGIA'S PROUD

UNIVERSITY SYSTEM

STANDS DISCREDITED

September 1st, 1942

—Atlanta Journal.

Every time a vicious demagogue is repudiated and cast out the whole country gains by the process as well as the community which executes the judgment. Therefore all the rest of us are in Georgia's debt for what the great majority of its voters did to Eugene Talmadge. —New Orleans Item.

Eugene Talmadge was not exclusively Georgia's shame or Georgia's responsibility. In office he represented a species that is a blight on the good name of Democracy in the South. But Georgia did not need the aid and counsel of outlanders in curing her political affliction. This she has done, surely and intelligently, with the sharp instrument of the ballot.—Asheville Citizen.

Democracy Wins

The results of Wednesday's Democratic White Primary, which nominated Ellis Arnall as Chief Executive of Georgia is an unmistakable repudiation of dictatorship in governmental affairs of the state.

The vote means, that of itself alone, the "White Supremacy" cry does not possess the alluring appeal it once held for the rural masses of the southland. Judge Blease in South Carolina found out too late that it was no longer sufficient to win election to office. Other states in the south are gradually beginning to examine more seriously their candidate whose only appeal is race-hate and prejudice.

In a very real sense, we hope it means the end of incitement of race against race in the state, and the beginning of a conscientious attempt to administer the laws of the state to the interests of all groups, and the dawn of a new era of "good feelings" among the whites and blacks, so vital to our mutual progress and happiness in this time of national peril.

We would have liked to help vote for the return of good government to the state in this election. And indeed, responsible Negro leaders had considered seriously the matter of voting in this election. But viewing the far-reaching issues in the campaign and the high probability that such a course would play into the hands of the enemies of good government, this course was abandoned. Nevertheless, we know and sincerely hope that all honest believers in democracy know that Negroes should not be expected to be content to fight and die to save democracy for our beloved land, without having an opportunity to share some of the fruits of this struggle.

The enfranchisement of the Negro people in the White Primaries is the only solution which can ultimately silence the race issue in politics. Without a voice or a vote, the Negro people, about 40 per cent of the population, have been used as a sort of club to whip the whites into believing that Negro domination is the paramount challenge to their safety and security.

The campaign has ended now. It has been long and disheartening. It has engendered much suspicion and fear needlessly between the unthinking whites and blacks of the state. It has done some very real harm to our Negro war morale. But, in spite of these, it is highly important that all memories of the past be forgotten and that we set our eyes upon the real objective of this Nation, winning the war. All other considerations should be subordinated to this objective.

We congratulate Governor-Elect Ellis Arnall and wish for him an honest, fearless but sane administration, which is liberal enough to embrace the interests and welfare of Negroes, as well as other citizens of Georgia.

—Atlanta Daily World, September 11.

ELLIS ARNALL GIVES RECOGNITION TO GEORGIA WOMEN

To name all leaders and groups who have borne a telling part in this gloriously ended campaign would make a list columns long. None wrought more faithfully than the educators, the teachers and the student rank and file who mustered to the defense of our University System and the previous human values it embodied.—Atlanta Journal, September 10.

Georgia has full reason to be proud of the conduct of its newspapers during the tempestuous political campaign which has come to so happy a close. The press, daily and weekly, discharged its obligation to the public in a manner that was impressive and, without doubt, effective.—Journal, Sept. 15.

In an interview given in Washington September 19, Ellis Arnall added another group of Georgians to those mentioned by the Atlanta Journal. According to the Associated Press, he gave "full credit for his victory" not only "to the youth" but also to "the women" of the State. The women, especially of the Methodist church, began a clear-cut campaign of education on the anti-Christian undemocratic issue of race in political campaigns. They passed resolutions condemning the injection of the Negro into the campaign. In their societies they discussed the effect of this issue on the Nation's status in the war for the preservation of Democracy. They saw themselves voting as citizens of the Christian world.

Their work to preserve Democracy was not published in the newspapers. They carried on their weekly and monthly meetings where they came together, as their mothers and grandmothers before them had come, to plan on advancing the Kingdom of God. They saw in the political issue of race a dangerous obstacle to the fulfillment of this plan which they must remove. And they did their part at home, quietly and without thinking of individual credit or acclaim. "Ever body in our society voted," wrote one woman, "and from the resulz we know we done good."

To the everlasting credit of Ellis Arnall he has given public recognition of his and Georgia's and the country's debt to the women of Georgia.

Great News From Georgia!

This is positively great news from Georgia —this word of the defeat of Gene Talmadge.

Getting rid of Talmadge as governor in itself is a very fine thing, a blessing for the people of our neighbor state which will be shared, in some measure, by all of the people of the South. But his defeat carries a significance and a reassurance that go far beyond Talmadge himself. For it is a repudiation of many dangerous and destructive policies, methods and tendencies in government.

—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Achievement!

—Atlanta Journal, Sept. 11.

September 9 the citizens of Georgia remembered.

Well Done, Georgia

Congratulations on the result of Wednesday's Democratic primary go, first of all, to the people of Georgia. They have proved by their ballots that they can be depended upon for sound judgment and patriotic action when vital issues challenge and great opportunities call. They have not only vindicated the good name of their commonwealth, but also have forged a way to its quickened progress and prosperity. They have said to the world, Georgia stands for justice, for freedom, for enlightenment, for good will, for true Americanism.—Atlanta Journal.

A Southerner Learns About Race

by Brewton Berry

Reprinted from COMMON GROUND
Vol. II No. 3 Spring, 1942

A SOUTHERNER LEARNS ABOUT RACE

BREWTON BERRY

LET no one call me radical. I was born and bred in the Deep South, of a long line of Colonial Dames, D.A.R.'s, U.D.C.'s, and unreconstructed rebels. At a very tender age I acquired strong prejudices against Republicans, New Englanders, and the tariff. Even earlier, though, I had learned the orthodox racial creed of the South and had mastered the complicated code of interracial etiquette. I knew which race was superior and which had been foreordained to hew the wood and draw the water. It was perfectly obvious to me that Negroes were naturally lazy, musical, and incompetent. I knew "instinctively" how to deal with them. I addressed them as "Auntie," "Mammy," and "Daddy," but never as "Mister," "Mistress," or "Miss." They cut my hair and rubbed on the tonic but did not shake my hand. They prepared my food and served it to me but never sat at a table with me. They called only at our back door and occupied the rear seats of the bus. They had their own churches and schools. To me this all seemed entirely rational and proper.

Habits thus acquired are not easily discarded. Even now it is only righteous indignation that makes me vote Republican; and when kind words about New England slip through my lips, I take secret pride in my magnanimity. Yes, and to this day I never pass a Sherman monument without thumbing my nose at it.

As for the interracial mores, I must confess that I am conventional—at least, ostensibly. I dance only with Nordics, Alpines, Mediterraneans, and mixtures of these three. And I have no doubt that the man my daughter marries, whatever be his intellectual and moral qualifications, will have the acceptable amount of pigment in his epidermis.

My prejudices, however, do not lead to violence. Lynching I condemn; the persecution of Jews I deplore; and recent immigrants and their children, I know full well, are not one whit more iniquitous than the Founding Fathers. Ku Klux Klans, Coughlins, and Winrods get no support from me.

But I am no reformer. The role of the crusader has never won me over. I admire martyrs and am often tempted to envy them their bliss; but I doubt that I shall ever emulate them. When in Rome I try to do as the Romans; and I appreciate similar efforts on their part. This attitude I attribute to the study of anthropology, but the cause may be glandular. I don't know. Call me conservative, Tory, reactionary, or what you will. But not radical.

Creeds and etiquette, however, are quite different things. Toward the latter my policy is usually one of conformity, but toward the former I am disposed to be critical and rebellious. Before I had graduated from short pants I had played havoc with the Apostles' Creed, much to the consternation of aunts, uncles, and parents. My faith in the racial creed remained unshaken much longer, until college professors, books, and several years' residence abroad combined to make me skeptical. As a consequence, in place of the racial creed acquired in my youth, I now hold to a new one:

First, our popular orthodox ideas about race are no better than superstitions. They were born, not of cool, scientific thinking, but were smuggled into our heritage to justify exploitation, to protect privilege, to arouse nationalism, or to cover ignorance.

Second, there are no fundamental differences between the various races.

And third, there is no such thing as a race in the first place.

Allow me, by way of novelty, to discuss these points in reverse order.

First, then, races are fictions—the modern counterparts of witches, ghosts, and goblins—existing only in our minds, although we commonly treat them as though they were real, objective entities. But, you are probably saying, do we not see them with our eyes? Does not everyone know to which race he belongs? Well, so did our ancestors actually see witches and ghosts, and there were many who even confessed that they were witches. The five senses are by no means infallible.

This belief that races are real things is betrayed in the questions one frequently hears. How many races are there? To which race do the Polynesians belong? To which the Hindus? As well to ask, How many slices are there in a pie? Two, four, six; it all depends. Or this, On which shelf of a bookcase should one put The Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini? The assignment of people to races, like the carving of a pie or the cataloging of books, is an arbitrary affair, depending on the whim of the carver, the criteria chosen, the purpose of the classification.

The fact of the matter is that no two people are exactly alike. We differ in a great variety of ways. There are Republicans and Democrats; monogamists and polygamists; theists, atheists, and agnostics; liberals, radicals, and conservatives; idiots and geniuses. We are tall, short, fat, and skinny. Some are musical, some not. Noses are straight, concave, convex, and sinuous. Some have thick lips, some thin. Some have a good deal of pigment in the skin, others less.

Now some of these differences are obviously hereditary, others acquired, and many hard to determine. Also, some of them seem important, while others are incidental. Except for our prejudices, we should probably agree that such things as intelligence, health, and temperament are important differences, but that it matters not whether the nose is straight or aquiline, whether the hair is curly or wavy. But suppose the hair is kinky? Suppose the nose is broad and flat? Very important indeed, as far as the status of the individual is concerned; more important even than intelligence and temperament. Quite so; but only because we have arbitrarily attached social significance to these biological trivia.

The word race involves some of these differences. But not all of them. At least, it shouldn't. Yet we commonly hear almost any kind of group designated a race. There is the Anglo-Saxon race, the Slavic race, the French, the Latin, the Aryan, the Jewish, Irish, Gypsy, and Teutonic. Now these names represent quite different kinds of aggregates of people; but the elusive word race, which means almost anything, fits them all. Thus, in popular use, the word seems to refer to a group of people having anything at all in common, hereditary or acquired, biological or social. And a word that becomes so promiscuous needs to be punished—perhaps even ostracized.

If we keep it, however—and we probably shall—we should restrict its use to large groups of people who have in common, more or less, certain hereditary, non-adaptive, physical features. That would rule out as criteria of race such things as language, religion, politics, and nationality. But what about height, weight, baldness, and epilepsy? We had better rule them out too; for, although they are somewhat hereditary, they would give us too much trouble and we have troubles enough as it is. That leaves as criteria such things as head-form, the eyes, the shape of the nose, the color of the skin, the thickness of the lips, the type of hair.

Now if Nature had not jumbled our precious criteria, the problem of constructing racial pigeon-holes would not be so difficult. But Nature is impish, and she has accordingly put curly hair on the chocolate-skinned Australian, wavy hair on the black Veddha, and abundant hair on the slant-eyed Ainu. She has blessed the Nordic with the accolade of dolichocephaly, and then, Puck-like, turned around and given it to the Negro.

But that is only half of the story. What about the value of these criteria? Which is most important? Which next? If one is to classify anything, one must be consistent and not flit from one criterion to another. That is easier said than done, when one is dealing with races. Which is most important? Skin color, hair, the nose, or the skull? To be perfectly honest about it, none of them is important. They are all secondary. But we must decide which of these empty things is least empty. We must arrange them in some order—empty, emptier, emptiest.

That is precisely what the scientists have never been able to do; and for that reason hardly two of them agree as to the number and composition of the races. Thus one scholar makes an elaborate classification of twenty-nine races; another tells us there are six; Huxley gives us four; Kroeber, three; Goldenweiser, five; and Boas inclines to two, while his colleague, Linton, says there are twelve or fifteen. Even my dullest students sometimes note this apparent contradiction.

There is no such thing as a race. Perhaps I should now qualify that sweeping statement. I wish, just for a moment, that I could speak the language of philosophy. What I want to say is that races are not the kind of things that people think they are. They are not entities, but arbitrary, man-made categories. In matters of metaphysics I confess I am naive. In my innocence I take it that some things, such as the Empire State Building, are very, very real; that the Democratic Party and the Methodist Church are also real, although there is a difference; but that such things as introverts, liberals, extroverts, and morons are subjective, descriptive categories. We have constructed these pigeon-holes to suit our purposes. Races belong to this last type of reality. We have made them ourselves, for one reason or another; and in the making of them we have used the convenient but inconsequential fact that people have different kinds of hair, eyes, and complexions.

The second article of my faith is that there are no important differences between these arbitrary groups that we call races; that is, no innate differences in intelligence, temperament, physiology, artistic abilities, and the like.

Popular opinion, of course, holds that races and nationalities do by nature differ greatly. Englishmen are taciturn, Negroes musical, Italians volatile, Russians phlegmatic, Chinese passive, Hindus mystical, Jews aggressive, Indians stolid, and Irishmen witty.

Most of these impressionistic characterizations can be dismissed as so much piffle. When one comes to know the members of another race, group, or nation, one realizes the inadequacy of such generalizations. I used to believe that Scotchmen were rough, jolly, and thrifty—a nation of Harry Lauders. But after living among them for a while, I am at a loss to find any adjective that is applicable. My Scottish acquaintances run the whole gamut of personality types—from topers to teetotalers, from prigs to profligates, from sapheads to scholars. Such truth as there is in these broad characterizations of people can be adequately explained in terms of their culture, without resorting to such myths as "the national mind" or "the soul qualities of the race."

In this scientific age we insist that our prejudices be fortified with facts and figures, and we have accordingly produced a mass of data to prove we are the chosen people. The arguments usually run along these lines: (1) some races have larger brains than others; (2) some produce more geniuses than others; (3) history and cultural achievements prove the superiority of certain races; and (4) intelligence tests clinch the debate for our side.

Now if these arguments are valid, they prove also that men are superior to women. Their brains are larger, they have given us more geniuses, and historically they have achieved more. As much as I should like, however, to believe that the male is God's chosen sex, I must confess that these reasons leave me unconvinced. About all they prove is that the men have written more books.

In the matter of race, then, bear in mind that we have made the tests, using the paraphernalia of our culture; we have decided who the geniuses are; and we have set up the criteria for judging backwardness and progressiveness, invariably choosing those things in which we excel. Not only that, but we have insisted that the decision be made at this very moment, when we seem to be in the lead. Now in poker, if one persists in stacking the cards and quitting the game when he is in the lead, he deserves to be shot. In debate should the standards of sportsmanship be lower?

Anyone familiar with history knows that culture has a way of arising, accumulating, and spreading over the world with a complete and serene indifference to such matters as skin color and nose width. Our own civilization is a patchwork of elements gathered from every corner of the earth and handed down from the remote past. Most of us are only passive carriers of the culture we have inherited; it is the rare individual who makes any contribution to the social heritage. It is as absurd, therefore, for Americans or Englishmen or Caucasians to use their culture as evidence for their superiority as for Barbara Hutton to insist that the size of her bank roll proves her a financial genius.

The third doctrine of my creed concerns the function of our racial superstition, which, I maintain, is chiefly masquerade, camouflage, and rationalization.

One must admit, however, that, fiction though it be, it has done its job well. Hitler himself has said, "I know perfectly well—just as well as these tremendously clever intellectuals—that there is no such thing as race. But I, as a politician, need a conception which enables the order which has hitherto existed to be abolished; and for this purpose the conception of race serves me well." And Mussolini, echoing these sentiments, said, "Race is a feeling, not a reality; ninety-five per cent, at least, is a feeling."

A glance at the history of the word "race" will throw some light upon its function. Its actual origin is disputed by etymologists; but it did enter the western European languages late, coming into the English from the French in the 16th century, and into the German in the 18th. Originally the word was used to denote the descendants of a single person as, for example, the race of Abraham. In short, race was a word associated with the institution of the family. Now the family is one of man's oldest institutions, and a great deal of sentiment and loyalty has grown up around it. Nations, on the contrary, are very recent, not so firmly planted in our social heritage. The racial myth accordingly represents the effort to transfer to the nation the feeling and loyalty long associated with the family.

Human groups are not like herds of cattle or flocks of birds, which are held together by their gregarious instinct. People must be united by more subtle bonds—common language, a common body of traditions, symbols such as flags and kings, and perhaps best of all a common enemy. With all of these, however, it is no easy task to mold a mass of human beings into a single body. Small wonder, then, that the race myth—the superstition that a great nation of people is really one big family, with a common ancestor, with the same blood in their veins—small wonder that such an idea, coming just at the time when nationalism was arising, should be taken up so eagerly.

Not only did the race fiction fit beautifully into the budding nationalism of the period, but it was equally useful in another connection. Europeans, at the time, were going abroad conquering native peoples, robbing, slaughtering, and enslaving them. They were not satisfied merely to accept their dominance as a fact and let it go at that. From the very first they sought to rationalize and justify their conduct. Thus the Spanish had their apologists, who conveniently discovered that the Indians were really not human beings at all, but were another "race," descended from some pair other than Adam and Eve. There were other good "reasons" for enslavement, too —theological, Biblical, and pseudo-scientific. And these spread rapidly from one European nation to another, for something was desperately needed to soothe the white man's conscience.

Race has been a useful tool, not only in bolstering nationalism and in justifying our sins, but in covering our ignorance as well. Note how often in music, art, and literature, when one is at a loss to account for some strange effect, the vague myth of race is resorted to. A biographer, for example, concludes that President Roosevelt's stubbornness is due to the Dutch blood in his veins; a critic informs us that the peculiar qualities of Tschaikovsky's music are the manifestations of his Russian race; and a military expert explains the bombing of Honolulu as a consequence of the "strong strain of Malay blood in the Japanese race." And thus the authorities would have us credit them with keen biological insight.

Indeed, no other character in fiction has played so many roles, and with such perfection.

It has not been my purpose here to criticize, or to overthrow, our social structure. As a sociologist, I realize how deep-rooted are the institutions and mores of a people, and how difficult it is to try to alter them. I know, too, the futility of simple and sentimental panaceas.

The answer I do not know. I even doubt such problems have "solutions," as problems do in mathematics.

We do not "solve" racial problems—we move in directions. And there are only two alternatives. One leads to persecution, hatred, and bestiality. The other is the one I believe we Americans have slowly but hesitantly trod—the path of acceptance, co-operation, and democracy.

Born and reared in South Carolina where his forebears arrived in 1670, graduate of Yale and Edinburgh, Brewton Berry is Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Missouri.

30-Race + Race Differences

THE SCIENTIFIC MONTHLY

AUGUST, 1943

WHAT WE DO NOT KNOW ABOUT RACE

By Professor WILTON MARION KROGMAN

DEPARTMENTS OF ANATOMY AND PHYSICAL ANTHROPOLOGY, THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

We are, in this discussion, going to focus upon race and problems of race purely from a biological angle. The approach may be illustrated by an experience the writer had some dozen years ago. In 1930–31 it was his privilege to study in the Galton Laboratory of Applied Eugenics at London University. On the first day, as he ascended the stairs to a second-floor classroom, he saw on the landing-wall in front of him a huge illustration, an enlargement of a cartoon that had appeared in Punch. Two English country gentlemen were standing beside a blue-ribbon bull, and one gentleman said to the other, "We know about breeds in animals, but what about ourselves?" The theme of this discussion is, then: What about breeds in our biological selves? We shall discuss these selves not in individual, but in group terms. In a very real sense what we do not know about human biological groupings may become positive knowledge if it outlines future avenues of research. If we recognize a darkness we also recognize a need for light.

The first "don't" is simply this: we are not sure—at least we do not agree—what actually constitutes a biological race in man. In 1871 Charles Darwin, in "The Descent of Man," expressed the problems of racial classification quite clearly:

> Every naturalist who has had the misfortune to undertake the description of a group of highly varying organisms, has encountered cases . . . precisely like that of Man, and if of a cautious disposition he will end by uniting all the forms which graduate into one another, under a single species; for he will say to himself that he has no right to give names to objects which he can not define.

Darwin represents one extreme: there is but one race, the human race. One may study the literature on human racial classification and go to the other extreme, wherein no less than 150 species, each with sub-races, are postulated.

In 1735 Linnaeus, the great Swedish naturalist, gave Man the scientific name he to-day still bears—Homo sapiens (the "wise man"). Let us analyze ourselves biologically: an expanded cerebral cortex that makes of us a reasoning animal; a protracted period of infancy and childhood that enables us to be a learning animal; a facial skeleton reduced in size so that we have a physiognomy instead of a snout; a forelimb that is freed from locomotion so that a forepaw has become a hand; a spinal column, viscera, a pelvic girdle, and a hind limb, that are reasonably well adapted to an upright posture and bipedal locomotion. In this general morphological pattern all mankind is truly one: one genus, one species. In all important and major bodily details we are one—in brain, in peripheral nerves, in heart, in blood and blood vessels, in all viscera, in muscles, and in skeletal architecture.

But there do exist differences which are, as it were, superimposed upon this basic ground-plan. There are differences in skin color, in eye color, in hair color and hair texture, in head shape, in nose and lip shape, and even in limb proportions. These differences are obvious, they are external, and we have recognized them for thousands of years. On the basis of skin color, principally, we subdivide Homo sapiens into three major groups: White, Yellow, Black. Scientifically we may designate these as H. s. caucasoideus, H. s. mongoloideus, H. s. negroideus, respectively.[1] Each of these groups—in practice we often call them "stocks"—is a sub-species, and each has certain distinctive morphological features which, taken singly, are not necessarily mutually exclusive, but which, taken in combination or complex, do tend to set the groups apart. Actually, this same general conclusion applies to sub-species in lower forms as well.

So far, so good. Now let us observe one of these stocks—the Caucasoids—in greater detail. Within this sub-species, in Europe, there are groups which, originally on a geographical basis, precipitate out as more or less recognizable entities: Northwest, Central, Southwest, Northeast, Southeast. To these types—and we here use a simplified terminology—have been applied the names Nordic, Alpine, Mediterranean, Baltic and Dinaric, respectively. They fall into place in our scheme as follows:

H. s.	caucasoideus	nordicus
" "	"	alpinus
" "	"	mediterraneus
" "	"	balticus[2]
" "	"	dinaricus[2]

In this stock break-down we come, finally, to the groups that the anthropologist generally terms race; they are, in taxonomic fact, sub-sub-species, or varieties. Do they exist to-day? The answer must be a qualified affirmative; that there may be local, isolated, probably highly inbred groups of Alpines, for example, in certain Swiss valleys. Similarly there may be small regional groups of the five Caucasoid varieties we have named. But there are no peoples or nations in Europe who are pure Nordics, pure Alpines, or pure anything else. In substance, there are no pure races: there are only populations in which two or more varieties are intermixed, and that intermixture began before the dawn of European history. Therefore, what we term races in Man are poorly defined, because they are not—as in races in lower forms—homogeneous; they are intermixed, hybridized, diffused. That is why one man says "no races," the other "many races." The first is appalled at the difficulty of disentangling intermingled varieties; the second holds that secondary or composite groups warrant racial status.

The problem of mixture above mentioned—of hybridization so that "racial purity" is non-existent—renders it impossible to ascribe genetic homogeneity to the races we have set up. Suppose we took ten persons classed as Nordics (five males, five females), and ten persons classed as Mediterraneans (five males, five females) and bred within each group: we could not guarantee, and we would not expect, that the offspring would be all Nordics and all Mediterraneans, respectively. In the Nordic × Nordic we might get some short, brunet, long-heads; in the Mediterranean × Mediterranean we might get some tall, blond, long-heads. About all we might reasonably expect is that the Nordic offspring would tend more to tall blondness, and the Mediterranean offspring to brunet shortness. In other words, the groups we call races are genetically heterogeneous; they include genes that are generalized, and that are also shared more or less equally by one another.

[1] Some anthropologists feel that these merit specific ranking.

[2] There is reason to believe that these were originally variant combinations of the three preceding, basic types.

Actually, how have we in practice set up a racial classification? The first method is that of somatological inspection: we look at a group and find that, on the average, they are short, slender, dark-complexioned, long-headed, wavy-haired, and their habitat is circum-Mediterranean; thus H. s. caucasoideus mediterraneus comes into being (Italians, Spanish, southern French, etc.). The second method is by biometric analysis. Here a certain portion of an entire group —a random sample—is measured and described precisely. If mathematical investigation shows that this sample (and hence the group) is statistically homogeneous and significantly different from all other groups, then the group under consideration is termed a race. "A biometrician's concept of race in man is derived primarily from the statistical study of samples. . . . His methods are essentially descriptive and they do not presuppose any particular theory of individual or racial heredity."[3] The end result of both of these methods is the l'homme moyen, or type, the hypothetical individual who represents the averages of all the individuals in the group (e.g., John Bull, Alphonse, Hans, Uncle Sam are caricatured types of an Englishman, a Frenchman, a German, an American).

In summary, our first "don't" recognizes that the groups we call human races are, taxonomically, sub-sub-species. As in all lower forms the differences which set these races apart—at such a taxonomic level—are not clear-cut and precisely defined. As far as Man is concerned, we focus upon a relatively few apparently stable characters and then accept them as having a definitive and diagnostic value. In doing this, however, we do not diverge radically from accepted zoological princples at sub-sub-specific levels for lower animal forms generally. At species level distinctions are quite clear; below that they are dim in the haze of variability.

The second "don't" is found in the fact that we are uncertain how stocks and races arose, i.e., when in human evolution they appeared and the mechanism involved in their emergence. We are pretty well satisfied that Man, as a primitive hominid, probably arose some five million years ago, more or less, as the result of a divergence from a generalized anthropoid form which gave rise to Man and the Anthropoids as we to-day know them. But that accounts for Man as Man—how about the White Man? The Yellow? The Black? Well, we are not really sure. There are suggestive finds, but nothing more. The first White Man may possibly be seen in Galley Hill man, resident in England some 400,000 years ago; the first Yellow Man is suggested by Weidenreich to date to Sinanthropus, the man of Peking, China, of about a million years ago; the first Black Man may date to Rhodesian man in Africa, 100,000(?) years ago—certainly he was present in southern Europe at Grimaldi, some 25,000 years ago. We repeat, we are not sure of the import of these finds in terms of the time-appearance of stocks. Two things must be borne in mind: first, the finds are random and inconclusive because we do not have sufficient numbers to know range of variation; second, the characters commonly diagnostic of stock or race are those of soft parts not preserved in the fossil record.

If stocks, or sub-species, be of doubtful origin, how about races, or varieties? Here we are more in the dark than ever. We can answer only that Mediterranean-type crania are found well defined by the opening of the Neolithic, about 10,000–15,000 years ago; Nordic-type crania are reported in the Swedish Neolithic. The time element in stock and race emergence is approximate, nothing more.

Now that we have considered when they arose, let us take up how they arose.

[3] G. M. Morant, in "Race and Culture," p. 24, 1934. Royal Anthropol. Inst., London.

One of the most intriguing theories is that of Sir Arthur Keith,[4] who feels that the endocrines may have played a role: "The transformation of man and ape . . . is determined by a common growth-controlling mechanism which is residual in a system of small but complex glandular organs." As Keith surveys the role of the pituitary in acromegaly, the thyroid in achondroplasia, the adrenals in pigmentation, the gonads in secondary sex characters, he sees analogies with certain statural, osteologic, cranio-facial, skin conditions in the stocks of mankind; e.g., the big-boned, rugged-skulled Caucasoid shows a possible pituitary dominance; the flat-faced Mongoloid shows a possible thyroid dominance; the dark-skinned Negroid shows a possible adrenal dominance.[5] Keith offers these endocrine associations more as suggestions than as absolute statements. They undoubtedly exist as factors, but to-day we recognize the endocrines as so complex, so interrelated, that any statement of uniglandular dominance must be taken with tremendous reserve. The exact role of the endocrines in human evolution and in the appearance of stocks and of races is in the realm of conjecture.

In our present knowledge of human evolution we assume that sometime, somewhere, there existed a generalized protohuman or hominid species that had, potentially at least, all of the morphological characters found to-day in all of mankind. This species must have been genetically fairly homogeneous, though probably inherently variable.

From this species there arose through mutation, recombination, selection, migration and isolation, the stocks and races as we now recognize them.

The third "don't" resides in the inadequacy of our knowledge concerning heredity in Man. Specifically, we do not know the precise mechanism whereby traits diagnostic of stock and race are transmitted.

One of the most obvious methods employed by the physical anthropologist in studying human heredity is to analyze the effects of race mixture.[6] Here it is assumed that the traits that "show up" or persist in a cross are "dominant." For example, when a long-head is crossed with a broad- or short-head it is apparently the broadness or shortness that dominates; similarly, nasal breadth dominates over nasal narrowness, lip thickness over lip thinness, and so on. But all this is not genotypic (genetic constitution) it is phenotypic (physical appearance). We do not know the exact genetic pattern involved; we know, for the most part, only what the end-result "looks like." Moreover, we are observing the operation of only a dozen or so pairs of thousands of pairs of genes in Man. It is this dozen or so for hair, eyes, nose, lips, skin, and a few other traits, that we rely upon for stock and racial diagnosis; all the others are presumably constant for all groups.

Strandskov has given us an excellent summary of known gene distribution in Man.[7] Color blindness is a sex-linked recessive, with gene (cb) on the X-chromosome; color blindness is present when normal color vision (Cb) absent. Ability to taste the chemical phenyl thiocarbamide is an autosomal recessive with (T) for tasting, (t) for non-tasting. In the A–B blood groups we find inheritance by triple allelomorphs, as follows:

Blood group	Gene combination
AB	I^A I^B
A	I^A I^A or I^Ai
B	I^B I^B or I^Bi
O	ii

[4] Keith, A., "The differentiation of Mankind into racial types." Ann. Rep. Smith. Inst., pp. 443–53. Wash., D. C. 1921.

[5] About 1775 John Hunter concluded that the original skin color of Man was black, and in 1921 Keith reaffirmed that statement.

[6] T. W. Todd, "Entrenched Negro physical features." Human Biology, 1 (1): 57–69. 1929; W. M. Krogman, "The inheritance of non-pathological physical traits in Man." Eugenical News 21 (6): 139–146. Nov.–Dec., 1936.

[7] H. H. Strandskov, "The distribution of human genes," Sci. Mon., 52: 203–215, March, 1941; "The genetics of human population," Am. Nat., 76: 156–164, 1942.

In the M–N blood groups we find the following:

Blood group	Gene combination
MM	A^m A^m
MN	A^m A^n
NN	A^n A^n

Biologically the knowledge of these few genetic patterns is important because the mechanism is identical for all human beings; the inherited traits cut straight across stock and race; e.g., all blood groups and their genes are found in Whites, Yellows and Blacks, though in varying percentage combinations. It is possible that these combinations may have some value in racial distinction, just as does skin color, etc., but as far as transfusibility is concerned (allowing for blood groups) all human blood is alike.[8]

We are certain that physical characters diagnostic of race and stock are hereditary: they arose genetically, via mutations and subsequent isolation; they have been perpetuated genetically in varying combinations. We know, for example, that there is an average of "one mutation for every 50,000 individuals per generation" (Strandskov), and that most of these mutations are of indifferent or even negative survival value. The few that are positive are transmitted and over a long period of time have entered into complexes and combinations which differ from stock to stock, and within stocks from sub-type to sub-type, from variety to variety. We are slowly but surely learning the genetics of Mankind in terms of his many physical-type variants.

A fourth "don't" is really a corollary of the third, namely, we realize that discrete traits have a hereditary basis, but we are still not sure which of these traits are relatively stable and which are easily modifiable, so that the first set is useful in classification, the second extremely limited in use.

In studying problems of racial analysis Hooton[9] has outlined three categories of physical traits in Man: those that are non-adaptive, those that possess an acquired stability, and those that are easily modified. We may summarize these three categories as follows:

There are certain features which appear to act as heritable entities, either as unit characters or with multiple factors. These comprise in general hair-color and eye-color, form of hair, eye-fold, nose, lips, ear, incisor teeth and vertebral border of scapula, head breadth, face length, chin prominence and prognathism, and limb proportions, including intra-membral, inter-membral and trunk-limb ratios. These physical characters are non-adaptive, stable, fixed, and may quite reasonably form the basis of the assessment of racial distinctions. Furthermore, certain combinations of these traits, varying within natural boundaries, result in the establishment of subgroups within each major classification.

We come now to several traits which have in the course of time been functionally modified and by selection have become more or less stabilized; at least their variability is of intra-racial rather than inter-racial magnitude. Here we may include skin color, shape, size, and proportion of the malars and the palatal arch, head height and brain volume, and possibly certain calcaneo-gastrocnemic relationships. The list is small and its import uncertain; the farther we go in our study of individual growth patterns and their probable relation to presumed racial criteria the more we must allow for modifiability. It may be that the stability is spurious, merely a transitory phase in the creation of an ultimate pattern dictated by constitutional vicissitudes.

Finally, there are a number of bodily features so directly susceptible to health, diet and food habits, climatic factors, gait, exercise, occupation and other miscellaneous influences as to render them useless as racial criteria. Here must be mentioned height, weight, thoracic dimensions and proportions, nasal proportions, facial width, proportions of forearm and hand, relationship of vertebral column and pelvic girdle, and shaft proportions of femur and tibia.

It may be finally emphasized that we must, in problems of racial interpretation, pay general attention to the sum total of all bodily traits, but specific and critical attention to the non-adaptive bodily characters, for these are transmitted regardless of the multifarious and complex extraneous factors of the environment. All things equal, it is not one, not two, but the [8] It is implied in the phrases "blood-relation" or "blood will tell" that somehow blood is a carrier of familial relationship. The blood group is itself inherited, but blood, per se, is not a vehicle of genetic transmission.

[9] E. A. Hooton, "Methods of racial analysis." Science, 53: 75–81. 1926.

majority or all of the traits, in unique combination, which really constitute racial or group differences. But until we know more of the heredity of the several traits, of the effect of the growth-pattern upon these traits, we can not truly assess them in terms of non-adaptivity, acquired stability, or modifiability.[10]

For the last thirty years we have had reason to doubt the stability of certain morphological features, as in the cephalic index studies of Boas and his students, wherein significant generational differences were observed when foreign-born parents and American-born Jews and Sicilians were studied. In recent years Shapiro[11] has suggested that instability is characteristic of a majority of Man's physical racial traits. He studied three generations: (1) "sedentes," native parents born and still resident in Japan; (2) Japanese-born (of these parents) who migrated to Hawaii in their late 'teens; (3) Hawaiian-born children of these immigrants. The anthropometric battery comprised twenty-eight measurements with twenty-one derived indices and twenty-two observations. When the first two generations were compared it was found that they differed significantly in all traits measured and observed as follows: male, 72.4 per cent.; female, 67.9 per cent. As between the second and third generations the corresponding differences were 55.2 per cent. and 42.9 per cent., respectively. These differences are progressive from sedentes, to immigrants, to Hawaiian-born, but whereas between sedentes and immigrants disproportionate changes occur, between immigrants and Hawaiian-born proportionate changes are the rule. The progression is apparently a real one, relatively unaffected by age-changes or changes in occupational status. The causes of the changes are twofold: the immigrants probably constituted a subgroup of the sedentes population from which they were drawn; the new environment (of Hawaii) provided a stimulus toward change and some inbreeding intensified the variant exemplified by the immigrants. But the changes are, of course, limited in extent—the Japanese in Hawaii, as long as they marry within their own group, will always be Japanese; biologically they will not, can not, become Hawaiians, even though there might be some environmental convergence.

We now regard human races as much more plastic than we formerly did. But our concept of plasticity is basically a genetic one. There are a multitude of genes which encompass the entire range of human physical characters. Plasticity resides principally in recombinations of these characters. Recently Mills[12] has shown that there is another phase to this plasticity, an environment (diatetic) aspect. He found that vitamin B requirements (thiamin, pantothenic acid, and pyroxidene at least) are much higher in the tropic than in a temperate zone, and that growth and development are inhibited by inadequate B intake under tropical living conditions. Here is an example where growth-pattern and hence adult configuration (taken as a racial criterion) is modifiable by the food environment. We are just beginning to learn how a temperate-zone White man may possibly adjust to a subtropical or tropical habitat, but for one fact we know there are 100 questions that are still to be answered.

The fifth "don't" is found in the functional aspects of Man: we know little about the physiology of race-types. We have studied racial metabolism, pulse-rate, respiration-rate, and so on, but these analyses are not so much tests of race-groups per se as reflections of conditions under which they live. There is no reason, really, to assume difference in kind, rather only differences in degree. If we relate body-type to body-function then distinct group differences can not be expected, for body-type cuts across stock- and race-lines.[13]

[10] W. M. Krogman, op. cit., pp. 144–145.

[11] H. L. Shapiro (with F. S. Hulse), "Migration and environment." Oxford U. Press, N. Y. 1939.

[12] C. A. Mills, "Climatic effects on growth and development, with particular reference to the effects of tropical residence." Amer. Anthropol., 44: 1–13. 1942.

There is another phase of the functional problem which requires classification, viz., so-called "racial immunities" and "racial susceptibilities." For example, the peoples of North Europe are said to be prone to whooping cough, resistant to goiter and cretinism; the peoples of Central Europe fall prey to goiter and cretinism, but withstand pulmonary diseases; the American Negro succumbs to tuberculosis, diseases of heart, lungs and kidneys, and more successfully combats malaria, yellow fever, measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria.[14] Are these really racial differences? Probably not. The answer is more likely to be found in problems of relative isolation and exposure, and most certainly in considerations of socio-economic standards. There are, so far as we know, no genetico-racial biological differences in the organs which will conduce to, or inhibit, organic breakdown under the onslaught of disease. The problem, however, is still one to be explored.

The sixth and final "don't" is that we do not know of any characteristics, either biological or psychological, that in a given race-cross are superior or inferior. On the biological side there may be one exception, viz., the sickle-shaped erythrocyte which is an autosomal dominant trait (Si) found only among Negroes, to the extent of 4 per cent.

Much is being made these days of "race superiority" and "race inferiority." In words of one syllable there is no such thing.[15] One hears of the woodsman who, on a crowded city street, heard a cricket; he can be matched by the mechanic who in the turmoil of a machine-shop hears a bearing-knock in an engine four rows removed. Again, there is the savage whose keen eye sees vast distances or detects a faintly-trodden blade of grass; he can be matched by the scientist who under the microscope sees a new world in a drop of water. The ear and eye are common human possessions as far as morphology is concerned—it is the degree of their training that differs. This type of reasoning can be applied to any phase of Man's activities: how he learns and how much he learns is dependent upon his cerebrum and upon the cultural framework within which he learns; the cerebrum is the constant factor, the cultural framework, the variable. The same holds true for "intelligence," however it may be defined and assessed. We repeat that biological superiority and inferiority in the stocks and races of man do not exist, and that biologically there is no valid bar to stock- and race-mixture. The first generation hybrids are not biologically inferior—it is Society and not Nature that stamps the brand of undesirability.

In recent years German anthropologists have, as we know, advanced preposterous claims of Nordic or "Aryan" superiority (Das Herrenvolk). Such claims have no basis in fact. They have also claimed that widespread race-crossing ("race bastardization") will have a dysgenic effect ("gene chaos"), leading to various bodily abnormalities and asymmetries. This, too, is far more fanciful than real, though Fleming,[16] an English anthropologist, has found some slight evidence of dento-facial disharmonies in Negro-White hybrids crossed with Negro-Chinese and Chinese-White hybrids. But this evidence is not conclusive, for there is no guarantee that growth inadequacies rather than genes [13] F. Weidenreich, "Rasse und Körperbau." Springer, Berlin, 1927.

[14] A. Hrdlička, "Immunity as the chief task of future medicine." Lit. Digest. Dec. 9, 1933 (see p. 14); see also J. H. Lewis, "The biology of the Negro." U. of Chicago Press. 1942.

[15] Otto Klineberg, "Race differences." Harpers, N. Y. 1935. W. M. Krogman, "Is there a physical basis for race superiority?" Sci. Mon., 51: 428–434, 1940; M. F. Ashley Montagu, "Problems and methods relating to the study of race. Psychiatry, 3 (4): 493–506. 1940.

[16] R. M. Fleming, "Physical heredity in human hybrids." Annals Eugen., 9: 55–81. 1939.

are to blame, i.e., that malnourishment has not modified a genetic pattern. As matters now stand the crossing between sub-species or stocks is socially so unacceptable that only lower social strata are involved. It is precisely here that environmental impact and modification—in terms of insufficient and incorrect foods, improper hygiene, health hazards—are at their maximum. We have no adequate basis, therefore, for a true assessment and interpretation of the solely biological effects of stock-crossing. As far as we know the genetics of stocks and races, we need not, a priori, expect any biological maladjustment.

This discussion has been pretty much on the negative side—a sort of "hit parade" of scientific uncertainty with respect to race biology: we are not agreed what a race is, we are not sure when and how races arose; we do not know the precise hereditary mechanism in race; we are not sure which physical traits in race are stable, which modifiable: we do not know physiological and immunological features of race-groups; we can not assess race in terms of superiority and inferiority. In very truth we know little about the bio-genetical aspects of race.

Despite the foregoing avowal of inadequate knowledge we venture to present a definition of race that is sufficiently generalized to include the variables of physical type, heredity, environment and habitat:

> A race is a sub-group of peoples possessing a definite combination of physical characters, of genetic origin; this combination serves, in varying degree, to distinguish the sub-group from other sub-groups of mankind, and the combination is transmitted in descent, providing all conditions which originally gave rise to the definite combination remain relatively unaltered; as a rule the sub-group inhabits, or did inhabit, a more or less restricted geographical region.

Certainly the physical anthropologist is not so dogmatic about the clarity of distinction between racial groups as he once was. Indeed, there are those who would deny the existence of human races, and who advocate dropping the term entirely. If the term race is purely genetic, and if we do not know the genetic make-up (the genotype) of a presumed race-group, then it follows that we can not define the group genetically, and therefore it does not exist as a homogeneous genetic entity. This argument, as the present writer sees it, while biological on the face of it, stems more from a cultural misinterpretation of the term ("racism"), wherein race and nationalism are confused, than from considerations of presumedly diagnostic morphological characters.

There do exist certain groups which may be put into categories; i.e., there are groups which tend to precipitate out when defined by a certain physical trait-complex. The trouble resides in the fact that the trait-complex has been too rigidly defined, with too little allowance made for variability. The physical anthropologist freely admits that his classification has been based on the phenotype—the few external features used in diagnosis. We are prepared to reclassify upon the basis of the genotype—the basic genetic constituency. In both instances we will have groups called races: in the first instance—the present-day method—groups are classified by what they look like physically; in the second instance—the emerging bio-genetic method—groups will be classified by what they are genetically.

The term race as we use it today is a recognition that group differences do in fact exist. It does not imply, scientifically and biologically, a homogeneity such as demanded by geneticists. When our knowledge of human heredity enables us to classify the peoples of the world genotypically we will gladly accept that classification—we will substitute it for the one we now have. Until then, and with full and complete recognition of all of its many inadequacies, we will use the system at hand.

4/17/44

An account of an interesting project of social agency publicity people. It seems to me suggestive for other groups who influence public opinion through news about their own program.

Grace T. Hamilton

PAGES FROM A WORKSHOP NOTEBOOK

THE SOCIAL WORK PUBLICITY COUNCIL OF CHICAGO VS. RACE PREJUDICE

. . . The title tells all. With no attempt to smooth down rough edges or make a pretty job of it, we have lifted these pages bodily from the notebook in which our secretary writes the record of the Social Work Publicity Council. . . . In these notices of meetings, minutes of meetings, papers read at meetings and summaries of discussion you will find the story of our attempt - in the fall and winter of 1943-44 - to come to grips with America's No.1 problem. You will see where we failed to do some of the things we tried to do, and how much progress we made toward doing something quite different.

October 1, 1943

It all started up at Audrey Hayden's apartment, with the SWPC executive committee sitting on the floor, eating popcorn and drinking coca cola. Warren Thompson was reporting for the program committee. In the minutes of that occasion we find him proposing: "an early fall meeting which would try to answer the question of what we could do, as social work interpreters, to improve race relations in Chicago. It was the program committee's idea that this question might be answered by two speakers: a psychiatrist or psychologist might show us why we behave as we do and suggest the best approach to the problems our behavior creates; and a second speaker might suggest practical ways in which we can carry out this approach in our bulletins, pamphlets, news releases, radio programs and other media of publicity."

How neat and complete that sounds! And how perfectly impossible. Looking back over the road we have travelled it is hard to believe that we found so much courage in the "pause that refreshes." But we give you our word there was nothing but coke at that party.

Almost immediately, it became plain to the program committee that two speakers were one too many - as you will see by this invitation to our first meeting:

October 25, 1943

To the Members and Friends of the Social Work Publicity Council

WHAT CAN OUR PUBLICITY DO ABOUT RACE PREJUDICE?

Perhaps it hasn't occurred to most of us that we ought to do anything about it. Perhaps we have never thought of our bulletins, letters, and annual reports, our newspaper releases, pamphlets and photographs, as serving any wider or deeper purpose than to tell the stories of our individual agencies. Well,our program committee sees this differently. Can we really change public opinion, they ask. And if we can, have we no responsibility to speak - as individual agencies - for the whole body of social work, which draws no line of race or creed or color? And if we have, how shall we go about it?

In the hope of an answer to these questions they have secured

Dr. Mandel Sherman, M.D., Ph.D.,
Professor of Educational Psychology and Director of the Orthogenic School, University of Chicago

As guest speaker for our first fall meeting. Itwill be held in Carson Pirie Scott's Georgian Room, at 12:15 on Tuesday, November 2. Luncheon will be one dollar, not including tax and tip.

Dr.Sherman,whose most recent book is Basic Problems of Human Behavior, will help us to get at the roots of race prejudice. Mr. H. B. Law, Director of Public Relations for the Chicago Urban League, will open the discussion that will follow Dr. Sherman's talk. Please come and take part in it!

Secretary

P.S. Be sure to bring your prejudices.
P.P.S. Open meeting! Everyone welcome.

More about Dr. Sherman later. On November 15 Warren Thompson called a meeting of the program committee to decide where we should go from here. You can judge how much was accomplished by another call, mailed on

November 19, 1943

To: Members of the Program Committee, SWPC

At our meeting on November 15 (as those of us who were present know only too well) we covered a great deal of ground without getting anywhere.

As the attached report indicates, we found we had a tiger by the tail.

However, our heads - though bloody - are unbowed.

Warren has called another meeting of the Program Committee for Monday, November 29. The place is the same: Carson Pirie's Tea Room, on the Bridge. The time is 12:15.

Please try to come. And before coming, please read this report with care. You know what we hope to get out of this: a formula as simple as the little patterns that we use for persuasive speeches.

With this second invitation to the program committee we enclosed the following:

INTERIM REPORT ON

The Psychological Approach to Race Prejudice
Based on the minutes of two meetings and a great deal of contemplation, consultation and frustration

At the first 1943 fall meeting of the Social Work Publicity Council, 96 representatives of 62 social agencies met on November 2 in Carson Pirie's Georgian Room to consider the subject: How Can Our Publicity Affect Race Prejudice? As guest speaker they had secured Dr. Mandel Sherman, Professor of Educational Psychology at the University of Chicago and author of Basic Problems of Human Behavior.

In her introduction of the speaker Barbara Abel, SWPC chairman, admitted that we had chosen a large subject for this first meeting and quoted a YWCA motto: "The difficult we do at once; the impossible may take a little time." She explained that we were not declaring war on race prejudice, because war had already been declared and we were all enlisted. The purpose of this meeting, she said, was rather to consider the strategy of our attack; and since all our scouts had brought back word that Dr. Sherman was the best possible consultant we could have in such planning, we were very lucky to have him with us.

Dr. Sherman politely declined to serve as our strategic consultant, doubting if he could be of any help to us in the role and quoting P. G. Wodehouse, who once dedicated one of his books "to my wife, without whose help, love and advice this book would have been published in half the time." He agreed, however, to give us a psychologist's viewpoint on prejudice, and did it so well that his audience found the noon hour much too short. In fact, as Miss Abel brought out in her acknowledgment of his help, it was pretty generally realized that in choosing the subject for this meeting we had attempted more than could possibly be tackled in one session and that we were confronted by one of those situations in which "the impossible might take a little time."

During the following discussion Mr. Foster, of the Chicago Urban League, suggested that this might be the first of several meetings devoted to the same subject: and Mr. Thompson agreed to call the program committee together at an early date to consider Mr. Foster's suggestion.

In preparation for this meeting (which Mr. Thompson proceeded to call for Monday, November 15) the secretary was asked to write up her notes on Dr. Sherman's talk for the program committee's use. Realizing her inadequacy in this highly specialized field, she asked the speaker if he would be willing to read and correct them. He consented. The notes were written and mailed to him with a list of questions on points at which the committee felt that further enlightenment would be helpful. His reply came just in time for the November 15 meeting, at which Warren Thompson, Helen Baker, Alice Donahue, Dorothy Gray and Jeannette Townsend sat down with Mrs. Baker's notes and Dr. Sherman's comments and additions, to try and decide where we should go from here.

Very little progress was made at this November 15 meeting, but several conclusions were reached:

1. The subject is so broad and so charged with emotion that we were doubtful of our capacity to deal with it. But -

2. It is so important - especially in this war crisis - that we dared not ignore it. (Besides, we hated to admit that we had tackled something which was too big for us).

3. However, it seemed to those present that it might be possible to work out a fairly simple formula which would help us, in our publicity, to use the correct psychological approach in dealing with race prejudice; and

4. As a first step, Mrs. Baker was asked to incorporate Dr. Sherman's comments in her original notes and to have these mimeographed for the use of the program committee.

5. When this point had been reached, there was general agreement that it would be better to go no further until a full meeting could be held, since several members who could make valuable contributions were unable to be present at this one.

Your secretary has accordingly revised her outline to include the suggestions made in Dr. Sherman's letter. Corrected and amended, it reads as follows:

Summary statement: Prejudices are attitudes. Attitudes are emotionally toned, originate in emotions, are emotionally expressed, cannot be changed by intellectual education but can only be influenced by an emotional approach.

We are often misled into thinking that education changes prejudices because intelligent and educated people are better than uneducated people in concealing their attitudes.

Psychologists have made studies of the prejudices of school children, in both public and progressive private schools. In class room discussions, the pupils of the progressive schools showed much more liberal and tolerant attitudes than those attending public schools, where little attempt had been made to eliminate race prejudice through intellectual education. After school hours, on the playground, there was practically no difference between the actions of these two groups.

I. Attitudes originate in:

1. Direct imitation. Children accept the prejudices of their parents, teachers, etc.

2. Insecurities or fears. Without fear, there is no attitude. A group of students were asked to express an opinion as to whether a distant tribe of Indians should wear red or blue blankets. The uniform response was that it made no difference. They had no attitude on this question because they had nothing to fear from these far-away Indians.

3. Emotional crises experienced.

II. Attitudes are never neutral.

1. So don't try to "educate people into neutrality."

2. When dealing with the emotions, you cannot hope to achieve an "open mind" which sees both sides of a question.

3. Unless we openly support the liberal side we are - at least latently - supporting the Fascist side.

III. To change or modify attitudes, we should:

1. Create an opportunity for imitation ("set a good example") though this is more difficult with adults than with children, and is always difficult in a society in which "definite hierarchies have been established. Furthermore, the relationship between classes or groups is usually so remote that there is little opportunity for the expression of attitudes for imitative purposes." However, giving "examples" to people may shame some into behaving in a desirable way.

2. Introduce an emotional core of fear or insecurity.

3. Create a problem which results in a crisis.

4. Use propaganda (always heavily weighted with emotion).

IV. Most strong attitudes will be aggressive. To deal with aggressions we should:

1. Channelize them. Provide new outlets. (Men do this when they attend prize fights) If a group of people who are expressing their aggressions by racial intolerance can be interested in political disputes, or in general social disputes which transcend racial or nationalistic lines, they will be able to associate themselves with persons against whom they might otherwise have prejudices. While this may not be a permanent way of channelizing attitudes constructively, it nevertheless functions very well in our society.

2. Remove frustrations which cause them (change social environment).

3. Discover common motives or goals which will appeal to egocentric desires. "We cannot expect the day laborer and the rich industrialist to have common goals. Their interests and directions are usually disparate." But many common goals can be developed, providing that you don't let people know that you are trying to remove their prejudices! When working with two groups, a dominant and a minority group, the best way is to discover the problems and frustrations of the dominant majority and to interest the minority in working for the elimination of those problems. The same rule holds true for individuals. It is always more difficult to channelize the aggressions of the dominant group or person than the other.

4. Offer immediate, personal rewards. In a Russian nursery school where an effort was being made to teach cooperation, the children were given such heavy blocks that one child, alone, couldn't lift them. Their only chance for fun lay in lifting the blocks together.

V. Women have stronger aggressions than men.

1. Because they have fewer ways of expressing them. (10,000 people attended public hanging. 75% of them were women. Many carried children.)

2. So (in our propaganda) we should give women more channels for their aggressions than we give men.

VI. The strongest attitudes revolve around social problems and around controversy. So in selecting material for propaganda, do not choose non-controversial material. (Example: the mental equality of races is generally accepted. Therefore, do not try to eliminate race prejudice by producing evidence of mental equality.)

VII. How far will either our prejudices or our tolerance lead us? Where will we stop? The answer is that we will stop just before our conduct deviates from majority behavior. When under stress, minority behavior may produce prejudice; whereas in normal conditions deviation from majority behavior may produce tolerance.

But when the program committee sat down with that Interim Report on November 29 they took one look at the psychological approach and simply turned their backs on it. From that day to this, no one has even suggested trying to find a "simple formula" for putting Dr. Sherman's precepts into practice. Instead, we did a complete right-about-face, as the following letters to our delegate members will show:

December 9, 1943

To All the Members of the Social Work Publicity Council:

We hope you haven't forgotten that meeting on November 2 at which Dr. Mandel Sherman spoke on "What We Can Do About Race Prejudice." If you were there, we know you haven't! And if you were there, you will remember Mr. Foster's suggestion that we had only opened up the subject, and that we might well spend more time on it - a feeling we all shared.

Well, your program committee has held two strenuous sessions, trying to decide where we should go from here. First we sat down with the notes on Dr. Sherman's talk and tried to work out a simple formula for a sound psychological approach to race prejudice. But the subject was too big for us. Besides, we ran up against:

1. Our limitations. As publicity people, we are not a policy forming group. Many of the agencies by which we are employed are not crusading for social action, but doing other useful and constructive work. And yet we were very conscious of

2. Our shortcomings. Even in social service, where there is (presumably) no line of race, color or creed, we realized that there are quotas in camps, preferences in employment, and many other instances of something very like discrimination.

But it still seemed to us that within our limitations and in spite of our shortcomings, there are things we as publicity people can do to improve race relations. We decided to hold another meeting in January to face this situation. The date is not yet set, but we need your help in planning this meeting. Will you please send us, before the first of January, whatever information you have along these lines:

1. Any instances of racial or religious prejudice that you may have met with in a social agency. I have mentioned camp quotas and employment policies. You may know of others. We don't want this meeting to turn into a free-for-all criticism of social agencies, and will not mention any by name, but it seems important to get a fair picture of where we, ourselves, stand.

2. Examples of discriminations that have been removed, or prejudices overcome. For instance: a summer camp which didn't take any Negro girls, in the past, now admits them. A social agency which employed both white and Negro girls on its staff moved to a southern city and found the Negro girls' desks all lined up on one side of the aisle. Since the building refused to change the desks, some of the white girls moved over to that side. If policies have been changed or broadened, tell us why and how it was done.

3. Similar examples of discrimination outside a social agency - that is, among the clients, contributors, or public with which the agency works - and the solutions found, if any.

Our plan for the January meeting is to cite a number of such instances, and invite discussion about the best possible ways to meet them, without identifying agencies. Unless, of course, you wish to point with pride to some outstanding achievement in improving race relations. There will be no glamorous outside speaker to inspire (or confuse) us. This will be strictly a workshop session. Some of our own folks have studied Dr. Sherman's advice and may try to help us apply it to these problems, but the whole thing will be kept right in the family.

Your program committee has high hopes for this meeting - but it will be just as good, or bad, as you make it. If you can take the time, right in the middle of the Christmas rush, to dictate or jot down a few examples from your own experience, we are sure it will be well worthwhile. You need not sign your letter or identify your agency if you would rather not. But please use the enclosed envelope so that it will come to my personal attention.

Hopefully yours,

Secretary

January 5, 1944

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

To members and friends of the Social Work Publicity Council:

With extra-special thanks to those who answered the program committee's plea for help in collecting material for that January meeting! We were enormously pleased to get so many replies, and such thoughtful ones. There will be plenty to talk about.

So let's. The date is Monday, January 17.
The subject: Well, What Can We Do About Race Prejudice?
The place: Carson Pirie's Georgian Room - 8th floor.
The time: 12:15 sharp.
The price (alas) a dollar.
And here's the usual card.

Yours for fewer and smaller* prejudices -

Secretary

*Or perhaps, in deference to Dr. Sherman, I should say "latent or dormant."

And that brings us to January 17, 1944, when 65 people turned out for our "workshop session" at which Warren Thompson read the following paper:

On November 2, as many of you will remember, we met in this room to hear Dr. Mandel Sherman talk to the text: "How can our publicity affect race prejudice?" At least, that was the text we had given him. A better title for his talk might have been "Race prejudice as a psychologist sees it." It was a stimulating, disturbing, and challenging experience. But it didn't answer the question: "What can we, in our publicity, do about it?" When the program committee sat down with an outline of Dr. Sherman's Talk, and tried to apply it to definite cases, we simply couldn't make it fit. After two exhausting sessions we finally decided that no outside speaker, however brilliant and authoritative, could answer that question for us.

And that is all we are going to say about Dr. Sherman - except this: Your secretary took rather complete notes of his talk, which he has been good enough to correct and amplify. We had this outline mimeographed for the program committee's use, and there are six extra copies. If you missed that first meeting, or would like to refresh your minds on what was said, you may have these, while they last, for ten cents each. If more than six people want them, just leave your name and address and ten cents with Mrs. Baker and she will have additional copies mimeographed for you.

So here we are - with our question still unanswered; for the program committee finally decided that if there is any answer it must be in the minds and hearts of the people right in this room. You have all had our letter of December 9, asking for material for this meeting. Twelve of you have replied to it. Those responses had one thing in common: only one of them mentioned publicity as having any relationship to the problem! Perhaps you depended on the meeting to bring that out. We hope so. For that's what we are going to try to do. After all, this is the Social Work Publicity Council!

We saw two possible ways of conducting this workshop: The first was to bring out the problems, one at a time, and discuss each one separately. The other was to summarize all the material contained in your letters, raising questions as we went along but not answering them until all the problems were brought out. We chose this second plan because we were afraid we would never get through if we chose the first one and because we thought questions might be raised by some of the earlier problems which someone else would have answered later on if we had just saved our breath. But as you listen to the summary of this material and to the questions which you are to answer during the discussion, please keep these facts in mind:

First: There are two schools of thought on the relationship between race prejudice and publicity. Many responsible leaders of minority groups feel that the less said about it the better. They think publicity - especially broadside publicity addressed indiscriminately to the general public - merely stirs up latent or dormant prejudice and does more harm than good. Another school of thought believes that the public should have all the facts - let the chips fall where they may!

Second: But there are many kinds of publicity, and many audiences. Personal conversation is publicity, and we all know that gossip and rumor travel far and fast. A talk to a staff or board meeting, a dramatic skit, a paragraph in your bulletin or a timely song written to a popular tune may be just as good publicity as a feature story in a newspaper or a radio broadcast. Sometimes better.

So as you listen to these problems and questions, please ask yourself: first, is this a situation where any kind of publicity would be helpful - or is it a situation where actions will speak better than words? And if you think that writing or talking about it might be advisable, what kind of written or spoken words would you advise - and to whom should they be written or spoken?

Almost all of these letters began by emphasizing the fact that (whatever Dr. Sherman may say is or is not possible) great progress has been made in overcoming race prejudice and the discrimination to which it leads. One member of the program committee (who signs himself "At heart a Pollyanna") wrote five eloquent pages pleading for perspective and reminding us that, since Pearl Harbor, the U.S. Navy accepts Negro enlistments; that Negro athletes are no longer singled out for acclaim because they are Negroes but are judged by their personal ability; that Mrs. Roosevelt's resignation from the DAR because of their attitude toward Marian Anderson won widespread applause; that there was much public resentment over the Selfridge Field court martials because the court did not seem to take a sufficiently serious view of the shooting of a Negro private; that the Saturday Evening Post has recently published two articles about successful Negroes - and that none of these things could have happened (or, at least did happen) twenty or thirty years ago. Our self-styled Pollyanna believes that this progress will continue if it is not interrupted by violence, if white and Negro people will stand up together in defense of the Negro's rights and if (aye, here's the rub) we do not give publicity to such advances as the employment of Negroes on street car lines. And yet in another part of his paper he says that the Navy's change of heart is "due to the pressure of public opinion." This seeming inconsistency in his point of view raises our first question:

Q1: How was this public opinion formed, if not by publicity? If prejudice would be increased by publicity about the new policy of the surface lines, why didn't it work that way when the Navy's change of heart was publicized? Parents of white boys are, presumably, as deeply interested in these things as passengers on street cars. Or is the fear (shades of Dr. Sherman) that inspires prejudice against our new street car conductors due to the belief that Negroes may be moving into jobs which white men want? There would be no economic "core of insecurity" behind the prejudice against Negroes in the Navy. In this case the only fear would be fear of lost prestige. When prejudice is based on economic fear, is no publicity better than any publicity?

In addition to this overall summary of general improvement in human relationships, we had a number of more specific "progress reports." Here is a statement that describes a changed attitude on the part of an advisory committee responsible for the policies that guided a project in the foster home placement of convalescent children:

"When the project was established, a definite percentage quota for Negro admissions was arbitrarily set. However, when the need for extending service to Negro convalescent children became increasingly apparent, the committee abandoned the quota system and encouraged the extension of service to Negroes in the fullest possible way. The committee has gone one step further in saying that if it became necessary for the project to serve all Negro convalescent children, it would attempt to do so. Certainly this indicates a vital growth in the thinking of a service group which started out by arbitrarily discriminating and is now using all the resources of the project to serve Negro children on a basis of need, although the number of Negroes in convalescent homes considerably exceeds the number of white children, most of the time.

"One problem that has arisen in the project is the chronic shortage of Negro foster homes, which are always at a premium. Occasionally the suggestion has been made that we use white homes for Negro children. The problems here are obvious: community attitudes as Negroes visit in white neighborhoods, hesitancy on the part of white foster parents to serve Negro children, etc. But using such homes, if they could be found, would mean increasing service to Negro children.

"A thought-provoking comment came to us recently from a competent prospective Negro foster mother who explained that she and a number of her acquaintances would be glad to offer foster home care to our children if only they had the necessary space. This woman was saying to us, in effect, 'If you find some place to which I can move and have enough space to care for children, I will be glad to serve you.'"

This letter brings up a whole flock of questions, from which we will select two:

Q2: Has the changed attitude of the advisory committee been used as material for publicity - or might it be? And if so, how?

Q3: What can we all do - in our bulletins, letters, house organs or newspaper releases to improve this housing situation?

One letter points out that the Cook County Bureau of Public Welfare shows no racial discrimination in staff appointments or in the treatment of clients, including care in the Cook County Hospital and the Oak Forest Infirmary, as well as at Camp Reinberg. We note this in passing - but with no undue elation. A public welfare agency in a northern city could scarcely do less. But we also note with pleasure that the Board of Cook County Commissioners has consistently publicized this policy in its annual report, which is illustrated with photographs of Negro and white children playing and eating together at Camp Reinberg, Negro triplets at the County Hospital, and so on. And - speaking of pictures - do you remember this Hull House Year Book which uses such fine photographs of interracial activities? (Show clippings from CPW and Hull House year book.) But coming back to staff appointments at CPW - we ask:

Q4: Is the public kept informed of the non-discriminatory personnel policies of its County Bureau of Public Welfare? Could this be done by giving stories - and pictures - of Negro staff members employed in new and important positions to the newspapers?

Another correspondent voices the anxiety shared by many thoughtful people over racial discrimination in the Chicago Public Schools. "I am told," she writes, "that Sexton School, between 60th and 63rd on South Park, operated on one shift until two years ago when this was mainly a white area. Now that the area is almost totally Negro, the school operates on two shifts." And here we pause to inquire:

Q5: Have social agencies any publicity channels through which they can help to stop the dangerous drift in public education toward an intolerable Jim Crow system? Or does this problem "fall outside our area of competence?"

Here are two more success stories:

1. "The University of Chicago Elementary School has this year allowed admittance to several Negro children in the lower grades. This came about through the efforts of two mothers who were social workers and had children in the schools. They worked for a year, making contacts with every mother who had a child in school and won this privilege for the Negro children by vote."

2. "About two years ago, when our agency took on several Negro clerical workers, the building objected strenuously and went so far as to request the executive secretary to fire them as they could not be permitted in the washrooms and halls of the building. After many conferences on the subject, during which our executive secretary stood firm, the building changed its attitude and we note with delight that there are now several other offices in the building employing Negro girls. As far as the harmony within our own staff is concerned, we are happy to say that it could hardly be improved upon.

We have, at the present time, four Negro girls on our clerical staff who tell us that conditions couldn't be better. This situation, however, is enhanced by their own personalities and very great feeling of cooperation and the successful way in which they execute their particular jobs."

These are two fine examples of what we mean by word-of-mouth publicity. Do you agree that no other technique would have succeeded so well? Another example of the power of the spoken word came in a letter from the Junior League which spoke of the intense interest felt by their new members when Horace Cayton spoke on racial problems during the provisional training course. This raises another question:

Q6: Are these talks to the provisional group written up in the Junior League bulletin - if any? Could Mr. Cayton's message have been given wider circulation through the use of any other publicity techniques?

One member writes:

"As you know, USO is a cooperative effort on the part of the six organizations which include three faiths, and when I say a cooperative effort that is exactly what it has been. Although we do have separate clubs for Negroes, these are in most cases requested by the Negro men and women themselves. Negroes in all sections of the country, save the south, are welcome in any USO operation.

"In many instances you will find several USO units operated by the Jewish Welfare Board alone or by the Jewish Welfare Board in cooperation with a non-Jewish organization. There are no restrictions whatsoever as to who may or may not participate in USO activities.

"There are many instances where USO has done more in a community for Negroes than for the whites stationed there. For example in Baraboo, Wisconsin - a small town offering little in the way of recreation - USO saw to it that adequate facilities were provided for the Negro troops located there. The number of white men USO felt did not justify opening another unit.

"Also in the case of another community having no Negro residents, USO transported every weekend all last year busloads of Negro girls from Detroit to help the Negro men have the type of entertainment they like."

That's splendid, of course. But how well is it publicized? We happen to know of one perfectly grand interracial party given in a Chicago USO which seemed, to a representative of one Chicago newspaper, excellent material for a column. But the USO asked her not to write it, for reasons that were not, to her, entirely clear.

Q7: Was she right, or was the USO wise in suppressing this story?

The Boys' Court Service of the Church Federation of Chicago says:

"Since 1929 we have been interested in the colored boys appearing in the Boys' Court. Since 1938, we have had a colored worker on our staff. He was responsible for the supervision of all the colored boys referred to this agency. The number never exceeded 40 or 50 and was at times less than 25. Until the first part of this year, however, this worker supervised only colored boys. Within the past year, due to pressures of caseload as well as to a desire to come to grips with this problem of race relations, white boys were also assigned to this worker for supervision. Since we felt it desirable that colored boys be supervised by a colored worker, the number of white boys assigned to him probably did not exceed 10. We have found the experiment successful.

"In addition, this worker also spends two mornings a week in court representing this agency, receiving both white and colored boys referred by the court. This involves public relations in the court as well as with the families of the boys referred. This aspect of the work has also been successful. Favorable comments have been made about having a colored worker represent the agency."

Q8: Are we right in thinking that this is one of the situations where actions should be allowed to speak for themselves, and that the less publicity given to boys brought into court - whatever their color - the better?

But the success of the Negro case worker in dealing with white boys reminds us of several problems suggested in another letter. It comes from a school of social work and deals with the placement of Negro students for field work in both public and private agencies. There is a division of opinion among the students themselves as to the advisability of their handling white clients. There have been instances where certain districts felt that the preferences of the clients should be given first consideration; there have been situations where the client-worker relationship was so important that it seemed wiser not to experiment with interracial innovations; one public agency preferred not even to raise the question, but assigned clients to students without regard to race; and there was one instance of a white southern gentleman who "seemed somewhat taken aback" when he was assigned to a Negro case worker but was completely won over by her competent handling of his difficult situation.

Is there a case worker in the house? These client-case worker relationships are delicate ground where publicitors may well fear to tread. But we might venture to suggest - in very small voices - that in two of these cases (that of the Negro worker and southern white man, and the Negro worker who proved so successful with white boys) we have material which should somehow be shared with other workers in other agencies who face the same perplexities. Perhaps they could be written up for The Family or some other inner-circle publication; perhaps they could be discussed at staff meetings or by groups of students. Perhaps these things are already being done, and the letters merely neglected to mention it!

We received one sad little story of a nursery school in a settlement on the border between white and Negro neighborhoods. Colored children are not accepted.

Q9: Can publicity be helpful here? If so, what kind? To whom?

And one very hopeful story of Negro and white parents successfully brought together in a neighborhood discussion group because the white mothers heard that Negro mothers were interested and asked to have them included.

Q10: And what do you, as public relations experts advise an agency to do when the restaurant in the building where it is located refuses to serve a Negro board member? The writer of this letter would welcome your suggestions.

Our Girl Scouts recommend:

1. That training courses and all meetings should be held in places open without restriction to everyone.

2. Mixed camping, rallies and other meetings for the 7-18 age groups.

3. Dropping the word "Negro" when identifying a particular Girl Scout.

They cite the following encouraging incidents:

1. The election, by democratic process, of a Negro girl to represent an entire district at a city-wide meeting;

2. The election by the Scout leadership group (numbering some 200) of a Negro member to serve as president of the leaders association of the South East District.

And they look forward to the addition of a Negro staff member who will work under the same staff standards and personnel policies that apply to every person employed by the agency.

They see "a constant two-way need for more education and interpretation" of such objectives and accomplishments.

Q11. Has publicity helped to produce these accomplishments? Can it help to reach these objectives?

Our Boy Scouts tell us:

"Our national policy is that Scouting should be for all boys, and in Chicago we try to follow such procedure. Many of our troops, packs and ships are mixed, and we have a good number of units composed totally of Negro boys.

"Every religion and both races are represented on every Council policy forming committee, a point often overlooked by other agencies.

"Our camping policy has Negro boys using every weekend camp on the same basis as every other unit. Douglas district has its own summer camp in the Owasippe chain, just as the other districts do.

"So much for Scouting" this letter continues, "but in my association with some Negroes the question of membership in many agencies is opened. As one fellow asked, "Why do I have to go all the way to Wabash Avenue to attend the - - -?" of course, he knows the policy of the agency, but can't understand it.

Q12: Again - has publicity helped here? If so, how? If not, why?

Our YWCA admits Negroes to all program activities except the privilege of living in all YWCA residences. Health education classes are now open to them at the Loop, West Side and South Side Center. All education workshop classes are open to everyone. The Service Department receives applications from Negroes in Employment, Room Registry and Case Work. All YWCA clubs operate through the centers. Negro clubs of Business Girls, Industrial Girls and Girl Reserves are affiliated with the South Parkway Center, but are represented on the city-wide inter-club councils. Negroes hold office on these bodies, serve on committees, and take part according to their abilities, talents, interests and brains.

Camp Sagawau for teen-age girls has always been an interracial camp. There is a "quota system" at Sagawau, based (ideally) on the proportion of Negro and white membership in the Girl Reserves, which is one to three. But in practice it has been found to work out as a happier experience if there are 10 to 12 Negro girls in a camp of 50. However, it has run as high as 50 percent without any strain or stress.

There is more objection from parents than from girls to interracial camping. But last year only one parent cancelled a reservation on learning that it was an interracial camp. There is hardly any trouble on this score among the girls themselves.

Forest Beach Camp (for business girls) has accepted Negro girls for the past two years. There were eight last summer as against two the year before. They all had a happy time. "Camp furnishes such a normal situation for better understanding between races," the YWCA reports, "that is unfortunate that we still have so few Negro girls enrolled. For example, the injustice of racial discrimination in restaurants came home more forcibly than it would through any amount of preaching, to the girls who came to us and asked, 'We want to have a reunion in town for the gang that was in our cabin. Do you know any place we can go for dinner where they won't object to Dora's being a Negro?'"

We saved the YWCA for the last because it was our one shining example of an agency which seemed to feel that publicity had some part to play in progress toward good race relations. Discussion was the technique employed when the health education facilities in other centers than South Parkway were opened, one by one, to Negro girls. Good, frank, heart-searching honest talk about what it means to call yourself a "Christian" organization. Discussion is now going on about the policy of admitting Negro girls to YWCA residences. But written words, as well as spoken words, are used. When Forest Beach Camp decided to invite Negro campers, practically one whole issue of the Tower of B'Abel, YWCA monthly bulletin, was devoted to this new adventure in race relations. These pictures of camp life at Sagawau tell their own story of interracial fellowship. And here are two paragraphs from recent issues of the Tower which show how written words can play their part:

South Side Bus Line "How does one go about creating interracial goodwill? Can the Mayor's Committee do it, or the Governor's Committee, or the Fair Employment Practice Commission? A lot of fine organizations including the YWCA, wish they knew the answer. We tackle it every day, in one form or another, consciously or unconsciously. Sometimes we have a hunch that our unconscious efforts are best! In a fellowship like the YWCA we can, thank goodness, forget that we're doing 'interracial cooperation' and just act natural! That's how it was with three Public Affairs Committee members, one white and two Negro, who after the last committee meeting caught the same South Side bus for home. They sat together, and immediately started to hold an animated post-mortem of the meeting. At 39th Street the two Negro members got off, with a friendly chorus of good-byes. The white member felt a tap on her shoulder and turned to face a woman sitting behind her. "Pardon me," said the woman, "but are you a school teacher?"

"No, I'm not, why do you ask?" asked our surprised P.A. member.

"Well, I saw you talking to those two Negro women and I wondered why."

"No special reason, I guess," smiled the P.A. "except that we happen to be friends."

The woman looked puzzled. "Oh, I see. You mean you're just creating goodwill?"

"Why no, I - - " began our P.A., but the woman interrupted quickly,

"Don't misunderstand me. I don't see any harm in it. In fact, it's probably a good thing. But I just wondered. Do you belong to some group?"

"Oh, lots of groups!" admitted the P.A. - - and just then came 54th Street and she had to dash for the door!

"MAY I HELP YOU?" "Query to a State Street shopper: If one day as you leaned wearily against the hosiery counter and tried to catch the cagey eye of an overworked saleswoman - if at that moment of frustration and desperation a young Negro saleswoman stepped up and said 'May I help you?' - - how would you feel about it? Would you resent, or would you rejoice?

"Well, you may get a chance to decide. The Women's Division of the Urban League is setting in motion a united appeal to State Street department stores to start employing a few capable and well qualified young Negro women as salesgirls. The YWCA is one of many civic organizations to endorse the project. The reasons seem rather obvious. There's the matter of democracy, for instance, which promises all people a chance to work at the tasks for which they are fitted. There's the matter of the current labor shortage, acutely felt by the stores themselves who are in an unprecedented fashion appealing for women workers, full time or part time, young or old, experienced or inexperienced, married or single, and it would almost seem, dead or alive. There's the matter of experience which has tested Negroes out in many new fields of work and found them highly satisfactory.

"If you think that this movement has in it elements of fairness, common sense, patriotism and public service than you can help it along by simply letting department store officials know how you feel about it. They are terribly afraid of you, as a consumer. They tremble and grow pale and mutter. 'The customers won't stand for it!' Well, you're a customer, and if you will not only stand for it but welcome it, you'd better say so! You may be sure that the people who won't stand for it will say so. They will write vehement letters of protest to store managers and to the State Street Council; they will enclose bitter notes when they pay their bills. Well, the other kind of people can write other kinds of notes, stating their own sincere convictions, and expressing sympathy with commendation of any courageous step the stores may take. How about it?"

The January issue of the News Letter of the Council of Social Agencies also carried an item about this project of the Woman's Committee of the Urban League. If every one of our bulletins mentioned it we could make a sizeable dent in public opinion.

In addition to the progress and problems brought out in these letters, we have had two suggestions. One called our attention to the power of words in building good public relations. The writer illustrated her point by reminding us how the use of such words as "injun" or "Squaw" can color the reader's thinking about Indians. There is a world of difference, she feels, between "Negro child" and "colored child." One has racial dignity. The other implies inferiority. We hope you notice how carefully we have followed her advice in this paper! She suggested that Dr. Hayakawa, author of Language in Action is a fine speaker and might bring interest and value to this group.

It was also suggested that someone from the Round Table of Christians and Jews might be asked to take part in this meeting. But since we had promised you no glamorous outsiders, we lay those two ideas in the lap of your program committee for future consideration.

Before we begin answering these questions, the program committee would like me to voice its heartfelt thanks to those of you who took the time and thought, right in the middle of the Christmas rush, to send in material for this meeting. We think you must have been listening to the Christmas message of good will to men. It gives us reason to hope that, together, we may find the answer to a final question which really includes all of these. We found this in the Woman's Press for September, 1943, in an article called Keys to a New World, by Abbie Graham:

Patient research and American ingenuity have duplicated or improved on scarce natural products . . . "The chemists are finding the molecular keys to a new world of physical astonishments.

"But I doubt sometimes that human beings will be able to qualify for living in that world . . .

"The chemists did not seek rare substances for the building of the new Chemical Order but used the ordinary materials about them - water, salt, air and hydrocarbons . . . By such discoveries have they helped to solve the problems of shortages in essential materials.

"We must make similar strides in solving the shortage problem in the spiritual area of human relationships. We have a shortage now in many essentials: good will, cooperativeness, magnanimity, basic trust in men and nations, belief that good is stronger than evil, that truth will win over lies and deceit, that love is more satisfactory than hatred. Can we tackle this problem of spiritual shortages with the openmindedness, the intelligence, the ingenuity and patience of the scientist, and can we work at great speed in every community in every family, every human relationship? Can we redesign human conduct, even as they have redesigned the molecule?

" . . . We can see the need of rubber for tank tires, of gas for airplane engines. . . . But do we see the spreading poison of racial misunderstanding in America?"

* * *

Of course, no one really expected the discussion which followed that paper on January 17 to provide answers for all those questions in the span of a noon meeting. In fact, some of them were inserted just to make us think, without hope of an immediate answer. However, we did get very good discussion on one or two points; and on February 7 the program committee met again to tackle the questions which there had been no time to discuss at the larger meeting. Instead of giving you a verbatim record of everything said at these two meetings, the secretary was instructed to summarize both discussions, condense and reword the questions, and wind up this paper with some highly tentative answers, which would represent our majority thinking. This summary, which was finally put into words on March 1, 1944, represents 5 months of fairly consistent effort on the part of the Chicago SWPC to answer to the one broad question with which we started: "What can we do, as social work interpreters, to improve race relations in Chicago." We know that it is far from complete and we realize how right our chairman was in warning us that "the impossible may take a little time." But we are convinced that this experience has been good for us, and want to share it with everyone who is as anxious as we are to help in the solution of "America's No. 1 problem." So here are our

CONCLUSIONS:

Q1: Are there times - particularly if we are dealing with prejudice based on economic fear - when no publicity is better than any publicity?

A1: Generally speaking, No. If we could control all the publicity on both sides of the question, there might be times when it would be better not to publicize certain tensions or issues. But in a democracy, (in which we believe) this is impossible. We will never get a blackout. The other side will always talk. So we must have answers - and we might as well get them out into the open before the opposition speaks its piece. However, we must be wise and wary. Timing is important. Now, for instance, it is easy to get people to admit that every man has a right to a job. Later, it may not be so easy. Focus is important. Aim your publicity at the man who is prejudiced, using arguments that will remove his fear. Inform yourself of everything that is being done to ensure jobs to demobilized veterans; of everything that organized labor is doing toward equality of opportunity. Remember that when there is a loose and huge labor market Negroes are often employed to reduce wages. Take the trouble to find news worthy stories which papers will be glad to print. Use pictures that create confidence and goodwill. (Examples mentioned in discussion were the pictures of a good looking, smiling Negro bus driver used in the Sun and a pretty Negro girl employed to read meters which made the Tribune.) Back up your arguments for the employment of Negroes with evidences of former success ("This is being done in such-an-such an establishment. I asked the manager how it worked, and he said everything was fine.") Remember that progress doesn't stay put, so talk now - while the talking is good. If we seize this opportunity, some of the gains we make will carry on.

Q2: What can we do to improve the housing situation?

A2: Get the facts from the Metropolitan Housing Council. Go and see for yourselves. Then tell the story however and whenever you can - in your bulletins, reports, talks and newspaper releases. Many people simply do not know how terrible these conditions are. Is the population density of one south side area greater than that of Calcutta? (One member of the program committee thought so.) Arm yourself with such ammunition, check its accuracy, and use all your skill to make people care about it. Report all violations of city ordinances to the Metropolitan Housing Council.

Q3: How can "success stories" like the good personnel practices of the Cook County Bureau of Public Welfare, the change of heart on the part of the Advisory Committee for Foster Home Placement of Convalescent Children, the success of Negro case workers with white clients and the progress made by the Girl Scouts and the YWCA be used in our publicity?

A3: They are the best possible answers to people who say it can't be done. Some way or other, we should inform each other of these things, so that we may all be ready with such answers. (The News Letter of the Council of Social Agencies will be glad to use them.) Some of these examples of progress would have been excellent answers to Dr. Sherman, if they could have been brought out at our first meeting. And remember that publicity begins with public opinion among the staff and board members of our own agencies, where it is often more diversified than we think.

Q4: What can we do about "Jim Crow" trends in our community - in the schools, in housing, in restaurants, and so on?

A4: We can inform ourselves of them, use them as background material whenever we can, work against them as individuals and refer them to the community agencies set up to deal with them. The Round Table of Christians and Jews works very closely with the schools, and is anxious to overcome racial as well as religious prejudice. The Committee on Racial Equality is working hard against discrimination in public eating places. The Mayor's Commission on Racial Equality might be interested. There are laws that we ought to know about - city ordinances, state and federal laws. A suit against the Pullman Company was recently carried to the U.S. Supreme Court, where it won a favorable decision. Has anyone made a simple digest of local, state and federal law on racial discrimination - like the one that the Illinois Child Labor Committee has made of the laws governing the employment of children? If so, the Social Work Publicity Council would be glad to know about it. When somebody makes a good speech on community conditions before a social agency, (like the one that Horace Cayton made before the Junior League Provisional Course,) squeeze every bit of publicity juice out of it. Write it up in your bulletins, send releases to the papers, write letters to Vox Pop, tell your family, tell your friends. This is just "rootine" - as the murder stories say.

Q5: Was the USO justified in suppressing the newspaper story about the interracial party?

A5: In discussing this point at the delegate meeting on January 17, someone said it depended on whether the story was, or was not, news. It was then brought out that this incident occurred when This is the Army was playing in Chicago. One of our USO Clubs called Irving Berlin on the long distance telephone before the show arrived and offered to give a party for the cast. Mr. Berlin accepted with pleasure, provided the Negro members of the cast would be as welcome as the white boys. The USO hastily found the requisite number of Negro hostesses, invited an interracial group of sponsors, and put on a highly successful party. In the opinion of our meeting, that party was news. If you disagree, we shall be glad to know why.

Q6: What about giving publicity to the success of the Negro case worker with white boys in the Boys' Court?

A6: In our opinion this is an inner-circle story for case workers. We do not think anything would be gained by broadcasting it to the general public - not because of the racial angle, but because too much is already being broadcast and written, over the radio and in the newspapers, about juvenile delinquency.

Q7: What kind of publicity might have induced the day nursery on the borderline between white and Negro neighborhoods to accept colored children?

A7: This seems to us the perfect example of a case in which pooling experience might be helpful. If someone - perhaps a board member, or even one of the mothers intimately connected with this day nursery - knew what the University of Chicago Elementary School had accomplished by calling on every mother who had a child in the school, and how happily the experiment was working out, the same kind of education-by-word-of-mouth might be tried.

Q8: How shall we write up these items in our agency bulletins?

A8: Read the two examples quoted in our paper from the Tower of B'Abel, and do your best!

Q9: What about pictures?

A9: Whenever possible, use photographs of Negro and white people working and playing together. The Council of Social Agencies has a small file of examples of such publicity, and would welcome additions.

Q10: How can we help to prevent violence when racial tension becomes unbearable?

A10: We believe that all these suggestions will help, if they are followed. And when we cannot prevent it we must try to understand its causes, and explain them without fear. It is a symptom of rapid change, which always meets stubborn resistance.

"You see me not while justice keeps its seat.
While right is on its throne I stand on guard -
Or go my way upon my myriad feet -
In peace I go, until my way is barred.

"A thousand years I'm silent, under wrong;
Then choose some outcast man to be my head,
From out the gutter I catch up a song,
And round me, when I rest, the land is red."

We hold no brief for violence. We know that it destroys many years of patient building. But violence is loose in the world today, and it may stike anywhere. It is also "later than we think." We must hope that it is not too late, and work together for justice and goodwill toward men.

Additional copies of this WORKSHOP NOTEBOOK may be purchased for 10 cents from the SOCIAL WORK PUBLICITY COUNCIL OF CHICAGO
343 South Dearborn Street
Chicago 4 Illinois

1944

The Challenge of Race

RACE AND HUMAN NATURE: AN ANTHROPOLOGIST'S VIEW

By ROBERT REDFIELD

WORLD IMPLICATIONS OF RACE

By CHANNING H. TOBIAS

FOREIGN MISSIONS CONFERENCE OF NORTH AMERICA
156 Fifth Avenue
New York 10, N. Y.

Robert Redfield, Ph.D., is Professor and Dean of the Division of Social Sciences of the University of Chicago. He was an ambulance driver in the American Field Service in 1917. As research associate of the Carnegie Institution of Washington from 1930 to 1942 he carried on research in ethnological and sociological field work in Yucatan and Guatemala. He is a member of many learned societies dealing with the Aztec sciences and is the author of works upon the Aztec and Maya civilizations.

Channing H. Tobias, B.D., D.D., has long been prominent in the work of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association. He has served as senior secretary of the Colored Department since 1923 and has traveled broadly throughout Europe and other parts of the world in attendance upon international and interracial conferences and in connection with the war relief service of the Y. M. C. A. In 1940 he was appointed member of the National Advisory Committee on Selective Service and in 1941 on the Joint Army and Navy Committee on Welfare and Recreation.

These addresses were delivered at the Jubilee Meeting (1944) of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, Chicago, Illinois.

RACE AND HUMAN NATURE: AN ANTHROPOLOGIST'S VIEW

ROBERT REDFIELD

In the troubled affairs of men race is of consequence because of what men think and feel about it and not because of anything that race is of itself. This is the cardinal fact. There are physical differences, great and small, among men, and these differences enable the scientist to make a classification of mankind according to these differences. But we do not know that there are corresponding mental differences. If the small differences in brain anatomy as between Negroes and whites which some investigators have reported are in fact there, it does not follow that such differences represent inherent differences in intelligence. There may be such differences. We do not know that there are. There are reasons for doubting that there are. The biological composition of all populations is so varied that all kinds of personalities and abilities are found among them, and the statistically demonstrable physical differences that do exist are not known to constitute inherent limits on behavior. If there are important biologically determined differences in temperament or intelligence among racial groups, that fact is still to be established; in the meantime it is clearly important to take account of race as a social, a cultural, phenomenon.

A leading student of race declares that race "is purely a biological grouping. The term has its origin in biology and never should be used in any other sense. Racial characters are carried by the germ plasm, but language, religion and nationality are individually acquired." Let us not misunderstand these statements. They are true. They say what has to be said about race as seen by the biologist. They do not say what has to be said about race by the sociologist. It would indeed make for clarity if race should never be used except in a biological sense. But the term is popularly used to describe cultural and political and linguistic groups. This use is a fact too. The prejudices and other attitudes that attach to race are facts also. They are facts in the realm of culture. They are the facts of which account must be taken in understanding the place of race in human affairs. The people known as Jews differ so much in physical features from one another and resemble so much in physical features people who are not known as Jews that the anthropologist and the biologist tell us that the Jews are not a race. They are not. That is one fact. It is also a fact that people have conventional collective judgments about people known as Jews and associate their beliefs about Jews with real or imagined physical characteristics of Jews. This is a fact too. It is a fact of such immense importance that it would be impossible justly to write the history of our western world without frequent reference to it. The Jews are not a race, but they constitute a group believed to be a race, and no amount of repetition of statements of the first fact will do away with the second and vastly more important fact.

Therefore, I say that understanding of the importance of race is to be found not in man's physical nature but in his human and social nature. What are the characteristics of that nature which give rise to the social consequences of race? In the first place it is human nature to feel oneself a member of a valued group set off from other groups of less value. In the clans of primitive society, in boys' gangs, social classes and modern nations we see the disposition of mankind to classify in accordance with the sentiments of loyalty to one's own kind and of disapproval or hatred of other kinds. We note further that the disposition to depreciate groups not one's own is in most cases selective in that one or a few other groups become special objects of depreciation or aggression. One such specification of the out-group sentiments is directed toward the people near one but who differ from one's own group only in small degree.

Referring to the feuding and ridicule between Spaniards and Portuguese, between English and Scotch, Freud observes that such sentiments represent "a convenient and relatively harmless form of satisfaction for aggressive tendencies through which cohesion amongst the members of a group is made easier." Freud then goes on to remark with fine irony that the Jewish people, scattered as they are, have rendered services which deserve recognition to the development of culture in the countries where they settled, but that it is unfortunate that not even all the pogroms and massacres of history have been sufficient to give a peaceful integration to Christian societies. For while upon certain groups fall only the aggressions of their neighbors, others become scapegoats to all the world. At least this has been the historic rôle of the Jew. We assure ourselves of the worthiness of our own people by declaring the unworthiness of other people. In aggression against others there is a basis for solidarity among ourselves. And when that solidarity or security is threatened there is in the need of the group to restore its security a special cause for the casting of blame upon some convenient group. If the group is already defined by tradition as a proper object of aggression, as in the case of the Jew, it is so much the easier to commit new aggression against them.

For men take the paths of least resistance in thinking and feeling, as they do in walking through a wood, and these paths are those trodden by men who went before them. We do not, on the whole, make the effort to form our own independent judgments. We take over the judgments arrived at by others. We attach our sentiments to the customary objects of attachment. The extent to which this is true escapes us, attentive as we are to those few cases—our wives, children and chosen intimates—in which our own special and personal experiences play a large part in the organization of our sentiments. The truth is that to a great extent we rely, for the placing of our feelings and judgments, on the convenience of categories. It is an aspect of our nature that we see experiences, including people, as divided into classes. This way of behaving is useful, as any energy-saving device is useful. It saves effort to respond to categories rather than to individuals; there are far fewer of them. To have prejudices saves thought, and thought costs effort. Moreover, an established prejudice is motivated by the sentiments; it is ready to authorize action; it exhibits none of the hesitating which distinguishes reflective and critical thinking. The Nazis make a virtue of prejudice; they think, as they put it, "with their blood."

Before speaking of the plainness of race and its special authority, it is well to remark that race is not the only convenient basis upon which to classify mankind into our people, who are good, and other people, who aren't. Custom and culture are more nearly universal criteria for distinguishing the undervalued outsider from the overvalued insider. It is an anthropological commonplace that most tribes refer to other tribes by contemptuous epithets, and that each people tends to regard itself as the only really civilized group on earth.

Since the development of the world religions, religious differences have motivated as much cruelty and bloodshed as has race. Indeed, in many cases it is not possible always to declare the extent to which the out-group is defined in racial terms. Race, culture and religion enter into the definition of the Jew in varying and perplexing ways. Between the anti-Semite who thinks that Jews are born to be a slave-race and the anti-Semite who thinks the Jews smart but no smarter than others, have built up a dangerous international conspiracy and should be suppressed for that reason, there are differences, but they are not greatly important differences. It is today urged that Americans of Japanese ancestry should be locked up, or deprived of their citizenship, or sent to Japan, sometimes upon a racial argument and sometimes upon a cultural argument. "Show me a man with one drop of Japanese blood and I will show you a traitor," one United States Senator declared recently, but others content themselves with declaring that no person of Japanese origin can be a good American because all Japanese worship the Mikado and presumably anybody born here of Japanese parents has taken over the custom, to his eternal perdition. The racial element in group prejudice is often unclear and mixed with other elements.

Nevertheless, in the prejudging of men by other men, race has a special and a double importance. In the first place, race—this obvious color of the skin, this unmistakable contour of the eyelid, this unchangeable thinness or thickness of the lip—makes easy and often certain the classifying of individuals in the accepted categories. The distinction between the faithful believer and the heretic or the infidel has been in some societies and at some times a social classification of prime importance, but then it has not been easy to tell the heretic from the nonheretic at a glance. One can, on the other hand, tell a Negro from a white person at a glance. At least it is true that you can tell the one from the other in such a large majority of the cases that the assigning individuals to accepted categories goes on easily and swiftly. The doubtful cases do make difficulty, as in the occasional individual who is socially a Negro although in appearance a white man, and in the small rural minorities in Delaware and elsewhere who, descended from a mixture of Indian, Negro and White, resist classification as either Negro or white. But these doubtful cases prove the strength of the categories, for other men and women in communities where such doubtful individuals or groups occur seem to demand a solution of the problem in the assignment of the doubtful case to the one racial category or the other.

The school system, the Jim Crow practices, the very customary logic of the American's mind, call for a resolution of such ambiguities. They should not be there; they upset the system; in this country every man must be either a white man or a Negro. In some societies the problem is met by the development of intermediate categories defining marginal groups. In our own society, so far as the Negro is concerned, the tendency has been to adhere to a simple system according to which the customary single drop of Negro blood is enough to make a man a member of the inferior category. Race, in the sense of a visible physical evidence of a biological difference, is here the single guide to the principal social category. In Bahia, Brazil, on the other hand, one drop of Negro blood is of no significance, and even a great many drops have only the effect of suggesting an inferior social position for that individual, a suggestion that can be overcome by education or personal success.

The emphasis upon race, in the sense of real or supposed difference in blood, as the prime basis for setting off the best people from the less good or the worst, is probably a fairly recent development in the history of man's inhumanity to man. It lends itself well to this human tendency to separate the superior sheep from the inferior goats by virtue of the durable visibility which it gives to the members of the class. Race "works," as a mechanism of social categorization because the racial mark is there to stay. It can't be changed as can a Cockney accent or a pagan religion. The Nazis had a little trouble with the application of their racial doctrines to Jews and to Poles, the distinguishing visibility being low, so to speak; so they came to require these hunted helots to wear labels of one kind or another on their costumes. We do the same thing, in effect, when we accept the racial stereotypes in cartoon or moving picture. We, too, have our second-class citizens with second-class rights, and although these fellow-Americans are for the most part visibly brown in color, we reinforce the definition of their inferior position with a thousand practices and social gestures. A simple device is to label one door "For Negroes" and another door "For Whites." Segregation, imposed by the dominant, amounts to the imposition of stigmata of inferiority. These symbols of our collective prejudices emphasize and amplify the meaning given to the racial mark.

For many years scientists have looked for conclusive evidence that black men or yellow men are born different in intelligence or ability from white men, and today they still lack proof of such difference. Yet white men believe that such differences exist. They believe that black men or yellow men are inherently different or inferior in part because such a belief is an apparent justification for the prejudice they feel and the injustice they commit. To deceive our consciences we invert the truth. We say that we treat the Negro as inferior because he is inferior. The truth is that we think the Negro to be inferior because we treat him as inferior. It is the act that is the father of the thought. What really lies in the social order, for which we are responsible, we push off into the biological order, for which we are not responsible. What is in the biological nature of man is there to stay, and is none of our business. Science, a false science, becomes the mythology of the modern man. It must be true, so we think, that Negroes' skulls close early upon their brains, for we treat Negroes as if that were the case. It is not the case, and every competent student knows it to be untrue. Nor is it true that the Negro is necessarily handicapped by the fact that Africa is only a few generations behind him. If this were true, then it would be true that the descendants of Englishmen would be handicapped as compared with Greeks or Egyptians by the fact that barbarism is only a few generations behind them. A child of one skin color starts even with a child of any other skin color, if you let him. We don't let him, and we entertain a false biology which seems to justify us.

I will speak here of how the conceptions we entertain as to race, like the conceptions we entertain as to anything else, may work for integration and high morale or for disintegration and low morale. If our ideas as to race are the same as those shared with others of our group, and are consistent with the other ideas of the group, then, for that group, ideas as to race will make for solidarity and confidence. I have spoken of the tendency of primitive tribes to regard themselves as true men and everybody else as something less than men. This works well enough in a state of society in which every people is more or less hostile to every other, in which each little group subsists on its own independent efforts, and in which no doctrine of universal brotherhood has appeared. In such a small society it is a source of strength to hate the enemy, and to believe oneself superior to the enemy. The enemy is all outside, and all one's own people are inside.

That is not the case today. Although we fight a national war, some of the enemy are inside the nation; some of our friends are in enemy countries. Today we need the help of half the world, or more, to live in the manner to which we are accustomed. Today we send our brothers to die in the name of principles of living which apply, in theory, to all men. So today an in-group sentiment defined in racial terms works for disintegration. Race prejudice and discrimination provides a categoric principle in conflict with other major categories by which we live. It is a great divisive fracture across the life of today. It is a sword we turn against ourselves.

Today the great divisions among men are the divisions into nations. More than any others, these divisions play the rôle played in primitive society by tribal groupings; more than any others, these divisions make for war. Yet it is no help to a people fighting a national war to entertain principles or to carry out practices of racial inequality. For the races against which we discriminate are within our nation. Racial inequality is a denial of national solidarity. It is a waste of resources and an act of social disintegration. A ship must be built; welders are needed; an available welder is not hired because his skin is black. In this way we not only waste the welder's labor, but also impair the moral strength of Americans. We deny the welder full solidarity with us, who fight beside him, and we deny ourselves full solidarity with him, who fights beside us. The bitterness that today grows in American Negroes is matched by the growing shame of white men. A people do not fight well who have bitterness and shame.

It is not even true to say that racial prejudice, directed against our present enemies, is a contribution to the fighting strength of America. We cannot hate our enemies as racially apart from us without applying the same prejudice to those who are not our enemies. Our prejudice against the Japanese has run from one extreme to the other. When they defeated the Russians two-score years ago the Japanese enjoyed our high favor as a wonderful little people. Today they are the grinning ape-men, beast-like and treacherous. In so far as we now think of them as bad because racially different from us we find ourselves, by the same prejudice, condemning our fellow citizens of Japanese ancestry, the Oakland and Seattle high school boys and girls whose fathers and mothers were born in Japan, and denying them the right to enter our communities, to room in our lodging houses, to study in our schools. And on the other hand our long-standing prejudices against the Oriental kept us, until a few weeks ago, from granting the right of naturalization to our Chinese allies. Men fight as nations, and our nation is made up of all races. Therefore we cannot define our enemies in racial terms without injuring ourselves.

But the essential weakness that follows from racial inequality follows from the inconsistency between the ideals we profess and the racial discrimination we practice. A people that profess one way of life and act another is a people without integrity as such a man is a man without integrity. That is our case. We claim a leadership of the free peoples of the world, and we deny full freedom to some of our fellow citizens because of their race. We are the apostles of democracy, and public affairs are kept in the hands of a racial majority. We celebrate the Bill of Rights as a charter of liberty, and while we celebrate that document we deny some of these rights to fellow citizens because of race. In a well-integrated society the goals for living are consistent with the institutions and practices of the people. In our society, in large part because of the social consequences of race, we speak one way and act another.

On whose side are we fighting in this war? Do we propose to help in enforcing justice for disadvantaged racial minorities in other lands? If we cannot give justice to such minorities in our land, shall we then be able to do so abroad? On Christmas eve the President told us that the doctrine that the strong shall oppress the weak is the doctrine of our enemies. It is the doctrine and the practice of our enemies, but it is, to a significant extent, also the practice of ourselves. What becomes of the integrity of a people who deny, yet practice, a doctrine of their enemies? Can we assume responsibility for the enforcement of justice in Asia when we do not enforce it in Atlanta or Detroit? Shall we continue to send missionaries abroad to acquaint distant people with a religious and ethical doctrine in large measure belied by the missionaries' fellow citizens in the homeland?

For racial inequality contradicts major principles that we have embraced. The disintegrating effects of the social consequences of race go far beyond the effect on the fighting strength of the nation. Even in a time of war when men fight by nations and plan the peace through alliances of nations, there is a tendency to modify the national alignments by alignments that are individual and moral. A German national is on our side if he hates Nazism and shares our principles. We know that many Italians do not share Mussolini's views and we treat Italians accordingly. We search for the signs of political democracy in Russia and we look into the face of China for the reflection of our own ideals. Though nationalism may long divide us, though wars may continue for many generations, nevertheless, we continue to grope for a moral order that will embrace the world. And across all these persistent, resurgent, ecumenical conceptions, across the idea of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth and the conception of a democratic world-order, lies racial inequality.

To the anthropologist the rising acuteness of the conflict between world-embracing principles and racial discrimination is an aspect of a society in process of reorganization. It is the nature of human society for its conceptions and institutions to adjust themselves to one another. Over long periods of time consistency rather than inconsistency is the rule. Cultures and civilizations are such in so far as the ways of life which make them up form a coherent way of life. As Sumner said, there is a strain to consistency among the folkways. Two immediate circumstances make the present inconsistencies difficult to maintain. One is the making explicit of our ideals forced upon us by the war. We find ourselves declaring, very loudly, many faiths we aren't living up to. The other is the increasingly apparent interdependence of racial and minority problems throughout the world.

When the Tokio radio takes up our race riots and makes propaganda weapons out of them within a few hours after their occurrence, when a Marine in the Solomons writes home to California his indignation that his fellow Californians are organizing to keep all persons of Japanese origin forever away from the Pacific Coast, only to stimulate a demand by the organizers that the distributors of the letter be investigated as subversive, when State Department-invited visitors to the United States from a Latin American republic are Jim-Crowed in a southern state, when a thousand such occurrences take place and are made widely known—then it becomes clear that unless it adopts a stringent isolationism and a reactionary ethics, this country cannot reach an adjustment between its ideals and its practices without reference to the rest of the world. To achieve a new integrity, we must work out a race policy and practice that will make coherent sense to ourselves when we state it and that will command the confidence of other free peoples everywhere.

WORLD IMPLICATIONS OF RACE

CHANNING H. TOBIAS

Any plan for the future peace of the world that does not include race relationships as a major consideration is not only lacking in realism but destined to failure from the beginning. It is therefore encouraging to note that this Conference, composed of representatives of the principal mission boards of the Protestant churches of the United States and Canada, is giving such a conspicuous place on its program to this subject.

I suppose that about as good a way as any to begin what I have to say is to relate an incident that happened five months ago. I was at dinner with a party of friends at the home of a nationally known editor and publisher. In the party were a prominent public relations expert and a political leader of international fame. In the course of the discussion of the evening, which was on the American Negro race problem, the public relations expert said that he felt that Negroes should not run the risk of antagonizing white sentiment by insisting upon certain rights that white people were unwilling to accord to them, to which I made the following observation: "Mr. Blank, you seem to assume that the power of life and death that white people now hold over the colored peoples of the world will continue for all time to come. You may be right, and then again you may be wrong." Before the public relations expert could reply, the political leader said: "I can tell you exactly how long it will be—until the Far East becomes mechanized, no longer." This was just another way of saying that the one billion people of color, constituting two-thirds of the population of the earth, would endure the overlordship of white people only until they could acquire the implements that have given white men their power.

I am certainly not one who believes that world peace can be realized by having power wrested from one racial group and placed in the hands of another, nor do I go along with those who predict a forthcoming race conflict so colossal and universal as to threaten the existence of mankind on the earth. But I am absolutely certain that there will be trouble down the road if the victorious nations, following this war, insist upon holding unbroken the ring of white dominance that now encircles the darker peoples of the earth.

Unfortunately this seems to be the present intention of the leaders charged with the main responsibilities for the making of the peace. The great Winston Churchill, to whom we all pay tribute for keeping hope alive in the hearts of the people when Britain faced the darkest hour of its history, leaves us in no doubt as to his position. He is confessedly an imperialist of the most pronounced Victorian rootage. The ink was hardly dry on the draft of the Atlantic Charter when he made his report to the House of Commons, and, when asked the question if he meant that the principles of the Charter should apply to India and the colonies, replied substantially as follows: "I have not become the King's first minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire. We shall hold what we have."

He was consistent in saying this because previously he had said: "Sooner or later you will have to crush Gandhi and the Indian Congress and all they stand for." Physically this has been accomplished, for Gandhi and Nehru are in prison. The closing of the Burma Road twice, the refusal to permit Chinese troops to defend the Burma Road, and the refusal of permission to China to develop its own air force present further evidence of a rather firm determination on the part of the imperialist members of the Allied Board of Strategy that the participation of weak or subject peoples in the war shall be kept on a basis that will get all possible help from them without raising foolish hopes of independence and freedom for themselves.

As I recall the published reports of the Cairo meeting of Churchill, Roosevelt and Chiang, the terms agreed upon referred exclusively to demands that would be made upon Japan. There were no references to the future status of Hongkong and French Indo-China, the presumption being that they would be returned to the nations that held sovereignty over them before the war. But even that presumption was not sufficient to satisfy the great elder statesman of the British Empire, General Smuts, who, in what he thought to be an off-the-record interview, expressed great dissatisfaction that Chiang Kai-shek should be brought into a conference on terms of equality with Churchill and Roosevelt, lest he interpret such courtesy to mean that China was to have a real voice in determining the future policies of the Far East. The position taken by General Smuts is in keeping with his African policy, for while his administration in South Africa has been considerate and humane, it has been paternalistic and devoid of encouragement to Africans to hope for self-rule at any time, to put it in the words of Mr. Churchill, "that it is reasonable or useful to foresee."

And now lest it appear that I am bearing down too heavily upon the British Empire, let us take a brief look at American foreign policy as it affects race relationships.

Three months before the outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war in 1937, I saw at Kobe, Osaka and Yokohama barge load after barge load of American scrap iron tied up to the docks. The Americans who sold this scrap to the Japanese were not ignorant of the purposes that would be served by it. They knew then and in all the months and years subequently, in which they continued until Pearl Harbor to sell this material to the Japanese, that it was being used to forge weapons and furnish ammunition for the destruction of the helpless people of China. No wonder we felt such humiliation after Pearl Harbor when we realized that the very bombs that snuffed out the lives of three thousand American boys contained material sold by Americans.

Ralph Magill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, was very apt in his comment on our humiliation when he headed an editorial describing it, "Old Stoves Come Home to Roost." The truth is that there had been previous demonstrations of our lack of respect for the people of the Orient that made it easy for our merchants to engage in traffic that led to destruction for the people of China and ultimately destruction of our own fighting forces. I refer to the Oriental Exclusion Laws and our refusal to risk our trade relationships with Japan by following the urgent insistence of the then Secretary of State and now Secretary of War, Henry L. Stimson, demanding that we protest against the annexation of Manchuria by Japan. Since Pearl Harbor we have not improved our relationships with the colored peoples of the world, for, in our handling of Japanese-Americans through first herding them into concentration camps regardless of whether they were aliens or citizens, and then establishing them in so-called relocation centers, while at the same time taking care not to accord similar treatment to enemy aliens of the white race, we have drawn a very pronounced racial line.

Such, ladies and gentlemen, is in part the picture as I see it. I confess that the outlook seems dark and unpromising, but I have good reasons for believing that it is not hopeless. Before setting forth those reasons, however, I want us to have in the background of our thinking a quotation from Pearl Buck that I think reflects accurately the mind of the colored peoples of the world on the one question to which a solution must be found if there is to be a just and enduring peace. Says Miss Buck:

> We must realize, we citizens of the United States, and this whether Britain realizes it or not, that a world based on former principles of empire and imperial behavior is now impossible. It cannot exist. We must make clear our determination for real democracy for all peoples with mutual responsibility demanded of all to fulfill its conditions. Nor can we postpone such decision for democracy by saying, "Let's win this war first." We cannot even win this war without convincing our colored allies—who are most of our allies—that we are not fighting for ourselves as continuing superior over colored peoples. The deep patience of colored peoples is at an end. Everywhere among them there is the same resolve for freedom and equality that white Americans and British have, but it is a grimmer resolve, for it includes the determination to be rid of white rule and exploitation and white race prejudice, and nothing will weaken this will. We can of course utilize the force of this will if we have the wisdom. Nothing would so nerve our colored allies abroad to put forth their whole effort now as the conviction that white leaders mean what they say about democracy.

I have said that I believe that there is hope that the peoples of the world regardless of race or cultural background, and in spite of the difficulties described above, may live together in peace and mutual helpfulness. I hold steadfastly to that belief. But I am equally certain that Atlantic Charters, Declarations of Freedoms, Casablanca, Moscow, Cairo and Teheran Conferences alone will never lead to the realization of that hope. Blue prints alone, though backed and implemented by all the combined material resources of the allied nations, can not change deeply-rooted prejudices into mutual trust and good will. That is a spiritual task, and leadership and direction for such a task can only be provided by an institution that is spiritually motivated. That is why I pin my hope for future good will and peace among the races of mankind on the Christian church.

In all the reading I have done, and in all the secular conferences I have attended, I have found no such basic approach to the broad problems confronting the nations today as the following statement by the Dulles Commission on a just and durable peace sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches:

> The first and paramount task of the Christian churches remains that of bringing more persons to subject their lives to the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. For us he is the source of moral judgments on the issues of this war upon which the Federal Council of Churches has also spoken. Only if the Christian churches of this land build a spiritual foundation that is broad and deep will this nation pursue righteous policies. Only if spiritual revelation strike from our eyes the scales of hatred, hypocrisy, intolerance and greed, will we be competent to cope with the immensely difficult problems that confront us.

Bearing more directly on the question with which we are concerned tonight, the Dulles Commission gives a conspicuous place in its statement of guiding principles to the following:

> We believe that that government which derives its just powers from the consent of the governed is the truest expression of the rights and dignity of man. This requires that we seek autonomy for all subject and colonial peoples. Until that shall be realized, the task of colonial government is no longer one of exclusive national concern. It must be recognized as a common responsibility of mankind, to be carried out in the interests of the colonial peoples by the most appropriate form of organization. This would, in many cases, make colonial government a task of international collaboration for the benefit of colonial peoples who would, themselves, have a voice in their government. As the agencies for the promotion of world-wide and economic security become effective, the moral, social and material welfare of colonial populations can be more fully realized.
>
> We believe that the right of all men to pursue work of their own choosing and to enjoy security from want and oppression is not limited by race, color or creed. The rights and liberties of racial and religious minorities in all lands should be recognized and safeguarded.

Coming finally to specific recommendations for political action in what is popularly known as "The Six Pillars of Peace," the Commission calls for the adoption of the following colonial policy:

The peace must proclaim the goal of autonomy for subject peoples, and it must establish international organization to assure and to supervise the realization of that end.

There is a ferment among peoples who are now subject to alien rule. That will make durable peace unattainable unless such peoples are satisfied that they can achieve self-rule without passive or active resistance to the now constituted authorities. We realize that autonomy, in certain cases, is not now desired, and in other cases is presently impractical. But judgments as to this tend to be warped, and certainly are suspect, when made by the governing power itself. There must be international agencies, which embrace persons free from the self-interest which comes from identification with the particular governing power, and which are charged with the duty to see that pledges of ultimate autonomy are honored, and that, in the meanwhile, there is no exploitation for alien ends.

Now in my concluding word let me say that I have hope for future peace and coöperation between the races of men not only on account of the example and teachings of Jesus, but because the work already done by the Christian church and its auxiliary agencies like the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations in all the nations of the earth, has demonstrated, and even in the midst of sundered ties continues to demonstrate its effectiveness in binding men together in love and service across racial lines.

In a hurried trip around the world, when of necessity my observations were more or less superficial, I talked with many persons and observed many organizations and institutions, with the result of heightened appreciation of what the Christian forces are accomplishing in the promotion of brotherhood across racial lines. There were of course individuals here and there who took on the manners and sometimes the practices of those who look down upon and exploit the ignorant and poverty-stricken masses, but these were rare exceptions. The average Christian worker with whom I came into contact demonstrated the kind of reverence for human personality that can be made the basis for a united attack on the great problem of social and spiritual reconstruction in the war-blighted areas around the world.

And now may I close by expressing the hope and the prayer that the work of this Conference may speed the day that the Psalmist spoke of when he prayed that "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindred of the nations shall worship before him."

1944

Materials — Suffrage, Ga

Return to S. R. C.

THE 1944 "WHITE PRIMARY" IN GEORGIA

(With Brief Accounts covering Other Southern States)

by

Margaret L. Fisher

This summary of events in the South, with particular emphasis on Georgia, was compiled from the Georgia press (especially the Atlanta Constitution and the Atlanta Journal), from findings obtained in conferences with groups and individuals, and from certain other reports which are mentioned from time to time. It is designed to give a chronological account of action and reaction following the United States Supreme Court decision on the Texas White Primary case: Smith vs. Allbright.

Introduction

When the United States Supreme Court decision in the Texas white primary case, Smith vs. Allwright, was released, the forces of opposition were already hard at work in the South. A well-organized campaign to kill the New Deal and the threat it represents to 1) the big economic interests and 2) the "tradition" of the South had long been under way. In order to view the reaction to and the effect of the decision in proper perspective, it is necessary to take into account the ground work which has been skillfully laid in the South during the last several years.

In 1938 the famous "grass roots" convention was held in Macon, Georgia. It was planned and sponsored by the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution, and purported to represent southern business men and farmers. Eugene Talmadge and other well-known "Democrats" participated. It is an accepted fact that the convention was financed by northern Republican millionaires to a large degree. In his column of July 17, 1944, Drew Pearson stated that these business magnates conceived the southern revolt, and that it was launched at the Macon convention.

Certainly one can follow the same interests and personalities through the following years right up to the collapse of the threatened revolt this fall. Talmadge, O'Daniel, "Cotton Ed" Smith, Senator Byrd, Harry Woodring, Jim Farley, and others have all been active in this anti-Roosevelt, anti-Fourth term, anti-New Deal movement. A significant little side-light: In September 1944 "Cotton Ed" Smith held a rally in South Carolina at which time a new party was to be formed and plans were to be laid to "sweep the South and the Nation." The rally was attended by eight people!

During the last two years the South has experienced, and to a considerable degree resisted, certain developments: large numbers of Negro soldiers have been stationed in camps in the South; the resistance to segregation in military forces increased throughout the country; the poll tax fight had been intensified; equalization of teachers' salaries had become an issue; the FEPC threatened the entrenched system of cheap labor; union organization had made great headway -- the hold of the northern Republican-southern Democratic bosses seemed to be losing its grip.

So, the Supreme Court decision was seized upon, blown up, and "white supremacy" was crammed down the throats of southern white people. The threat of a political revolt as a result of the application of the Supreme Court decision grew rapidly. However, one after another the threats have fallen by the wayside: using the race issue in the Pepper-Hill campaign didn't work; southern rebels were forced to drop their fight for a "white" race plank at the Democratic National Convention; plots to defeat the will of the people through a revolt of the electoral college failed in the face of practical common sense.

Irrespective of the state of confusion and turmoil which was brought about in the South during this critical period, there have been many encouraging developments: a large number of leading daily and weekly newspapers have gone on record as favoring abolition of the poll tax by the states; several influential papers have taken a stand for Negro participation in the primaries - most of them since the primary elections were held, it is true; an attempt by 38 men to start a secret would-be Klan organization in Atlanta was quickly stopped by violent editorial attack; the Klan itself reportedly has disbanded; and the number of southern white people who have been articulate in their support of a practical democracy, with particular reference to Negro participation in the franchise, is highly significant.

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Texas case was released to the press on April 3, 1944, and stated, among other things, that "the right to vote in such a primary for the nomination of candidates without discrimination by the state, like the right to vote in a general election, is a right secured by the C onstitution. By the terms of the fifteenth amendment that right may not be abridged by any state on account of race. Under our Constitution the great privilege of choosing his rulers may not be denied a man by the state because of his color."

Throughout the South state officials and Democratic Party leaders exercised considerable caution in making immediate comment upon the decision. S ome party leaders are known to have made unofficial statements to the effect that the Negro has secured the vote under the decision, but that it would have been "political suicide" to have admitted it this year.

There follows a narrative digest of developments in Georgia as reported in the Atlanta press, together with a supplement covering other states to the extent that information was available in the Atlanta press.

Georgia and the Franchise

In January 1944, the Atlanta Chapter of NAACP opened the question of Negro participation in the Democratic Primary with a request to Governor Ellis Arnall that such steps as were necessary be taken to make sure that the pending soldier vote measure would extend the franchise to all members of the armed service, without regard to race. The NAACP stated that at that time Georgia had approximately 100,000 Negro men and women in the military service. Governor Arnall replied that "The State Democratic Executive Committee officials advise that, under the laws of this state and rules of the Democratic Executive Committee, Negroes, whether soldiers or civilians, are not permitted to participate in the white Democratic Primary." (Atlanta Journal 1/28/44).

Immediately following the release of the Supreme Court decision on the Texas case, J. Len Duckworth, chairman, Georgia State Democratic Committee, said that the Court's action in a Texas case "is not a decision affecting the Georgia primary, and I would say Negroes are not qualified to vote in the Democratic white primary of this state." Attorney General T. Grady Head of Georgia declined comment until such time as he was asked for an official ruling. Governor Ellis Arnall said he would not comment until "I read the decision." In Washington, Senator Walter F. George took the position that primaries should be regarded as private affairs of a voluntary association of groups of voters not subject to the control of the courts. He said that the United States Supreme Court decision seemed "essentially unrealistic and inevitably leads into a field into which the courts ought not to go." On April 4, 1944, Ralph Smith, Washington correspondent of the Atlanta Journal, headlined his column "Ruling is Meaningless in Primary, George Says. Senator Thinks Decision, However, May be First Step to Break Down Color Line." It might be mentioned here that at the time of George's statement the entries had been closed and Talmadge was not opposing him for the Senate.

The following excerpts are taken from an editorial in the Atlanta Journal of April 4, 1944, entitled Theory Versus Condition: "Law can be declared, but respect for and observance of the law come only from public sentiment... the decision of the Supreme Court opening Democratic or white primaries to Negroes must rest on public opinion in those communities in which its application involves a political and social revolution... Negroes as a race were disqualified from voting in sections in which they predominated for practical reasons... It is difficult to see how the Supreme Court could have ruled other than it did. The question before it was one which it could consider only in the abstractions of justice and the Constitution. But, unfortunately, we in the South are faced by a condition, not a theory.... It is a matter in which time and education and the development of tolerance on the one hand and of civic responsibility on the other are required." The editorial recognized that disenfranchisement is a gross injustice to many individual Negroes, but stated that the consideration must be the greater good for the greater number.

The Atlanta Constitution editorial of April 5, 1944, on the subject stated that the decision of the United States Supreme Court cannot be ignored, and recommended that southern states should study the effect, examine codes, and set up adequate and fair regulations within the meaning of the court's decision. It called attention to the fact that Negroes vote in the primaries in North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky, and said that in view of the facts and conditions in those states it is possible that the problem "is not as serious as first appears." "It can be solved fairly and within the meaning of the decision."

The press reported that some leaders said that the Georgia Democratic Party may return to the convention method of picking candidates. Solicitor General Charles H. Garrett of Macon, Georgia, was reported as saying the decision sounds "the death knell of primaries and ... party politics." In an editorial in the Georgia Market Bulletin, published by the State Department of Agriculture, Tom Linder, Commissioner, urged southern states to withdraw from the Democratic convention and said that the New Deal is attempting to destroy the traditions of the South. Linder was denounced by the Atlanta Journal and the Bartow Herald for his use of a state publication. Congressman Welchel was reported as opposing the Texas decision, and the press stated that Georgia legal authorities were in disagreement on the applicability of the decision in Georgia.

C. A. Scott, Chairman of the Public Affairs Committee of the NAACP in Atlanta said, "The Supreme Court decision is clear and clearcut... I expect to cast one (vote) in the primary July 4." A few days later Mr. Scott announced that Georgia Negroes would attempt to vote.

On April 6, Attorney General T. Grady Head ruled that no poll tax would apply to persons from 18 to 21 years of age. He stated that those who were 17 years old might register provided they would be 18 prior to the next general election. A few days later it was reported from Brunswick that 30 teen-age Negroes had registered in Glynn County, one group having been accompanied by a teacher.

The opening of a Negro voting school in Atlanta, to be sponsored by NAACP, was announced by C. A. Scott on April 30. Mr. Scott said that Georgia Negroes desired integration in the present Democratic Party, and that it was unlikely that they would seek representation on the state's delegation to the national Democratic convention, as in the case of the Progressive Democratic Party in South Carolina, because Georgia had not moved to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision as South Carolina did. Church and civic leaders in various Negro communities began educational programs in citizenship, and the program of registration continued throughout the state. It was reported that one Negro paid back poll taxes for eleven years and another for nine.

The first public support of the Supreme Court decision from a group of white citizens was the published resolution of the Georgia Committee for Interracial Cooperation, passed April 14, 1944, which called upon its "beloved state" to respect the letter, the implication, and the spirit of the Texas decision. On April 28, the Board of Directors of the Southern Regional Council, Inc., meeting in Atlanta, passed a similar resolution appealing to the people of the South to respect the "letter and the spirit of the Court's decision." Letters from "southern white women" and from men began to appear in the daily press urging that the rights and privileges of full citizenship be extended to Negroes. Many effective letters from Negroes were published. It is interesting to note that the number of letters favoring the action of the Court which were published in the Atlanta papers considerably exceeded the number in opposition.

On April 10, the Atlanta Constitution carried a special news story from Barnesville, Georgia, which stated that a movement was under way to ask the Governor to call a special session of the Legislature for the purpose of repealing all primary rules so as to "beat" the Supreme Court decision. About a week later it was reported that the Governor had refused to take such action upon the ground that the revised State Constitution (covered later) would take care of the needs of Georgia.

The first definite statement from Democratic officials reported in the press was carried in the Atlanta Constitution on May 7, 1944. Augusta officials were reported as having said that Negroes would not be permitted to vote because their names would not appear on the lists of eligible voters; that the registrar would be requestdd to furnish lists of white voters only.

In Columbus, Georgia, Negro leaders agreed to make only "a token effort" to vote. That agreement was publicized in the press on May 21, and received widespread approval from white officials. The leaders ~~[illegible]~~ chose the sheriff's race to make a test, and upon refusal of ballots planned to bring a suit in the state courts. Throughout the state there began to appear recommendations that Negroes in Georgia follow the "token vote" procedure.

On June 7, a subcommittee of the Democratic State Executive Committee ruled that the primary would be restricted to white voters and directed chairmen of county executive committees accordingly. The following day Guy B. Johnson, Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council was quoted in the Atlanta Journal as hoping the action of the subcommittee "is only a temporary expedient and that the party will solve the problem right." Atlanta Negro Democrats immediately protested the action of the subcommittee and requested the full State Democratic Executive Committee to reverse the subcommittee ruling.

The educational program and registration campaign continued. The importance of quiet and orderly conduct was emphasized in church and other meetings. It was estimated by NAACP that 25,000 of Georgia's 1,300,000 Negroes were registered by the middle of June. Plans for participation in the primary proceeded in orderly fashion, and statements were made that court action would be taken if Negroes were refused ballots.

Shortly before the State Democratic Executive Committee met, a group of Negro leaders in Atlanta called upon Mr. Duckworth, chairman, and other officials, and requested that the ruling of the subcommittee be reversed. Messrs. C. A. Scott and A. T. Walden were among the group. During the conference, it is reported by Mr. Walden that Democratic officials asked that an agreement be made for a "token vote." Mr. Walden stated that the group replied that such an arrangement would not be possible, inasmuch as the Negro leadership had already taken the position in the community that all registered Negroes should apply at their respective precincts and request the right to vote. ~~Xxxxxx~~ Mr. Walden stated positively that no agreement was made with the Democratic Executive Committee at this or any later time. (Interview September 22, 1944).

Meanwhile, support for Negro participation in the primary increased in letters to the press. The most notable statement was a letter written by Mrs. Dorothy C. Rainey, member of the State Democratic Executive Committee, addressed to the full committee and delivered to the chairman. A copy of the letter was released to the press and was given national publicity. Mrs. Rainey made a strong plea that the Executive Committee respect the supreme law of the land, and asked that her letter be read to the committee.

Talk of a southern revolt in the electoral college increased, and on June 20 Governor Arnall requested the Democratic State Executive Committee to pledge Georgia electors to support the nominees of the Democratic party. Governor Arnall deplored the action of those who were trying to sabotage the party.

The State Democratic Executive Committee met on June 22, confirmed the ruling of the subcommittee that the primary would be restricted to white voters, and ruled that electors would be required to pledge party regularity. On the same date, the Calhoun Times, a county weekly edited by Mr. Roy McGinty, carried an editorial favoring the Negro vote. Mr. McGinty was an unopposed candidate for the State Legislature. It is reported that several hundred struck his name from the ballot as a result of his editorial stand.

The Georgia Association of Citizens Democratic Clubs (Negro) met in Macon on June 26, with representatives from eleven clubs attending. The leadership urged all registered and otherwise qualified Negroes in Georgia to attempt to vote in the primary on July 4. The importance of maintaining order and avoiding any kind of trouble was emphasized.

The movement to persuade Negro leaders to agree to a "token vote" grew. Numbers of Georgia newspapers carried strong editorials favoring and urging such a procedure. Rumors and tensions increased.

On June 29, the Citizens' Democratic Club of Fulton County met and passed a resolution recommending that the attempt of Negroes to vote in the Democratic primary be restricted to officers and members of the executive committee of the club. "Be it also resolved that all Negro registered voters of the Democratic faith comply with the advice of theCitizens Democratic Club of Fulton County in this restricted vote attempt on July 4." The resolution was signed by C. A. Scott, Dr. R. A. Billings, Birdie Wallace, J. A. Batts, A. T. Walden, Rev. L. N. Terrill, J. A. Pierce, and C. A. Bacote. It is reported that the resolution was passed with only one dissenting vote. One of the signers has since stated that the action was taken because of the greatly increased tension in both the white and Negro community, and because it was felt that a token vote effort would be the most expedient manner in which the groundwork could be laid for a court case. He stated emphatically that no agreement was made with the State Democratic Executive Committee; that the resolution was in the form of a recommendation; that the Citizens Club was not empowered to speak for the Negroes of Fulton County; and that no official contact was made with the State Democratic Committee with regard to any ~~[illegible]~~ token vote arrangement.

This action was given wide publicity in the press and the general impression was prevalent in the white community that Negroes in Fulton County had "agreed" to the token vote procedure. However, it might be noted that the Atlanta Constitution stated on July 1 that only a small group of Negroes would attempt to vote in Atlanta and Fulton County "if the recommendations of the Citizens Democratic Club are followed."

The following excerpts from the July 3 column of Dr. M. Ashley Jones, prominent retired minister in Atlanta, should be of record: "Their (Negroes') progress educationally and commercially is really unmatched in the story of races..."(taken out of paragraph which points out the needs for recognizing changes since reconstruction days.) "We cannot much longer continue to subject Negroes to 'taxation without representation' or draft them to jeopardize their lives in defense of a democracy which denies them the right of franchise." Dr. Jones' column is a regular Sunday feature carried on the editorial pages of the Atlanta Constitution.

On the same date there was carried in the Atlanta papers a petition signed by 138 white citizens of Georgia asking the State Democratic Executive Committee to permit Negro participation in the primary. The statement was sent out by the Associated Press and received national coverage.

On either July 1 or 2, the Atlanta Journal stated that Mr. Neill Leach, secretary of the Fulton County Democratic Executive Committee, had stated that that Committee would ask for the names of white registrants only when requesting official registration lists, and that Negroes would not be permitted to vote because box managers would not have their names on the lists of eligible voters.

Registration had closed on May 8. 7% of the Fulton County registration was Negro: 64,000 white; 5,000 Negro - approx.

The Attempted Negro vote in Georgia on July 4, 1944 -

Negro leaders were refused ballots at three precincts in Atlanta on July 4. The procedure was reported as follows: each citizen prepared a standard application for a ballot which he handed to an election official who in turn handed it to another official who informed the applicant that his name was not on the registration list, therefore he was not eligible for a ballot. The performance was orderly and "polite." One New York newspaper account stated that probably never in history had people been "robbed" of their rights with such courtesy!

At Precinct E in the 3rd Ward: Mr. A. T. Walden presented a receipt from the tax collector's office which certified he was qualified to vote in the general election on November 7 to S. L. Walker, election official (box manager), who passed it to Mrs. T. H. Leather, who compared the slip with the registration list and informed Mr. Walden that his name and address did not appear on the registration list. Other Negro citizens who attempted to vote in this group were: V. W. Hodges, assistant publisher of the Atlanta Daily World; Eugene H. Martin, insurance executive; C. A. Bacote, professor at Atlanta University.

At Precinct G, Ward 4: G. A. Scott, publisher of the Atlanta Daily World; Henry F. Shorter, barber; and J. A. Batts, insurance executive, made a similar attempt to vote.

At Precinct H, Ward 4 another group whose names were not listed in the press made an effort to vote.

Others who attempted to vote were:

Cliff Mackay
John Hope, Jr.
Wallace Van Jackson
Ira DeA . Reid
Alfonso Elder
Warren Cochrane
Grace Towns Hamilton
Irene Harris
Rev. M. L. King
H. G. Edwards
G. R. Mitchell
V. O. Yancey.

George Towns

According to all available reports, substantially the same procedure was followed in each instance, and no Negroes were permitted to vote.

Very little information was available concerning other cities in Georgia. The token effort was made in Columbus.

Shortly after the primary, the press in the state took a much more positive stand on the Negro vote issue. The Calhoun Times on July 6 against editorialized affirmatively on the subject; the Macon News had previously and again supported the decision; on July 13 the Atlanta Journal outlined a four point program for the betterment of race relations in the South in which it recommended that measures be taken to open primary elections to Negroes.

A civil suit was filed in the United States District Court in Columbus, Georgia, brought in the name of Primus King, Negro minister and barber, and naming the eleven members of the Muscogee County Democratic Executive Committee as defendants, on August 24, 1944 (Atlanta Journal). The suit asks for $5,000 damages for the alleged violation of King's civil rights, and the petition claims that the committee violated Sections One and Two of Article I and the 14th, 15th, and 17th amendments to the Constitution of the United States. King stated that he is prepared to present evidence to prove that he believes in the tenets of the Democratic Party, and that he was denied the right to vote "solely because of race and color." Oscar D. Smith, attorney for King, said that the case was brought in behalf of a group of Negroes for the purpose of ascertaining the applicability of the United States Supreme Court decision in the Texas case, and that the King case would be carried to the Supreme Court if necessary. J. E. Chapman, Jr., Chairman of the Muscogee County Democratic Executive Committee stated that the Committee would contest the suit.

On August 25, 1944, the following exchange of communications between the Governor and the Attorney General of Georgia took place:

Letter from Governor Ellis Arnall to Attorney General T. Grady Head, dated August 24, 1944, and reported in the Atlanta Journal and the Atlanta Constitution, August 25, 1944:

"It is my belief that the holding in the so-called Texas primary election case is not applicable to primary elections in the state of Georgia because in Georgia the Democratic white primary is not specifically provided for by law nor are all the qualifications of voters determined by constitutional provision or statutory law. Under Georgia procedure, as I understand it, the party convention and committee promulgate the rules and regulations appertaining to the Democratic white primary and the qualifications provided for participation in the primary are to a great extent controlled by the party itself.

"The matter at issue in the Muscogee county suit is of great import and importance to the people of Georgia. Accordingly, I am directing you and the State Department of Law to offer your assistance to the Muscogee county Democratic executive committee, defendants in the said action, and you are directed to take all necessary and proper steps to uphold the rules and regulations of the Democratic party relating to primary regulations in this state."

Commenting on the Governor's letter, the Attorney General was quoted as having said:

"Yesterday when the Governor noticed in the press that a suit had been instituted in the Federal Court against the members of the Muscogee County Democratic Committee complaining of the exclusion of Negroes from the Democratic primary, he wrote me that the matter at issue was of great importance to the people of Georgia.

"He directed the State Department of Law to appear as amicus curiae or in such capacity as it was possible to bring to the attention of the court that the exclusion, if any, was party action which did not offend the Constitution of the United States."

The Attorney General announced, so it was reported, that any action in the Muscogee County primary suit will be as a friend of the court. He pointed out that inasmuch as there is no state law regulating party primaries, he cannot become a party to actual litigation in the case.

It is known that the Department of Justice, through the FBI, has been conducting an investigation in Atlanta as a result of a complaint filed by A. T. Walden, Negro attorney. The Department was requested by Mr. Waldon to institute criminal proceedings. So far as is known, no civil suit has been filed in Atlanta.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Meanwhile, a rift developed in the Republican ranks in Georgia in connection with Negro participation in party affairs. The Republicans in Georgia held their state convention on May 22nd and named two Negro delegates to the national convention. The Georgia meeting split into two groups when an all-white delegation withdrew because the District convention seated the Negro-white faction. The mixed group was later recognized and seated at the national convention on June 26.

A coalition was formed between the Anti-Roosevelt Democrats and the "lily-white" Republicans. The Anti--- Democrats had held a meeting in Atlanta on June 20 which was attended by seventy-five delegates from twenty-eight states. Talmadge was reported as forecasting a split in the Democratic Party if the national convention adopted a racial equality plank. On August 9, the Atlanta Constitution reported that the coalition mentioned above had combined to get their electors on the general election ballot in Georgia; on August 20 it was reported that Secretary of State John B. Wilson had certified the joint slate of "lily-white" Republican and "Independent" Democratic electors for the general election ballot; the Republican group which had been recognized and seated at the national convention charged a conspiracy between former Governor Talmadge and Wilson, and filed an action in the Fulton County Superior Court; on September 9, the Republican National Chairman asked Governor Arnall to use his authority to see that the certification be changed and that Secretary of State Wilson certify the electors of the "regular" Republican organization. Arnall refused to interfere. On September 12, the Republican National Committee asked the Georgia Supreme Court to reverse the Fulton County Superior Court's ruling that Secretary of State Wilson was not required to place the names of the "regular Republican candidates for electors" on Georgia's ballot for the November general election. The appeal to the Georgia Supreme Court was originally placed on the calendar for argument on November 13 - one week after the general election. Later the date was changed to October 2. On October 6 it was reported that the Georgia Supreme Court had upheld the Secretary of State, and that the rebel-coalition electors would be placed on the official ballot.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Revised Constitution for Georgia

Almost simultaneously with the release of the Supreme Court decision, public hearings began in Georgia in connection with the revision of the State Constitution. Two actions on the part of the commission have direct bearing upon the problem and require especial attention: 1) recommendations for uncontrolled primaries -- obviously designed to circumvent the Supreme Court decision on the Texas white primary case; and 2) refusal to recommend elimination of the poll tax requirement from the Constitution. A list of the membership of the Commission is included in this report for reference purposes:

Ellis Arnall, Chairman
Fred Hand, Pelham, speaker pro tem of the house of representatives, vice-chairman
E. E. Thrasher, Jr., state auditor, secretary
Roy V. Harris, Augusta, house speaker
A. H. Durden, Albany, house floor leader
Charles Gowen, Brunswick, house member
Jess Pope, Cairo, senator
Justice Warren Grice, Macon, of the state supreme court Judge Hugh MacIntyre, Thomasville, of the court of appeals
Judge Tom Candler, Blairsville
Judge Will R. Smith, Nashville
J. W. Culpepper, Fayetteville, house member
R. E. L. Majors, Clarton, editor
Mrs. Leonard Haas, Atlanta
Hatton Lovejoy, LaGrange, attorney
Frank Foley, Columbus, attorney
J. V. Carmichael, Marietta, house member
David J. Arnold, Griffin, senator and President of the Georgia Bankers' Association
T. Grady Head, Ringgold, Attorney General
J. Roy McCracken, Louisville, editor
David S. Atkinson, Savannah, senator
Hamilton Holt, Macon

On April 11, 1944, the jurists on the commission recommended revamping the voting requirements because of the implications of the Texas decision. It was stated that elimination of present voting laws would enable the Legislature to draft new ones. Justice Warren Grice of the Georgia Supreme Court stated that the Texas decision would affect primaries in Georgia under present laws. The commission voted to abolish the provision in the Georgia Constitution relating to party primaries, with Mrs. Leonard Haas, wife of a prominent Atlanta attorney, casting the lone dissenting vote. On April 16 the commission completed action to kill all reference to primary laws in the state constitution. In May the League of Women Voters vehemently protested the elimination of provisions regulating primaries. A few days later, on May 29, Governor Arnall was quoted in the press as saying, "I am against any regulation of primaries in the constitution or on the statute books of this state." As it now stands, the commission will recommend to the next session of the Legislature that the proposed revised constitution shall contain no provision to regulate primaries.

On the subject of the poll tax, on April 11 the commission voted to retain the poll tax as a requirement for voting in the revised Constitution. James Carmichael, a member of the commission, and Judge Edgar Watkins, a citizen who appeared before the commission, argued for abolition of the tax, pointing out that it encourages machine politics. Governor Arnall was reported as having remarked that no poll tax was required of persons from 18 to 21 years of age nor from men and women in the armed forces - "I wonder just who is left to pay poll taxes.... I have not made up my mind that it should be eliminated," said the Governor. Mrs. Haas and Mr. Carmichael cast the only votes to abolish the poll tax provision. (The "Grandfather" clause was eliminated.)

A growing sentiment could be noted in the the Georgia press for abolition of the poll tax by the next General Assembly; the Georgia State Industrial Union Council (CIO) urged repeal by the commission; the League of Women Voters urged elimination of the poll tax provisions from the revised constitution, and the Atlanta Constitution on the following day, October 5, disagreed with the League's position, saying it was opposed to elimination of the tax "at this time." The Augusta Herald on September 17 recommended repeal of the tax as a requisite for voting by the next Georgia Legislature, and suggested retaining the tax for cost of education as in the cases of Louisiana, North Carolina, and Florida. Louis D. Newton, Atlanta minister, urged abolitition of the tax by the next session of the Legislature.

It will be recalled that during this period of time the poll tax issue had been before our national Senate with violent opposition to Federal action by southern representatives and the southern press. On April 21 the Atlanta Constitution carried an account which stated that Senator Russell was a member of an unofficial three-man committee planning strategy to fight the anti-poll tax measure in the Senate. Both Russell and George were later reported by the Atlanta Journal (September 3) as favoring abolition by the states, but opposing Federal "interference" on the states' rights issue. By and large the press of Georgia took that same position.

Almost without exception Georgia representatives and the Georgia press justified their opposition to any Federal action on the ground that abolition of the poll tax should be left to states -- and almost without exception they approved abolition by the states. Certainly it would seem that the time for state action is now.

As it now stands, the commission on revision of the constitution will recommend that the poll tax provisions be left in the constitution without change.

Some Miscellaneous Notes from the Atlanta papers:

April 7, 1944: Georgia led the nation in non-white net loss in population 1935-1940. Decreased net 30,801. (Constitution)

April 13, 1944: A proposal by State Senator David S. Atkinson that membership in the Georgia House of Representatives be based on population was supported only by Mrs. Maas and voted down by the commission to revise the constitution.

June 30, 1944: Journal editorial urges "all qualified electors" to vote on July 4, as state officials who will frame new state constitution will be elected, which makes necessary "full participation in the primary.... to the end that the greatest number of Georgians will have participated at least indirectly in the adoption of a new constitution."

July 2, 1944: Excerpt from Constitution editorial entitled Vote in Tuesday's Primary: "Our way of life and our form of government are based on the ballot box. Thousands of men are dying for that way of life and that form of government."

June 30, 1944: United States Court may try Negro's case on school salary. Samuel L. Davis seeks injunction to prevent the Atlanta Board of Education from continuing an alleged discrimination against him and other Negro teachers in pay scale, on the grounds that they are required to have the same qualifications as white teachers. (Journal)

July 13, 1944: Atlanta Board of Education denies charges that it has discriminated against Negro teachers on pay. Demands jury trial on charges. Says: "The Board is working out a method of classifying teachers and a schedule of salaries to be paid teachers, which, in their judgment and discretion, will be fair, equitable, and just. All the teachers in the public schools of Atlanta, both white and colored, will be classified on the same basis, and each teacher, white or colored, will be paid according to his or her classification. Every teacher in the same classification will receive the same pay."

Statement signed by N. S. Cook, Devereaux McClatchey, Jr., Charles C. Rife, J. H. Sanders, D. M. Therrell, and J. Austin Dilbeck.

Other States

There follows a summary of news carried in the Atlanta papers on activities in other southern states.

Alabama

On April 4 Governor Chauncey Sparks said that the decision in the Texas case "by intimation at least leaves with the states the right to determine qualifications of voters." He further stated that the South can adapt itself to the decision by giving the right to vote to all qualified, whether white or black, and at the same time preserve "party integrity." State Senator Miller Bonner predicted that Alabama would hold its last white primary this year as a result of the Texas decision.

The Hill-Simpson senatorial campaign was at its height when the decision was released. In his column of April 4, Ralph Smith, Washington correspondent for the Atlanta Journal, declared that the fact that Justice Hugo Black voted with the majority in the Supreme Court decision would prove a handicap to Hill - despite Hill's opposition to Federal poll tax repeal and eradication of the color line. Certainly there was a sinister and methodical marshalling of discontents, fears and prejudices by Simpson. His billboards read: "Vote for James Simpson, a believer in Democratic principles, states' rights and white supremacy." He was supported by an inflammatory press and the big economic interests. The employment of Negro supervisors in FSA was attacked by State Senator Bruce Henderson in a speech made in Simpson's behalf, during which he charged that white women were doing clerical work for Negroes. Following up, Simpson warned that the next step would be the forced admission of Negroes to white schools by the United States Department of Education.

The campaign of race hatred became so violent that some of the Alabama press denounced Simpson and his group - notably the Birmingham News and the Anniston Star which latter charged that Simpson was attempting to "Talmadgeize" Alabama. Senator Tom Heflin of Alabama said in a speech in support of Hill's candidacy, ".... any man who raises the race issue in a political campaign is unfit to go to the United States Senate." At their convention on April 22, the Alabama Mine Workers, District 20, passed a resolution pledging support to full Negro participation in the franchise, and opposing Simpson.

Simpson began to ease off the race issue as condemnation became more pronounced.

Meanwhile, although Hill is regarded as progressive and a New Dealer, there were departures from liberalism on his part - described as being "in deference to the immovable attitudes of his constituency." At the height of the campaign, Hill's law firm volunteered its service to help convict Arthur Madison, Negro lawyer, who had been arrested on a charge of illegally representing other Negroes. Madison was alleged to have been assisting Montgomery Negroes in registering, and it was stated that he had been attempting to qualify Negro voters since December 1943 and that he intended to register 5,000 Negroes in Montgomery.

In commenting upon Senator Hill's victory, the nation's press commended the people of Alabama for voting against race haters. It was also noted that the Birmingham News added its voice of approval on the state's condemnation of Negro haiters.

The Negro Vote in Alabama

In Mobile, ten Negroes departed without voting when they were met at the polling place by the deputy sheriff and told by him that the primary was restricted to white electors. Two Negroes were permitted to vote in Montgomery. Negroes voted as usual in Birmingham. (Atlanta Journal May 3, 1944 - no names given in the news story.)

It was brought out at a meeting of Attorneys General of southern states, held in Memphis, Tennessee, on September 5, that Alabama has four suits pending in connection with refusal to permit Negroes vote in the primary.

The Democratic Primary was held in Alabama on May 2, 1944.

Note: Governor Sparks spoke to the 26th annual convention of Alabama District Kiwanis International in Auburn, Alabama, on October 11th. He termed the poll tax a necessity, and attacked the War Department ruling which opened the post exchange at Maxwell Field to all. Most interesting was the following statement from his speech: "There is no such thing as equality socially, except such as is determined by the individual." (Atlanta Constitution 10/11/44)

Arkansas

In Washington, Representative Cathings, Democrat, Arkansas, warned the Democratic Party on April 19, ".... in its mad rush to gain the Negro vote.... it may lose the southern vote. The Chairman of the Arkansas Democratic State Committee, J. C. Barrett, had stated at the time the decision in the Texas primary case was released that he wished to study it before reaching a conclusion as to its applicability in Arkansas. Later he was reported as saying, "Election judges should allow Negroes to vote in the Democratic primary elections this summer, provided that they possess a poll tax receipt and otherwise appear qualified."

At the meeting of the southern Attorneys General in Memphis on September 5, Attorney General Guy E. Williams of Arkansas said that Arkansas laws are similar to Texas and that Negroes will vote there unless the Legislature "does something about it" in January. Williams charged that the Republican Party is causing race tension by catering to the Negro vote. He stated that there are five or six counties in Arkansas where the population is predominantly Negro. (According to the press reports, no one called his attention to the fact that there are nine such counties in North Carolina where Negroes participate in the Democratic primary.)

No record on the Arkansas vote in the primary was available in the Atlanta press. However, the Monthly Summary of Events and Trends in Race Relations, July 1944 issue, states that Negroes voted for the first time in the Democratic primary in Arkansas - no further details were given.

Florida

Immediately following the release of the decision, Democratic State Chairman Tom Conley said Democratic leaders would resist the efforts of Negroes to vote in the primary. Governor Spessard Holland declined to make any comment until after he had studied the decision.

At the time, Senator Pepper was in the midst of a bitter campaign to retain his seat in the Senate. The race issue was being raised with only slightly less violence than in the Hill-Simpson campaign in Alabama. Pepper faced four opponents. Although the Senator is recognized as one of the most ardent supporters of the New Deal and is conceded to be one the few progressive representatives from the South, he too spoke out against the Supreme Court decision. He was reported to have said that southerners will not "allow matters peculiar to us to be determined by those who do not know and understand our problems"... and "The south will allow nothing to impair white supremacy." He is reported to have stated further, "I think the Florida law is different from the Texas law on voting in primaries, and therefore the supreme court decision should not affect Democratic primaries in Florida. In Florida not the state but the Democratic party determines the qualifications of members of the party. If, however, there is any question about the form of our statute, it can be altered and the matter left exclusively in the hands of the party of determining who may vote in the Democratic primary. This can be done and the Democratic primaries kept white under the decision of the supreme court." (Atlanta Constitution, April ~~4~~ 5, 1944 - AP Miami April 4)

It should be noted that later in Pepper's campaign, while he continued to support "southern traditions", he stated publicly on several occasions that dragging the race issue into a political campaign was neither necessary nor proper.

The Negro Vote in Florida

The Democratic Primary was held in Florida on May 2, 1944.

*In Tallahassee, eight Negroes voted unchallenged. A precinct official was quoted as saying: "They were duly registered as Democrats, and we had no alternative but to let them vote." It was also reported that one Negro had applied for a ballot at another precinct in Tallahassee, and had been asked by election officials to wait until they could get a legal ruling on her qualifications - she left without voting.

In Miami Negroes voted exclusively in the Republican primary.

* The Florida State Democratic Executive Committee had adopted a resolution restricting participation in the primary to white voters.

Louisiana

In speaking of the Texas decision, Governor Sam Jones was quoted as having said, "We've always handled that question.... and always will." The chairman of the Louisiana State Democratic Committee, John Fred Odum, was reported as declining to make a formal statement, saying, "It will require considerable study." In Washington, Senator John H. Overton said "We are not going to submit to Negroes voting in our elections." (Atlanta Journal April 3, 1944)

No records were available in the Atlanta press on the Negro vote in the Louisiana Democratic primary.

The State Democratic Committee made a requirement in September that Louisiana's electors pledge to support the Democratic Party nominees. Five of Louisiana's ten electors resigned.

Mississippi

"The Supreme Court or no one else can control a Democratic primary in Mississippi," said Herbert Holmes, Mississippi Democratic Executive Committee Chairman, as reported in the Atlanta Journal on April 3rd. Senator John E. Rankin was quoted as saying that he saw "one of his greatest fears realized" in the decision. The Mississippi Democratic Convention instructed its delegates to the national convention to support the party only if certain "requirements" were met; the Atlanta Journal on June 10th assailed the action as resorting to trickery which might deprive loyal Democrats of a voice in their government. The Mississippi delegation to the national convention joined in the attempted revolt.

On August 1 two representatives who wished to remain unidentified stated that it was their belief that some of Mississippi's electors would

